Enter the drawing for a FREE UMass Amherst duffle bag of goodies!

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION · COFFEE · BRUEGGER'S BAGELS

Sponsored by the UMass Amherst Alumni Association, Bruegger's Bagels of Amherst, and Pierce Bros Coffee.
UMassAlumni.com • You were. You are. UMASS.

SUMMER I:
Day: May 17 - June 24
Evening: May 17 - July 2

SUMMER II:
Day: July 6 - August 13
Evening: July 6 - August 2

Enjoy Boston. Earn credit.

Accelerate your studies with a Suffolk Summer Program.

Suffolk University welcomes visiting undergraduate and graduate students to attend summer classes in the heart of Boston.

- Earn credit on campus, online, or abroad
- Choose courses in the College of Arts & Sciences and Sawyer Business School
- Take a 2-week Summer Institute course
- Study abroad in exciting 2-6 week programs in Paris, Madrid, London and more

www.suffolk.edu/summer

SUFFOLK UNIVERSITY

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

PUFFTON VILLAGE

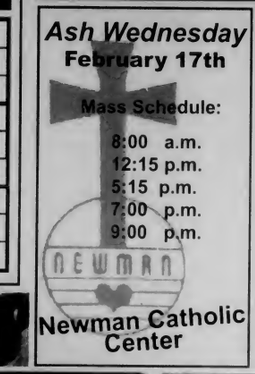
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE

EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS

SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses

ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!

ON SITE LAUNDRY, OFF STREET PARKING.



BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.

OFFICE HOURS: 8AM TO 4PM MONDAY - FRIDAY
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

SUDOKU

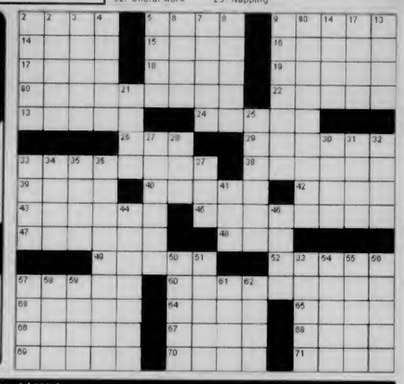
4					1		8
			3
3	5	1	6		4
9		4
				7	6
	6			9	3		2
	7		5					4
1				4		8	3
					2		9	7

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Vipers
5. Type of carpet
9. He flies planes
14. Skinny
15. Level
16. Make amends
17. Connects two points
18. As well
19. 9-9-9-9
20. A post-sunset glow in the sky
22. Anxiety
23. Shop
24. Location
26. A painkiller (abbrev.)
29. Decrease in size
33. Egg-shaped
38. An association of sports teams
39. Made from trees
40. Make smile
42. Connecting point
43. Self-centeredness
45. First Nobelist in Physics
47. Distant
48. Resort
49. Part of a year
52. Choral work
57. Twinkle
60. A review course
63. Heart artery
64. Dwarf buffalo
65. Center
66. Reasoned judgment
67. Con game
68. Largest continent
69. Geologic period
70. Rope fiber
71. Marsh plant

DOWN
1. Collection of maps
2. Duty period
3. Kind of bean
4. Contemptuous look
5. Doe's mate
6. Small mountain
7. He told fables
8. A dog's warning
9. Grand style
10. Traveling from place to place to work
11. Not short
12. 1 1 1 1
13. Exam
21. Harvest
25. Napping
27. Flower part
28. Draw a bead on
30. All excited
31. Naked
32. Avid
33. Pitcher
34. Balcony section
35. Weaving machine
36. Parience
37. Mongrel
41. Mayday
44. Belly
46. What you're called
50. Garbage
51. Therefore
53. Movie prize
54. Not these
55. Strange
56. Step
57. Battering wind
58. Coil
59. Therefore
61. Froth
62. Incline

SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com



I began to regret sending mom to a discount mortician.

UMass... San Diego?

Take online classes anywhere this Summer
Registration begins March 15

Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net

UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

Local

BURGER & FRIES
Local Meats, Local Produce, Beer Battered onion rings
Beef Burgers • Home Made Veggie Burgers
Turkey Burgers • Portabella Burgers
Handcut Fries • Fried Pickles & MORE!

Sun-Wed 11:30am-10pm
Fri-Sat 11:30am-3AM
HERO 413

16 Main St., Northampton, MA
413-586-5857
www.localnorthampton.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20 - FEB. 18
Turning the TV up really loud hurts your ears but it is also hurts the lifeforce of every creature in Greek mythology.

pisces FEB. 19 - MAR. 20
The next time you want to pull a stunt like that, you better buy your friend a bottle of fermented petroleum jelly first!

aries MAR. 21 - APR. 19
Loosen up your grip when you give handshakes. You do NOT want people to think that way about you.

taurus APR. 20 - MAY. 20
This is a message from your future self. Invest in the Twilight theme sex toys. They are our main source for fuel in 2020.

gemini MAY. 21 - JUN. 21
The mohawk hairstyle should only be sought out if you can deal with the creepy-erotic dreams with Mr. T.

cancer JUN. 22 - JUL. 22
Your fascination with the color blue has taken its toll on your body. The Eiffel 65 song will now play in your head forever.

leo JUL. 23 - AUG. 22
That guy on the right in the chicken suit is totally into you.

virgo AUG. 23 - SEPT. 22
Your sense of humor has gone away to a forsaken place with all the snow that UMass was supposed to get last week.

libra SEPT. 23 - OCT. 22
What really matter is that you need to believe in yourself and in Danny Bonaducci's inevitable facelift.

scorpio OCT. 23 - NOV. 21
One should not scorch the woods between Orchard Hill and Sylvan in search of alternative food rations.

sagittarius NOV. 22 - DEC. 21
Your feeling of lonliness should be destroyed when you finally get a shower buddy. I suggest a yellow rubber duck, it is tradition.

capricorn DEC. 22 - JAN. 19
Only cool haircuts are from the nineties. For other suggestions look up awesome portraits of both Napoleon and Sun Tzu.

Future Sex by David Waksman infinitymaze.com

SEX IN THE FUTURE IS GONNA BE AWESOME.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further...CAMP MATAPONI, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (samm crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders and more! Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com

FOR RENT

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms, hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

TUTORING SERVICES

Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats & GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 JBoid42@yahoo.com.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends From $89 Complete. Montreal Express.Net MontrealBlowout.com 781-979-9001

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSWEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 2010 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UM looks for third straight

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

While the top half of the Atlantic 10 has been battling for a potential NCAA Tournament berth, the Massachusetts men's basketball team was worrying about just making the one for its own conference.

The Minutemen (10-15, 4-7 A-10) had one win between Jan. 10 and Feb. 6 and were in danger of missing the A-10 Tournament entirely. A two-game winning streak, however, has put UMass in an eighth-place tie with Duquesne and back in contention.

The Minutemen will now look to make it three-straight tonight against George Washington, after wins against the Dukes and Saint Joseph's. The Colonials are also coming off of a 78-53 win over Fordham, but are also facing struggles similar to UMass.

GW (13-10, 3-7 A-10) lost three close games by an average margin of 5.7 points per game prior to its trip to the Bronx.

Although their record would indicate otherwise, the Colonials are still a competitive team in the A-10. They lost to Xavier, Richmond and Rhode Island by single-digits and defeated Saint Louis in overtime.

Although neither team is in contention for an NCAA berth, the bottom half of the conference is in a near dead-lock trying to avoid joining the winless Rams at the bottom for 13th place. A win would give either team some breathing room.

GW has become one of the more defensive-minded teams in the A-10, allowing 66.9 points per game and is at the top of the league in steals per game (8.4). The last time the Minutemen played as strong of a defense as the Colonials was on Jan. 16 against Temple, where they finished with 64 points in the loss.

Freshman Lasan Kromah has been the biggest contributor on defense with an average of two steals, and is second behind Duquesne's Damian Saunders, who has 2.8.

If UMass can take care of the basketball and keep it away from Kromah, it should have little trouble being comfortable with the offense. Despite play-

See MINUTEMEN on page 6

Freshman Terrell Vinson and the Minutemen will look to claim their third consecutive victory when they face George Washington tonight.

Crashing glass key for UMass

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

When teams rebound the basketball at a higher rate than their opponents, they can generate boards into scoring opportunities and have a better chance of winning games.

Just ask the Massachusetts men's basketball team.

The Minutemen (10-15, 3-7 Atlantic 10) are first in the A-10 in offensive rebounding with 15.4 per game, and lead the conference in overall rebounding with 41.4 per game.

UMass is sixth in the NCAA in offensive rebounds per game and in total offensive rebounds (386), and are in the top 40 in rebounding margin (5.0), and are third in the conference in that statistic. While outrebounding 17 of their 24 opponents so far this season, the Minutemen have recently turned that statistic into two key victories against Duquesne and Saint Joseph's, and hope to do the same against George Washington tonight.

The Colonials are seventh in the A-10 in rebounding offense and fifth in rebounding defense, and are third in the conference averaging 13.7 rebounds per game.

In the victory against the Hawks, UMass again outrebounded its opponent, 44-35, with Carter adding 11 while Anthony Gurley had nine, as the Minutemen had 16 points in the paint and six second-chance points.

Against the Dukes, UMass outrebounded Duquesne, 60-33, as redshirt sophomore Sean Carter had his first career double-double with 11 points and a career-high 19 rebounds in the victory. This led to 26 points in the paint and 20 second-chance points.

The last time the Minutemen had 60 rebounds in a game was during the 1996 Final Four season against the Hawks, as Marcus Camby had 15 in UMass' overtime win on Feb. 28.

Three members of the Minutemen are averaging more than four rebounds per game, including Carter (7.1), freshman forward Terrell Vinson (5.5) and redshirt junior center Hashim Bailey (4.9). Carter is now 11th in the A-10 with 178 total rebounds so far this season, and is fourth in offensive rebounding (3.6).

Harris on fire

In his last three games, senior

See REBOUNDING on page 6

McGuirk hosts home opener

By Jay Asher
Collegian Staff

Looking for its first win of the 2010 season, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will host Holy Cross in its home opener today at McGuirk Stadium.

The Minutewomen (0-1) will attempt to rebound from their 18-6 loss to five-time defending national champion and No. 1 ranked Northwestern in their season-opener nearly two weeks ago.

In that contest, UMass fell into an early hole, trailing 7-0 after the first 15 minutes, 45 seconds of play. Jackie Lyons and Nina Sarcona, however, scored back-to-back goals in a 38-second span to cut the deficit to five goals.

The Wildcats (1-0) came right back with seven more goals to end the half while outshooting the Minutewomen 37-14. In the second half, UMass allowed only two scores but couldn't close the gap with three goals, including one from senior Merritt Cosgrove.

Cosgrove, a Carlsbad, Calif. native, played in her home state for the first time in her collegiate career.

Northwestern's Shannon Smith scored six goals and added three assists, setting new career highs in goals, assists, and points for the Wildcats.

Though the game against the Northwestern didn't pan out like UMass coach Alexis Venechanos hoped, it did give the Minutewomen aspects to work on before facing the Crusaders.

"We have a lot to work off from this past week and I'm excited that we had almost a week to prepare for Holy Cross," Venechanos said on Tuesday. "We've been going back to fundamentals and things we can control and just got back to UMass lacrosse."

Holy Cross, meanwhile, will begin its season on Wednesday against UMass. In 2009, the Crusaders recorded a 5-11 overall record, while going 3-3 in the Patriot League.

Having already played a team this season, and a good one at that, Venechanos feels her team is currently in a better position than its opponent.

"We're hoping we can use that to our advantage," Venechanos said. "Getting those nerves out in the first game will hopefully give us better opportunities to put ourselves in better situations [today]."

Holy Cross is coached by UMass alum Stephanie Ridolfi '00 and returns its top three scorers from 2009: Katie Gardner, Meg O'Leary, and Megan Fenton. Goalkeeper Amy Martin also returns after posting a 12.29 goals against average and a .462 save percentage in 15 starts last season.

"They run an attack that is very good and deliberate, so we're going to have to play a good team defense to stop them," Venechanos said. "On attack, we're going to have to put our shots away when we get our opportunities. They're greatly improved from last year and we always have a battle against them, so we're looking forward to it."

The Crusaders have been picked to finish fifth in the 2010 Patriot League preseason poll as voted on by head coaches and sports information directors from around the league. After missing the Patriot League Tournament by one game last season, Holy Cross will look to win its third league championship in the last five years.

The Minutewomen lead the all-time series, 9-4, though Holy Cross has won three of the last four meetings. At McGuirk Stadium, UMass has lost only once to the Crusaders, boasting a 5-1 record on the home turf.

"I think we're just excited to play, home or away," Venechanos said. "Having it be at home, we are a lot more comfortable and used to our stadium. We're just trying to worry about ourselves, whether we're playing home or away, it doesn't really matter."

Five of the first seven games to begin the season for the Minutewomen will be in Amherst, where they were 5-2 last season.

In the contest last year with Holy Cross, the Minutewomen suffered an 11-7 loss in Worcester in their season opener. UMass trailed that game, 6-3, at halftime, but managed to score three consecutive goals to even the score.

The Crusaders, however, answered with a four-goal run over the final 17 minutes to claim the victory.

Venechanos and the Minutewomen will look for a different result today when the game begins at 3 p.m. at McGuirk Stadium.

Jay Asher can be reached at jasher@student.umass.edu

Junior Jackie Lyons will look to propel a UMass attack in search of its first win of the 2010 season.

Minutewomen look to improve team work

Working on draw controls a point of emphasis after season-opening loss to Northwestern

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

After a crushing defeat by Northwestern, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team looks to make early adjustments in today's contest against Holy Cross.

The Minutewomen (0-1) are looking to open their home schedule with a victory, banking on three aspects of the game.

Team work

UMass isn't looking to change its strategy, but rather use a simple tactic in order to defeat the Crusaders in today's contest: team work.

"I thought just overall teamwork. I think we weren't there for each other [against Northwestern] on our slides, defensively, and groundballs we were by ourselves," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said.

"UMass lacrosse is built on doing all the dirty work and doing it all together," Venechanos said. "And I thought we needed more of that, and we've been working hard this past week with our drills."

Just like last week, Venechanos is unsure of her starting lineup. While she stated she did want to keep similar sets of plays going, the actual lineup is still in question.

"We're going to try and move some people around," Venechanos said. "We're going to be moving a lot more people around, but I think getting more opportunities on goal will be a high priority for us."

The Minutewomen are hoping to fix the mistakes they made against the Wildcats in their 18-6 loss in San Diego by uniting more as a team.

"As a group, [we want to be] limiting [Holy Cross'] high-quality opportunities, which I felt Northwestern had a lot of," Venechanos said. "[We hope to be] playing more as a team on the attack and also on defense."

Draw controls

In the season opener against Northwestern, the Minutewomen were overpowered, 21-5, in draw controls, with the Maroon and White nabbing just a pair in the second half.

"I think draw controls killed us last week," Venechanos said. "I think the final score was very consistent to the draw controls. We talked about how we need the ball and we need to gain that to get possession and gain opportunities."

Last year, one of the keys to the success of the Minutewomen came from their earned draw controls. Over the course of the season, UMass outclassed its opponents in draw controls by a 266-197 margin.

"A lot of draw controls are heart and hustle, and we've been working hard," Venechanos said. "The girls have been coming out earlier at practice, and continue to try to get the ball back in our hands after we score."

Leading the team last season in draw controls were attackers Meghan Reddy (78) and Holly Drown (44). Below the now graduated players was current senior Jackie Lyons, who had 31 draw controls, while midfielder Merritt Cosgrove also earned a high amount with 27.

"We're not asking someone to be Superwoman," Venechanos said. "We're not asking one person to replace each of these people, but we're asking to do it as a team. I think as a team we could replace Meg Reddy, as a team we could replace Holly's finishing ability."

With the losses of Reddy and Drown, along with a combined 122 draw controls, the Minutewomen offense is looking to recapture their draw control dominance.

Home-field advantage

Today's game against the Crusaders is the first contest to take place in McGuirk stadium in the 2010 season.

"[We're looking to] refocus, regroup, and we're excited we have sixteen more games," Venechanos said. "We're glad that we didn't end with Northwestern, we started with Northwestern, and we have 16 more games."

Including today's game, UMass will play five of its next six games at home before hitting the road for six games.

Last season, the Minutewomen went 5-2 on their home field. Absent from UMass' home schedule last season was Holy Cross, who defeated the Minutewomen, 11-7, in Worcester.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu.

Postseason push requiring win against La Salle

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Staff

With four games left in the 2010 season, the Atlantic 10 women's basketball standings are really shaping up.

The Massachusetts women's basketball team is in prime position — as of right now — to make the A-10 tournament. The Minutewomen are alone in ninth with a record of 3-7 in the conference, but have a must-win game tonight at La Salle.

"I think it's really trying to focus on getting into the A-10 tournament," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said about the postseason push. "La Salle just had a win over Fordham, and they've got four or five seniors on their team and they don't want to end their season prematurely, so it's just about us getting out there and taking care of business."

La Salle finished tied for 13th in the A-10 last year with a record of 10-19, and 1-13 in the conference. This year, the Explorers (6-19, 1-9 A-10) are on pace for the same type of finish while UMass could separate itself from the bottom of the conference with a win.

Up until last Saturday, the Explorers were winless in conference play, with their last victory coming against Penn on Jan. 2. However, its last contest, La Salle toppled Fordham, 70-62, at home.

This year, the Explorers have not won two games in a row at any point.

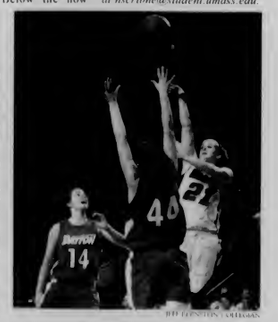
Senior forward Morgan Robinson leads La Salle with 10.3 points and 6.0 rebounds per game. In La Salle's lone conference win, Robinson finished with 11 points and seven rebounds.

Another senior, Jamie Walsh, outperformed Robinson in the Explorer's last game. Against Fordham, Walsh had 19 points on 5-of-9 shooting from beyond the arc — way above her average of 9.8 points per game. Walsh is a good 3-point shooter, converting 53-of-138 this year, good for 38 percent.

"They have several people that can shoot the ball," Dacko said about the Explorers. "We've got to just come out and defend, play hard on the ball and really dominate on the boards."

On paper, UMass will clearly have the rebounding advantage. As a team, La Salle is bringing down 29.2 rebounds per game, compared to UMass' average of 36.1 per game. However, that category is a statistic that Dacko was unhappy with in the last game against Dayton.

The Minutewomen were outrebounded 40-30 by the Flyers and lost their 10th game at the Mullins Center last Saturday, 74-60. UMass rallied to cut the Dayton lead to four points at halftime, but the visitors pulled away with a second-half run.



In the loss, Diatiena Hill led the team in scoring with 15 points, while adding four rebounds and five assists.

Last year, UMass and La Salle met at the Mullins Center with the Minutewomen winning by one of their largest margins of victory on the season, easing their way to a 16-point win, 82-66.

In the contest, Kristina Danella scored a career-high 25 points. The sophomore was 7-of-10 shooting from the field, and 6-of-8 from beyond the arc, while converting 5-of-7 from the free-throw line.

This is the second week in a row that the Minutewomen will make a trip to Philadelphia. The last time down to the "City of Brotherly Love" UMass fell, 66-54, to Temple.

Neil Carroll can be reached at nacarrol@student.umass.edu

The Minutewomen face La Salle tonight as they attempt to climb the Atlantic 10 standings.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 37 LOW: 26 www.DailyCollegian.com THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 2010

Rec Center altering gym landscape

Success of UMass' new Recreation Center could muscle out gym competition in town

Zumba dance aerobics classes are just one of the free options available to undergraduates at the popular new UMass Recreation Center, which has changed the landscape of the local Amherst gym market.

By Caitlin Soto
Collegian Staff

Before the construction of the new Recreation Center, which was funded almost entirely through undergraduate student fees, the typical student in pursuit of a more toned body had little choice but to venture outside the University of Massachusetts. Their choices were limited to joining local fitness gyms or the much smaller, less-equipped Boyden Gym. Without a good alternative on campus, it was common for students to pay significant sums for memberships at gyms in the surrounding area.

Over the past decade, Amherst gyms such as Leading Edge Fitness (formerly known as Gold's Gym) and Planet Fitness have prospered as the University supplied them yearly with an influx of students seeking the ideal place to work out. With the opening of the new Recreation Center and its subsequent popularity, it stands to reason that many of those past customers will now favor working out on campus for free. However, certain factors like large crowds and inefficient parking at the new building have also led some undergrads to hold onto their gym memberships nonetheless.

It is hard not to notice the success of the new Recreation Center, especially when walking past the array of students running on humming treadmills in the pursuit of fitness. Since its unveiling last semester, the Recreation Center has been frequented by thousands of UMass students per day.

"When I first walked into the new Recreation Center I was stunned," said undergrad Dan Dalfonso about his first experience at the building. "Then I saw the basketball courts — I was in fitness heaven."

The gym offers students cutting-edge facilities for the first time in years, including a college-regulation basketball court, four group exercise rooms, and exclusive lines of equipment designed to work more than one muscle group and take stress off of joints.

Despite the Recreation Center's clear success thus far, some local gym owners do not seem particularly worried about losing customers thanks to offerings that go beyond what can be found inside the UMass campus limits.

Leading Edge Fitness is located at 10 University Drive, and is the closest private gym to campus. According to Leading Edge's manager Allie Whitesides, the opening of the new building has not affected student membership at the gym so far.

"Student membership is [only] about 25 percent of all memberships at Gold's Gym," said Whitesides. "The rest is made up of locals and faculty." Because of the small percentage of members who are students, the number of active memberships has not dropped.

"[Leading Edge's] acquisition of new memberships actually surpassed last year's numbers," added Whitesides. She maintained that Leading Edge offers its members many perks that still won't be found anywhere on the UMass campus, along with a free introductory training session with a personal trainer and group classes with no long lines (unlike those plaguing the Recreation Center).

"I love the new Recreation Center," said UMass student Jackie Nicholich. "I wish we could have access to personal trainers, though. I can see the benefits of wanting to work out outside the University. You get more personal attention."

"[Leading Edge] isn't packed like the Recreation Center and I have access to a personal trainer," remarked UMass student Joe Cavaliere, who maintains a membership at Leading Edge. "It's more than a gym to me. It's like a second home."

Even though Leading Edge does not seem to have been adversely harmed by the Recreation Center, not all local gyms have been as lucky.

Planet Fitness is a franchise fitness facility located at 335 Russell Street, and has lost memberships due to the opening of the Recreation Center. A Planet Fitness staff member who wished to remain anonymous revealed that approximately 60 percent of Planet Fitness' members are students, so the gym expected to lose some student members this semes-

See GYMS on page 2

Black Sheep looks for support from its flock

By Nick Bush
Collegian Staff

Many small businesses are finding lines of credit hard to come by since the recession hit the American banking sector, but the owner of the Black Sheep Deli in Amherst has taken a unique approach to raising money for renovations, and one that relies on the establishment's most consistent supporters — its everyday patrons.

One of the first things evident to customers upon entering is the colorful chalk of the deli's blackboard, enshrined with sandwiches created with an inventive flair not found in a run of the mill fast food restaurant or pizzeria. In part thanks to the unique character of the establishment, the Black Sheep has come to be known as an enclave for the Valley's local progressive bohemians who patronize its bakery, coffee shop and deli offerings daily.

As the owner and manager of the Black Sheep, Nick Seamon has been operating from a prominent location between Town Hall and the Amherst Police Department for more than 23 years, and has taken what some could call an idiosyncratic approach towards raising funds for renovations. Until Sunday, Feb. 21 the Black Sheep will be selling 'Deli Dollars," a form of gift certificates.

The twist, however, is that Deli Dollars will be redeemable only after April 15; for their wait, patrons will get 25 percent more buying power at the Black Sheep. For example, if someone were to purchase eight dollars of Deli Dollars today, the gift certificates would be worth ten dollars in mid-April.

"Support a local business in this tough economy," reads the beginning of a flyer accompanying the Black Sheep's announcement of the plan, which hopes to raise as much as $10,000.

"We did this a number of times before in order to raise money for specific reasons," said Seamon. "We have always liked to do things our own way around here, and try to consider new ideas."

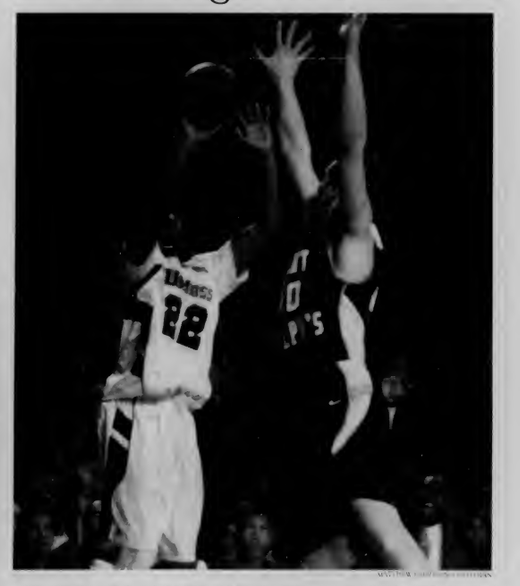
He mentioned the current difficulty many small businesses have had securing loans from bank lenders over the past year, but noted that he much preferred being supported by local patrons than the now-beleaguered banks.

"I prefer alternate sources of funding," said Seamon. "The fewer bank loans, the better. My goal is no bank loans . Just a bank account."

He mentioned similar instances where the Black Sheep has chosen alternative methods of funding for its growth, including when it added a handicapped accessible bathroom twelve years ago, and its expansion of its refrigeration abilities just over a decade ago.

This time around, Seamon is hoping to help pay for recent renovations to the café, which have added two new tables of seating, expanded counter space and streamlined the checkout process for patrons.

"This way," said Seamon, "people can come in and try new things" while supporting a local business, and still benefit themselves with increased purchasing power.



"The people of Amherst are very supportive," he said, "and our customers have been good to us over the years."

Nick Bush can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu.

The Black Sheep Deli in downtown Amherst will give customers who purchase "Deli Dollars" 25 percent more than they initially paid when the gift certificates mature in mid-April.

UMass falls to George Washington 66-60

Guard Anthony Gurley takes a shot over a Saint Joseph's defender last Sunday. The Minutemen dropped their game against George Washington last night 66-60.

ARTS & LIVING
Breaking the calzone blues
Locally owned pizzeria shop Alpha Pizza boasts a revamped menu and ingredients gathered from neighboring areas.
SEE PAGE 4

SPORTS
Mass Attack meets Merrimack
The UMass hockey team will take on Merrimack Friday at Lawler Arena, hoping to turn around a three-game skid.
SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION
Collegian columnist Shane Nickerson decries the activities of the Roman Catholic Church in Rwanda.
SEE PAGE 3

DailyCollegian.com
Head online to check out previews of all of UMass' spring sports teams

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 21
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Joinson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shayna Murphy
COMICS EDITOR Andrew Witts
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Scannell
ASSISTANT COMICS Domonic Mei
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Asser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cody
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, the Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Sam Butterfield
COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Dugan
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Rec Center pumps up gym competition

GYMS from page 1

ter. However, the staff member maintained that some members came back due to crowdedness at the UMass Recreation Center and the value of a Planet Fitness membership.

"Planet Fitness offers things that the Recreation Center just cannot," said Northampton resident Noreen Alcott. "These extras make Planet Fitness so much more than just any other gym."

The Recreation Center is free for undergraduate students, but for faculty and local residents the price for a membership runs to $150 per semester. Graduate students pay a little less, but still must pay about $125 per semester. These prices are steep compared to those of local gyms. Leading Edge has memberships for as low as $20 per month. As for Planet Fitness, the prices are even lower, at $10 per month.

With more benefits, smaller crowds and lower prices, local gyms are now hoping to maintain their appeal in a newly competitive student market. One of the clearest winners in the situation remains UMass students, who will benefit from the increased competition for years to come.

While the recession seems to have everyone cutting back on expenses these days, it appears some students are still willing to pay for a workout, which means there's muscle money to be had – even in this current economy.

Caitlin Soto can be reached at csoto@student.umass.edu.

HANNAH CHOWN/COLLEGIAN

The Recreation Center's four group exercise rooms have proven exceedingly popular – so popular that long lines have become an issue.

Crime Log

WEDNESDAY FEB. 10

Maksim Reznik of 555 North Ave, Fort Lee, NJ was arrested at 12:47 a.m. as the result of a traffic stop. An officer on patrol noticed a grey Nissan Altima crossing into the oncoming traffic lane on Commonwealth Ave. While following the vehicle, the officer noticed the right brake light and rear turn signal were not working. When pulled over, the officer reported Reznik had bloodshot eyes and smelled of alcohol. He failed all of the field sobriety tests and registered a .09 on the police station's breathalyzer. Reznik was charged with violating marked traffic lanes, motor vehicle lights violation, and operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol.

FRIDAY FEB. 12

Reginald Rhinehardt Bailey of 4965 Washington St. Boston, Mass. was arrested in the John Quincy Adams dormitory as the result of an active warrant for his arrest.

SATURDAY FEB. 13

Thomas MacPhee of 61 Lewis Rd. West Yarmouth, Mass. was arrested at 12:37 a.m. as the result of a speeding violation. The arresting officer saw a blue Mercury Sable speeding on Massachusetts Ave. MacPhee was pulled over after turning left onto University Dr. and appeared disoriented while speaking with slurred speech. When asked to perform field sobriety tests, the officer reported MacPhee had difficulty exiting the car and remaining steady on his feet. Inside the car, the officer found multiple containers of alcohol. In the station, he registered a .16 on the breathalyzer. MacPhee was charged with speeding, possession of liquor while under the age of 21, possession of greater than reasonable and proper quantities of alcohol, and operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol.

Ramona Santiago of 20 River Rd. Somerville, Mass. was arrested at 1:26 a.m. as the result of a traffic stop. A plainclothes officer saw a white Chevy drive onto the curb of Massachusetts Ave, puncture the tire and continue to drive. On Rt. 116 Santiago was pulled over after causing extensive damage to her vehicle. She had bloodshot eyes, and was asked to complete four field sobriety tests, which she reportedly failed. At the police station, she registered a .13 on the breathalyzer. Santiago was charged with violating marked traffic lanes and operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol.

MONDAY FEB. 15

Abel Lee of 11 Boulder St. East Longmeadow, Mass. was arrested as the result of a traffic stop. An officer noticed a white Toyota Camry which failed to stop at for a traffic sign on North Pleasant St. When pulled over, Lee had glassy, bloodshot eyes and was asked to complete four field sobriety tests, which she allegedly failed. Lee was charged with failure to stop at a traffic symbol, and operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
-Sir Salman Rushdie

No hope and no charity

Shane Nickerson

I found an article in a recent USA Today advocating the Catholic Church's practices in Rwanda. The article described how the Christian faith has been instilling the Rwandan people with the idea of forgiveness, which it claims has been very helpful to their society. Of course, isn't it always the norm for religion to show only its positive side?

What the article did was the traditional downplaying of all the suffering the Catholic Church has caused in that country and instead focused on a single case in which a woman named Rosaria had forgiven her family's killer, a man named Saveri, who now lived next door to her, in the name of Jesus Christ.

The article, so suggestively named "Rwanda's 'Miracle' of Forgiveness," by Amy Sullivan, manages to shoot itself in the foot. According to the article, Rosaria said, "How can I not forgive him when I too am a sinner?"

What an awful way to demean oneself.

The church teaches her, among other idiocies I will discuss, that her wrong-doings no matter how mild in comparison to the slaughter of her kin with a machete – are on par with those of Saveri. This is a disgusting belief that should not be practiced in any reach of the world by anyone of sane convictions.

While I am not advocating the idea of holding a grudge, many evolutionary biologists believe (with good reason) that it can be healthy to our survival.

While I am not advocating the idea of holding a grudge, many evolutionary biologists believe (with good reason) that it can be healthy to our survival. Sullivan borrowed a quote from Michael McCullough, a psychology professor at the University of Miami, who said "it deters potential aggressors and discourages those who have harmed you from repeating the offense."

Who is to say that Saveri is not suffering from a psychosis that could inevitably have him kill Rosaria as well? Furthermore, maybe he is perfectly sane, yet if the cards are down and times desperate, it would not be justified nor desirable to think a man who has gone on a heinous killing spree would still act as your friend.

To point the direction of my article more towards the Catholic Church, this is not the only "sin" of which the Church is guilty. While the Church continues to boast about its great charity work, we do not often enough see the true picture. Subsequently, the church has a sort of "band-aid for bible study" policy, if you will.

While they may provide food, medicine and the likes of which the Rwandans need to survive, they exchange these staples for religious indoctrination. If the Church were truly as morally sound as it claims to be, it would find compassion in helping others without anything in return, and would offer Christian teachings only if they were desired by the Rwandan people.

Most amazing is what you will find is taught in these Rwandan biblical lectures. Rwanda, infamous among other African countries for overwhelming suffering caused by HIV/AIDS, is being taught to avoid contraception. With its absurd rules of teaching abstinence-only safe sex, the Catholic Church has added that condoms, in fact, cause the HIV virus to spread.

The point of this, they have argued, is to save the purity of these people; it's to let them know that contracting HIV is more morally sound than birth-control. Are we to now start reveling in all the wonders and charity the Catholic Church has bestowed upon these people? Or perhaps we should repudiate the awful ideologies that actually increased the suffering and lives taken by the epidemic.

Now, in another article published by USA Today, the Pope declares that Irish bishops should be brave and acknowledge the child abuse scandals that have gone on for some time in the Catholic Church. Well, how kind of him! Surely it might be a risk to one so infallible, to put their reputation at risk for a mere few whiny children. Sarcasm aside, perhaps some kudos are in order for the Pope to acknowledge that the molestation of young boys is wrong.

Yet may be we should take it to the next level; maybe we should see collectively that these people, these ordained ministers, popes, cardinals and what have you, are no less mortal than are we. Perhaps it is high time that we stop giving them the credibility of being able to talk directly to a divine being.

For what resources have they that are unavailable to you? In what way can they claim to have a personal relationship that you just can't seem to grasp yourself? This is not moral teaching. The bureaucracy of the Catholic Church is something not to be celebrated, but to be mistrusted. I encourage all to keep a keen eye on the practices being performed by the Catholic Church. Stand up for Rwanda, and investigate for yourself what the Catholic Church has truly been doing to the country.

Shane Nickerson is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at snickers@student.umass.edu.

Can we question civilly?

Nick Milano

After President Obama spoke with House Republicans on January 29, the idea of having the chief executive regularly meet with Congress for an open question and answer session gained traction on the Internet. About 50 influential political commentators from both the very liberal and very conservative sides united to create an online petition to initiate Question Time as a regular event. Its constituonality aside, Question Time would be the single best way for Obama to make good on his promises to create a more open and transparent federal government.

From the beginnung, President Obama, then candidate Obama, focused his efforts on telling the country that there was a need to change the way business is done in Washington. He mentioned it in his speech announcing his candidacy for the Democratic presidential nomination by saying on the one hand he had not "spent a lot of time learning the ways of Washington. But I've been there long enough to know that the ways of Washington must change."

It was statements like this, clearly in accordance with his opposition to the w ur in Iraq, in addition to his ability to make brilliant speeches and his not being a Republican that ultimately swept him to the Oval Office.

Yet Obama was not the only candidate to run on the promise of making Washington more open and transparent. And, he was certainly not the first president to be elected on such a platform. Ten years ago President Bush structured his campaign on his outsider status, saying it was "time for Republicans and Democrats to end the politics of fear" and that he wanted "to change the tone of Washington to one of civility and respect."

Now, one can say Bush did nothing to advance these causes, and in fact exacerbated the Republican and Democratic dichotomy. Since taking office, Obama has been unable to bridge the gaps between the two sides and has done nothing in the way of making a more transparent federal government.

One possible solution to this problem is the aforementioned Question Time. By standing up in front of Republicans, President Obama was forced to answer their questions. Republicans were able to chip away at his health care plan, but at the same time, he was able to fight back and knock down their criticisms of his plan. Question Time is not a novel idea and it already exists in most Parliamentary systems. The United States Congress and the Executive would do well to adopt it for the American republic.

Too much of politics is confined into these rigid 30-second sound bytes. It is easier to launch attacks when all one has to do is be entertaining and divisive.

First, as Nate Silver of FiveThirtyEight.com, a highly regarded nonpartisan political website, writes, "it seems to me that there is a need for conversations that are not staged, that are not reduced to 30-second sound bytes."

Too much of politics is confined into these rigid 30 second sound bytes. It is easier to launch attacks when all one must do is be entertaining and divisive. A brief statement to get radio and television play can seldom be criticized and taken apart for its flaws. In this sense, Republicans have benefited because they can claim their opposition to Obama's health care plan is based on their fear of socialism.

How can the president respond? It is hard to prove one is not a socialist in a quick, straightforward statement meant for mass consumption. Opportunities for the president to address members of Congress in a lengthy back-and-forth would diffuse such bitter and false statements.

Second, it would open up the process of Congress. It is difficult for members of the public to follow what is happening in the halls and basements of the Capitol building. Many different committees can be debating and attaching amendments to essentially the same legislation. Even being a steady viewer of CSPAN leaves one in the dark and I have tried. Even when I was an intern on Capitol Hill, it was impossible for me to follow what was happening across all the committees, and we got daily and hourly e-mail updates! Question Time would enable the public to tune in to a meticulous discussion of a President's proposals and Congress' counterproposals. It would shed some much needed light on the business of Congress.

When thinking of what Question Time could look like, one cannot help but dream of an institution like Prime Minister's Questions in the United Kingdom's Parliament.

The weekly debate in London helps the Prime Minister defend himself from the Opposition's attacks as much as it helps the Opposition connect to the public. Since a parliamentary system severely limits an opposing party's powers, Prime Minister's Questions is crucial for the Opposition to get its points across.

Question Time in the United States could function similarly. By being forced to answer pointed questions from both supporters and detractors, the executive would have to be convincing to keep the public on his side. At the same time, it would give the minority party power to influence the debate instead of continuously being blamed for bringing Congressional business to a standstill. Question Time would deliver on Obama's, former President Bush's and countless other presidential candidates' promise of creating a more transparent government.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

Five Reasons Why you can't get a job

1) The market for English majors has been over–saturated for decades.
2) "Made artwork with bodily excretions" is a real resume–killer in the corporate world.
3) Your plot to win millions with a frivolous lawsuit failed miserably.
4) Some things should never have been photographed in the first place, much less posted to Facebook.
5) Mother Earth should not be listed as a reference.

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

PLEASE WRITE BETTER

Dear Editor,

It has been on my mind for some time that your editing is flawed. I appreciate that you are probably newer writers, but that does not excuse some of the poor writing I've seen. I want you to write more intelligently – be thorough, investigate and don't make unsubstantiated claims.

I am going to pick on Shane Cronin as an example, though I do not think he is alone. In his editorial, which was presented as being anti-bigotry, he got carried away and did the deed himself, and I, in his words "found the ignorance on display cause for reflection."

Racism is based on the idea that there are prejudices and gross inaccuracies in making broad statements about a people because of a skin color, or race. Shane says "I'm going to make a bold statement: white people, my experience has led me to conclude, do not often socially integrate with people of color."

And this: "UMass enrolled 863 African American students during the fall 2009-2010 academic year. It enrolled 770 during the academic year a decade prior. That is an average growth rate of fewer than ten black students per year enrolled. Those figures don't strike me as being particularly 'affirmative.'"

Shane and friends, I would like to point out some flaws here. First, you are calling out a particular student, as well as white people in general to stop making racial statements, followed by your own racial statements. Second, get your terminology right. In one paragraph, you talk about African-Americans and blacks. Just pick one and stick to it until there is a reason to change terms. Also, in this paragraph where you count the number of African American students, you fail to mention a very important thing – that the category African-American students does not include people of mixed race or other minority people of color. It is a flaw in our system, but I think it is also a flaw in your writing to repeat the error.

Yes, I wholeheartedly agree that we have major racial lines drawn in this nation, and that the university has done a poor job of integrating women, people of color and transgendered students into the system, and I am pissed off about it. I also agree that we need to think about our words and what they mean. Racism is not just white people fearing black people; it is any person acting in a discriminatory manner towards another based on the other person's race, color, nationality etc.

While your experience may not be one of racial integration, it is unfair to make a statement about all white people. I would remind you that while it is a complicated fact, it is white voters who had the majority of votes and got Obama elected.

In reading your editorial I went from intrigued to disappointed. It sounds like your heart is in the right place. Please, in the future, think three steps outside of your comfort zone. I think you will find some scary truths, complicated answers and some very good writing there.

J. Grasso

BLAME BOTH PARTIES

Re: "The Party of No," Alex Perry, February 7.

Dear editor,

I must agree with several things that Alex Perry said in his "The Party of No" article. Former President Bush and Republicans have taken much blame from those who are critical of American politics, Congress' lack of meaningful progress and the current state of our country. The GOP has indeed worked hard to halt the progress of the Senate's health care bill; perhaps for good reason.I disagree with Perry when he says that Democrats are to blame for the, "failures of this administration."

Yes, I believe that they have tried to go too far left on many issues and I believe they have failed to listen to the public. That said, I believe it is clear that both sides of the aisle have failed to work together on much of anything recently. Americans want improved health care and they want it reasonably priced. Who wouldn't? Many wanted universal care, but it seems that even more did not. A true compromise is in order and the fact that none is in sight is evidence that Congress is failing us.

This is one example of dozens where party politics inhibit progress. With midterm elections around the corner, we can be sure our politicians will say all the right things. They will campaign hard and incumbents will prioritize re-election over much else. Progress is likely slow even more as a result.So who is really to blame for the recent failures of our government? It is those who forgot that politics is about public service rather than power.

Nick Savell
UMass student

HOLUB DOING OKAY JOB

Re: "To raise or not to raise," January 27.

Dear editor,

I am not quite as outraged as many are about the raise for Chancellor Holub. It seems absurd that during a recession we give the Chancellor a raise, but he has had to deal with running the University despite the economy.

The only thing that I ask is that he keeps the fees for out-of-state students, like myself, right where they are. Governor Deval Patrick's new budget is going to bring more than $20 million into the university. The new budget will hopefully lessen the burden on out-of-state students, or at least keep it as it is. I think it is outrageous to make students from outside of Massachusetts pay so much, especially after an increase in federal funding.

Ross Bernhardt
UMass student

WANT TO WRITE TO US?

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 550 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com or submitted online at dailycollegian.com.

We regret that, due to space constraints, not all letters will be printed, but can be found online.

Fed/Up? Ed/Op.

Breaking the college calzone blues

Local pizzeria revamps menu, stays ahead of the competition

By Brendan Murphy
Collegian Staff

In November 2009, Alpha Pizza threw its hat into the ring of Amherst pizzerias and delivery joints and quickly separated itself from the pack through its incorporation of fresh local ingredients.

Formerly known as Pizza Rama, Alpha Pizza changed the name and face of the business but retained some of the same employees who have been there since the beginning. While some of the faces may be new and the menu's been revamped, delivery remains prompt and the food remains delicious.

I recently got a chance to catch up with co-owner Mark Avgoustakis, who has more than 35 years experience cooking up college-town favorites, and talked to him about some of the dishes, their recipes and Alpha Pizza in general.

Since last semester, Alpha Pizza's been serving everything from pizzas and calzones to fajitas and quesadillas. Its eclectic menu draws cooking styles from Greece, Italy, Mexico and many other countries. American casual favorites such as burgers are served straight-up, or topped with gorgonzola and mushrooms, spinach and feta or chili and cheddar. Alpha's gorgonzola is amazing and makes one wonder why more restaurants don't offer gorgonzola as a topping. It's just one of Alpha's many secret weapons in their arsenal of ingredients, breaking the mold of ordinary pizzas in Amherst.

When asked where he draws his inspiration for his dishes, Avgoustakis responded, "The dishes we serve on the menu have been in our family for two or three generations. I was working at Pizza Rama since 1972, so we carried a lot of successful recipes over from the old menu as well."

In addition to being delicious, Alpha is affordable too. Their gourmet pizzas range in price from 10 to 18 bucks, but they can make any small pizza into a calzone for only $7.50. From the first bite, the buyer knows the food here is different than anything else in town. Why? For starters, all of the ingredients are fresh! Every vegetable they use and every piece of bread Alpha serves is as fresh as they can get. Co-owner Avgoustakis explains, "We use local grinders that we buy once or twice a day, and we restock when we need to. The dough for our pizzas and calzones is made fresh by hand daily as well. We also incorporate a lot of local produce in with our food. We'll go down to the farmer's markets when they're around and get vegetables grown locally. The Squash Company here on Belchertown Road is one of our big suppliers."

Indeed, mixing in local ingredients lets Alpha Pizza stand out in a sea of everyday eateries, but there's something else about Alpha that simply can't be found anywhere else: their dough is slightly sweet. There's a pleasant, sugary aftertaste that's not overpowering enough to shadow the flavor of the calzone or pizza, but distinctly present upon chewing so the consumer knows it's there.

When asked about this distinctive quality in their dough, Avgoustakis replied, "I can't reveal all of our secrets, but we do add a little sugar." In part, that little bit of sugar distinguishes Alpha's pizza and calzones from everyone else's. Sugar can be a tricky ingredient, especially when adding it into food that normally doesn't require any. But Alpha does it with class – it's not sickeningly sweet whatsoever, but just enough so that it leaves its mark. With the fresh vegetables and unique dough, Alpha's pizzas and calzones are some of the best to find in the town of Amherst.

Formerly known as Pizza Rama, the revamped Alpha Pizza boasts a savory assortment of dishes, including clam chowder and chicken breast heaped with roasted peppers and marinara sauce.

This pizza place's deliciousness doesn't just end with the usual eats. Alpha's hot grinders are enormous, and require two people to finish in most cases. For only $6.75, Alpha offers a '12" chicken parm packed full with breaded, fried, chicken breast heaped with marinara sauce and roasted red peppers, then topped off with gooey, melted provolone cheese. Their chicken parmegian is a thing of beauty – a sight to behold. It's also one that'll probably last for two good meals as well. Their 12" veal parm is also as insanely cheap as their chicken parm, at the inexplicably low price of $6.75.

Alpha has specials too, such as a soup of the day and clam chowder. For now, the chowder is only available on Fridays. While it may not be as great as some of the chowder you'll find around Boston and the Cape, this is some of the best in Amherst. The pastrami grinder was a little disappointing, since the meat was meager and it wasn't hot like the menu claimed.

Alpha may be one of the best places in town to find a pizza or calzone. The 35-plus years of experience Avgoustakis has in cooking food really makes for an enjoyable experience at Alpha Pizza.

Avgoustakis co-owns the restaurant with Laurie Wiernasz. The restaurant is open 11:00 a.m.-10:00 p.m. Monday through Saturday (and Sundays 11 a.m. -8 p.m.), but only available for delivery after 4:00 p.m. Try some of Alpha's eats today and you won't walk away disappointed. Buying local and fresh doesn't just make Alpha Pizza appealing – it makes them local heroes as well.

Brendan Murphy can be reached at brendanm@student.umass.edu.

Try to take things lightly in 'Rome'

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

With a decent cast hobbled together from some of America's finest television shows and a seemingly funny storyline, writer-director Mark Steven Johnson's "When in Rome" was slated to be a hit. Viewers, however, might take a different stance.

Kirsten Bell stars as workaholic Beth Harper, an aggressive art curator who must take time out of her busy schedule to attend the wedding of her impetuous little sister (Alexis Dziena) in … you guessed it – Rome. As evidenced on "Veronica Mars" and "Gossip Girl," Bell is a cute and funny actress, but she seems better suited to the small screen.

Once in Rome, Beth meets up with Nick, played perfectly by former "All My Children" and "Las Vegas" star Josh Duhamel. As a guy's guy looking for true love, Duhamel shines, his performance running the gamut of lovelorn emotions. Nevertheless, Nick is a thinly drawn character and the audience fails to get much of a sense of the character's background or home life. A story about an accident in his college days serves as a focal point of the film, but viewers are left yearning to learn more about his character with little respite.

When Nick and Beth meet, sparks fly immediately and hilarity ensues at the reception. In one particularly humorous scene, they share a speech and a dance, which ends abruptly. Later, Beth, feeling hurt, plunges herself into the Fontana D'Amore (Fountain of Love), screaming at the beautiful statue about not believing in love. To cement her cynicism, she scoops up a handful of coins, thinking she's saving their original owners from heartbreak.

Though the movie is titled "When in Rome," only approximately 15 minutes of the film actually take place in the Italian hub. Beth returns to Manhattan shortly thereafter to find she's unleashed a curse – the owners of the coins are now madly in love with her.

Her potential suitors add character to "When in Rome." She must deal with four very different, flamboyant personalities. How convenient is it that out of the four coins she picked up, three happen to live in the same city as Beth? Convenient enough that it sheds a harsh light on the shaky premise Johnson has assembled for the film.

Dax Shepard (Bell's real-life fiancé) co-stars as Gale, an egotistical male model who loves Beth at least as much as he loves himself, and that's really saying something. Danny Devito ("It's Always Sunny in Philadelphia") is Al, a sausage magnate looking for love later in life. Then there's Lance, a street magician overplayed by Jon Heder ("Napoleon Dynamite," 2005's "Just Like Heaven"), a character who had the potential to be amusing, but entirely missed the mark.

Best known for his turn on "Arrested Development," Will Arnett appears as Antonio, an Italian artist who attempts to lay claim to Beth's heart. Arnett did not seem to get as many lines as the other men, and as a result, "When in Rome" is a poor showcase of his talents. His time spent on camera, however, is full of physical comedy and enjoyable one-liners. However, the humor wrought by Arnett could be attributed to his horrible, heavily affected accent as easily as it could be to his comical prowess.

So Beth has to juggle the affections of these ridiculous men, trying to find a cure to the curse. However, "When in Rome" takes a different turn when she finds out that the fifth coin she took belongs to Nick, whom she's been dating and subsequently falling in love with. What's a girl to do?

The plot of the film, as a whole, seems predictable. Many times Bell's character comes off as annoying and exaggerated. Additionally, the plotline of Beth and Nick's love seems rushed, but when pitted against the other relationships at play, seems the most believable.

With uncomplicated camera shots and a good but forgettable soundtrack featuring Matchbox 20 and Jason Mraz, "When in Rome" will likely be lost in the archives of unremarkable romantic comedies of yore.

While good acting keeps "When in Rome" from failing, unexplored storylines and characters inhibit the film. In keeping with the film's coin theme, some may suggest that it's better for potential viewers to save their money and wait for the film to hit the half-off bin. You won't hear any arguments here.

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kathynm@student.umass.edu.

Kirsten Bell stars as a workaholic art curator who finds love – and a slew of unsuitable suitors – after attending a wedding in Rome, Josh Duhamel co-stars.

Hampshire College dancers to convey emotion in movement

By Lisa Linsley
Collegian Staff

Tonight faculty and student works will be presented at Hampshire College's annual Winter Dance Concert in the main Dance Studio in the Longsworth Arts Village. The concert will include six acts which negotiate relationships through movement.

The Dance acts presented are all performed and choreographed by student and faculty dancers. Unlike many dance concerts in which routines are based on popular culture, the choreography distinctly explores symbolic events in the life of the performer or choreographer.

Lauren Anne Samuelson will perform a routine titled "Some [No] Thing." The theme behind this piece is the study of one's relationship with the self. This act will be followed by a sequel "Alone, Together," a duet which muses on the everyday life shared by two people.

Chani Bockwinkel, a senior at Hampshire, will fill the stage with engaging movement and humor. Bockwinkel will be involved in a trio called "Spoon, Wall, Gap," which will incorporate both a live performance and a film to illuminate images of the day-to-day with a fresh perspective.

Katrina De Wees, a junior at Hampshire, has been working on her dance, "Melomeander," for about five months, since September 2009.

De Wees says, "My work takes place in three different scenes, in three different times, and is of three different women who are co-existing on stage."

De Wees choreographed her dance based on research of her personal ancestry and the legacy of sexual and other violence against black women. The three different women she refers to are herself, Harriet Jacobs and her great, great, great grandmother. De Wees has completed genealogical research on her ancestry and her place within the context of the history and legacy of slavery, sexual violence and abuse, and the spirit of survival in black women.

"Furthermore, it is an interpretation of the present moment of black women, told through my personal interpretation," De Wees said.

The performances will encompass all styles of dance. While post-modern is a main focus, contemporary, hip-hop and break dance vocabularies will be incorporated. Fritha Pengelly, a visiting professor of dance, will present a dance for eight women with athletic and rhythmic movement which will include more joyous and upbeat routines that use hip-hop, break dance and contemporary styles.

The Winter Dance Concert will take place Thursday through Saturday, February 18 to 20. Tickets are ten dollars for the public and five dollars for students with a Five College identification.

Lisa Linsley can be reached at llinsley@student.umass.edu.

Antrim speaks at Hall

By Lindsay Pierce
Collegian Correspondent

Acclaimed writer Donald Antrim, author of such noted works as "Elect Mr. Robinson for a Better World" and 2000's "The Verificationist," will be the latest in a slew of celebrated novelists to visit the University of Massachusetts as part of the Visiting Writers Series. The event, which takes place tonight at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall, is open to the public.

Sponsored by the MFA Program for Poets and Writers and the Juniper Initiative for Literary Arts and Action, the Visiting Writers Series has brought established and emerging writers and poets to campus for almost 50 years.

According to Lisa Olstein, associate director of the MFA Program for Poets and Writers, "Each year the MFA faculty invites guests who represent a diversity of aesthetic, form and experience, introducing a dynamic range of excellent contemporary literature and poetry to the university community and introducing the University's vibrant literary tradition to writers from across the country."

"Readers include some of the most celebrated authors in contemporary literature as well as some of its most exciting up-and-coming talents," said Olstein.

In addition to Antrim and writers Jedediah Berry and Lily Hoang, the Visiting Writers Series will host Adrian Louis on April 1, and Rae Armantrout, recipient of the Fund for Poetry Grant, on May 4.

Antrim has contributed fiction and essays to "The New Yorker" since 1996, and in addition to his prior novels, has also published a memoir, "The Afterlife." He has also received fellowships from the National Endowment for the Arts, the John Simon Guggenheim Foundation, the Dorothy and Lewis B. Cullman Center for Scholars and Writers at the New York Public Library and the American Academy in Berlin. He currently teaches at Columbia University.

In his work "Bold Type," Larry Weissman describes Antrim as "darkly comedic" and says, "When you first read of one of his novels, Donald Antrim might seem to be completely insane. But then, the best artists have always been called crazy."

New York Times critic A. O. Scott has also spoken favorably of Antrim's works. In a 2006 article, he proclaimed "Donald Antrim's three books of fiction – 'Elect Mr. Robinson for a Better World,' 'The Hundred Brothers' and 'The Verificationist' – are sly exercises in unfettered fabulation, at once wildly inventive and meticulously controlled. They are witty, elegant and elusive constructions and, like much other work in the anti-realist, post-post-modernist mode, decidedly cool to the touch."

At the Visiting Writers Series, Antrim will share new and selected works with the audience.

Lindsay Pierce can be reached at lcpierce@student.umass.edu.

As the celebrated author of such works as "Elect Mr. Robinson for a Better World" and 2000's "The Verificationist," Donald Antrim will speak on campus tonight as part of Visiting Writers Series.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
Ads for $.70 per inch
On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10 per column inch
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

MFA IN EMERGENT MEDIA

The future is in the eyes of the innovators.
Create. Collaborate. Innovate.

Are you ready to write the next chapter of the digital revolution? Champlain's residential Master of Fine Arts (MFA) has been designed for a select group of individuals who are ready to explore the bounds of their own creativity, develop the skills to master the technology, and flourish in a collaborative environment. Envision your future with us.

AUGMENTED REALITY EXPERIENCE
An Individualized Interactive Web Experience

To learn more about our MFA in Emergent Media, visit our augmented reality experience at emergent.champlain.edu

CHAMPLAIN COLLEGE
Graduate Studies

Now Accepting applications
MFA.champlain.edu

Cahoon wants tougher team

UMass coach looking for more physical squad in future games

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

Jeff Hicks/The Collegian

Forward Will Ortiz looks for a teammate during a game earlier this season. UMass coach Don Cahoon wants his team to finish checks.

With last weekend's sweep by Northeastern, the Massachusetts hockey team tied its longest losing streak of the season and have continually answered questions as to what is going wrong.

After looking over tapes, UMass coach Don Cahoon found one major aspect leading to the team's recent three-game losing streak was its physicality.

"Physicality is one piece of it," he said. "We can't go from being a team that finishes checks and skates and creates opportunities to a team that does a bunch of fly-bys and not finishing checks, and therefore we play like a summer hockey league game," Cahoon said before Tuesday's practice.

With Friday's contest to be played at Merrimack's (11-15-1, 8-11-1 Hockey East) Lawler arena, the No. 18 Minutemen (16-13-0, 11-11-0 HEA) may be forced to play more physically. Compared to the Mullins Center (200 feet x 95 feet) the Warriors rink is significantly smaller (200x85), lending itself to more physical play.

However, Cahoon isn't relying on the size of the rink to get his team to play more physically, but instead on trying to change the team's thinking.

"It's a mindset," Cahoon said. "I can let you handle the puck and move the puck without putting a hand on you, or I can decide to make it every time you touch the puck you're going to get bumped."

Not only will playing more physically give the Warriors issues, it will also give UMass help in being more aggressive on offense. In the Minutemen's last six games – where they lost five of six – they managed to score 10 goals, with six coming in the five losses.

Much of the lack of offense was due to a lack of aggressiveness around the net, where the Minutemen were not crashing the net trying to put in loose pucks off rebounds.

Dainton gets nod

Goaltender Paul Dainton has been the go-to-guy for the Minutemen in net for most of the season, but with some recent struggles – 16 goals allowed in his last three games played – coupled with strong play from senior Dan Meyers, questions have come up prior to each game as to who will get the start.

Meyers was the starter in UMass' last victory, allowing one goal in a 4-1 win at Providence, and allowing two goals in his start last Friday to the Huskies, getting no offense in the 2-0 loss. Both Dainton and Meyers struggled two weeks ago against Boston College, as they allowed four and three goals respectively, splitting time in net.

Despite Dainton's recent struggles, the junior will get the start Friday at Merrimack according to Cahoon. After last Friday's loss to Northeastern, Cahoon said he figured Dainton would get the start this Friday and give Meyers the start on Saturday, as it is UMass' final regular season home game and senior night. But, with every game meaning more with the HEA standing so close, things seemed a bit more up in the air before Tuesday's practice.

"[Dainton] is playing on Friday night and we'll go from there," Cahoon said.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Draw control helps in win

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

After getting outhustled, outworked and generally outplayed by Northwestern in its first game of the 2010 campaign, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team responded in resounding fashion on Wednesday.

UMass coach Alexis Venechanos felt her team needed to improve in two key areas after the loss to the Wildcats: teamwork and draw controls. The Minutewomen did just that to the tune of out-drawing Holy Cross and having four multi-goal scorers in their 15-6 win over the Crusaders (0-1).

Leading the way for UMass (1-1) was sophomore Jesse O'Donnell, who poured in five total goals along with two draw controls. The game marked a career-high for O'Donnell in goals, after recording a lone score as a freshman in 2009.

"It's really great, but we had a really good team effort. It was the whole team that won the game," O'Donnell said after Wednesday's contest.

Coming off the bench for the first time in 20 games, junior Jackie Lyons reminded everyone why she was the leading scorer for the Minutewomen last season. Lyons scored her second, third and fourth goals of the year for her 10th hat trick and 16th multi-goal game of her career.

Along with O'Donnell and Lyons, freshman Lauren Terracciano and junior Haley Smith provided firepower with two scores each to round out the UMass scoring.

"We had a lot of different people step up," Venechanos said. "I feel Jesse O'Donnell stepped up, Lauren Terracciano played really well with a couple goals at the end, and Jackie Lyons played like [herself]. If we have other people stepping up, we're going to be a really balanced team. When you have one or two scorers, it's really easy to scout against at the end of the season."

The balanced scoring for the Minutewomen was initiated through the strong play on draw controls. After allowing 21 draw controls while obtaining five against Northwestern, it was the complete opposite for UMass on Wednesday.

For the game, the Minutewomen had 18 total draw controls, compared to five for Holy Cross. In the second half, especially, UMass dominated the Crusaders, 13-1.

Junior Jackie Lyons waits for the ball during a game last season. Yesterday against Holy Cross, she had her 10th career hat trick.

"I thought we threw a lot of people in there and they all did a great job," Venechanos said. "I feel the players around the circle did a great job too, the girls directed it and we were able to finish the play."

Much of the success for the Minutewomen was driven by freshmen who played well in their first game at McGuirk Stadium.

UMass had two freshmen in the starting lineup, Jordan Renna and Terracciano. Coming in as substitutes, Cori Murray, Kelsey Palmer and Christina Fey also played significant roles in the victory.

Fey entered for goalkeeper Katie Florence, who left the contest with a minor injury, and played just over nine minutes, holding Holy Cross to one score.

"We have a very young team, but the freshmen are going to keep building confidence throughout the season," O'Donnell said.

Despite being so young, Venechanos is confident her freshmen will get comfortable in their roles sooner rather than later.

"We're trying to be a really deep team, and in order to do that we have to let the younger players play," Venechanos said. "Every day we're just trying to learn more about each other and get better."

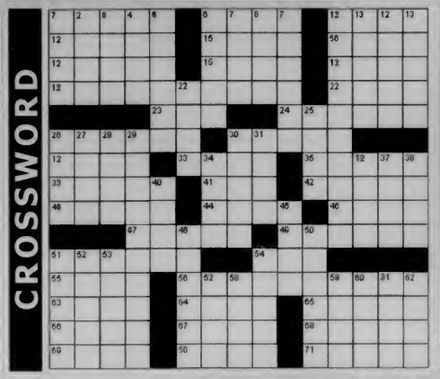
Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St. • 413-253-7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Providing the best off campus living experience
24 hour maintenance
Safe Apartments
Friendly Staff
Two Great locations:
Amherst Center and Hobart Lane
We start showing apartments
Feb. 3rd from 11:30am – 4:30pm M-F

SGA
02/16 to 03/01 NOMINATIONS FOR PRESIDENT, TRUSTEE, AREA GOVERNMENT 02/16 to 03/01
Pick up @ 420 Student Union, SGA Office
The Elections Commission
electionscommission@stuaf.umass.edu
http://blogs.umass.edu/ecsga/

PUFFTON VILLAGE
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry,
off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Off The Wall Games
Warhammer 40,000
Magic the Gathering
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday



COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Ancient upright stone
6. Urban haze
10. Drill
14. Overhangs
15. Magma
16. Horse color
17. Operatic solos
18. Matured
19. Radiate
20. Gamboling
22. Basilica area
23. G
24. Choice word
26. Add
30. A sailing vessel with two masts
32. Tribe
33. X X X X
35. A-list
39. Slogan
41. Motel
42. Prohibit
43. Aromatic solvent
44. Brainstorm
46. Fodder holder
47. Proportion
49. Omits
51. Specimen
54. Trangression
55. Pitcher
56. Involving three parties
63. Dry riverbed
64. Competition involving speed
65. Dwelling
66. Historical periods
67. At the peak of
68. Fad
69. Expunge
70. Depression
71. Weighty books

DOWN
1. Scorch
2. Tropical root
3. Wickedness
4. Loyal
5. Designate
6. Quench
7. Wise men
8. Roasting appliance
9. Contraption
10. Gasping
11. Sex appeal
12. Increase
13. "Come in!"
21. Let go
25. Chilled
26. Highest point
27. A secret scheme
28. Trail
29. Kirk's starship
30. Japanese stick fighting
31. Feudal worker
34. Thirteen in Roman numerals
36. Nile bird
37. Story
38. Greek god of love
40. Verbal 45. Dogfish
48. Foursome
50. Undamaged
51. Stitched
52. Cognizant
53. An award, usually for bravery
54. Dozed
57. Charge per unit
58. Religious figure
59. A river in Spain
60. Wander
61. Cutting tool
62. Bottom of the barrel

Sundays Open at NOON
LA PIAZZA
Best Deals in Town!!
All Calzones $4.99
All 12" Subs $4.99
All Salads $4.99
All Entrees $5.99
16" Cheese Pizza $4.99
Each X-Tra topping .75
12" Cheese Pizza $5.99
Each X-Tra Topping $1
16" Cheese Pizza $6.99
Each X-Tra Topping $1.25
16" Cheese Pizza + 10 Wings (Bone) $11.50
16" Cheese Pizza + 1/2lb Wings (Boneless) $11.50
OCMP Free Delivery
(413) 253-6444
www.lapiazzaristorante.us

"Club Nights" at the MONKEY BAR
Thurs. 2/18 DJ Yeah Guy & Hott Sizzle
Dance, Top 40, Hip-Hop, Mash-Ups
ROCKSTAR PROMO NIGHT!
Fri. 2/19 DJ BDEVS Doin' His Thing
Alpha Epsilon Pi Fraternity
Benefit our friends & family of HAITI
Sat. 2/20 DJ Marvel
Rockin' Out & Makin' It Happen!
Hip-Hop, Dance, Mash-Ups, Techno, House
Tues. 2/23 DJ Yeah Guy & Hott Sizzle
Techno Tuesday!
Fist Pumpin' & Beat Humpin'
413-259-1600
63 North Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
www.mymonkeybar.com
21+

WHAT'S ON TAP AT THE AMHERST BREWING COMPANY:
Every Thursday
JOHN SMELPON'S MASTERS OF THE STRATOCASTER
DOWNSTAIRS 9 PM - 12 AM
Every Tuesday
LOST IN HD
UPSTAIRS ON THE BIG SCREEN
Saturday February 27th
RYAN HOMMEL BAND
GUITAR PHENOM
DOWNSTAIRS 9PM -12 AM
Wednesday March 3rd
SIERRA NEVADA BREWING!
BREWING CHEESE & BEER TASTING
WEDNESDAY MARCH 3RD 6PM - 8PM
Keep updated on ABC events on facebook
24 NORTH PLEASANT ST. AMHERST
WWW.AMHERSTBREW.COM

*Rides to all airports, train and bus stations
*Private rides with immediate pick-up
*Rides to and from parties
*Point to point transportaion
*Shared rides
*Affordable fares
(413) 306-8298

amherst cinema
Fri Feb 19 - Thu Feb 25
THE OSCAR NOMINATED SHORT FILMS 2010
LIVE ACTION: 2:15 7:15 +11:45am Sat & Sun
ANIMATED: 4:30 9:30
BROKEN EMBRACES
2:00 7:00 +11:15am Sat & Sun
CRAZY HEART
2:30 5:00 7:30 10:00 +12:00pm Sat & Sun
A SINGLE MAN 4:45 9:45
28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst
www.amherstcinema.org
(413) 253-2547
PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri Feb 19 - Thu Feb 25
SHUTTER ISLAND 4:00 7:00 10:00 +1:15 Sat & Sun +10:30am 1:15 Wed
UP IN THE AIR 4:15 6:45 9:15 +1:30 Sat & Sun +10:00am 1:30 Wed
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasantstttheater.org
(413) 584-5848

SUDOKU

1					6			7
					7		4
						9	1
	4			7		1	3
			4	6
7		9			3		5
3				8			7
					9	8
2		7	3

What do you mean you don't have any GREY POUPON!

Schrodinger by David Waksman — infinitymaze.com

SCHRÖDINGER'S WIFE

MONDAY - SATURDAY
Happy Hour -
1/2 Price Appetizers 9:30 - Close
EVERY THURSDAY:
Promo & Trivia Night
EVERYDAY:
$1.00 Drafts and $5 Movie Tickets!*
21ST BIRTHDAY:
Free Entree or Small Pizza with ID*
Hampshire Mall
Across from Cinemark
413-549-0077
FREE Delivery
ARIZONA PIZZA

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
If you legally change your name to Reese then you are the rightful owner of half of all peanut butter cups.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Beware of the lethal forcefield which surrounds and protects Whitmore from pay cuts and all things good and wholesome.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Paranoia is often unleashed when you are sleep deprived or when you finish a marathon of the Final Destination movies.

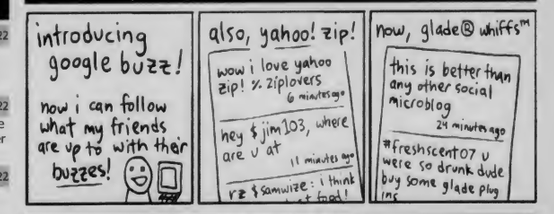
taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Sexiness comes with awesome accessories. Have you tried carrying around the new William Shatner bobblehead?

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Robert Downey Jr. once made a hard choice between drugs and alcohol. Instead he decided to become Iron Man.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
What is green, awesome and should always be on your bed? Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles bed sheets. Duh!

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Your priorities are definitely not in order. You need to eat the filling of the Oreo before the rest of it. GOSH!

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Mechanical pencils are not supposed to be clicked with carelessness. Bang that eraser against the table! Be the boss!



libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Sleeping on top of books results in the absorption of knowledge and mind-numbing neck pain.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Take the time to appreciate old Nickelodeon shows. Google "Space Cases" and it will all come back to you.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
They are still looking for someone new to play Spider-Man and you look like you need something to do.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Start a confrontation! Eat a Quiznos sub in a Subway or vice versa. Who knows, delicious things could happen to you!

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub — chainsawsuit.com

LocaL
Burger & Fries
Local Meats, Local Produce, Beer Battered onion rings
Beef Burgers • Home Made Veggie Burgers
Turkey Burgers • Portabella Burgers
Handcut Fries • Fried Pickles & MORE!
Sun-Wed 11:30am-10pm
Fri-Sat 11:30am-3AM
16 Main St. Northampton, MA
413-586-5857
www.localnorthampton.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further...CAMP MATAPONI, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (samm crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders and more! Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com

TUTORING SERVICES

Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats & GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 JBoid42@yahoo.com.

FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors, study in basement. Cable & Phone in all bedrooms & study. NOW SHOWING for June & September. NO FEES www. amherstlincolnrealty.com 413-253-7979

www.AmherstMARentals.com 413-549-1398

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing. 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug. or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends From $89 Complete. Montreal Express.Net MontrealBlowout.com 781-979-9001

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTHURSDAY

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 2010 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Colonials edge UM, lock down on Harris

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The strongest part of the Massachusetts basketball team's game was nonexistent against George Washington Wednesday night.

In a highly physical game, the Minutemen (10-16, 4-8 Atlantic 10) were outrebounded, 55-34, by the Colonials, who went on to win, 66-60.

"There were a lot of differences, but that was the main culprit in the game," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said. "Those second chance points were daggers, and they looked like the more physical team."

GW	66
UMass	60

GW grabbed 26 offensive rebounds on the game, turning their boards into 26 second chance points, while UMass had 11 offensive rebounds.

Along with the rebounds, the Minutemen went 13-of-23 from the free-throw line, while the Colonials shot just over 50 percent from the charity stripe.

"I guess it was a physical game, when both teams were on the 1-and-1's, but we got outhustled," Kellogg said. "But, we didn't quit, but with not quitting you need to make those plays, and they executed down the stretch."

The Minutemen committed 30 personal fouls, including 19 in the second half, and had three charges called against them after they made all three baskets.

Freshman forward Javorn Farrell, playing in front of friends and family from his native Maryland, was ejected early in the second half for throwing a punch at a GW player.

Freshman guard Freddie Riley led the Minutemen with 15 points, all in the first half, going 5-for-9 from the field and 4-of-8 from 3-point range, while redshirt junior guard Anthony Gurley had 16 points off the bench.

Senior guard Ricky Harris was held to 10 points after strong offensive efforts in the Minutemen's last two victories, while freshman forward Terrell Vinson added 10. Centers Sean Carter and Hashim Bailey each added six rebounds in the loss.

"We did that to Duquesne last week, but tonight, we had it done to us," Kellogg said.

The Minutemen were dominant on the glass, grabbing 60 rebounds in the victory over the Dukes, while leading the A-10 in offensive rebounds.

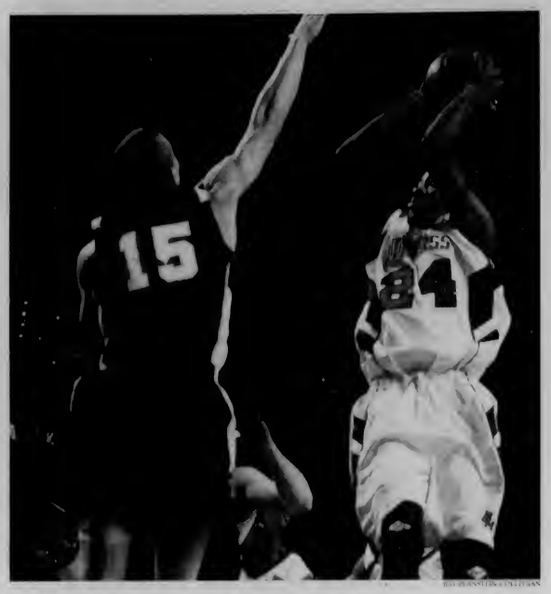
UMass was up by two points at halftime, 31-29, but found itself playing catch-up again late in the second half, after 16 lead changes and neither team being up by more than five points in the first half.

After a scoring drought that lasted five minutes, Riley put the team back on top with his fourth 3-pointer of the half. Riley could not get open looks in the second half, as GW narrowed in on him, along with Harris.

"As teams key in on Ricky, Freddie and Anthony and some other guys are going to get some open looks, they just need to convert," Kellogg said.

In the second half, the Minutemen missed eight of their first nine shots, but Gurley scored 11 straight points for UMass to bring the team back to within one with just over seven minutes to go.

UMass again cut the deficit to one, 54-53, on a Carter alley-oop dunk from Harris, but GW scored the next four points before Gurley hit another 3-pointer. The Colonials went up by five, but Harris hit a big 3-pointer with 21 seconds left, but the Minutemen could not grab rebounds, as two free throws and a steal cost the Minutemen the game.



The Minutemen return to the Mullins Center this Saturday when they host Saint Louis at 4 p.m.

The Billikens are coming off a come-from-behind double-overtime victory over Dayton last Sunday, and are in fifth place in the A-10 with a 7-3 conference record.

SLU leads the all-time series, 5-3, and defeated the Minutemen, 69-64, last season in Saint Louis.

The Billikens are one of the youngest teams in America, with 11 of their 12 players being underclassmen, and are led by Kwamain Mitchell, who averages 16.1 points per game.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Freshman Freddie Riley (15 points) takes a shot over Garrett Williamson. The Minutemen lost on the road to George Washington, 66-60, last night and snapped their two-game winning streak.

Defenseman Justin Braun checks an opposing player during a home game this season. The Minutemen head to Merrimack in hopes of snapping their three-game losing streak.

Merrimack hosts UMass

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

For a team looking to avoid its longest losing streak of the season, Lawler Arena is the last place it wants to go.

But for the Massachusetts hockey team, that's where they will be headed on Friday as they look to snap their three-game losing streak against Merrimack.

While the Warriors (11-15-1, 8-11-1 Hockey East) sit just one spot away from the bottom of the conference standings, when it comes to playing at home, they are the best. Compared to their record on the road (1-12-1), the Warriors are a stellar 10-2 at home, losing only to Northeastern and New Hampshire.

Part of what gives Merrimack the strong advantage at home is Lawler arena's small size (200 feet x 85 feet). The Mullins Center rink is 10 feet wider than the rink at Lawler Arena.

Despite the Warriors' impressive record at home, the size of the rink might work to No. 18 UMass' (16-13-0, 11-11-0 HEA) advantage. Friday's contest will be the first time the Minutemen have played at Merrimack this season, but they have played twice this season on a rink of that size. Providence plays on a sheet of ice with the same dimensions and each time UMass came away with victories, 5-3, on Oct. 30 and 4-1 on Jan. 30.

Following Friday's contest, UMass and Merrimack will meet again Saturday in the series finale in Amherst at 7:30 p.m. The game will be aired on NESN.

The Minutemen took the first meeting of the season with the Warriors back on Dec. 12 in Amherst with a 4-1 win, but since then, the offense has dealt with struggles. In the 12 games since that four-goal performance, UMass has scored four goals just three times, compared to the nine times they did in the 15 games prior to that win.

However, the offense is not the only aspect of UMass' squad that has struggled in its last six games, where it has lost five of six including its last three. The defense and goaltending has allowed 25 goals in the six-game stretch, an average of 4.17 per game.

UMass coach Don Cahoon made it a point to show his team what they were doing at the beginning of the season that got them wins as opposed to what they are doing now that is causing the recent struggles.

"We spent the last couple of days meeting with everybody, discussing what's transpired," Cahoon said. "It's very definable. I'm not going to get into what was said specifically, but it is very definable as to when we play well and when we don't, as to what we do and what we don't do."

More importantly, Cahoon has tried to establish a sense of responsibility with the team and what is expected of each member of the squad.

"That has all been established, it is up front, kids have been shown both when they play great what they do and they all have a clear understanding of what their roles are in order to make things head in the right direction," Cahoon said.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Minutewomen stop Crusaders

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

Despite a back-and-forth momentum shift between the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team and Holy Cross, the Minutewomen prevailed, 15-6, Wednesday after they broke through a tired Crusader defense.

"I think this is a great first win," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "I think we came in here with our game plan and I thought we executed it pretty well from top to bottom defensively, in the midfield, and even in attack."

Midfielder Jackie Lyons felt relieved after the game.

"The first one's always great, it feels really good," Lyons said. "Everyone on the team really contributed and that's why the score was the way it was."

The first half was a dominant one for the Minutewomen (1-1), as they led 7-1 at the half. The Crusaders (0-1) had trouble finding good shot selection, with the UMass defense holding them to four shots in the opening half.

UMass	15
HC	6

"I thought we executed really well," Venechanos said of the first half. "I thought we put some goals away, shot really well. A little sloppy defensively, their goals in the eight meters, but I liked our intensity."

Goalkeeper Katie Florence had one save in the first half, as she stood behind a defense that waited for their opponents to challenge them.

One minute into the first half, UMass got on the board with a goal by midfielder Danielle Pelletier, assisted by attacker Ryan Gorman. Pelletier's goal was followed by a powerful strike three minutes later by attacker Jesse O'Donnell.

UMass had five straight goals in the opening period of play, with O'Donnell earning two goals. Midfielder Haley Smith and attacker Colleen Mulligan also nabbed scores in the five-goal streak.

Attacker Katie Gardner followed up with a goal of her own for Holy Cross, but the Minutewomen did not let the goal dampen their hopes. O'Donnell responded with another goal in the opening period. Midfielder Merritt Cosgrove then added some insurance with about a minute left to secure the half for UMass.

The Minutewomen started off the second period with some dominant play, with midfielder Haley Smith scoring a goal two minutes after play resumed. The goal came from some quick passing plays between Lyons and the rest of the UMass offense.

O'Donnell nabbed her fourth goal of the contest a little over a minute later after a quick break through the defense.

Holy Cross turned things in its favor after O'Donnell's fourth strike. The Crusaders brought the ball back onto their side of the field and kept the pressure on the UMass defense. This led to two strikes, one off of a free-position shot after an infraction by freshman Cori Murray.

After a fast-break by the Minutewomen offense, Holy Cross regained possession and moved up the pitch with confidence. Another infraction came from the tired UMass defense, allowing the Crusaders to put in another goal and lessen the Minutewomen lead to five goals.

"We came back from that gain in the second half, they made a little bit of a run," Venechanos said. "But then we kind of came in during the last ten minutes or so and really closed out that game. That's something we need to do, have the opportunity to put away a good team like Holy Cross."

Two minutes after the Crusaders mounted a comeback, Lyons took the ball straight to the net, scoring a goal to revitalize the Minutewomen. Despite the thrilling moment, Lyons did not let the goals cloud her game-vision.

"I just try to get reset, I don't really think about it," Lyons said. "I know there's time still left in the game, so we've got to keep battling."

Both teams were aggressive as time wound down in the game. After some cluttered play and a charging call on the Crusader's side of the field, Holy Cross pushed the ball forward and eventually called a time out. The break seemed to slow the Minutewomen momentum down, as the Crusaders netted a goal to bring the lead down to five.

After the fifth goal by the Holy Cross offense, goalkeeper Christina Frey came into the game replacing Florence after an apparent injury to the starting goalkeeper.

"At the end [of the game] we could control the pass a little bit," Venechanos said.

Lyons and Lauren Terracciano each netted a pair of scores in the final six minutes of play, putting the Crusaders to rest, and leading the Minutewomen to their first victory of the season.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu.

Watson's 20 points gives team road victory against Explorers

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

It took the final few minutes for the Massachusetts women's basketball team to squeeze out a 62-57 win over Atlantic 10 rival La Salle Wednesday night.

On a night where UMass (10-16, 4-7 A-10) received just seven points from usual leading scorer Kristina Danella, the Minutewomen looked to freshman center Jasmine Watson and senior guard Kim Benton to lead them past the Explorers (6-20, 1-10 A-10).

Watson led all players in scoring with 20 points while adding six rebounds and three assists. The game marked her fifth-straight scoring night in double-figures. Benton anchored the point throughout the game, registering five assists to go along with five rebounds and nine points.

UMass	62
La Salle	57

"I was really happy for Kim," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "She really struggled playing in Philly playing in front of her hometown crowd. It was so nice to see her hit a couple of 3's and give us an emotional lift."

The Minutewomen went 9-for-22 shooting, but eight turnovers led to 11 Explorer points. However, UMass went 6-for-8 from the free throw line, 3-for-6 from beyond the arc, and outrebounded La Salle, which allowed it to take a tie at 27 into halftime.

The second half was a different story for the Minutewomen, who limited turnovers and shot a much cleaner 46.4 percent from the field. The constants remained for UMass, which continued its accurate free throw shooting (6-for-7), as well as its strong play on the glass. The Minutewomen had 19 rebounds in the second half, 10 of which were offensive, which led to 14 second-chance points.

"Getting those extra touches were really big for us," Dacko said. "It just gives us more opportunities to score. We were passing up open looks and we were having a hard time finding separation on shots, so we turned to our rebounding."

Down by seven points late in the second half, Benton hit two 3-pointers to bring her team back. UMass then relied on its free throw shooting to gain the lead.

"Danella got an o-board and made [two] clutch free throws," Dacko said. "Then Kim [Benton] stole the ball and Tema [Diatema Hill] finished a three-point play. Watson was also fouled and she made two for us. Three different people stepped up to the line and made free throws for us, which was huge."

The Minutewomen return to action Saturday when they travel to Cincinnati for a game against Xavier. The Wildcats (20-3, 10-0 A-10) currently sit atop the A-10 conference and are ranked sixth in the nation.

Xavier leads the league in multiple statistical categories and it features two of the most prominent players in the conference in juniors Amber Harris and Ta'Shia Phillips. Harris (15.2 points per game) and Phillips (13.7) rank third and seventh in the league in scoring. Phillips (10.4 rebounds per game) is first, while Harris (8.8) averages fourth in the league. The duo ranks first and second in field goal percentage, and second and third in blocked shots as well.

"I think we have to take it as a challenge. We have nothing to lose and everything to gain," Dacko said. "It's going to be a physical game. They've got two premier players in the league. They're sixth in the country, so we're just going to leave it all out on the floor. We're going to play hard, go at them and be as aggressive as possible."

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

the daily collegian

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FEBRUARY 19, 2010

inside this issue:

Hunting Hawks

SEE PAGE 13

Take me Furthur

SEE PAGE 7

Voting bill passes

SEE PAGE 2

From Sana'a with love

A UM student in Yemen explores the country's recent instability

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXX
ISSUE 22

113 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S P Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanida Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Shayna Murphy
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Pete Rizzo

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE. BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
NICK BUSH
COPY EDITOR
ELIZABETH TRAN
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHELLE ABBASCIANO

Online voting bill passes

Elections to move online

By Alyssa Creamer and Hannah McGoldrick
Collegian Staff

First attempt: Fail. Second attempt: Fail. Third attempt: Fail.

What is now the fourth bill in favor of piloting online elections to reach the University of Massachusetts Student Government Association's Administrative Affairs committee has now been passed through both committee and on the Senate floor as of Monday and Wednesday, respectively.

After several hours of discussion and a ten-minute debate session about implementing online elections during the Senate meeting, the bill was passed with two amendments added before it was voted in as a by-law change.

The first amendment states that if a candidate violates the Candidate Code of Conduct, then the Elections Commission has the ability to file a complaint to the Dean of Students Office and recommend judicial action be taken against the candidate.

The second amendment states that if a security audit of the elections by a third party or internal auditor cannot be performed, it will not invalidate the election.

"I'm on cloud nine right now," said Administrative Affairs Chairman Jared Rose.

The bill almost passed unanimously, with one Commuter Senator, Scott Aldrich-Holmes, voting in opposition to the bill.

"I thought tonight was excellent," said Commuter Senator Derek Khanna, who co-sponsored the online elections bill with Commuter Senator Josh Davidson. "I was overjoyed that it was passed by an overwhelming majority. It's about time."

Wednesday's Senate meeting brought Ken Abert, Vice President of Campus Pulse, the outlet chosen by the administration to facilitate online elections, to speak on the technical side of online elections.

Despite supporting Campus Pulse, Interim Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Jean Kim had not yet used Campus Pulse at the time of the SGA's meeting.

"I meant to go on it [Campus Pulse] today, but I just did not get the chance," said Kim.

"There were some students who wondered about the security of the hosting server and whether there could be referendum questions on the ballot and I said of course," she continued. "I have been assured that [security] will not be an issue."

"My purpose here tonight," said Abert, "is to show you what could possibly be an online election through Campus Pulse."

Campus Pulse IT professionals explained how the online election system would function via Campus Pulse. Students will be able to link directly to the elections through an e-mail sent out by the Elections Commission. At that point, students will be asked to set up a basic profile, including first and last names, and their UMass e-mail.

Students will be asked to select their residential area, as they can only vote for candidates in their area. Ballots will most likely contain candidate profiles, which will be approved by the Elections Commission. There will be a section on the Campus Pulse ballot for write-in nominees.

After the presentation by Campus Pulse employees, several members of the SGA fired off questions and concerns about the security of Campus Pulse.

"In our online voting systems, we also hope to have a paper ballot polling station," said Northeast Senator Melissa Urban. "Is that possible, since there is no way to track who voted and who they voted for," she asked.

Campus Pulse IT representatives responded, explaining the system keeps track of who voted, however, it does not keep track of who each student votes for.

He continued, "We could set it up to keep track of who students voted for, but from a confidentiality perspective, the only person who should know who they voted for is the person who submitted that ballot."

Several senators expressed concern about hackers and voter fraud, however, explanations from the Campus Pulse employees addressed many of the concerns.

Southwest South Senator Elie Feinstein asked, "Has there ever been an instance of voter fraud or system hacking?"

Campus Pulse employees said there never had been an issue.

Jnesh Khushalani, the chancellor of elections, asked, "Is it possible to take a note of the IP address of the computers at which students are voting, so that people do not vote multiple times on the same computer?"

Khushalani gave the example of a "laptop party," at which students would be voting for a candidate on one or several laptops.

The Campus Pulse representatives stated that, "As of right now, the IP addresses of voters are not databased."

Hannah Cohen/Collegian

The SGA, pictured here at a November meeting, passed a bill which would move elections online in a nearly unanimous vote Wednesday.

Abert stayed for the majority of the meeting to answer any technical questions surrounding Campus Pulse and its role in online elections.

At approximately 10:34 p.m., after a recess, prior to the debates about online elections between Senators, Commuter Senator William Cody was told by Speaker of the House Modesto Montero to remove himself from the meeting for disorderly conduct.

Cody refused, and Montero contacted UMPD shortly after their confrontation. Cody was allegedly seen drinking by a fellow senator, who wishes to remain anonymous because of the sensitivity of the issue, prior to the meeting. Cody was disruptive, shouting several curses and vulgar terms sporadically throughout the meeting.

At the beginning of the meeting, Cody expressed his displeasure with having representatives from Campus Pulse present on the system's functions.

After asking Montero why Abert was there to talk about Campus Pulse, Cody said, "Let me know when you want to start this meeting. [Expletive deleted] this [expletive deleted.]"

He then briefly exited the room, but came back muttering other curses in the back of the meeting room.

After Cody was removed from the meeting by UMPD, Commuter Senator Charlie Felder, who was under the impression the bill would come to a close vote said, "That's a vote we needed."

Now that the online elections bill has passed the Senate with a sunset clause attached, meaning it will only be effective for the spring 2010 elections as a trial-run with the by-law changes expiring on June 1, students can expect online elections to occur as long as SGA President Ngozi Mbawuike does not veto the bill.

"I think [Mbawuike] is going to veto it," said Rose. "I'm going to try to talk to her to get her to not veto it. I don't think she is going to have an opinion or concern that nobody has thought of tonight."

The Senate would then need to override her veto and have the bill signed off on by Kim for the bill to go into effect.

"I am definitely going to sign online elections through," said Kim. "The thing to keep in mind is that online voting, while this is a new issue on this campus, it's been implemented around country for the past five or six years."

Last Friday, Commuter Senator Andrew Berg resigned. Berg explained that the months of deliberation have resulted in increased "pressure coming down from Jean Kim's office to have online elections implemented for the spring, no matter what."

Berg said that, at that time, the deliberation had become much more than the online elections bill and rather "became an issue of having a representative democracy."

"What's the point of having an SGA if the only decisions we can make are the ones that the administration is fully in agreement with and the ones that benefit the resumes of those [in the administration]," Berg said.

Hannah McGoldrick can be reached at hmcgoldr@student.umass.edu.

Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu.

From Amherst to Sana'a and back

Student experiences upheaval and unrest while studying in Yemen

Max Calloway/Collegian

Max Calloway traveled to Yemen this fall and saw a society gripped by unrest from political factions while depleting its main source of revenue, its limited oil reserves.

By Max Calloway
Collegian Correspondent

Sitting south of U.S.-backed Saudi Arabia and west of oil rich Oman sits Yemen, a nation which over the past few months has drawn a considerable amount of publicity due to the recent exploits of one Umar Farouk Abdulmutallab, better known as the "Christmas Day bomber."

News outlets have been billing the small Arabic Republic for the past few years as one of the Arabian Peninsula's poorest and most underdeveloped countries, but more recently the media has focused on the mounting threat of terrorism from inside Yemen, supported by a reactionary tribal theocracy. While Al-Qaeda is very much on the rise within the country's borders, the history behind its ascent to political viability has been largely ignored.

The Yemen Arab Republic has only existed for the better part of the past decade, its formation the result of a bloody civil war which left current president Ali Abdullah Saleh's General Peoples' Congress (GPC) holding power. Before the unification of Yemen in 1990, the country was divided along the civil war's boundaries, with Saleh's GPC presiding over the Northern Territories, while most of the South and East were left in the hands of the Yemen Socialist Party (YSP) under the backing of the former Soviet Union.

Unified in 1990 under a coalition government, the stability of the country has eroded following a power dispute between the GPC and YSP, which led to a minor civil conflict in 1994. In the aftermath of the tumult, Saleh's GPC consolidated its hold on power, and have continued to lead the country since. Saleh has ruled over at least part of the country since 1978.

Yemen is arguably the least blessed of all the Arab states. As with Oman, Bahrain, Qatar, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia, Yemen's major resource is oil, yet Yemen is not a member of the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), the world's primary oil cartel. Further, unlike many of its neighbors, Yemen is dependent on foreign drilling for infrastructural reasons, relying on so-called production-sharing agreements (PSAs), which allow Yemen to keep some of the revenue from drilling, but less than if the country conducted drilling itself. Thus, while the country derives the majority of its GDP from its oil deposits, it is only making a share of what it could.

According to a Nov. 2008 report in the BBC, black gold accounts for around 70 percent of government revenue and about 90 percent of exports. Yemen's economic homogeneity poses even more of a dilemma for the Republic nestled into the southernmost corner of the Arabian Peninsula given that some geologists estimate Yemen has already passed its peak output, and predict oil deposits could be depleted by 2017.

Yemen's energy predicament is more halting considering that natural fresh water resources in the Sana'a basin – home to Sana'a, the nation's capital – have by some accounts, been almost completely depleted. A majority of the fresh water in Yemen is now trucked in from desalinization plants located in Aden, the former capital of South Yemen. And, while Aden and the southern provinces produce the fresh water, keeping their government in power, they are the most heavily taxed and least represented region thanks to the increasingly repressive actions of the Saleh government against its former opposition.

It was under these circumstances that, on Christmas day 2009, Umar Farouk Abdulmutallab boarded a connecting flight from Amsterdam to Detroit. Abdulmutallab was apprehended after failing to ignite an explosive device hidden in his underpants. It was later revealed that he had received training and explosives from Al-Qaeda of the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP) operatives while studying at a language institute in Sana'a.

Terrorist organizations have operated out of the Arabian Peninsula for years. In 2000, the USS Cole was bombed off the coast of Aden, with AQAP taking responsibility. The Yemeni Government has been fighting a sporadic civil conflict with Northern separatist movements based out of Sa'da for close to a decade. Beyond jihadist violence and ongoing civil unrest, Yemen is notorious for its kidnappings. In fact, kidnappings in Yemen are nearly a joke among those working, studying and living there. Men armed with AK-47s have been known to ride into areas where foreigners gather, and tell students and visitors to come with them, only to snatch them for a period of time for what can only be described as Yemeni hospitality. The often-affable kidnappers will then release their targets in return for imprisoned family members, or the promise of government services such as schools or roads. One pair of kidnapping victims, a Danish couple, even reunited with their affable captors for a friendly lunch months after being released.

So it was nothing short of a surprise when news reached Sana'a that half of the victims kidnapped in Sa'da in early June turned up on a mountainside dead – with no group claiming responsibility. Needless to say, local conspiracy theories were in no short supply. Some claimed that it was AQAP, others that it was Houthi separatist fighters from the North, but most adamantly believed that the Saleh government had kidnapped and murdered these people to justify another civil war and draw attention away from Yemen's mounting resource and infrastructure problems. Ask any Yemeni about Saleh, and the question garners the same proverbial response, a shake of the head and some sarcastic comment about his "great achievements." The fact is necessary, as any criticism of the president can land one in jail for a minimum of five years.

It is under these circumstances that American aid to Saleh and the GPC has skyrocketed in an attempt to curb AQAP influence in the more remote areas, where sensitivity about criticisms leveled at Saleh lack the same tact found in Sana'a. Just for clarity's sake, when asked about the current government, a former opposition reporter and current language instructor in Sana'a only related to me stories about friends being imprisoned and newspapers being shut down in response to critiques of current domestic policy. Compare that to an account of a wedding in the Eastern M'arib province, the location of recent bombings aimed at rooting out AQAP leaders, from one American student based in Sana'a.

"It was incredible; the army didn't even look at us twice," recounted Matt Rugger, a fellow student and researcher in Sana'a. "The only reason I was able to get out of the city without my passport was because I was sitting in a caravan of at least thirty armored SUVs, each one carrying at least four tribal members carrying a loaded AK-47 and a side arm."

"When we got out of the car," said Rugger, "even the women were walking around with guns."

With portraits such as these disassociated from the country's cultural and historical legacy, it is little wonder Western media outlets have had such an easy time painting a picture of disenfranchised, religious radicals with a hatred of democracy and capitalism. Many Yemenis outside Sana'a own and regularly carry at least one AK-47 assault rifle. Most regions in the country are governed according to ancient tribal customs. Yes, the Saleh government is struggling to maintain a grip on the country it has purportedly ruled for over thirty years. But, when one stops and considers why these remote regions have fallen back on their historical and cultural roots as a basis of government, it is really not so surprising.

See YEMEN on page 4

Deep into Yemen

YEMEN from page 3

The Saleh government has held an iron grip on politics since the late 1970s, but has done little else to better the Republic. Saleh's regime managed to construct a $60 million mosque in the nation's capital bearing the president's name, but have largely failed to prepare for multiple ecological disasters and have generally ignored the needs of the outlying regions, which are growing more and more unstable.

When one keeps in mind that Yemen's remote regions consider themselves autonomous because of government policy, these remote regions' political volatility begins to make more sense. Al-Qaeda suddenly seems to be more a group of opportunistic foreigners capitalizing on the instability, rather than a legitimate movement. Similar to the mountains of eastern Afghanistan, these areas in Yemen are viewed by Al-Qaeda as a sparsely-populated country where they can operate without the fear of strong and focused government retaliation.

Max Calloway recently spent five months in Yemen studying the Arabic language. He can be reached at maxcalloway@gmail.com

MAX CALLOWAY/COLLEGIAN

Calloway noted that many Yemenis carry weapons, such as these children.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
S.S.O. Ads for $6.70
per column inch
On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10
per column inch
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

UM dean studies arsenic and development link

By Bobby Hitt
Collegian Staff

Marjorie Aelion, dean of the School of Public Health and Health Sciences at the University of Massachusetts, and colleagues at the Medical University of South Carolina recently conducted a study attempting to find possible connections between exposure to heavy arsenic levels in pregnant women and developmental delays in their children.

The study, published in the Jan. 8 edition of International Journal of Hygiene and Environmental Health, suggests there is a significant relationship between soil levels of arsenic and cases of mental retardation and developmental delay.

According to the study, the cause remains unknown for 50 percent of individuals suffering from mental handicaps, and the causes that are known are not well understood. The study hypothesizes that the prevalence of heavy metals such as arsenic in soil may contribute to a greater percentage of cases than previously assumed.

The researchers used an inexpensive statistical approach to gather information. Instead of using blood and urine samples from subjects, the researchers used data from medical records to gather the study's population, excluding children with identified genetic causes of developmental disorders.

Aelion explained some of the benefits of this type of statistical approach.

"[This type of study] allows us to narrow down the number of metals we measure by indicating which ones are important," she said. "It allows us to focus geographically and do a follow-up study in geographic areas that had the most interesting results," she continued.

The study, conducted in South Carolina, focused on the areas where mothers of children with developmental delays resided during pregnancy.

Aelion commented on the dangers of exposure during pregnancy.

"Heavy metals can affect the mind of a developing child because heavy metals can cross the placenta of a pregnant woman and can cross the blood-brain barrier in the fetus," said Aelion.

According to Aelion, there are multiple sources of arsenic which could contribute to concentrations of the chemical in soil.

"Arsenic can occur naturally and can occur as a byproduct of industrial activities," she said. "There are very few studies that measure arsenic in residential soils, and we do not know if it could be associated with negative health outcomes in children," she added, indicating a need for more research in this area.

Although Aelion emphasized that there is much still unknown about the affects of how arsenic and other chemicals can impact the development of children both while in the womb and after birth, there are some steps parents can take to protect their children once they are born to avoid exposure.

"Arsenic can be in groundwater that is consumed by people who rely on private wells for their drinking water," said Aelion. "Some soils have high arsenic naturally, limiting children's play in dirt and keeping a clean house if dirt is tracked into the house is helpful," she went on. "Some children's playground equipment made of wood was treated with arsenic-containing compounds in the past."

Despite these cautions, Aelion maintains that low exposures to arsenic after birth are unlikely to cause severe mental impairment or developmental delay.

Bobby Hitt can be reached at rhitt@student.umass.edu.

Don't feed the beast

KEITH JOFFIN/COLLEGIAN

UMass Dining Services celebrated Chinese New Year at its dining commons Tuesday, and sophomore Alex Ahlstedt was eager to bring good fortune, as she fed the DC dragon.

editorial&opinion

Obama following in Bush's footsteps

Alex Perry

Although it has been clear to me for some time that Obama is out of touch with the American public, I did not know he had also lost touch with his far-left liberal support. But, based on some surprising, recent news, it seems likely he is going to be angering some people in that end of the political spectrum as well.

However, before I discuss that news and its implications, I first want to layout the context for hypocrisy in the Obama administration.

After the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, the Bush administration made it a top priority to restore the security of the United States. This obviously was – and remains – a demanding task given the countless threats that our nation faces on a daily basis from our many enemies.

Thankfully, George W. Bush was successful in restoring our security during the remainder of his eight years in office, and his efforts helped protect us from threats both domestically and abroad.

Despite this, many liberals took issue with some of the Bush administration's tactics when it came to ensuring our nation's security. There was a constant swirl of criticism and controversy that surrounded each and every one of Bush's efforts to track down terrorists and prevent further attacks from taking place. In particular, I'm talking about the uproar that was caused by Bush's Surveillance Program which gave the National Security Agency the ability to monitor phone calls, e-mails, Internet activity and other forms of communication without a warrant.

Former Attorney General Alberto Gonzales defended the program at the time, insisting that the program was not intended to infringe upon individuals' civil liberties, but instead was an effort to reduce the threat of terrorism.

Gonzales said, during a press briefing, "another very important point to remember is that we have to have a reasonable basis to conclude that one party to the communication is a member of al Qaeda, affiliated with al Qaeda, or a member of an organization affiliated with al Qaeda or working in support of al Qaeda. We view these authorities as authorities to confront the enemy in which the United States is at war with – and that is al Qaeda and those who are supporting or affiliated with al Qaeda."

> The Obama administration supports the ability for our government to track, without a warrant, the location of all individuals by using their cell phones.

About the purpose, Gonzales said, "What we're trying to do is learn of communications, back and forth, from within the United States to overseas with members of al Qaeda. And that's what this program is about."

That seems very fair, but that explanation seemed to not fly with liberals. They thought their privacy was being wrongfully invaded and they made a scene about it. Many complained the program was done secretly and would've never been approved by Congress. Bush was attacked for violating our Fourth Amendment rights, which give us protection from "unreasonable searches and seizures" as many believed government then had a green light to invade all of our privacy without any probable cause.

Although that is wildly inaccurate, considering Democrats Nancy Pelosi and Harry Reid knew that before it was approved, it doesn't take away from the real point liberals had. This is, of course, that our government needs to maintain a balance between its ability to ensure our nation's security while at the same time maintaining our civil liberties. Although liberals seemingly took that point too far in many criticisms of Bush, the extent to which government should have power to do this remains a legitimate debate.

As shocked as you may be, I was not one of the people who complained about Bush's tactics. What you may find shocking is that Obama may not have been either. It became clear recently that the Obama administration supports the ability for our government to track, without a warrant, the location of all individuals by using their cell phones.

The administration stated that they believe warrantless tracking is legal because Americans do not have a "reasonable expectation of privacy" when it comes to their cell phones' whereabouts.

Obama rigorously attacked Bush's policies during his campaign and yet, a year later, is basically fully endorsing one of the man's most controversial programs. This is Obama's hypocrisy at its finest, ladies and gentlemen.

How can anyone who hated Bush defend Obama for this?

I just want to know where the liberals who attacked Bush are now. What do they have to say? Where is the liberal media that attacked Bush with such an overwhelming bias for so long that most people think the man was too dumb to speak coherently?

I doubt these same people and media outlets are also accusing Obama of invading our civil liberties because he thinks he should have access to our whereabouts at all times without cause. Nor will these people confirm to me that they are hypocrites by remaining silent, much like many are about every other controversial thing Obama does.

Maybe liberals won't be silent, but I don't see how they can argue that the government knowing the whereabouts of every individual with a cell phone at all times without cause isn't infringing upon our privacy and still argue that what Bush's administration did in an effort to thwart terrorism was.

Much of Obama's work during his first year in office is already considered out of touch with the views of most American's based on recent polling.

People in every political spectrum are worried about his reckless deficit spending and his desire for a government takeover of healthcare. And now his primary support, the left, has to watch him approve their privacy being taken away in the name of security.

At this point there is no reason for Obama to wait for 2012, he should just exit the White House and hand the keys to a Republican right now.

Alex Perry is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at amperry@student.umass.edu.

POINT-COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

Carrying concealed weapons on campus

Leave it to police

Dan Entrikin

The Virginia Tech shooting raised an outcry from gun control proponents as to why Seung-Hui Cho, who was adjudicated mentally ill in a Virginia court, passed a background check and was able to purchase handguns online and from stores. This flaw in background checks has since been corrected.

To others, the response to the Virginia Tech incident was a call for more guns on campus. Students for Concealed Carry on Campus is a national advocacy group that was formed to fight for the ability of students to legally carry a concealed weapon on a college campus for purposes of self defense.

In Massachusetts, only police can carry guns on campus. Utah is the only state to allow concealed firearms at all public colleges and universities, while 15 others leave it up to the colleges themselves.

The answer on campus is not more guns; it's less guns for those who shouldn't have them.

The two recent firearm arrests at the University of Massachusetts makes this issue worth consideration. While I support the idea of legal concealed carry for private citizens, I don't believe it should be extended to school zones.

First off, I have full faith in the emergency response of the UMass Police Department. UMPD conducts very frequent patrols on campus. The Police Station is located relatively in the middle of campus and response time to any part of campus is rapid.

The emergency alarm system and the text messaging system in place are helpful safety measures, although I think it prudent for the administration to publicize a general campus safety plan to organize response and minimize panic. God forbid something more serious does happen. This could apply to students, faculty and administrators on all levels.

At Virginia Tech, Cho committed his first murders at 7:15 a.m. The first campus wide e-mail was sent nearly two hours later. Meanwhile, Cho returned to his room to gather his weapons.

Swift emergency response and proper planning, rather than armed students, would have helped in this case.

Sensible controls on who can purchase a gun, like closing the gun show loophole, would decrease the black market supply and easy access to guns that arms criminals so readily. The answer on campus is not more guns; it's less guns for those who shouldn't have them.

Campus concealed carry supporters rally around an incident at the Appalachian School of Law as an example of how concealed carry by students can stop a shooter in the midst of an attack. Former student Ted Besen, who tackled the shooter as he fired his last shots contests this, telling the Associated Press, "I already had [the shooter] on the ground before they got out their guns".

The possible negative repercussions of armed, albeit perhaps responsible, students on campus outweigh any benefits: The prospect of an accidental discharge of a concealed weapon, the possibility of theft in crowded dormitory settings and the obvious complication of on campus partying make the sudden introduction of guns ill-conceived.

There are sometimes fights at UMass Thursday and Friday nights occasionally get a little out of hand. The students being signed in shouldn't be more heavily armed than the cadets we have here.

Moreover, the effect on community that concealed firearms would bring would be of obvious detriment. I would be rather frightened of my RA if she kept cleaning her .357 Magnum with her door open. I might avoid floor meetings.

If I was that RA, I would be less likely to write up the loud party down the hall if my resident might have a Glock on his or her hip. Of course, I could never tell. It's concealed.

Life on campus is about meeting people and developing lasting friendships in a complicated time in your life. Guns shouldn't have a major role in that, and it would be a detriment to that goal.

For these reasons, it seems altogether prudent to continue the campus ban on concealed firearms.

UMass Police have shown their commitment to campus safety in the arrests on December 3rd and February 6th. I am quite confident in the campus police being in control of any guns and safety on our campus.

Dan Entrikin is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dentriki@student.umass.edu.

Let students bare arms

Ben Moriarty

In another unfortunate – but too well known – event, there was a school shooting at the University of Alabama Huntsville on February 12. Three people died, three people injured.

A decade ago it was Columbine, where 15 high school students died. Nearly three years ago it was the Virginia Tech Massacre, where one student decided to shoot his peers, killing 33 people. Last week, biology professor Amy Bishop attempted to kill a handful in the Heart of Dixie.

People have guns, and if someone wants to shoot up their school, they will find a way.

It would be comforting to say that these are the only instances of such peculiarities, but they are only a small extraction from the number of school shootings that have occurred in our country the past few years.

And for that, besides the unrelenting pain it leaves in the hearts of the families of the victims and survivors, it leaves a question of what should (or what can) be done.

The issue of gun control has been in the minds of many recently, if not a result of Michael Moore's 2002 documentary "Bowling for Columbine," which brought the debate to the surface in the wake of Columbine.

There is a problem, obviously, and that is the sale and distribution of unlicensed, illegal and unregulated weapons – and not just that, but the ease that some states have in the purchasing of such deadly toys.

There are ideals, and then there are realities. The reality is that there is a black market for handguns, that they ubiquitously flood certain areas, and unless impossibility occurred, they will forever be attainable by anyone who has the money or will.

The fact that people can get a gun if they want is an unfortunate reality, but a reality nonetheless. To say that, in order to prohibit future shootings and atrocities from occurring, we should make it more difficult to attain them, is naïve.

The Second Amendment originated for the protection of the rights of American citizens. It was for our protection from a corrupt and tyrannical government, if one were to ever occur; or from an invasion, if one were to ever occur; for the citizens to be able to live out Locke's vision: the moral obligation to revolt and overthrow an oppressive government.

It was for the protection of people and their rights. It was not done as a show to express how free we were to the British, it was not symbolic: it was created out of foresight, and legitimate worry for the continuation of a free state.

This, of course, makes me wonder why we are not more stringent in our gun laws. While I could never buy one myself, I see why people should be able to have guns for hunting if they are actually going to use the animal for food or for actual purposes, as well as seeing the purpose in other areas as well. I do not see how people think they have the right to be able to own a gun for whatever purpose they have construed for themselves, however, if it does not follow this philosophical mindset.

Of course, the question gets posed, and the area gets blurred as to where the line for safety actually rests. Do delinquents have a right to protect themselves from other delinquents? Is it even possible for the citizens to take up arms against our government's military in this age of nuclear weapons, negating the purpose of the amendment?

Felons can't own guns; people mentally unfit can't own them. Who should be able to own them is a separate argument entirely, and not one related to public safety and protection on college campuses.

For those fit, and legally able to carry guns, it is their right to be able to protect themselves and others. I would not dare tell a man he cannot keep a gun to protect his wife in children in his own home. I can't see how one would be able to tell another they have no right to protect themselves and their peers when they leave their house… if they can do it perfectly legally inside their house.

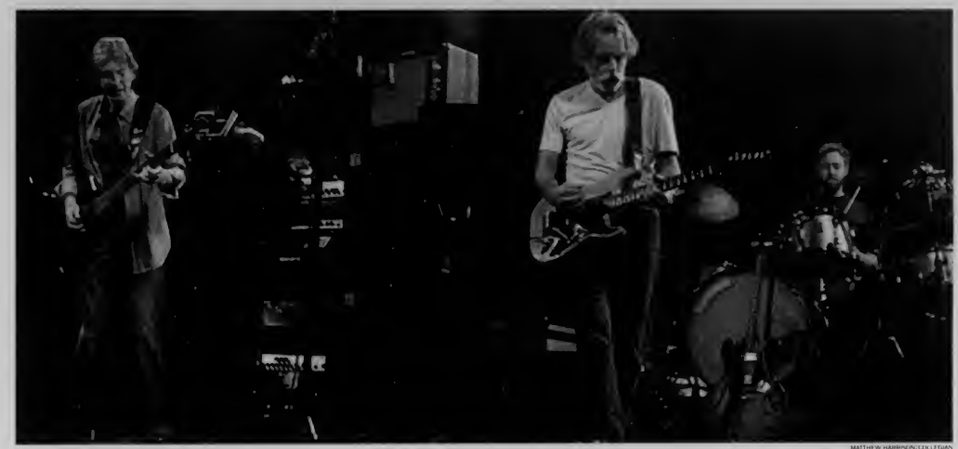
There is the philosophical and legal basis for being able to carry concealed weapons on campus, and then there is the practical reason. People have guns, and if someone wants to shoot up their school, they will find a way. Rather easily, sadly enough.

The only precaution against this, besides an elaborate and most likely faulty system of precautionary text messaging and sound blaring, is allowing people to protect themselves. Allowing people to take action quickly themselves is the only thing that makes sense practically and philosophically.

Or you could try to fix society.

Benjamin Moriarty is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bmoriart@student.umass.edu.

arts&living



YOUR WEEKEND GUIDE TO ART, MUSIC, FILM & CULTURE ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A SINGLE MAN

Receiving an Oscar nod for his performance, Colin Firth stars in Tom Ford's acclaimed directorial debut.

PG. 8

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Former Grateful Dead bandmates, Phil Lesh and Bob Weir will take the stage alongside Joe Russo of the Benevento/Russo Duo, John Kadlecik of the Dark Star Orchestra and Jeff Chimenti and Jay Lane of RatDog. Tickets are expected to sell out, so get 'em while they last.

Dead veterans take the music Furthur

By Andrew Sheridan
Collegian Staff

Since 1965, when the smoke and mirrors of the sixties still cast its magic on the landscape of America, one name has been synonymous with jam music: The Grateful Dead. The band was an icon of the psychedelic world, blending quintessential American styles into a unique brand of music that has been the beloved trademark of hippie culture ever since.

The band's most current incarnation, both in spirit and in flesh, is called Furthur, and it is coming to the Mullins Center tonight for an all-star concert in classic style.

Furthur was formed late in 2009 by founding Grateful Dead members and Rock n' Roll Hall of Fame inductees Phil Lesh and Bob Weir. The two came together for this project following the final summer tour of The Other Ones, a previous Dead reunion band.

The band stays true to the roots of its legendary forbearer, with a short set-list but long jam sessions. These extended improvisational sets were a hallmark of The Grateful Dead, who adopted the style from American jazz. While their music is largely considered to be one of the earliest forms of Rock n' Roll, it bears little resemblance to the classic rock than many of the current generation are familiar with. Instead, using the "jam" framework, The Grateful Dead blended blues, country and bluegrass into a distinct new sound that resonated with the psychedelic free-love culture of the time.

That was forty-five years ago, but not much has changed. Although their numbers may have diminished since the late sixties, legions of "Dead Heads," as their fans are called, still exist around the world and their image is still synonymous with psychedelic drug use and tie-dye. Their iconic cover art still adorns the walls of dorm rooms across the country, and their spot in Rolling Stone's "One Hundred Greatest Artists of all Time" list remains cemented at 55.

With the death of their unofficial leader Jerry Garcia in 1995 the Grateful Dead finally disbanded, ending a nearly unbroken thirty-year touring session. The remaining members went on hiatus, but were still far from retirement – and the music continued on. In addition to reunion bands, The Other Ones and The Dead, there has also been a highly successful tribute band, the Dark Star Orchestra, who claim to re-create the original group's classic shows set-for-set.

Bob Weir reprises his previous reunion role as singer and guitarist, bringing his unique style of vocals to the lead role. He is joined in both respects by John Kadlecik, co-founder of Dark Star Orchestra. Kadlecik has been praised not only for his guitar skills, but for his vocal similarities to the late Jerry Garcia.

Grateful Dead original Phil Lesh, who recently celebrated his 70th birthday, returns on the bass guitar and is accompanied by Jeff Chimenti on keyboard. Chimenti had worked previously with Weir on his side band RatDog, as did Furthur drummer Jay Lane. Joe Russo fills out the drum section, combining with Weir's unique guitar style to give the band a heavy rhythmic section that does not seem to detract from their overall laid-back flow.

Doors open at 6:00 tonight in the Mullins Center. Tickets range from $40-$50 but are expected to sell out. If you have ever dreamed of giving it all up and following The Dead cross country like in the days of old, now might be your chance to live the dream without dropping out, so get there early.

Andrew Sheridan can be reached at asher1@student.umass.edu.

UStyle: Campus casual with diverse fusion look

By Kaitlyn Bigica
Collegian Correspondent

Spotted walking through Southwest near Crampton hall, Michiko Reindorf looked extremely fashionable from head to toe. Reindorf finds her inspiration in diverse stores, and said that she likes to "pick and choose from different places." If you see her on campus or in one of your political science classes, she's sure to be rocking a trendy outfit because she "always likes to dress up." Reindorf takes pride in her unique outfits and puts them together by mixing pieces of clothing from different sources and with varying attitudes to create her own fashion.

The common style on campus this season seems to be a North Face, leggings and Uggs, but Reindorf stands out from the masses with her coordinated outfit of earthy tones with an edge. The color of her deep orange and brown scarf works with her skin tone to make her face glow. Her golden earrings drape down onto the scarf to complement its golden hues and make the gold chain on her bag pop. The gold chain also adds an edgy feel to her wardrobe, which transforms her bag from plain to stylish. Her navy jacket is an excellent choice, allowing the brighter elements of her outfit to stick out without adding too many intense colors to her ensemble. The three buttons side by side also add a structured element to the outfit creating a clean look. Her dark navy jeans blend seamlessly with the top of the outfit and allow her brown boots to stand out and connect with the scarf.

Next time you're out shopping, make sure to stop at Forever 21 for a cute jacket like Reindorf's, which costs around $37. If you like her style you can go to her other favorite stores like BeBe, Ardenß or Macy's.

Don't be afraid to express yourself through your clothing like Reindorf does. Pick styles from different stores to create your own unique image. On a college budget heading to the mall may not be ideal for your wallet, so try going through your closet to mix and match clothes you already have. By the time you're done searching, you'll find you have a new outfit and maybe even a new style.

Kaitlyn Bigica can be reached at kbigica@student.umass.edu.

Singledom pleases

By Jil Pasiecnik
Collegian Correspondent

Singledom: An experience that everybody has been through, either before a relationship, after a relationship or abruptly in the middle of a relationship; to be alone, for some people, is the best thing in the world . . . unattached, independent, single. But for others, alone rings the same sad tone as do the words "nobody" or "death." In "A Single Man," Colin Firth, in his first Oscar-nominated role, identifies more with the second description of "alone." He stars as George, a professor in Los Angeles struggling to cope with life after the death of his partner Jim (portrayed by Matthew Goode) leaves him alone for the first time in 16 years.

Set in the 1960s, the movie begins with a slow but beautiful ethereal dream scene of George kissing his dead lover Jim beside a car wreck in the snow. Scenes of George under greenish, dark water, seemingly drowning, interrupt the slow procession of the white contrasting snow setting. George suddenly awakes. The movie then takes the audience on a journey, through George's bright past and his groggy, grey present, as he tries to survive on his own, day after day.

In his first directorial debut, Tom Ford (yes, the fashion designer) creates a beautiful and moving depiction of love lost, and the apocalyptic effects it has on the survivors. Ford shows the impossible recovery George tries to make from losing the love of his life, and his efforts to move on from his terrible tragedy. The film is not all depressing, as instances expose the humor of George, who in an ironic moment, attempts suicide, but is unsure of which method he wants to go out with.

Smartly shot, the film comes in and out of clarity as, from the perspective of George, more and more instants that occur appear to brighten up his life, until finally, it seems that George takes a grip on the smaller treasures of his world, rather than the damning sadness. As people re-enter George's life, he is transformed from a single man into a living person once more. Kenny, a student of George's, played by Nicholas Hoult ("About a Boy"), feels particularly intrigued by George, and as their relationship develops, George's world becomes more colorful and apparently fuller. His newly rekindled relationship with his friend Charley (as portrayed by four time Oscar-nominee Julianne Moore) seems to surge life and excitement into his blood again, foiling any further suicide attempts.

Although the storyline doesn't cover much ground, as it explores the main character's past equally as much as it does his stark, empty present. Though the end may seem insufficient or unfulfilling to some, the film leaves a substantial mark. From the love story of a man, to his loss, the film is moving, captivating and poignantly reflective. "A Single Man" is an artistic and successful effort for first time director Tom Ford, combining fast-paced dialogue, strong performances and poetic, slow moving shots, creating a story epically romantic and tragic all at once.

Jil Pasiecnik can be reached at jmpasiecn@student.umass.edu.

Choral Fest spreads glee

By Lindsay Pierce
Collegian Correspondent

The biennial Five College Choral Festival falls this year on Saturday, Feb. 20. The festival will take place at 7:30 p.m. in John M. Greene Hall at Smith College in Northampton. Admission is free, though early arrival is recommended as seating is limited.

This popular event features twelve groups and nearly 500 individual singers from Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges, and the University of Massachusetts Amherst. The groups featured are The Hampshire College Chorus, The Amherst College Choir, The Amherst College Madrigal Singers, The Amherst College Women's Chorus, The Amherst College Glee Club, The Five College Collegium of The Five College Early Music Program, The Mount Holyoke Glee Club, The Mount Holyoke Chorale, The University of Massachusetts Chamber Choir, The University of Massachusetts University Chorale, The Smith College Chorus and The Smith College Glee Club.

The choral groups will perform a diverse array of pieces, including spirituals, folk music, Renaissance music and contemporary works. Pieces range from "Et La La La" by Ninot Le Petit to "Turn the World Around" by Harry Belafonte and Robert Freedman to "Cantique de Jean Racine, op. 11" by Gabriel Faure. The finale features all twelve groups from the Five Colleges in a rendition of 1658's "Plorate, filii Israel from Jephte" by Giocomo Carissimi, to be conducted by special guest Kristina Boerger.

Lindsay Pierce can be reached at lcpierce@student.umass.edu.

Off The Wall Games
Warhammer 40,000
Magic The Gathering
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays - 41 Russel St (Hampton Village Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

Disco Biscuits roll into NoHo

By John Shaver
Collegian Correspondent

Northampton is ready for another wild night as the Disco Biscuits roll into the Calvin Theatre on Saturday evening. The valley will cap off a mind-blowing weekend with the jam inspired trace-fusion Philadelphia-based band. Their epic two-night run last October brought Northampton to life, and Saturday will surely live up to fans' hefty expectations.

The Disco Biscuits have brought a new flavor to the jam band scene with their electronica influences. Their unique jam style incorporates as many sounds as one can imagine, along with flawless song transitions. Many songs in their repertoire have been manipulated and "inverted" in their electrifying live performances. This energy is only one aspect of their concerts that keeps their dedicated fan base alive.

The music isn't the only thing keeping the fans in a trance. Their light show is a spectacular sight, which adds so much to their live performance. The precision in synching their lights with the music is spectacular.

"I've never seen anything like this is all my life," one first-time Disco Biscuits concert attendee said after the first night of their two-night run in October. "I've seen a lot of concerts in my day, but the atmosphere was unbelievable. The lights were something I've never seen before. I'm so glad I finally found out what everyone was raving about."

The Disco Biscuits have been released a number of EPs leading up to their long-awaited full length album "Planet Anthem," which is set for a March release. This will be the band's first studio album since "Señor Boombox" in 2002.

The band's set list will include a collection of older tunes as well as unreleased tracks off of their upcoming LP. The live performance of these tracks gives listeners sneak peaks of what the album will sound like. Even so, the studio versions of most of their repertoire sound much different when performed live.

The atmosphere at Biscuits' shows tends to be almost as compelling as the meandering jams they play. Their fans are very loving of the members of the band and some travel along with them for each new tour date. Their live performance is undoubtedly the band's strong point, contributing an incredible amount of energy to their act and allowing them to steer clear of the studio as much as possible.

The Disco Biscuits also headline a variety of festivals throughout the summer, which give fans another venue to hear the band. They are hosting Disco Inferno at the famed Red Rocks Amphitheatre in Colorado, as well as Camp Bisco 9 in upstate New York. They are also set to play at Wakarusa in early June. The festival venue has a completely different vibe than a normal concert simply because of the nature of a festival.

Listening to studio albums only gives the listener a small sample of what the essence of the Disco Biscuits is. Seeing the crowd, seeing the lights, seeing the band enjoying themselves on stage, and being a part of a community of musically driven people is the reason this style flourishes.

Their opener, the Indobox, hails from Boston and parts of Pennsylvania. Their "dance rock" genre sounds like the end result of a bottle of champagne and one steamy night involving the Disco Biscuits, Duran Duran and the Talking Heads. Extended jams and creative beats combined with flowing bass lines and wild effects are what makes the Indobox a band to come early for. As veterans of Camp Bisco, they have proven themselves in the jam scene.

The Disco Biscuits and the Indobox will be at the Calvin Theatre on Saturday, Feb. 20 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $26.

John Shaver can be reached at jshaver@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

The Disco Biscuits, know for their energetic electronica sets and devoted fan base, will play the Calvin Theatre this Saturday.

the source

PLANNING YOUR WEEKEND SO YOU DON'T HAVE TO.

FRIDAY

THE FINE AND DANDY TRIO, BELLA'S BARTOK AND LIVING FAUX
WHERE: AMHERST COFFEE
DOORS: 7 PM.
PRICE: $4

SHUTTER ISLAND
MARTIN SCORSESE'S LATEST FILM, STARRING LEONARDO DI CAPRIO OPENS TONIGHT.
WHERE: CINEMARK HAMPSHIRE MALL
SHOWS: 12:45, 2:20, 4:00, 5:30, 7:05, 8:40 AND 10:15 P.M.
PRICE: $7.25 STUDENTS, $6.50 MATINEE

SATURDAY

FROM GOOD TIMES TO GIRLFRIENDS AND THE REBIRTH OF THE 90S.
THE BLACK STUDENT UNION WILL RE-LIVE 90S SITCOMS.
WHERE: AMHERST COFFEE
DOORS: 8:30P.M.
PRICE: $6

Jam band, Barefoot Truth will have feet tapping

By Andrew Cogan
Collegian Correspondent

"Universal consciousness" is the concept behind "Threads," the new album released on Feb. 16 by American roots-rock band, Barefoot Truth.

The band describes the motivation for their latest release, "as we emerge from the wreckage of unbridled greed in America, this album aims to inspire us to reset our value meters, and celebrate life!"

This Saturday, at the Pearl Street Clubroom, the band will be playing to promote their new album, which they consider a milestone in their career.

"These songs are going to propel us to the next level," said harmonica player Garrett Duffy in a recent interview with Andrew Beam of North Country Entertainment.

"We bring it back to the classic 'white reggae' feel, that roots-rock vibe," said lead singer and guitar and drum player Will Evans in the same interview.

The band's eclectic musical style fuses elements of folk, rock, blues and jazz, to create a unique but easily accessible sound presented on stage with youthful energy that reflects the band's spirit of honesty and optimism in their music.

Barefoot Truth was originally formed as an acoustic duo by Evans and Jay Driscoll in Mystic, Conn. After three years and one album, 2005's "Changes in the Weather," the band's line up and consequently its sound began to evolve. Now a quintet, the band features Evans on lead vocals, guitar, drums and didgeridoo, Driscoll on Weissenborn lap guitar and electric and acoustic guitar, Andy Wrba on electric and upright base, Garrett Duffy on harmonica, and Wayno on piano, organs and keyboards. The varied assortment of instruments has helped the band expand beyond its folk-rock origins by incorporating a rich blend of jazz, blues and reggae.

The band has had some big things going for it recently. Their fan base has grown steadily over the last few years, indicated by their achievement of over 4.5 million spins on Pandora radio. In 2008, the band toured with former member of Dispatch, Pete Francis, while also releasing two EP's. In support of their newly released CD, the band has embarked on an extensive East Coast tour, selling out their first two shows in Boston. The band is hoping to keep up the momentum Saturday night in Northampton, where they aim to impress audiences with their unique sound and captivating live performance.

The show is also a homecoming for band member Jay Driscoll, who was born in Northampton and graduated from UMass in 2007.

Barefoot Truth will be supported by Naa Kete, a reggae-roots artist from the island of Cape Verde, off the west-coast of Africa, and also by Clogie Inc. It is sure to be an excellent show with plenty of feel-good vibes, thanks to the Barefoot Truth's high-energy, upbeat songs. Tickets for the show cost $12.50 in advance and $15.00 at the door. Doors open at 9:00 p.m.

Andrew Cogan can be reached at acogan@student.umass.edu

COURTESY BAREFOOTTRUTH.COM

Members of the Barefoot Truth have acheived a higher level of conciousness with their latest release, "Threads."

NOMINATIONS FOR PRESIDENT, TRUSTEE, AREA GOVERNMENT

February 16th to March 1st

Pick up @ 420 Student Union, SGA Office

The Elections Commission

electionscommission@stuaf.umass.edu

http://blogs.umass.edu/ecsga

Butler lifts UNH in win with hat trick

By Chad Graff
The New Hampshire Staff

From Operation Hat Trick to natural hat trick: UNH forward Bobby Butler scored four goals on Friday night to propel the 15th-ranked Wildcats past the Friars of Providence College, 5-2, at the Whittemore Center.

In the process, the senior captain immediately threw himself into the conversation for the Hobey Baker Award, given to the nation's best all-around hockey player.

"He's a classic UNH player," Providence head coach Tom Army said of Butler. "He's a great player with a great stick and a great nose around the net. The puck's not on his stick very long."

Butler scored the first goal of the game and the last three goals of the game with linemate Phil DeSimone accounting for assists on all of Butler's goals but the last one, an empty netter with 49 seconds remaining.

"DeSimone and Butler played a great third period," UNH head coach Dick Umile said. "They did what we had to do to win the game."

The period opened with the teams tied at two before DeSimone connected with Butler in what may have been the best play of the season, and a play sure to be brought up again as Butler's Hobey campaign heats up.

DeSimone intercepted a Friar pass deep in the UNH zone, quickly spun and sent a seeing-eye pass right onto Butler's stick as he was just coming off the bench after a line change.

The pass snuck by two Providence defenders, giving Butler a breakaway where he faked left before bringing it back, sneaking the puck right through Friar goalie Alex Beaudry's five-hole.

"I got the puck and realized they had three guys pretty deep in the zone and I knew [John] Henrion just changed, so I knew Butler was coming on the ice," DeSimone said. "I pivoted real quick and saw Butler getting off the bench and streaking so I sent it into the neutral zone."

The goal sent the sold-out crowd into hysteria, chanting "Bobby Butler," and gave the Wildcats a 3-2 lead.

"It was perfect," said Butler. "After, [DeSimone] goes, 'you can thank me later.'"

The next Butler goal came on a two-on-one rush when DeSimone fed Butler backdoor for an easy goal past the out-of-position Beaudry.

The scoring streak continued when Brett Kostolansky sent a pass to a streaking Butler up the right side, who then sent a wrist shot from the point to light the lamp for the fourth time.

"Bobby's playing great," Umile said. "He can't be doing anything more than what he's doing [now]. He's as good a [Hobey Baker] candidate as there is."

Friday night was not all smooth sailing for UNH, however.

After Butler deflected a Matt Campanale shot for the first goal of the night, Providence's Andy Balysky finished off a one-timer to tie the game after the first period.

After Peter LeBlanc netted a goal from in front of the net off a great feed by Stevie Moses, the Friars once again responded, this time locking the game at 2-2.

Providence had even outshot the Wildcats coming into the third period.

That, of course, was before it became the Bobby Butler show.

The two points in Hockey East came at an important time, after UNH was swept by Maine last weekend and now heads into the final six games with a three-point lead on second-place Boston College.

"It's nice to win again," Umile said. "You lose a couple of games and you feel miserable."

UM teams set off for A–10 tourney

By Michael Wood
Collegian Staff

The stage is set in Kingston, R.I. for the Atlantic 10 Indoor Track and Field Championships. The Massachusetts men's and women's teams will travel to R.I. and compete on Friday with the hope of carrying their impressive seasons into an A-10 championship.

After a five week grind, many of the athletes on both the men's and women's teams are heading into the championship with over a week of rest since last weekend's Valentine Invitational in Boston. This bodes well for UMass, as it is now able to compete with fresh legs going into one of the most competitive tournaments of the season.

The A-10 Championship is an annual event at the end of the indoor season where the best teams in the conference compete against one another for the top spot. UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien said his team especially looks forward to the A-10 meet because it presents a chance to establish the program as elite and get national exposure for the school. He also said that the track program has grown over the years, and is now one of the most competitive on the east coast.

"I've enjoyed the growth of the A-10," O'Brien said. "It used to be two at the top, two in the middle, and two in the cellar, but the last few years it has solidified. There are no easy points in the A-10 any longer."

Last year's A-10 meet wasn't as good as the Minutemen were hoping for, as they finished seventh out of 10 teams. Fortunately, the two top finishers for UMass were underclassmen and return to the squad this season.

Phillip Weltman and Daniel Schwartz each ranked third in their respective event, and the experience they gained last year will certainly help the team this weekend.

O'Brien realizes that while the experience of last year's meet will help, 2010 is a completely different season with new challenges.

"The next three weeks are our championship season," O'Brien said. "This weekend opens the doors for a short, tough season where there is no room for error. We have to be on our game. We're excited about our chances and we expect some good things."

With solid individual performances throughout the season and strong relay and distance teams, the Minutemen figure to compete in every event they enter.

The Minutewomen, meanwhile, are also in contention this weekend.

UMass will be looking to improve on last year's meet, where it finished in sixth place overall. In last year's event, the team saw two school records broken in the triple jump event by Stephanie Aquaqo and Ida Okkonen. Like the men's team, both upperclassmen will return to this year's event with a wealth of experience and hopes of improving upon their marks.

The Minutewomen will take their top-ranked distance medley relay team, along with four top-five ranked athletes into the meet. Karen Rox, Gina Perno, Michelle Jenssen and Courtney Baldwin combined to set a school record at the Giegengack Invitational two weeks ago, setting a mark that is currently two seconds better than second-ranked Charlotte. They should be well rested after only 19 athletes competing last weekend in Boston.

The championship is a two-day event beginning Friday, Feb. 19 at 9:30 a.m. and continuing through Saturday, Feb. 20.

Michael Wood can be reached at mcwood@student.umass.edu.

AMANDA JOHNSON/COLLEGIAN

Senior captain Maude Lecluyse will pair with junior Candyncе Boney for the No. 2 doubles team as the Minutewomen take on St. John's and Army over the weekend.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

The Massachusetts men's and women's track and field teams head to Kingston, R.I. to compete in the Atlantic 10 Championships today and tomorrow.

Home streak on the line in pair of games

By Ben Lambert
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts tennis team looks to keep its home winning streak going in a pair of weekend matches against St. John's and Army. The Minutewomen have won three straight games at home.

St. John's currently holds a 1-5 record on the young spring season. The Red Storm defeated Colombia on Jan. 31, but have fallen to Buffalo, Syracuse, Boston University, Dartmouth and Stony Brook as well.

No. 1 singles player Ira Aleksova echoes the difficulty St. John's has had thus far, sporting a 0-6 record in dual match play. The lone bright spot for the Red Storm is sophomore Joanna Zwirbulis, who has gone 4-2 in singles action. Other than Zwirbulis, no St. John's singles or doubles competitor boasts a winning record.

However, the Minutewomen (2-1) must stay wary of the Red Storm because on Nov. 6th, St John's defeated UMass, 7-2, in tournament play.

Sophomore Magdalena Ploch was the star of the day for the Minutewomen, winning her singles match over Aleksova, 6-4, 6-2, while teaming up with freshman Julia Comas to beat sophomores Ece Firat and Jenny Yonkus, 8-1. Both Comas and junior Tanisha Hodgson played competitively in singles as well, falling in three sets to Firat and sophomore Nakita Austin.

The Red Storm finished 9-13 last year, including a 5-6 mark in Big East play. Since 2003, UMass is 3-1 against St. John's.

On Sunday, the Minutewomen will also match up with the Black Knights. Army currently has a 4-3 record on the season, holding victories over Sacred Heart, Seton Hall, Fordham and Connecticut, which UMass also defeated earlier this year.

The Black Knights are headlined by Anne Houghton, a two-time Patriot League Player of the Year. Houghton holds the single season record for dual match singles victories for Army with 18. She also became the first player in Patriot League history to garner Player and Rookie of the Year awards in 2008. Houghton also defeated Candynce Boney, 6-2, 6-3 at No. 1 singles in the 2009 spring season.

Houghton and Ploch have matched up before this season, with Ploch holding a 6-4, 0-6, 6-2 victory over Houghton at the ITA Regional Championships. Ploch went on to upset the No. 3 seed from Harvard, Hideko Tachibana, 6-2, 6-2 in that tournament. The upcoming matchup this Saturday will be the first meeting between Ploch and Houghton since their previous encounter.

Other notable players for the Black Knights include senior captain Kristin Beehler, who has been an All-Patriot League competitor each of her three previous seasons. She teamed with Houghton last year to lead the team with a 20-5 mark in doubles action. Beehler was also a Co-MVP of the Patriot League Championships last year after winning two singles matches and one doubles match during the tournament.

UMass is looking to stop a losing skid against Army this weekend. Since 2003, the Minutewomen have gone 1-5 against the Black Knights, including two 4-3 losses in the last two years. The last UMass victory against Army took place in March of 2007, as Michele Spiess led the Minutewomen past the Black Knights, 4-3.

Both matches will take place at the Bay Road Tennis Club this weekend. The match against St. John's will be at 12:30 p.m. on Saturday, while the match against Army will be at 1 p.m. on Sunday.

Ben Lambert can be reached at wlambert@student.umass.edu.

MAXWELL SIMKIN/COLLEGIAN

Senior Merritt Cosgrove provides much of the leadership on the Minutewomen team. The younger players have gained experience in the two games UMass has played this season.

UM travels on road to take on Huskies

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

Off a fresh victory over Holy Cross on Wednesday, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will try to earn two straight victories as it faces off against rival Connecticut tomorrow afternoon.

"We're going to watch this [past game's] film and readjust and get our game plan on," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "We're excited we have a game in a short amount of time and we're looking forward to it."

After a competitive contest against the Crusaders (0-1), the Minutewomen (1-1) will travel down to Storrs, Conn. where they will compete against a Huskies team that hasn't played yet this season.

"They have a lot of great athletic players, and I'm sure it's going to be a great game," Venechanos said.

The Minutewomen are hoping to bank on the things that went right in their game this past Wednesday, where they won by an impressive nine goals.

"We have to win the draws, the fifty-fifty balls, because that's what leads up to the goals," midfielder Jackie Lyons said. "So we have to do all the little things to get the win at UConn."

The game against the Huskies is six years in the making, as this is the first meeting between the two sides since 2004, when UConn defeated UMass, 19-13, in a shootout.

At the start of the last regular season meeting between these two teams, the Huskies jumped all over the Minutewomen with a five goal lead. Eight minutes into the contest, former midfielder Kerri Connerty nailed a shot to rile the UMass offense.

Connerty's goal was not enough to stop the UConn offense, as the Huskies responded with four more goals. Trailing by seven, the Minutewomen tried to mount a comeback with two strikes by junior Maura McGarrity. UConn added another goal at the end of the first period, to take an 11-6 lead.

The game tightened up after play resumed. Despite a hurried and quick-moving UMass offense, the Huskies' defense was too tough to handle.

If the last meeting between these two teams is any indication of what Saturday's game will hold, another close contest is expected.

The Minutewomen also took on UConn on Oct. 4, 2009 in an exhibition match during UMass' fall-ball schedule.

"[We] just [want] another win for our team," Lyons said. "A team effort like today is great when everybody's contributing and everybody has this many goals and it's just an awesome feeling when we pull off a win like that."

Adding to the rivalry between the two teams is the fact that two UConn coaches have connections to the Minutewomen.

The head coach of the Huskies is Angela McMahon, who was the assistant coach of Venechanos from 2007-2008. McMahon's assistant coach, Melynda Zwick, graduated from Massachusetts in 2008, and is in her second year at UConn.

Despite the connections between the schools, the Minutewomen players don't seem to be phased at all.

"We have to worry about ourselves. We have to do everything we're practicing," Lyons said.

UMass will have the advantage of having already played twice this season, while UConn, like Holy Cross, has yet to play this spring. This gives the Minutewomen the opportunity to face a team that hasn't had any in-game experience.

The match against the Huskies will be the second road game of the season for UMass, which played Northwestern in San Diego, Calif. The next time the Minutewomen will be on the road will be March 13th when they take on Stony Brook.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu.

UMass gets two games under belt

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

Thanks to an early start to the season, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team has already played in two games before some of its opponents in the early going have even stepped onto the field for the first time this spring.

In their first game of the 2010 campaign, the Minutewomen (1-1) fell, 18-6, in a loss to five-time defending champion and No. 1 ranked Northwestern. Rather than being discouraged by the loss, UMass coach Alexis Venechanos has seen it as an opportunity to face the best team in the country right off the bat and gain valuable experience.

Leading up to the game against Holy Cross in UMass' home opener at McGuirk Stadium on Wednesday, Venechanos claimed her team had one of their best weeks of practice yet.

It showed during the game.

The Minutewomen came out of the gates firing on all cylinders, and kept the Crusaders (0-1) at bay throughout the contest to record the 15-9 win, the first of their season.

Whether or not Holy Cross was rusty in its first game of the spring is questionable. What's clear, however, is that UMass learned from its mistakes in the Northwestern game and was in game-shape against the Crusaders.

Now, the Minutewomen get another opportunity this weekend to face a team that is playing its first game of the season in Connecticut.

Venechanos realizes that her team has the advantage heading into the matchup, but is more concerned with UMass' play and not that of the Huskies.

"Having two games under our belt going into that contest will definitely help us," Venechanos said. "I think we've gotten out the jitters and it's really more about how well we're playing rather than our opponents."

Unlike Holy Cross, however, UConn opens up its season at home. In fact, the Huskies' first four games of the spring are in Storrs, Conn. Though only going 3-13 last year, all of UConn's victories came on its home field.

Coincidently, the Minutewomen played better on the road last season than they did at home, amassing a 3-3 record as the away team and a 4-8 record in Amherst.

The key for the Huskies is holding their opponents to single-digit scores. Last season, UConn was 0-13 when the opposition scored 10 or more goals and 3-0 when it scored 10 or fewer.

UMass presents the Huskies with a difficult task of containing its attack which yielded four multi-goal scorers in its win against Holy Cross, including two players who recorded at least a hat trick.

Though the first game of the year is usually just one of many, for some teams, it can set the mood for the remainder of the schedule. UConn will look to start off on the right foot against the Minutewomen after beginning its 2008-2009 season with a 14-11 loss to Vermont. That loss led to eight straight losses before the Huskies finally earned an 11-9 win in late march against Cincinnati.

Despite the struggles of UConn in the past, the beauty of a season opener is that the team starts with a clean slate.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

PJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

After dropping the first game of the season to No. 1 Northwestern, the Minutewomen responded with a win over Holy Cross. UMass faces UConn next on the road this weekend.

Hartford travels to UMass for opener

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The last time the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team hosted Hartford, the Minutemen earned their first victory of the 2004 season.

With that already accomplished in a 15-12 victory at Sacred Heart last Friday, UMass hopes to earn its first home win of the 2010 season when the Hawks soar into Garber Field Saturday at 1 p.m.

Though the Minutemen have already played a closely-contested game this season and Hartford has yet to touch the field, UMass coach Greg Canella isn't convinced his team has an advantage.

"The experience in playing in a tight game against Sacred Heart maybe that plays in our favor," Canella said. "Watching tape on Hartford, you get personnel stuff but you don't see offenses and defenses because they haven't played yet. You can look at it both ways."

The No. 17 Minutemen have defeated the Hawks all six times they have played each other, dating back to 1996.

UMass beat the Hawks 13-7 back on March 2 for the first win of its 2004 campaign, as the then-No. 11 Minutemen scored eight goals to open up a tied game in the second half.

After its five goal lead disappeared in the beginning of the fourth quarter, UMass got back on track against SHU on Friday, scoring five of the game's final four games to hold on for the win.

Senior midfielder Bobby Hayes scored a career-high four goals, while five different UMass players registered multi-goal games for career bests.

Sophomore attackman Art Kell notched a hat trick and had an assist, while junior midfielders Ryan Hantverk and Ryan Liebel, along with sophomore Anthony Biscardi, added two goals each.

The Hawks are coming off two scrimmages, and will open their season on the road in the non-conference matchup Saturday. The Hawks were picked to finish fourth in the America East after finishing just 2-11 in 2009, including 0-6 on the road, while going 0-13 in 2008.

Like the Minutemen, the Hawks are a very young team with 15 freshmen and one just two seniors, but have a talented sophomore group in goalkeeper Scott Bement. Bement was named AE Rookie of the Year and to the All-Rookie team last season after leading the conference in save percentage (.577).

"He's an excellent goalie, probably because he's an excellent athlete," Canella said of Bement. "He has very quick hands and is explosive in goal as well. Anytime you have an athlete in there, similar to a hockey goalie, who can stretch for saves, they can follow shooters. He presents a ton of problems and they expect him to be an All-American this year, I won't be surprised if he is."

Along with Bement, the Hawks boast a young attacking unit in sophomores Aidan Genik, Ryan Compitello and Carter Bender, all of which were named to the AE All-Rookie Team while scoring 6.2 goals and adding 3.4 assists.

"They're very young, but all their midfielders are back, they have a sophomore goalie, and an experienced defense," Canella said. "They're a hungry team and they will be ready to go."

The Hawks are led by senior captain attackman Justin Bearse, who finished 2009 with 12 goals and 10 assists, while Liebel's younger brother Ben is a freshman defenseman for the Hawks as well.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinchi@student.umass.edu.

PJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Junior Ryan Liebel scored two goals in the season opener against Sacred Heart, helping the Minutemen secure a victory in the first game of the 2010 campaign.

SARA CARRON/COLLEGIAN

UMass heads back to Amherst for its home opener against Hartford this weekend. The No. 17 Minutemen began the season with a 15-12 win against Sacred Heart in Connecticut.

Minutemen making extra passes this year

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Staff

In the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team's season-opening 15-12 victory against Sacred Heart, the Minutemen attack almost always made the extra pass.

"We're always going to struggle with [assists]," UMass coach Greg Canella said. "Last year we didn't have many assists at all, but we put an emphasis on that this year."

It was evident from the early going that UMass attempted to fill in for the loss of last year's leading scorers, Tim Balise and Jim Connolly, with an abundance of passes which resulted in more shot attempts.

The Minutemen (1-0) focused on making the so-called "hockey assist" – a strategy that means making the extra pass before shooting – and the comeback win at Sacred Heart shows that it's paying off.

"With better ball movement within the offensive sets, I think we're going to get the better opportunities, and better shooting opportunities," Canella said.

UMass had 34 shots on net in the win, but a total of 55 shots for the entire contest.

"Make the pass that creates the assist, you don't always have to get the assist," Canella said of his offensive philosophy. "It's really a mindset for our guys."

Bobby Hayes and Art Kell are tied for the team's lead in shots, but also wound up as the team's leading scorers. Hayes, UMass' leading scorer returning from last season, had a career-high four goals from the midfield position. Kell also set a career-high with a hat trick, while also adding an assist in the winning effort.

Although Kell is only a sophomore, he is the most experienced on the UMass attack and demands much of the defensive attention. At 6'2", Kell is a big target for the midfield, but shows the quickness to be able to play from behind the net.

Midfielder Ryan Hantverk had nine shots in the first game of the season, scoring two goals in the contest. The junior showed off a powerful shot when he lined up with Sacred Heart's Zach Frank from the top of the box and still put the shot past the Pioneer's goalie.

Garber Gorillas

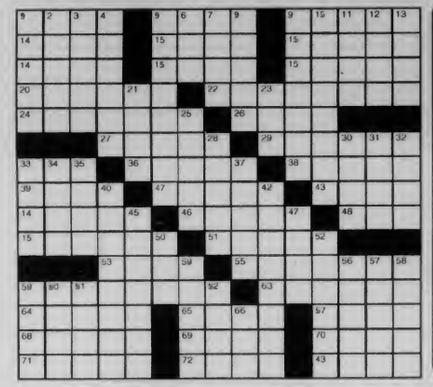
UMass athletic teams have been called by a few different names over the seasons: the Minutemen or Minutewomen, the Maroon and White, or even more affectionately, the 'Mass Attack.'

Excellent play at Garber Field, however, has earned the men's lacrosse team the moniker 'the Garber Gorillas.' This weekend, the Minutemen are playing against Hartford where they first earned the nickname – Garber Field.

"I like it," Canella said with a smile. "Anything with the Garber name thrills me. Coach Garber, as my coach and mentor, we keep his name within the program and regard it highly."

The field is named after legendary coach Dick Garber, who roamed the UMass sidelines from 1955-1990. Garber racked up a career record of 300-141 and ranks third all-time in NCAA coaching wins.

While the nickname does make a correlation between the UMass players and rugged animals that live in the jungle, the Minutemen are satisfied with the name because of the success they have had with it.



The name comes from a marketing ploy based of an event back in 1969 when a UMass player's girlfriend wore a gorilla suit with the player's jersey to a game, and then the nickname took off.

"It stuck from that day on," Canella said. "The fans love it, the people love it and hopefully the gorilla will show up for the game and we'll keep that tradition going."

Neil Carroll can be reached at nacarrol@student.umass.edu.

comics

CROSSWORD

Summer Session Just Got 50% BIGGER!!!

3 Sessions to Choose From:

- Session I: May 17 - June 7
- Session II: June 8 - July 13
- Session III: July 14 - August 17

Registration Begins March 15

Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net

UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

ACROSS
1 Toothpaste holder
5 Andy's partner
9 Exclude
14 Small songbird
15 Starlet's quest
16 Writer Zola
17 Sacred bird of ancient Egypt
18 Guilty or not guilty
19 Rice dish
20 Eyelooth
22 Race officials
24 United Kingdom part
26 Revise as text
27 Duck down
29 Display
33 In great demand
36 Red Square figure
38 January in Barcelona
39 Cassowary cousins
41 Sofa
43 Get ahead
44 Aquatic plant
46 Office notes
48 "Natura" network
49 Misgivings
51 Invoice word
53 Oliver's request
55 Manages
59 Fabric
63 Fox of the Sox
64 Frighten
65 Casa chamber
67 Drink garnish
68 Actress Hope
69 QED part
70 Middle Eastern ruler
71 Had affection for 72 Miami's county
73 Cincinnati nine

DOWN
1 Doubly
2 Metropolitan
3 Existence
4 Store fodder
5 Added on
6 ___ de mer
7 Maple/el and bauxite
8 Assert
9 Dispossess
10 Giving off
11 Digestive fluid
12 Banned apple spray
13 NFL zebras
21 Brad or spike
23 Lemon drink
25 Jeans material
28 Mississippi or Missouri
30 Lowest high tide
31 Baby's bed
32 Long, long time periods
33 Embraced
34 "Typee" continuation
35 Ballerina's skirt
37 Designated
40 Go under
42 Propose as a candidate
45 Raged
47 Address for a king
50 ___ Lanka
52 Penn's partner
54 Let off pressure
56 Weather of a region, so to speak
57 Shy
58 Tarot users
59 Shoppers' milieu
60 Jar
61 Armored vehicle
62 Zhivago's beloved
66 Shaveling

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

QUOTE OF THE WEEKEND

"Whenever I see an old lady slip and fall on a wet sidewalk, my first instinct is to laugh. But then I think, what if I was an ant, and she fell on me. Then it wouldn't seem quite so funny."

— Jack Handey

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Buy some rollerskates and go to the zoo wearing a shirt that exclaims that you are indeed a meal on wheels.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Do not resort to violence against your enemies. Instead tape them down and make them watch Halloween II over and over and over and over.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Not feeling too thin? Perhaps watching a late night infomercial will bring you back down to size.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Some people do not have enough time to wash their hair every day. These are the same people that spontaneously combust.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Elvis invented his trademark dance maneuvers to get all the ladies and also to relieve himself from his chronic wedgie disorder.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Black and white cookies are masticated on quite frequently. Look out for that.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Nobody provides sexier quotes during this time of year than Biggie Smalls.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Everything that you do could have been done better by Leonardo DiCaprio when he was a fetus.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Beware of peanut oil and its relation every piece of genitalia in the known universe.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
If you look at the clock when it strikes twelve then you have traveled through time.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Public respect is only earned when you perform monologues from crappy date movies in public for spare change and bananas.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
You could learn a lot about expressions from any Arnold Schwarzenegger action figure from 1991.

SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

Sandra wins the "worst thing you can say to a patient" contest.

Self Esteem by David Waksman infinitymaze.com

Wing Dings

	3	4					9
9	6		2
					6		7
			3	8	5
	2		6		4		1
		8	5		2
5		7
					5		8	1
2						7	3

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE

PUFFTON VILLAGE

EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS

SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses

ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!

ON SITE LAUNDRY,
OFF STREET PARKING.

BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.

OFFICE HOURS: 8AM TO 4PM MONDAY - FRIDAY
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub Chainsawsuit.com

WE WANT YOUR COMICS

DON'T EAT THOSE COMICS! Give them to me!

E-mail: comics@dailycollegian.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com. Stop by or Call 549-0600

28 Stockbridge St: 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,575/Mo+ www.amherst-lincolnrealty.com 253-7879

FOR RENT

www.AmherstMARentals.com 413-549-1398

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hot-line 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

TUTORING SERVICES

Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats, & GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 Jboid42@yahoo.com

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends From $89 Complete. montrealExpress.net MontrealBlowout.com 781-979-9001

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 2010

Home, sweet home

Minutemen play first game at McGuirk vs. Hartford

WOMEN'S LAX

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team looks to continue its momentum against Connecticut this weekend after defeating Holy Cross 15-9 in its home opener.

SEE PAGE 12

TENNIS

This weekend, a pair of opponents in St. John's and Army look to end the Massachusetts tennis team's three-game home winning streak.

SEE PAGE 11

DAILY COLLEGIAN sports WEEKEND EDITION

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 47 LOW: 32 www.DailyCollegian.com MONDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 2010

Early morning car crash kills UMass junior

By Matt Rocheleau
Collegian Staff

A 21-year-old University of Massachusetts student died early Saturday morning when a vehicle she was driving struck a utility pole in Boylston, Mass., and burst into flames, according to police.

A 2006 Mazda, driven by Maia F. McDermott of 158 Walnut St. in Clinton, Mass., and traveling north on Route 70, or Main Street, in Boylston, crossed into the southbound lane and crashed into a utility pole about a half mile south of the Route 140 intersection at around 2:20 a.m. Saturday, said a press release from Boylston Police Chief Anthony G. Sahagian.

McDermott, who according to University records was studying for a Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration (BDIC) at UMass, was killed in the accident which closed Rte. 70 for around three hours Saturday morning, the release said. She was expected to graduate in 2011 and lived in the Puffton Village Apartments on North Pleasant Street in Amherst, according to a Facebook profile under her name.

Maia McDermott died Saturday in an early morning car carsh.

Town and state police, along with fire and emergency medical service technicians, responded to the accident, which remains under investigation, police said.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrocheleau@dailycollegian.com

Honors college funds research

By Anna Meiler
Collegian Staff

Commonwealth Honors College awarded $100,000 to undergraduate students this academic year, funding research and better preparing students for graduate school and the real world.

"I think it's great that Commonwealth Honors College has been able to provide that much support to its students," said Jennifer Rivero, a senior kinesiology major. "Combined with the smaller class sizes, the financial opportunities presented by Commonwealth Honors College certainly make it worth being a part of." She received an honors Research Assistant Fellowship in the fall of her junior year and an Honors Research Grant in the fall of her senior year.

Over 100 honors students applied in spring 2008 and fall 2009 to receive funding in the 2009-2010 academic year. Commonwealth College was able to fund 75 percent of the Honors Research Grants and 85 percent of the Research Assistant Fellowships, supporting students in 29 academic areas, according to Meredith Lind, director of academic programs at Commonwealth College.

According to Lind, due to budget cuts and an increase in applicants, Commonwealth College eliminated the spring 2010 application round that allows students to apply for funding for the current semester. The college awards almost every accepted applicant $1,000 each, and without the ability to increase their budget, they couldn't afford another round of applications.

The grant program, created to fund juniors' and seniors' thesis research, requires applicants to write a five-page grant proposal, a process Dr. Priscilla Clarkson, dean of Commonwealth College, believes is an important experience in itself even if the applicant isn't awarded money.

"It trains students early on so they can hit the ground running when they get to grad school," said Clarkson.

Commonwealth Honors College awarded $100,000 in undergraduate research this past academic year, providing juniors and seniors the funds needed to pursue their theses.

Rivero said the experience of being awarded research funding has been central to her planning for the future.

"If it wasn't for Commonwealth Honors College and Dr. Clarkson, I would not be pursuing a research thesis right now, and I probably would not be moving on to graduate school in the fall," she said. "Through the research grants and assistantship that I received, I was able to explore a different aspect of science while at the same time receiving a little bit of money. That bit allowed me to focus on my work and not have to get a part-time job."

A stipulation which comes with being funded is that the student must submit an abstract to be reviewed and possibly chosen to be presented at the Undergraduate Research Conference, said Lind.

"In the larger world, the presentation aspect is very important," said Lind.

Rivero, who presented her research at a poster session and is preparing to present at the Undergraduate Research Conference in April, said, "Organizing my ideas and progress in a concise manner allows me to take a step back from the tedious aspects of research and be able to see what I have really accomplished. Each time I present or practice for a presentation, I feel more comfortable telling people about what I have been doing."

See RESEARCH FUNDS on page 3

UMass students sleep outside to protest use of fossil fuels

Individuals seek environmental changes

By Lauren Vincent
Collegian Staff

Christopher Potter has been living in a tent on the University of Massachusetts campus for 121 days.

The sophomore political science major is protesting the use of fossil fuels for electricity by refusing to sleep in the dorms as part of a statewide campaign called Massachusetts Power Shift.

Potter started on Oct. 24, 2009, which is the International Climate Day of Action, and has slept outside every night since. He even slept on his roof at home over winter break.

"My family is very supportive, but worries about my health," he quipped on his lifestyle choice.

Potter says he hasn't been politically active all of his life, but has been interested in politics from a fairly young age, recalling George W. Bush's election in 2000 as a moment cementing his political interest.

The first political campaign Potter joined was the Leadership Campaign, a component of the group Students for a Just and Stable Future (SJSF).

Craig Altemose, a Harvard law student and coordinator of the organization, said the group was founded in hopes of making Massachusetts a leader in clean energy production.

"The Leadership Campaign started as Massachusetts Power Shift in the spring of 2008 by embracing the goal of 100 percent clean energy by the year 2020," he said. "There are now 20 organizations signed onto the campaign," he added. "We started sleeping out last fall and got 17 legislators to create an emergency task force bill that we are still working to pass by Earth Day this year."

SJSF have been taking part in regional sleep-outs throughout Massachusetts, the most recent one taking place last Saturday in Amherst Common. Students came from all over the state to sleep on the common overnight, with Amherst state Rep. Ellen Story speaking that afternoon.

Last weekend's sleep-out was the western Massachusetts version of SJSF's Boston Common sleep-outs, which took place for seven weekends beginning on Oct. 24. During those sleep-outs, some 200 students were arrested on charges of trespassing on the common after hours. Even more slept out at least one night, said Altemose.

UMass sophomore environmental science major Katie

See SLEEP-OUT on page 2

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Students gathered this Saturday in Amherst Common to protest against the use of fossil fuels and rally for climate change. UMass sophomore Christopher Potter has slept outside for over four months.

Harris' 23 points not enough as Saint Louis tops UMass at home

Senior Ricky Harris drives to the hoop against Xavier earlier this season at the Mullins Center. The guard scored 23 points on 9-of-18 shooting in the 69-56 loss to the Billikens.

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

Another solid performance by guard Ricky Harris did little to offset Saint Louis, as it shrugged off a first-half scare by the Massachusetts men's basketball team to win, 69-56.

After scoring less than 20 points for the first time since UMass played Baylor on Jan. 23, the senior finished with a game-high 23 points.

St. Louis	69
UMass	56

But the Minutemen (10-17, 4-9 Atlantic 10) defense couldn't stop the Billikens from having four players in double-figures.

SLU's Kyle Cassity (16 points) led his team in scoring with 5-of-8 shooting while forward Willie Reed added 14 points on 7-of-10 shooting. A particular play Reed made shifted the momentum toward the Billikens, according to UMass coach Derek Kellogg.

They had a three-point lead with 12 minutes, 56 seconds left in the game as he tipped in a shot with one second left on the shot clock. SLU (18-8, 9-3 A-10) eventually built its lead to 13 points.

"That was a good designed play by them where they just threw it about as high as you can and he did a nice job of getting it in," Kellogg said. "We had played great defense up until that point, so that was definitely a momentum changer."

See BASKETBALL on page 6

ARTS & LIVING

'Furthur' than the average band

Comprised of two original members of the Grateful Dead, reunion band Furthur scintillated avid audiences last weekend with soulful renditions of beloved classics.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

UMass scores 20 against Hartford

Not since scoring 21 back in 2002 have the Minutemen lacrosse team reached the 20-goal mark, but Saturday UMass did it again with a 20-10 win over Hartford.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Guest columnist Matthew Ryder weighs in on gun laws.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Go online to view slideshows from this past week's performances from Furthur, The Pink Floyd Experience and the Five College Choral Festival

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 23

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Joinson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shayna Murphy
COMICS EDITOR Andrew Witts
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larrard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Scannell
ASSISTANT COMICS Domonic Mei
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Asser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Spare
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cody
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded as 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

COPY EDITOR
Caitlin Quinn

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Service offers 'Life without Laundry'

BY KAT MANSER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The typical student living on-campus at the University of Massachusetts must spend $1.50 in quarters to wash and $1.50 to dry when it comes time to do one load of laundry. Many students also comment on the time it takes to wait for an available washer or dryer, especially considering the sometimes-broken machines.

A new laundry service being offered in the Amherst area gives students the convenience of getting their laundry picked up, taken to a facility to be cared for, then returned to the student – washed and folded. The company, appropriately named Life Without Laundry, promises on its website, "Never again will a friend ask 'what's that smell?' while visiting your room. Never again will your girlfriend or boyfriend refuse to show affection for you because your three-week-old gym socks are sitting in that odor basket at the foot of your bed."

The company operates in the Boston area and just recently began to service the Amherst area. The company reports already having 70 customers in the Pioneer Valley after doing "light, light marketing."

UMass sophomore Kayla Thornquist said she would prefer not to use the University's laundry facilities.

"Overall when I can avoid using the dorm laundry systems I do," she said.

However, Thornquist says she still does her laundry at school, or "sometimes at home, depending on whether I'm going home or not. I don't like the fact that we need to pay for laundry after paying thousands of dollars in housing."

The company also operates in the Boston area and charges $11 for the basic service, which consists of pick-up and delivery and washing in cold water. The price covers a 20-pound bag of laundry, which the company says is "about two loads in your average-size washing machine." The company picks up loads during blocks throughout the day, seven days a week, with a late pick-up time at 9 p.m. for "night owls."

Spend $13 for a 20-pound bag, and the company will wash clothes on a delicate cycle, and deliver the laundry back the next day. For $27, a customer can get "platinum service," which also offers next-day delivery in addition to "luxury" laundry treatment: delicate wash, bleach on whites, customized instructions on garment care, color enhancement and custom folding separation.

The service is handled online at Lifewithoutlaundry.com, where customers make an online account to sign up for the service. They are provided with an official laundry bag after the first order and can send more than 20 pounds of laundry for an overage charge.

Sophomore Samantha Yoon said that despite the new service, she is happy doing her own laundry.

"I just do my laundry here," she said. "First of all, it's way cheaper, and second, I've never liked paying for convenience, especially when said convenience exceeds about five dollars for a relatively minor service."

UMass student Veronica Johnson commented that she also prefers not to do her laundry on campus, but can't afford to do otherwise. "I try to schedule out my laundry so that I have to do minimal laundry at school, and I bring most of it home," she said. "I would use the laundry service if my parents paid for it. Otherwise, I would not spend that amount of money for someone to do something that I can do just fine on my own."

The company does not offer air-drying or dry-cleaning services.

Campus resident Maggie Clayton said, "I do my laundry on campus except for anything still dirty when I leave for winter break and spring break. I use my UCard to pay for it. It's my money that is put on there for the sole purpose of laundry and textbooks."

She elaborated that she wouldn't use the new service because she likes to clean her own clothes.

"I would not use this service because they make you pay by credit card and I am very hesitant about the treatment of my clothes in someone else's hands. I air dry almost all of my clothes because it is a waste of energy and money to pay for drying service."

In the "Terms and Conditions" listed on the company's website, it's stated that customers can make a claim if they feel that any of their clothing has been damaged in the laundering process.

"Bottom line is, we are a laundry service 1/2 the price of our competitors and almost the same price you pay for that horrible coin laundry," the site said.

Kat Manser can be reached at kmanser@student.umass.edu.

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Students in Van Meter Residential Hall use this room to take care of their laundry needs. A new service offers UMass students a chance to pass off their laundry duties.

Sleeping outside for climate

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

This weekend's 'sleep-out' in Amherst Common was sponsored by the Leadership Campaign, a component of the group "Students for a Just and Stable Future."

SLEEP-OUT from page 1

MacDonald is the regional co-coordinator of the campaign for western Massachusetts. She coordinates the student efforts with the Leadership Campaign at different campuses in the region. She said she first got involved with the global warming issues as a senior at Winchester High School in Winchester, Mass., and, along with Potter, helped develop the Leadership Campaign last summer. Unlike Potter, she sleeps out only when there is a group event.

Potter thinks he has personally made an impact on the issue.

"Hopefully people see me and realize that there are people out there who care about the Earth's future and civilization's stability enough to do something about it," he said. Though he doesn't live inside, he says he charges his electronics with "dirty fossil fuels," because "right now there's no escaping them, and it makes us all contribute to climate change, unfortunately."

The police took his tent one night, citing it as abandoned property.

"I think it was an intimidation tactic," he said. Potter was forced to go to the station and claim his tent.

When asked what he wants to do for a career, Potter says he wants to continue pushing for clean electricity.

"It's not going to happen overnight," he said. MacDonald also hopes to go into social justice work for the environment.

"We've been lucky that our bill has caught the attention of legislators," said MacDonald.

Lauren Vincent can be reached at lvincent@student.umass.edu.

Former University students' business expands to Boston

Business

BY MATT BOUTELLIER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

During a time when many businesses are downsizing and cutting back just to stay afloat, Dexrex LLC – founded and run by former University of Massachusetts students – is expanding, soon moving from college-town Amherst to the banking center of Boston.

The company's website, Dexrex.com, allows users to archive their instant messages as well as mobile text messages, then browse and search old records. The site was created by CEO Derek Lyman and Chief Technology Officer Richard Tortora.

"While we were undergrads, Rich and I were living in Northeast [Residential Area] and we were just bored," said Lyman.

The company plans to relocate on March 1, the latest in a series of successes for Dexrex.

In 2005, the inspired duo started to construct and test software that would store data that could be organized and later revisited. At first, the idea was to design a program that would save instant messages in the event of a computer crash, so that later the user could log on and continue their conversations.

"It was just for fun, really," said Lyman.

The project eventually grew from what Lyman described as "two guys kickin' it in a dorm room to two offices with a 14-person staff." The expansion began in 2007 when Lyman and Tortora attended the Executive Summary Competition put on by the UMass Entrepreneurial Initiative and were inspired to seek start-up investment for their company.

However, fears of the looming financial crisis were growing, and finding investors proved to be Dexrex's biggest challenge. But ironically, it was the crisis itself that ended up spurring investors. The two entrepreneurs saw the potential for Dexrex to be a tool for financial oversight, as well as a guard against insider trading.

Lyman and Tortora's big break came in August 2009 when a New York-based distribution company approached them. As a new enterprise in the financial sector, they sold their product to investment firms who saw Dexrex as a cheaper alternative to similar products and an effective monitoring tool against illegal financial activity.

"We revolutionized the market," said Lyman. "We did for one to two dollars per unit what other companies were doing for $10 to $20."

The company also launched a Blackberry application for Dexrex in April 2009.

According to a press release announcing the application's debut, "Dexrex SMS backup automatically archives your incoming and outgoing text messages to a private, password-protected account online at Dexrex.com."

"Dexrex provides users with a wealth of features like searching, forwarding, deletion, SMS monthly totals, contact management and the ability to view stored messages from any web-enabled device," said the release.

The company's founders believe the corruption on Wall Street, which was partially responsible for the recession, will give Dexrex a lasting market in which to sell their product. As long as there is finance and insider trading, firms will need companies like Dexrex to keep capitalism honest, Lyman and Tortora said.

Matt Boutellier can be reached at mboutel@student.umass.edu.

FROM WWW.DEXREX.COM

Former UMass students Derek Lyman and Richard Tortora, the creators of Dexrex.com, ...

Students thankful for funds enabling research opportunity

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Commonwealth Honors College, hosted in Goodell Hall, provided undergraduate students with research funds this year. Students expressed their praise for the opportunities the money allowed.

RESEARCH FUNDS from page 1

The application process and funding gives students the opportunity to learn grant writing, and how to conduct research and present their findings, which benefits a student academically, personally and professionally, said Lind.

The Research Assistant Fellowship also provides students with the opportunity to work closely with a faculty member, giving students the chance to be published as a co-author with the faculty they work with. The faculty is also then able to speak accurately to the student's strengths in their recommendations, said Lind.

Shelby Kinney-Lang, a junior English and philosophy major, was awarded a $1,000 fellowship for the spring 2010 semester and is using the funds to support his role as a research assistant to professor Nicholas Bromell.

"ComCol is fostering an environment of academic excellence by encouraging undergraduates to participate in research with faculty members," said Kinney-Lang.

The research Kinney-Lang is conducting includes reading selections from a variety of African-American writers, examining newspaper editorials throughout the last 150 years, understanding the general public discourse concerning democracy during each period in which each writer was writing, and from this, gathering the information most useful to professor Bromell, who is writing a book about African American contributions to the public understanding of democracy in the United States.

"I am elated to receive the opportunity to work alongside a professor in a field of study that I am very interested in pursuing. Without ComCol's support, I would not have had the opportunity to do so," said Kinney-Lang.

Clarkson and Lind both said they are encouraging more students to apply for grants and fellowships, even though they are not in a situation where they could fund more students for the current semester.

"We are at a nice homeostasis where we can fund those who apply," said Clarkson. "If more students apply, we will work to get more reviewers and donors."

Most Commonwealth Honors College alumni donators first contribute to the research grant program because it was important to them and understand the impact it will have on students, said Lind.

"Alumni say their Capstone experience was the most rewarding of their education," she said. "And they had a leg up on other students in their grad program."

Anna Meiler can be reached at ameiler@student.umass.edu

UI budget crisis forces faculty to take on larger class sizes

CUT WATCH

THE DAILY IOWAN
VIA COLLEGE NEWS NETWORK

Faculty efficiency has been a focus at the UI for at least two years, but the budget crisis in particular has "accelerated" the need, the faculty council president said.

Because of the diminishing numbers of faculty positions and teaching assistants, UI officials said they need faculty to pick up the slack and teach more students.

"We've lost so many teaching assistants, we've lost faculty lines, and the current faculty is being asked to step up to the plate more and teach more because of the need," said Faculty Council President David Drake.

According to the College Portrait for the UI, the ratio of students to faculty is 15-1. Most undergraduate classes – 82 percent – have fewer than 30 students.

Freeing up those professors who interact with few students to teach larger classes could save money, UI Provost Wallace Loh said.

"What colleges are trying to do is to make the most effective and efficient use of limited teaching resources to meet the student demand," he wrote in an e-mail.

Loh noted the "best class sizes" are determined by subject matter, so classes in art performance are small, almost individualized instruction.

Theater Professor Eric Forsythe teaches 16 students in his acting classes and four or five in his directing seminar.

Small numbers are a matter of individualized attention and safety because of the physical activity involved with theater, he said.

"Any more [students], and we would have people being hurt," Forsythe said.

To improve efficiency, professors are taking on a larger number of classes with the same number of students. Professors now work with larger numbers in general, Forsythe said.

"We reach a fair number, and we're certainly cognizant of our responsibility to reach as many as we can," he said.

Another reason some faculty work with fewer students is if their subject matter is not very popular, resulting in low enrollment. While those professors may have to take on more classes, Drake said, it wouldn't necessarily mean they would have to discontinue the smaller class.

But colleges may have to reconsider whether low-enrollment classes should be offered annually, Loh said.

Despite focusing on efficiency, students' education won't suffer, Loh said, and size won't determine the quality of teaching.

"Some types of courses must be kept small, and some types of courses can be large, keeping educational quality the paramount consideration," Loh said.

For performing arts classes, small student-teacher ratios are necessary for the space available, style of teaching, and one-on-one time.

"In performing arts, it's absolutely vital," Forsythe said. "The relationship is crucial. If there weren't very close personal relationships with students, we might as well go out of business."

MAROON CENTRAL
Student & Alumni Online Community

Use MaroonCentral to Connect With a Minuteman Mentor
[UMassAlumni.com/students]

- Want to know who's hiring in your field of study?
- Want advice on what classes to take, for your future career?
- Looking for ways to polish your resume, or practice interview questions?

MaroonCentral is where you need to be.
To register for FREE on MaroonCentral, you need to use your unique alumni ID.

UMass Amherst ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
Call the Alumni Association to obtain it at 413.545.2317 or email alumni@admin.umass.edu.

Offering a Hillside introduction

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Sabine Holub introduces artists at last Tuesday's Hillside Salon, held monthly at the Holub residence for artists and art enthusiasts of the Pioneer Valley.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
B.O. Ads for $6.70 column inch
On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10 per column
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Outwitted by a dairy product

Matt Rocheleau

Don't cry over spilled milk, but spoiled milk is another story.

Of the many trials I have endured since gaining college independence, none have been quite as troubling and equally annoying as figuring out the freshness of the stuff in my fridge: namely milk.

To determine whether the opaque white dairy liquid is okay to drink, I first check the "sell-by" date printed on each gallon or carton; but, every time it just confuses me more.

The date stamped on my 3.78-liter jug is helpful to employees stocking shelves at Cumberland Farms, but what does it mean for me? Is milk still safe to drink after the "sell-by" date? If so, for how long?

Thus, in hoping to resolve this conundrum, I turned to what may be the second coming of Jesus Christ – Google.

Some people say, "Just pop the cap and see if it smells bad." However, I have no idea what milk is supposed to smell like – good or bad. And even if I did, it would likely take the snout of someone like Froot Loops cereal mascot Toucan Sam to distinguish the difference; after all, if you "Follow his nose, it always knows!"

The only way I really know whether milk has soured is to taste it, which hurts my ego. Drinking sour milk makes me feel betrayed and at the same time outwitted, because I should have known better than to trust a substance that is squeezed from a cow's utters.

From time to time, I even psych myself out. In the same way that milk's scent is a mystery to me, I'm never quite certain what milk is supposed to taste like, because I rarely drink plain milk. I'm always adding coffee, strawberry or chocolate syrup, or mixing it up with a bowl of cereal. So, when I do a milk taste test, it seems to taste a bit off. Initially, I'll think, "Well, I don't really like milk by itself, anyways." But then, I'll think that maybe the bad taste is not my displeasure for milk by its lonesome, but rather that the dairy product has expired.

It's all very stressful, especially considering I like to drink milk in the morning, before my brain is able to handle this level of decision making. Throwing milk out without discretion is expensive. Even more costly is drinking expired milk; after all, six teenagers died in 2008 from suspected food poisoning after drinking sour milk at their boarding school in eastern India, according to the International Herald Tribune.

Thus, in hoping to resolve this conundrum, I turned to what may be the second coming of Jesus Christ – Google.

The miraculous search engine led me to an article published in BusinessWeek in 2006 which said, "Pasteurized milk usually remains fresh for five days after its 'sell-by' date.

However, if milk isn't refrigerated promptly, it will develop a sour taste and spoil, even though it might not necessarily be dangerous."

Great. So apparently time is not the only factor in creating spoiled milk, it also depends on the whether it has been kept at the right temperature and in the right lighting from the time it is made in some far away factory all the way until the time you gulp it down. And, it also depends on who makes it.

At no fault to Google, that search turned out to be about as useful as a "sell-by" date.

I know it's trivial, but it would be nice if someone could tell me exactly when that red-labeled, half-empty gallon of whole milk should be transported from my fridge to the trash, without having to call my mom to seek her instinctive advice.

Matt Rocheleau is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrocheleau@student.umass.edu.

Laws don't stop criminals

Matthew Ryder

I would like to start by saying that I agree with Daniel Entrikin's opinion on gun-related crimes – something has to be done to reduce the number of them committed in this country. However, I don't believe tighter regulations are in order.

Entrikin said "The same sale that is illegal at a gun store is completed easily and legally at a gun show."

This was in reference to the hypothetical situation of an "escaped mental patient" who could go to a gun show and "legally" buy a gun. The claim was that since private sellers are not required to conduct background checks on the buyers, the escaped mental patient could buy the gun legally. What is misleading about this claim is that Entrikin himself said earlier that, "Persons convicted of a felony or involuntarily committed to a mental institution are among those that cannot legally own guns."

If persons involuntarily committed to a mental institution cannot legally own guns, then how can they legally buy a gun from a private seller? They can't. By even attempting to buy a gun, the mental patient is committing a crime and the transaction cannot legally take place. Entrikin goes on to say that, "The laws are often broken by private sellers." If laws are being broken by private sellers, how are more laws going to change the behavior of those same sellers?

We already have laws on the books that prohibit felons and mental patients from so much as holding a gun, so what we need is more enforcement rather than more laws. If private sellers are transferring guns to out-of-state buyers or mental patients, felonies are being committed. There is no "legal loophole" here.

Claiming there is a loophole with gun-show regulations is similar to claiming there is a loophole with traffic regulations.

Claiming there is a loophole with gun-show regulations is similar to claiming there is a loophole with traffic regulations.

Every state in the nation has laws governing how fast you are allowed to drive your car, but these laws do not stop the vast majority of Americans from going over the speed limit. Should we make a law requiring every driver to have a GPS chip installed on their car to monitor their speed? Speeding tickets could be issued automatically, and I'm sure it would have some effect on the number of people who speed.

The problem here is free will. Laws do not physically prevent a crime from being committed; they inform the population what behavior is not acceptable and what the punishments will be if a law is broken. If someone is determined to break the law, they are going to do it no matter how many sets of laws we have prohibiting their actions. We need to enforce the laws we already have, not create new ones.

With regards to Entrikin's escapade to New Hampshire in an attempt to purchase a rifle at a gun show, I have to say that the only thing he proved was that if laws are broken, then anyone can buy a gun.

A federal felony was committed by the person who sold the rifle, and I am shocked that Entrikin would knowingly assist in committing a felony.

Federal law prohibits the private sale or transfer of any gun between the residents of two different states. It also prohibits anyone from bringing a gun privately purchased across state lines back into their home state. It is for this reason that there is no legal "loophole" allowing Massachusetts residents to travel to New Hampshire to buy guns. In light of these clear federal laws, I do not see how Entrikin's claim that "easy access to guns is but a short drive away" is valid. If several federal and state laws were to be broken then I agree it is possible, but there is no legal way for it to happen.

Again, laws do not prevent things from happening if the participants are determined to break the law. Entrikin demonstrated this himself when he allowed an illegal gun transaction to take place in New Hampshire. U.S. Code Title 18 Section 2(b) states that, "Whoever willfully causes an act to be done which if directly performed by him or another would be an offense against the United States, is punishable as a principal." By willfully allowing the New Hampshire resident to sell him the rifle in violation of federal law, Entrikin violated this statute. I suggest he reevaluate the legal counsel he sought before traveling to New Hampshire to conduct his investigation.

In Massachusetts, we have the most complex and restrictive gun laws in the nation. Yet criminals are still able to get guns within this state. In 2008, according to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives, 290 of the 890 illegally owned guns seized by police in this state came from Massachusetts; only 91 came from New Hampshire. If criminals in Massachusetts, a state that "has essentially closed the loophole" and that "has strict gun laws" could get three times the number of guns from within this state than they could in a neighboring state with "lax" gun laws, wouldn't that indicate having more laws doesn't solve more problems?

Matthew Ryder is a UMass student. He can be reached at mryder@student.umass.edu.

Five reasons why online voting is a good thing:

1) Easier than ever to ignore the SGA.

2) Vote fraud by ALANA and Derek Khanna will cancel each other out.

3) With all the guns on campus, election workers are safer now.

4) Another sign of economic recovery.

5) We have elections?

Fed/Up? Ed/Op.

editorial@dailycollegian.com

A principled 'no' can be a good thing

Harrison Searles

There are many reasons why it is foolish to lambaste the Republican Party as the "Party of No," but one reason must be emphasized above all else: The foolishness of judging an effective government based on the quantity of legislation it passes.

Efficient government is not a wholesale transfer of power to unelected technocrats in bureaucracies that end up taking a life of their own, but rather it is in the proper execution of duties that the government has been charged with. While politicians may proclaim themselves to be the primary engines of progress in society, it must be remembered that it is really the insight of those individuals who are personally engaging a social problem.

Despite the fact that politicians always proclaim the dignity of the American common person, and that whenever elections come around they do their best to be seen with groceries in their arms, sleeves rolled up with a baseball cap on, they consistently fail to understand why the wisdom of common people must be respected.

As a result, the proper sphere of government is in guiding the actions of free individuals in society, giving them an institutional framework in which they know the laws and are properly protected, not in directly providing solutions.

No, it is not because they are "down-to-earth" and ready to comprise; rather, it is because each individual knows what they do best and have gathered a wealth of knowledge from their daily experiences.

Of course, knowledge must not be understood as merely being the sum of all scientific knowledge, for it also comes in the form of the understanding of circumstances in a particular time and space.

One of the failings of centralized bureaucracies is that they cannot have intimate knowledge of the second species, not only because of the fact that such information cannot be consumed through the memoranda and reports (having to be learned through experience), but also because they change along with the conditions that they react to. Of course, it is often that specific knowledge that must be used in solving the problems that affect society.

As a result, the proper sphere of government is in guiding the actions of free individuals in society, giving them an institutional framework in which they know the laws and are properly protected, not in directly providing solutions.

Enter the current debates where many commentators have derided the Republican Party for being the "Party of No," and have condemned them for merely continuing the status-quo.

Many in the media have criticized the party for not using their influence "constructively," yet this is simply not a sound criticism because proactive government programs simply do not solve the problems they are created to solve.

I could go on theoretically on this point, but it should be self-evident enough after failures in the "War on Poverty," the "War on Drugs," the "War on Terror," government attempts to make education better, government attempts to lower American dependence on foreign oil, et cetera.

To make the situation even worse, government bureaucracies, even when they are utter failures, cannot be done away with, and the resources are given to other individuals willing to try alternate solutions.

When power is accumulated by government, individuals can no longer use their insights in order to solve problems through their own efforts.

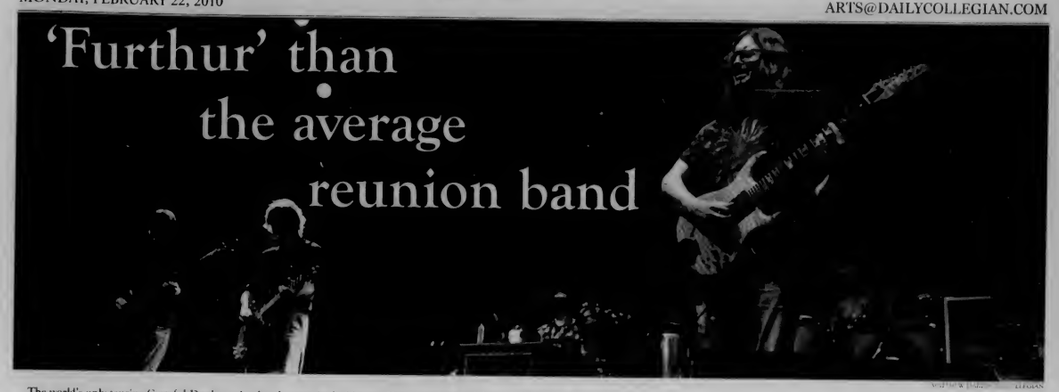
The entire mindset against the "Party of No" is a rush towards even more government programs in hopes that they will be capable of delivering society from evil.

Government must be bridled if it is to be of benefit to all in society. There is nothing more dangerous against maintaining that control than the perception of government as a social problem-solver.

There is nothing objectionable to deadlock in government, provided that the deadlock prevents the passing of legislation that will have detrimental effects upon society.

At the very worst, deadlock merely prevents a rash decision that cannot be undone for; as the aphorism goes, there is nothing as permanent as a temporary government measure.

Harrison Searles is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at hsearles@student.umass.edu.



THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Furthur' than the average reunion band

The world's only touring Grateful Dead reunion band, comprised of former Dead members Bob Weir and Phil Lesh, gave a soulful performance last weekend at the Mullins Center. Throngs of fervid fans flocked to the venue, eager to groove to the musical stylings of a band whose identity has since become closely associated with hippie culture.

By Andrew Sheridan
Collegian Staff

The setup was simple: A jungle of eclectic musical instruments drenched in a soft purple light, as white-haired roadies went about their quiet work in the silence before the dawn.

As the doors opened at the Mullins Center, the peaceful masses slowly trickled in and pooled into an unwashed, anticipatory pit crowd. The goal of the night was to experience a slice of history, a cultural phenomenon that became an iconic representation of hippie culture in the last half of the 20th century. Furthur – the world's only touring Grateful Dead reunion band – was visiting the University of Massachusetts, and the faithful were in full attendance.

The crowd was mixed. Dreadlocked students were joined by members of the clean-cut, middle-aged crowd who carried their children in tow. And as always, the hardcore first generation "Dead Heads" arrived in droves. They came from very different backgrounds, some traveling hundreds of miles to attend, but everyone in the audience was there for one purpose: to groove.

When the band marched out on stage, they made no introduction and held no pretense of flashy showmanship. Strings plucked, drums slammed and the show began.

Furthur was formed by Rock and Roll Hall of Fame inductees Bob Weir and Phil Lesh in the style of the Grateful Dead. While the two were founding members of the Dead, the rest of the musicians have been recruited from similar-style jam bands and side projects of the founders. This makes it part reunion, part tribute band to the legendary original, and the spirit and feel are very much intact.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian spoke to one dedicated Dead Head, who specified that his last name not be used. A central Connecticut native, Kevin was, like the rest of the crowd, relaxed and ready to feel the music.

"I love it," said Kevin, when asked how he felt about the event. "I drove six hours to Virginia last week for them, so this is nothing."

Having attended several Dead-style shows in the past, including a live show "in '95 – that was two months before Jerry [Garcia] died," and "three Furthur, five RatDog [Bob Weir's side band], and two The Other Ones," Kevin was an ideal form to remark on the Grateful Dead's long-standing appeal.

"It's the music. It makes you feel good inside ... plus the drugs," he said.

The drugs were a part of the concert experience that cannot be overlooked. For over 40 years, The Grateful Dead – with their long-form jam sessions and trippy cover art – have been a rallying point for psychedelic drug use. The glow of lighter-meeting-joint peppered the crowd like flashbulbs at the Super Bowl, and a thin cloud of smoke hovered over the proceedings.

While the stage setup was not complex and the band members never spoke to rally the crowd, they nonetheless put on the show that the audience wanted to see. The overhead lights strafed the crowd, shifting through the spectrum to dramatic effect. Spotlights cut through the hazy air like light sabers, illuminating the swaying, dancing, tripping masses on the floor.

The music itself was, in classic form, little more than a jam session. Furthur transitioned seamlessly from classic hits to bluesy freeform. As their sets faded almost into silence, with perhaps nothing but a bass riff to pierce the din, they always built back up to a full-fledged album track.

In some of their sets, the band's country influence came through strongly. "Don't Murder Me," in particular, packed a serious punch of twang. Throughout most of the concert, however, the Grateful Dead's unique style of early rock 'n' roll dominated the soundscape.

After a sing-along finale of "Not Fade Away," the crowd was ecstatic. The band retreated backstage and bassist Phil Lesh spoke to the audience for the first time during the show. He thanked Amherst, plugged his favorite cause (organ donation) and invited Furthur back out on stage. They finished with the soulful hit "Knockin' on Heaven's Door" and, as the lights went out, faded away into the night.

Andrew Sheridan can be reached at asheridan@student.umass.edu.

John Travolta and newcomer Nikki Blonsky starred in the 2007 version of "Hairspray," inspired by the Broadway musical and director John Waters' 1988 film of the same name.

Mullins to host quirky classic

By Alissa Membov
Collegian Staff

The national touring production of "Hairspray" makes a stop at the Mullins Center tonight, as part of the University of Massachusetts' "Broadway in Amherst" series.

The plot, which unfolds in 1962, centers on Baltimore teen Tracy Turnblad. Despite her unconventional weight for a dancer, Turnblad wins a spot on the popular television show, "The Corny Collins Show." With her newfound fame and open mind, the teen – along with her circle of offbeat friends – is sent on an adventure of romance, activism and plain old fun.

The musical is based on a 1988 film of the same name by the king of camp, John Waters. The film turned Ricki Lake into a star and started a precedent for Waters, whose 1990 film "Cry Baby" would also be turned into a stage musical.

The Broadway production of "Hairspray" opened in 2002 to rave reviews. It was nominated for 12 Tony Awards in 2003, of which it won eight, including Best Musical. The show features an award-winning musical book by Mark O'Donnell and Thomas Meehan ("The Producers," "Annie"). The music is composed by Marc Shaiman with lyrics by both Shaiman and Scott Wittman.

"Hairspray" played on Broadway for nearly seven years, an extremely successful run for today's day-and-age where year-old shows are considered unique. The show made Broadway history as the first successful production starring a plus-size actress. There have been curvaceous lead actors in the past, but before "Hairspray," Broadway roles were not written with that body type in mind.

"I think Hairspray found a fun, exciting and beautiful way to tribute the human body in any shape, age, color or other dimension," said Carly Jibson, who played Tracy in both the national tour and on Broadway.

Since "Hairspray" started the trend, many roles have gone to heavier actors. Well-received shows by critics and audience members alike featuring such actors include "Spring Awakening," "Hair" and the upcoming Green Day musical, "American Idiot."

While striking on the sensitive issue of weight and female body image, "Hairspray" also deals with themes of racism. Terms that are outdated and considered racist in modern times are used within the show. Still, the musical is considered family friendly and suitable for anyone.

The annual "Broadway in Amherst" has brought multiple theatrical events to the Mullins Center, including "Rain," a Beatles cover band, as well as "Cirque Dreams: Illumination." Andrew Lloyd Webber's famed "Cats" will come to Amherst on April 19 and "Cabaret" will close the series on May 9.

"Hairspray" starts at 7:30 p.m. Adult tickets range from $43-$53; tickets for seniors and children 18 and under are $38-$48. Tickets can be purchased online or in person at the box office.

Alissa Membov can be reached at amembov@student.umass.edu.

Viewers given something to 'Listen to' at campus festival

By Lindsay Orlow
Collegian Correspondent

The latest installment from the 17th Annual Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival took place on Feb. 17 at the Flavin Auditorium in the Isenberg School of Management building.

The auditorium was sparsely decorated, with only one poster advertising the festival and a woman flipping through informational pages on an overhead projector. The seats were half-filled; the audience made up mostly of students clutching assignment papers with film buffs sprinkled throughout the seats. Though the event was advertised as a festival, the Multicultural Film Festival came across as more of a class, albeit an entertaining one, complete with a brief lecture and a screening of two rather academic documentaries: "Listen to Britain," directed by Humphrey Jennings, and "Of Time and the City," directed by Terence Davies.

The festival began with an introduction by Michael Walsh, a professor born in England and educated both in his home country and here in the United States. Hailing from the University of Hartford in West Hartford, Conn., Walsh has chaired cinema departments at various universities. He gave a detailed historical background of both "Listen to Britain" and "Of Time and the City," as well as the time period and setting of each documentary.

Walsh regarded the two films as pieces of art from different schools of thought: "Listen To Britain" comes from a school of social realism – looking at the world as it really was at the time of the film – whereas "Of Time and the City" is more of a memorial – a romantic film that looks at a world that's been lost to time.

In his introduction, Davies referred to "Listen to Britain" as England's "first great visual poem," and the documentary did indeed come across as cinematic poetry.

The film contained little-to-no dialogue, instead focusing on the sounds and sights one heard and saw in England during the time of the Blitz. The roar of a tractor in a field of wheat accompanied by the whine of fighter jets overhead; young people dancing in tight circles around a dance floor to popular jazz music, the music unable to take the stress from their faces. The black-and-white documentary described peoples' lives as a struggle to maintain a hold on the ordinary, while the unordinary intruded everyday in the form of tanks in the streets and sirens overhead.

"Of Time and the City" examined the Liverpool of Davies' youth as it declined in stature throughout the 20th century. In his introductory lecture, Walsh described Liverpool as a financially successful port city that made its fortune largely off the slave trade in the 19th century.

Walsh compared Liverpool's eventual decline to the decline of the American city of Detroit; both cities experienced economic depression when faced with deindustrialization.

In filming "Of Time and the City," Davies took a lot of inspiration from "Listen to Britain." Davies' film focused heavily on basic sights and sounds one would see around Liverpool during the decades after World War II. A key difference between the two films was Davies' narration of "Of Time and the City," he overlays the visual and auditory experience of Liverpool by telling the story of his own childhood and of the lives of other, archetypal Liverpudlians.

Growing up as a Catholic, homosexual man in a conservative neighborhood lent Davies a set of challenges that paired well with the images of a challenged city building after building with chipped paint and broken windows, empty playgrounds and shuttered storefronts. Davies' narration was interspersed with quotes by poets such as Percy Bysshe Shelley and James Joyce, lending the documentary an an both academic and artistic.

Both documentaries remained true to the theme of this year's Film Festival, "Cinematic Cities." Though the atmosphere was decidedly too academic to be considered festive, the event was an informative and moving look at some of England's history and urban scenery.

Lindsay Orlow can be reached at lorlow@student.umass.edu.

'Percy' lacks lightning

By Nora Drapanski
Collegian Staff

In the wake of the wildly successful film adaptations of the young adult series "Harry Potter," the big wigs in Hollywood have been dying to produce the next big hit series. Summit Entertainment got a taste of that success after their release of the "Twilight" films. Now, Fox is hoping to cash in with the debut of their new film, "Percy Jackson & the Olympians: The Lightning Thief."

"Percy Jackson" targets a young teenybopper audience, offering innocent love, short action sequences and a simple, quest-based plot. Throw in a cheesy, one-liner-saddled and supernatural powers, and "Percy Jackson" has all of the elements of a successful family film.

Unfortunately, this train does not seem bound for Hogwarts. In fact, this train does not seem bound for any form of success.

Partially due to its release date (Valentine's Day weekend), "Percy Jackson" is lacking the financial success of its competitors; its unoriginal plotline seems to blame. The typical story of the awkward teen-turned-hero who saves the world is so horribly overdone that audiences looking for something new and original could easily pass over "Percy Jackson."

Comprised of a mix of seasoned veterans and fresh-faced novices, the cast assists in adding depth to the film. Although certainly not new to the silver screen, Logan Lerman makes pulls in his first starring role as the titular Percy Jackson. Lerman certainly shines on the screen as a competent actor, pulling off his performance with seeming effortlessness.

Sean Bean and Pierce Brosnan unite once again 15 years after their work together in "GoldenEye." This time, however, 006 and 007 play two supporting roles as Zeus and Chiron, respectively. Joining them is Kevin McKidd as Poseidon, Catherine Keener ("Where the Wild Things Are"), as Percy's mother, Steve Coogan ("Night at the Museum") as Hades and Uma Thurman ("Kill Bill") as Medusa.

However, these experienced actors merely serve as plot devices, as Logan Lerman, Brandon T. Jackson and Alexandra Daddario steal the limelight. Jackson co-stars as Grover, the comedic sidekick and guardian of Percy Jackson. Daddario flexes her muscles as Annabeth, the love interest of our new hero. While neither actor exhibits stunning acts by any means, both Jackson and Daddario deliver solid performances given the script they were dealt.

"Percy" is likely to capture the attention of the same kids who fell for "Twilight." With it's exploration of the exotic world of classical mythology – a reemerging film topic sweeping America over the past few years ("Troy" and the upcoming remake of "Clash of the Titans") – the film seems to cash in on a current fad.

To Classicists, however, the film is both a source of salvation and condemnation. "Percy Jackson" encourages the study of Greek mythology in a society where the subject is not considered useful for practical application. At the same time, the film so-bastardizes the Classics that it takes a concerted effort to prevent a cringe from creeping over your face.

There are a few things the movie gets right: Zeus, Poseidon and Hades all sport beards; beings like Medusa, the Hydra and the Lotus Eaters did exist; and indeed, the gods were quite promiscuous.

From there, though, "Percy Jackson" is so entirely inaccurate that it seems a sin to suggest there is anything correct in the first place. On a shallow level, the film is entertaining and engaging. Barring Thurman's head rolling around on the ground and seeing McKidd back in armor (Poseidon never looked so good), there is little any adult would find humorous. Still, the two hours go by rather quickly. If you really want to know the story, read the book and skip the movie. After that, pick up a real book on classical mythology and see how the big kids do it.

Nora Drapanski can be reached at ndrapanski@student.umass.edu.

Logan Lerman stars as the titular hero in "Percy Jackson & the Olympians: The Lightning Thief." Although rife with solid performances, the film's derivative plot is unlikely to score with audiences.

Farrell misses contest with Saint Louis after hit at GW

Presence missed on defensive end of court as team struggles with SLU's offense

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts basketball team was forced to play without freshman guard Javorn Farrell in their 69-56 loss to Saint Louis Sunday evening.

Farrell was ejected early in the second half of the Minutemen's 66-60 defeat to George Washington last Wednesday for hitting a GW player.

According to NCAA rules, if a player is ejected from a game, they are automatically suspended for the next contest.

"He's one of our tough guys, we call him 'junkyard dog,' and not having him today was tough," senior guard Ricky Harris said.

"He's a big part of this team, but we had to play without him, but I wouldn't say he's the reason we lost the game, he would've given us about seven rebounds though."

Farrell, known primarily for his tough defensive play, has seen more time as of late, starting the past six games in a row before Sunday's game at the guard position, with the loss of point guard David Gibbs to a broken foot

On the defensive side of the ball, Farrell has guarded some of UMass' (10-17, 4-9 Atlantic 10) opponents' best offensive players, such as Charlotte's Shamari Spears and Xavier's Jordan Crawford.

In those games, Farrell scored a career-high 12 points against the Musketeers and had a career-high four steals against the 49ers, with both games resulting in losses for the Minutemen.

This season, he has played in 23 games, including 16 off the bench, averaging 4.2 points per game and 3.6 rebounds per game in 15.9 minutes, and was not even in the Mullins Center to watch his team take on the Billikens.

SLU (18-8, 9-3 A-10) grabbed 30 rebounds and had 14 second-chance points against the Minutemen, while guard Kyle Cassity had 16 points for the Billikens.

"I would say that hurt us a little bit," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said. "Not that the win or loss would've changed, but that was a game he would play well in because when they kind of play the wings tight, you have to be able to dribble the ball into the paint and be strong, and I think defensively, he would've helped us some, but is he worth 12, 13 points? I'm not sure."

In Farrell's place, Kellogg started freshman forward Sampson Carter against the Billikens. Carter finished with four points, six rebounds and two blocks in 24 minutes.

"I thought Sampson played pretty well at times," Kellogg said. "He still gets tired too fast, and I think when the game gets moving, he gets tired a little bit quickly and there are some mental mistakes that go into it."

Carter has played in 23 games this season, starting the first six games and averages 4.7 points and 3.3 rebounds in 15.4 minutes per game.

"I thought he did well, and he will continue to play more as the season goes on, and set the table for him for his career here, and I'm looking for him to continue to step up."

Kellogg wants both players to contribute defensively and to play more physically in order to help the Minutemen in games.

"He played a little tougher, had a couple loose rebounds and loose balls," Kellogg said. "He needs to play like Javorn plays, but be 6-foot-8 and do that."

Farrell should be available when the Minutemen head to Dayton on Saturday.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

UM loses second-consecutive game

BASKETBALL from page 1

The Billikens finished the game with 48.1 percent shooting from the field and 39.3 percent from 3-point range. However, Kellogg said it was their defense that was the deciding factor in his team's loss.

The Minutemen had their second lowest point total of the season and their first time scoring less than 60 points in all of February. UMass' worse offensive night was against the Bears, who at the time were ranked 25th in the nation.

"Coach [Rick] Majerus's teams have always played good defense," Kellogg said. "They chest you up and they play physical and you have to make a physical, tough play to get a basket."

UMass hoped to take advantage of what Majerus called, "the youngest team in the nation" when it went on a first-half run to cut the Billikens' double-digit lead to one point.

The Minutemen were up 13-11 with 13:07 left in the first half until SLU went on a 13-0 run with two 3-pointers from Ellis Cody. With 7:22 left in the half, freshman Terrell Vinson finally stopped St. Louis's run on a lay-up.

UMass eventually caught up to the Billikens in the last 5:30 with a 14-4 run to end the half down 30-29. The last time the Minutemen got that close was when they were down 42-41 just over five minutes into the second half.

"I don't want to say we got complacent, but we kind of let our foot off the petal a little bit, but we have got to start coming out in games more because we're not as talented as a lot of teams in this conference, so there's a lot of stuff that we have got to do differently," Harris said.

UMass now has a week off before heading to Ohio on Saturday to face Dayton, who just lost its fifth game of the A-10 schedule to Duquesne yesterday. Kellogg is hoping to use this long stretch to regroup the players and make sure his team, that started three freshmen against the Billikens, doesn't get burned out.

"I know that when you're playing a lot of freshmen and first-year guys a lot of minutes and the season is starting to drag on, that they start hitting a wall and I don't want these guys to hit a wall," Kellogg said. "I have got to make sure that we fight through any fatigue and also that they get enough rest."

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

Minutewomen learn from loss to No. 6 XU

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Staff

Every so often, fans, critics, coaches and players of a team deem wins and losses as 'learning experiences.' For the Massachusetts women's basketball team, the outcome of its game on Saturday was one of those experiences.

Xavier	74
UMass	41

UMass (10-16, 4-7 Atlantic 10) lost by its biggest deficit of the season on Saturday afternoon, falling to No 6 Xavier, 74-41, in Cincinnati, Ohio.

"We learned a lot of lessons [from the loss]," said Kim Benton about the positives the team took from the game. "We learned how aggressively we have to play and just how a No. 6-ranked team comes out and plays every game. We took a lot of lessons from it and for the next couple games, we learned just how we should play."

The Musketeers' talented frontcourt wowed the crowd of 2,727 at the Cintas Center, grabbing 46 rebounds to UMass' 30. Xavier (21-3, 11-0 A-10) dominated, scoring 28 points in the paint and never surrendered the lead after going up, 2-0, to open the scoring.

Preseason All-American Ta'Shia Phillips led the Musketeers to victory with 11 points and 10 rebounds. Phillips, the 6-foot-6 center was a John R. Wooden Award finalist last year and also the Atlantic-10 Player of the Year, and proved Saturday she is one of the best centers in the nation

"Our strategy was to not let her be as comfortable in what she does," said Jasmine Watson about the team's defense against Phillips. "She's a great post player and she's been a great post player for years. I've known her a long time but she has a lot of experience on me."

Watson, a freshman forward, had a tough match up against Phillips – who plays with the United States Olympic team – but also struggled on offense. Watson had four points and six rebounds, but was 2-of-15 from the floor.

Xavier's Amber Harris also caused problems for the Minutewomen. The redshirt junior scored 10 points, had nine rebounds and two blocks, and also played defense on UMass' biggest offensive weapon – Kristina Danella.

Danella had five points and four rebounds in 24 minutes against 6-foot-5 Harris. The sophomore has now been held to single-digits in scoring in UMass' last two games.

Junior Stephanie Lawrence led UMass with nine points and also had four rebounds in the contest. Lawrence was 2-of-4 from beyond the arc and provided a spark for the Minutewomen in the second half – even when the team was down by 30 points.

"We learned that being competitive keeps you in the game," said Watson. "I know we were down points-wise, but I think we played as a team for the most part. We played team defense even though we don't match up well with them, and we boxed out hard, but height kind of wins the battle sometimes."

Again, UMass fell victim to their opponent's second-chance opportunities. Xavier, like many teams this year, dominated the Minutewomen in that category, holding a 20-6 advantage in second-chance points.

"I think we gave a good effort defensively and we stuck to the game plan," said Benton after the game. "They're a great team, they started making shots and there was nothing really we could do for it."

Musketeers Tyeasha Moss and Katie Rutan were tied for the lead in scoring in the game with 12 points each. Moss was 4-of-9 in 3-point shooting, while Rutan went 4-of-8 from beyond the arc.

Neil Carroll can be reached at ncarroll@student.umass.edu

UMass strong on offense in win over Huskies on the road

W LACROSSE from page 8

Minutewomen's side, Pelletier answered right back with a score, as did junior Jackie Lyons.

"I thought we did a good job of recognizing their defense, and we reacted really well," Venechanos said.

Lapham produced two more goals before and after Terracciano's third goal. Lapham would notch her final score of the contest after two goals by UMass, off an unassisted effort.

From then on, the game showed a majority of Minutewomen dominance with little resistance from the Huskies. Leading by six goals in the final six minutes of play, UMass' offense wanted to provide some insurance to firmly put away its opponent.

The Minutewomen did just that, scoring the final four goals of the match. Of the final two goals, Terracciano had two scores both without assistance. Her final goal of the game with two minutes left was enough to seal the 18-8 victory.

"We moved the ball around a lot; it was a good win against a good UConn [team]," Venechanos said.

This was Venechanos' first game against her former assistant coach, Angela McMahon. While Venechanos was victorious in the classic student-versus-master battle, the UMass coach recognized McMahon's efforts.

"I think she does a great job [coaching her team]," Venechanos said.

Despite a crushing victory over the Huskies and a two-game winning streak, Venechanos is not letting her team get too far ahead of themselves.

"Bringing the ball on attack will make us more dangerous as a team," Venechanos said. "I think we're going to have to be a little sharper. We've got to work on bringing the ball up the field a little more safely; we go extremely hard. Playing against a team like BU on Wednesday, we have to be sharp."

UMass will resume play this Wednesday when it takes on Boston University at McGuirk Stadium.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu

Record-tying day at Garber

RECORD from page 8

attackman Kyle Smith and sophomore midfielder Biscardi.

The Minutemen also tied another record, as their six extra-man goals tied the mark set during the 1999 season against Fairfield and in the 2005 season against Johns Hopkins.

UMass was 6-of-9 in man-up opportunities, including a perfect 1-for-1 in the first quarter and 3-for-3 in the third quarter, while going 0-for-2 in the fourth quarter.

Both Smith and Biscardi scored two apiece on the man-up advantage, while freshman midfielder Will Manny added a goal and three assists for four points in the victory.

Ryan Liebel, Christian Hain and K.R. Jurgelevich each scored a goal for UMass.

The Minutemen lost 70 goals from Jim Connolly and Tim Balise last season, but with Hayes, Hantverk and a number of younger players stepping up for UMass, Cannella sees this team's offensive production as a good sign for things to come later on in the season.

"The goals we lost last year from Connolly, from Balise, those guys didn't have any assists," Cannella said. "I think the ball moves a little bit quicker now within the offense, the guys are really unselfish in their approach, so again, you need to be consistent."

Eight of the Minutemen's goals were scored by underclassmen, with a quarter of the goals coming from non-starters, as freshmen Jurgelevich and Smith's goals were the first of their careers.

"You hope that those guys can contribute as young players, and for the most part, it's all about confidence, as well as opportunity," Cannella said.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Offense strong early in season

M. LACROSSE from page 8

(Hayes, 3 goals; Smith, 3 goals; Kell, 2 goals; Smith, 2 goals).

Midfielder Franze also recorded a hat trick in the first half for Hartford, as Brease, Bowes and attacker Aidan Genik contributed goals to keep the Hawks within striking distance.

Cannella expressed displeasure with his team's lackluster defense during the opening 30 minutes.

"We played a little choppy," he said. "If it was tighter early, it was a different game. The guys clamped down in the second half, played better."

After the break, UMass rallied on the defensive end, hampering the Hawks by forcing 12 turnovers and converting on 8-of-9 clear attempts while holding them to three goals.

Cannella would like to see his team play that way for four quarters.

"Hopefully, we can play a little more consistent between the first whistle and the last whistle," he said.

Both teams play next on Saturday, when the Hawks host Delaware in their home opener and the Minutemen travel to Ohio State to take on the Buckeyes.

Dan Gigliotti can be reached at dgiglio@student.umass.edu.

Warriors earn weekend sweep

HOCKEY from page 8

Merrimack got things goings early, racking up a two-goal lead at the end of the opening period on two power-play goals. The first came on Cucci's fourth goal of the season, four minutes into the frame off of a loose puck to give the Warriors a lead that wasn't surmounted by the Minutemen.

Jeff Velleca delivered the second goal of the game, beating Dainton with a shot for his seventh score of the season.

Despite outshooting the Warriors 10-6 in the period, UMass was unable to get on the board against Cannata.

After play resumed in the second frame, Merrimack quickly stretched the lead to three goals off of Cucci's second score of the night.

Finally, with eight minutes remaining in the period, the Minutemen got into the books off their second 5-on-3 power play of the contest. After Matt Irwin sent a shot on goal that was wide off the mark, James Marcou gathered the rebound and lofted the puck into the net for his 10th goal of the season.

UMass, however, couldn't complete the comeback and close the gap in the third frame. Cannata swatted several Minutemen opportunities, recording 21 saves in the game.

Cucci took advantage of an opportunity to complete the hat trick with under seven minutes remaining in the contest when he buried a loose puck past Dainton.

UMass was outshot 27-22 by Merrimack in the game and went 1-for-5 on the power play, while the Warriors capitalized on 2-of-3 man advantage chances.

This weekend, Merrimack closed the gap between it and UMass in the Hockey East standings. With the pair of wins, the Warriors are now only one point behind the sixth-place Minutemen, having played two fewer games.

Also, the two wins give the Warriors the season-series, an important note if a tie-break situation presents itself heading into the Hockey East Tournament.

UMass has been near the top of the conference standings for much of the season, as well as being nationally ranked. That, however, is likely to change after this weekend's losses.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

Braun, Nolet, Ortiz, Watson, Meyers' careers honored on Sat.

SENIORS from page 8

Ortiz also had a knack for clutch goals, notching eight game-winning goals in his career, almost a quarter of his 33 career goals. The forward has two game-winning goals so far this season, one shy of the three he posted his junior season.

Brett Watson

Known more as a defensive forward, Watson has not been a point scorer for the Minutemen, but has still been a leader on and off the ice.

A captain for UMass the past two seasons, Watson has led the Minutemen through his work ethic and effort, something often highly praised by UMass coach Don Cahoon.

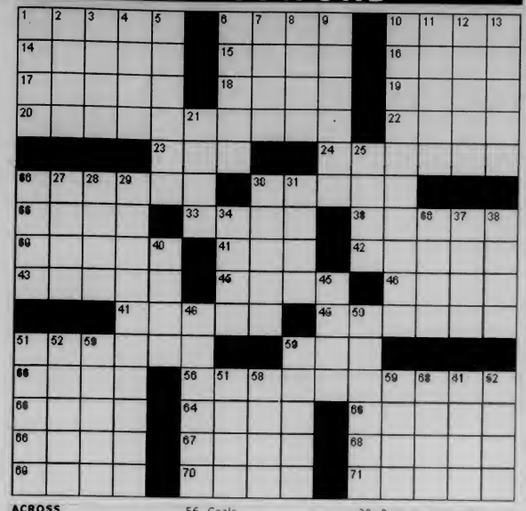
After notching a single goal in both his freshman and sophomore years, Watson has yet to score a goal since, but has been there with assists, notching five his junior season and four so far in his senior season.

Watson was named to the Hockey East All-Academic team in his first three seasons at UMass, and will likely earn the honor for the fourth time this season.

Dan Meyers

Despite never seeing time as a full-time starter – backing up the likes of John Quick and Paul Dainton – for UMass, Meyers has played a pivotal role in his four years with the Minutemen.

In his junior year, Meyers saw his most time, playing in 14 games with a 2.65 goals against average while posting a 4-6-2 record. In his senior season, Meyers has seen more time down the stretch, performing well and keeping the Minutemen in games.

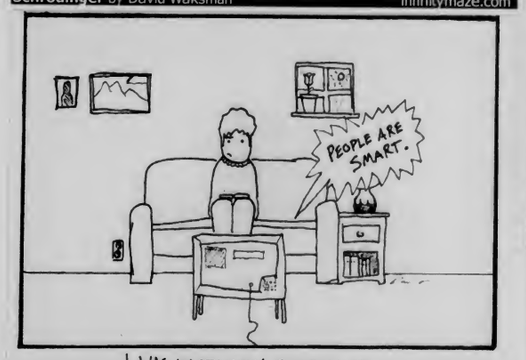


Since giving up seven goals to New Hampshire at the beginning of November, Meyers has given up nine goals in four games, lowering his goals against average from 4.42 to 3.41.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Mill Valley
E·S·T·A·T·E·S
Looking for a place to live next year?
Apply during our
OPEN HOUSE
$500 OFF Security
Choice of a $300 Visa Card* or "Wii & Wii Fit"*
PLUS
A Whole Foods Gift Card – Just for showing up!*
Saturday, February 27th 11AM-3PM
360 Riverglade Drive, Apt. D
More info at 413-253-7377
www.MillValleyApts.com
While supplies last, some restrictions apply.

COMICS



CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Floral leaf
6. Resorts
10. Anagram of "Diem"
14. Without companionship
15. Vagabond
16. Fictional captain
17. Raves
18. City in Norway
19. Thoughtfulness
20. Imprudent
22. Margarine
23. Grain
24. Headgear for a horse
26. Not weak
30. A valley in France
32. Place
33. Otherwise
35. An extended area of land
39. Angry
41. Utilize
42. A group of south Pacific islands
43. Small slender gulls
44. Without sensation
46. What you're called
47. Utilization
49. Capable of killing
51. Ran into
54. French for "Good"
55. A Semitic people
56. Goals
63. Ballot
64. Lion sound
65. Unable to react
66. Chieftain
67. Covet
68. A ballroom line dance
69. French for "Without"
70. Bargain
71. With the end toward the observer

DOWN
1. Indian dress
2. Panache
3. Small lake
4. Against
5. A unit of instruction
6. Not tall
7. Model
8. Possessing the necessary skills
9. Console
10. Narrow-minded
11. Distributed
12. Master of ceremonies
13. Engine
21. Coop
25. Not sciences
26. A long narrow opening
27. Rubber wheel
28. Back
29. Possesses superior numbers
30. Send out
31. Appear
34. Breathing organ
36. Nursemaid
37. Prolonged unconsciousness
38. East Asian unit of weight
40. Nature of being
45. An alliance of countries
48. Loved intensely
50. Lure
51. Rants
52. Fragrance
53. French for "Morning"
54. A colored transparent gem
57. Part of a skeleton
58. An Indonesian island
59. Knowing a secret
60. Peddle
61. Therefore
62. Comedian ___ Laurel

Schrodinger by David Waksman infinitymaze.com

I WAS INSTANTLY SUSPICIOUS

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Watch the "Lion King" one more time. Please recognize that both you and Pumba suffer from the same chronic disease.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Stop making fun of Humpty Dumpty, you jerk! Do you not recognize when someone is in a very fragile state?!

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Sooner or later people will respect the icon known only as Lamb Chop.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Schooling pre-teens in Madden does not excuse you from being a weekend "victory dancer."

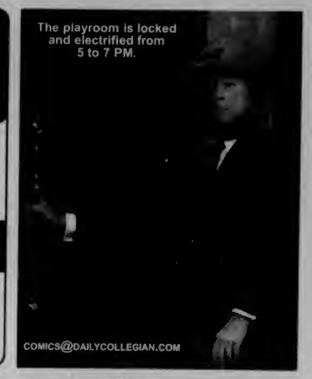
gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Spend more time on your homework and less time combining the essence of the Mona Lisa, Kanye West and Jif.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Now you have to explain to all the people on your floor what you do with the chapstick when you are NOT in the shower.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Save yourself two hours of agony and Google the name Andrew Laeddis in your spare time.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Soon you shall be inhaling sweet new ozone courtesy Coca-Cola and Hostess snackfoods.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Barack Obama has been rebuking in one of the many White House bathrooms. Get well soon cards are welcome at this time.



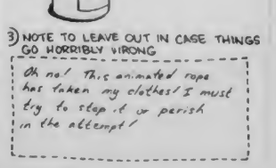
scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Michael Phelps recently said that despite his hazy lifestyle, he thinks everyone should go green.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Take a page out of Helena Bonham Carter's book and ride the coattails of your companion for the rest of your life.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
We all know that you are taking certain precautions for the iPad, like making sure your fingers are always oil-free!

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

UMass... Cape Cod?
Take online classes anywhere this Summer
Registration begins March 15
Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net
UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education



SUDOKU

2				5		7	9
5							3
		7				1	6
				1	6
			6	4			2
	8		3			5
			8	9
		1				2
4		6			3

CITY FOOTWEAR
Students and Staff of the five Colleges Eligible for 10% of with ID
nike New Era Clarks
34 Pleasant Street · Northampton
413.341.5581

PUFFTON VILLAGE
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT
Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further...CAMP MATAPONI, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (samm crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders and more! Top salaries plus room/board

EMPLOYMENT
& travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com

TUTORING SERVICES
Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats & GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 JBoid42@yahoo.com.

FOR RENT
Hobart Condos 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors, study in basement. Cable & Phone in all bedrooms & study. NOW SHOWING for June & September. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 413-253-7979

www.AmherstMARentals.com 413-549-1398

FOR RENT
Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

SERVICES
Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

ANNOUNCEMENTS
Montreal Party Weekends From $89 Complete. Montreal Express.Net MontrealBlowout.com 781-979-9001

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Offense preys on Hawks' 'D'

Hayes scores hat trick as five players score multiple goals

By Dan Gigliotti
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team's offense exploded, registering 13 first-half goals in a 20-10 victory over visiting team Hartford in its home opener on Saturday.

"The best part today is that we came ready to play right from the first whistle," said UMass coach Greg Cannella. "We'll take 20 goals any day."

UMass	20
Hartford	10

On a sunny day at Garber Field, the No. 17 Minutemen (2-0) ran out to an early 5-0 lead en route to a 13-7 halftime lead. Their first half surge of 13 goals, 20 total goals in the game – are their most since March 4, 2002 when they defeated Rutgers, 21-9.

An Anthony Biscardi steal two minutes into the first quarter led to the first goal of the game, an unassisted shot by midfielder Ryan Hantverk. One minute later, attacker Ryan Smith found the net in back-to-back attempts, 14 seconds apart, to give UMass a 3-0 lead with 11 minutes and 37 seconds remaining in the opening frame.

Following a Hartford timeout, the Minutemen pegged four shots on net until midfielder Bobby Hayes put one past the Hawk goalkeeper off of a skillful catch and a crosscage pass by Biscardi. Then, attacker Art Kell controlled a ground ball and landed an unassisted goal to give UMass a 5-0 lead 7:34 into the contest.

The scoring spurt was sudden, and allowed the Minutemen to play composed.

"You don't predict it," Cannella said. "Our guys [played] a little more relaxed. Fortunately, we kept scoring."

The Hawks came to life offensively with just under five minutes left, benefitting from a cross-checking penalty by the Minutemen's Will Jeffery. Their first point came with a man-up goal at 4:34 by Jared France by way of a Justin Bearse feed.

Bearse gave Hartford its second goal 42 seconds later, when midfielder Martin Bowes slung a pass behind net to attacker Ryan Compitello, who swiftly relayed it near-post to an awaiting Bearse for the finish.

UMass responded with three unanswered goals to close out the first quarter and take an 8-2 lead.

The scoring maintained a breakneck pace in the second quarter with both teams posting five goals. Five different Minutemen added goals in the period, including Hantverk who tallied a hat trick at 8:45 with a man-up.

Hantverk (4 goals, 2 assists) was one of five Minutemen who earned multiple goals on the afternoon

See M. LACROSSE on page 6

Senior Bobby Hayes looks to get open during a game last season at Garber Field. The midfielder had three goals in Saturday's win over Hartford, giving Hayes seven goals in two games, just five goals short of the 12 he scored last season.

UM scores 20, most since '02

By David Brusch
Collegian Staff

After his team scored 20 goals against Hartford on Saturday, Massachusetts men's lacrosse coach Greg Cannella admitted that he wasn't shocked, but still surprised at his team's offensive output.

"In our first couple of scrimmages, we scored five and we scored nine, so now you go 15 and 20," Cannella said. "I don't know if we were holding back in the scrimmages, or if I was screwing the guys up in the scrimmages, probably the latter for sure."

The Minutemen (2-0) scored 15 goals in their 2010 debut against Sacred Heart last Saturday, and followed up with a 20-goal effort against the Hawks (0-1) in their home opener at Garber Field.

It was the most goals scored by a UMass team since the 2002 season, as the first half alone saw both teams combine for 30 goals, including 13 from the Minutemen.

On May 4 of that year, the Minutemen defeated Rutgers, 21-9, as they scored 13 in the first half and the last time they reached the 20-goal mark.

"You don't predict it, you just go out and play the games. Fortunately we kept scoring, because we gave up 10," Cannella said.

Junior midfielder Ryan Hantverk, who scored four goals in 2009, scored a career-high four goals and had two assists for a career-high six points, while six different Minutemen recorded multi-goal games, and seven different players had at least three points.

Senior captains Bobby Hayes and Ryan Smith each recorded three each for the Minutemen, with Smith's being the first goal of his career, and Hayes added two assists for a career-high five points.

Hayes, who had 12 goals in 2009, leads the team with seven goals in just two games.

"He's a real leader for us on the extra man, he's been pretty successful there," Cannella said. "He's playing with some pretty athletic guys in Hantverk and [Anthony] Biscardi so you know, Bobby's been so consistent over his career here in his approach."

Sophomore attackman Art Kell added two goals, along with freshman

See RECORD on page 6

Senior Will Ortiz makes a pass in Saturday's 3-0 loss to Merrimack. The forward has recorded career highs in goals (13), assists (13) and points (26).

UMass loses 5th in a row, falls to 6th place

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

The crowd of nearly 4,000 that attended Saturday's game on senior night between the Massachusetts hockey team and Merrimack didn't have much to cheer for in the final game played at the Mullins Center this regular season.

After falling in the front-end of a home-and-home the previous night at Merrimack, the No. 18-ranked Minutemen (16-15-0, 11-13-0 Hockey East) couldn't break their losing streak, dropping their fifth-straight game.

On Saturday, UMass suffered its third shutout loss of the season as Merrimack (13-15-1, 10-11-1 HE/A) completed the weekend sweep, winning 3-0.

In the first period, the Minutemen controlled play, outshooting the Warriors 13-5 and holding a 13-8 edge in faceoffs. UMass, however, wasn't able to capitalize with a score, as the frame ended with both teams scoreless.

The Warriors swung the game around in the second period, scoring two goals while goaltender Joe Cannata continued to keep the Minutemen attack at bay. Ryan Flanigan netted the first goal of the contest, scoring nine minutes into the game for his third of the season.

Merrimack	3
UMass	0
Merrimack	4
UMass	1

Four minutes later, Merrimack tacked on a second goal as Brandon Brodhag beat UMass goaltender Dan Meyers, who received the start in place of Paul Dainton for senior night, to make the score 2-0.

In the final frame, UMass continued to search for a goal, outshooting the Warriors 12-6 for the period. Cannata, however, was unrelenting between the pipes, making 42 saves for the contest.

Merrimack added a third and final goal with three minutes, 52 seconds remaining as Stephane Da Costa recorded his 14th score of the season to put the game on ice.

Despite not scoring, UMass did manage to drastically outshoot the Warriors, 44-22, for the contest. The Minutemen, however, were 0-for-5 on the power play, while Merrimack went 1-for-5 on the man advantage.

In Friday night's game, UMass was done in by Joe Cucci's first career hat trick which lead Merrimack to a 4-1 victory at Lawler Arena.

Continuing strong play on their home ice, the Warriors improved to 11-2-0 in games in North Andover, Mass.

See HOCKEY on page 6

Terracciano scores five in victory over rival UConn

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team continued its winning ways this past Saturday with an 18-8 victory over rival Connecticut.

"I thought it was a great game against a great UConn [team]," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "I'm proud of the way we were executing our game. They came in with their game plan, and they have a lot of young players."

The Minutewomen (2-1) entered the home of the Huskies (0-1) with a plan to strike hard and execute their attack. Six minutes into the contest, freshman Lauren Terracciano did just that when she notched her first of five goals off an unassisted effort.

UMass	18
UConn	8

Five minutes later, sophomore Danielle Pelletier also produced an unassisted score to give UMass some insurance over a team it had not competed against since 2004.

"I just felt our attack was good at reading situations," Venechanos said. "We didn't know what UConn was going to do, so we prepared for anything."

While the Huskies clawed their way back into the contest with a goal by junior Jillian Cerar, her first of three, the Minutewomen responded back with another two goals halfway through the first period.

Terracciano and sophomore Nina Sarcona proved to be a dynamic pair during this stage of the game. Terracciano, after scoring her second goal to give UMass the 3-2 lead, handed off the ball to Sarcona, who scored a goal of her own.

Within the final 10 minutes of the half, it was a back-and-forth dance between the two rivalry schools.

An unassisted goal by Cerar was answered nearly four minutes later by senior Merritt Cosgrove, who scored off a free-position shot. In response to Cosgrove's goal, Cerar earned her final goal of the contest less than two minutes later off her own free-position shot.

While scores by Cerar kept the Minutewomen at bay during the later stages of the first half, UMass did not stop its search for momentum going into the half.

With two minutes left in the opening half, Terracciano provided another score for the Minutewomen, assisted by sophomore Dayna Delfiese. To add some insurance, sophomore Haley Smith provided a goal to give UMass a 7-3 lead going into the half.

In the first period of play, it was a battle of offensive production between Terracciano and Cerar, with both scoring a hat trick in the first half. In the second period of play, it was a different story, as Cerar's goal-scoring ways were replaced by sophomore M.E. Lapham, who scored four goals in the second half alone.

The majority of the second 30-minute period can be told in the first 15 seconds, as right off from the break, sophomore Riley Perry produced UMass' eighth goal of the game after a draw control won by Terracciano.

About three minutes later, sophomore Jesse O'Donnell, who had five goals in the 15-6 win over

Junior Jackie Lyons looks downfield in a contest last season at McGuirk Stadium.

Holy Cross, scored her first of three goals in the game. O'Donnell's goal was the fourth unanswered score by the Minutewomen.

Once again, there was a back-to-back swing between the two sides in a game that Venechanos called "close until the end."

UConn answered the dominant UMass play with two goals of its own, one by Lapham and another by redshirt junior Lauren Sparks. For the

See W. LACROSSE on page 6

Seniors honored in final game at Mullins

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

Saturday's 3-0 loss to Merrimack extended the Massachusetts hockey team's losing streak to a season-long five games, and may have put the Minutemen in jeopardy of missing the Hockey East Tournament.

Prior to the loss, however, No. 18 UMass (16-15-0, 11-13-0 Hockey East) stepped aside from its recent struggles to honor five seniors who were about to play in their final regular season game at the Mullins Center.

Justin Braun

A leader of UMass' defense, Braun played a pivotal role in his senior year, notching three goals and 19 assists as part of the first line of the defense. Braun, who was drafted by Pittsburgh during his freshman year and later traded to San Jose, contributed since his career started at UMass, notching at least 14 points each season.

Following up a four-goal and 10-assist campaign in his freshman year – earning him a spot on the Hockey East All-Rookie Team – Braun scored four goals again in his sophomore year with 16 assists and seven goals in his junior year.

Martin Nolet

Beside Braun on the first defensive line was another NHL draftee in Nolet. Selected by Los Angeles with the 144th pick in 2006, Nolet became the second Minuteman to be drafted by the Kings (Jon Quick).

Nolet was not as offensive minded as Braun, but still gave the Minutemen a consistent number of points, year in and year out. With three games remaining this season, Nolet already has seven points off a career-high four goals and three assists. In 2008-09, Nolet posted a career-high nine points on two goals and seven assists.

Will Ortiz

After a strong freshman campaign in which he scored 21 points on seven goals and 14 assists, Ortiz had a drop off in his assists total the following two years, before posting career highs in goals, assists and points in his senior year.

A skilled forward who has great puck-handling skills, Ortiz broke out this season with 13 goals and 13 assists so far.

See SENIORS on page 6

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

SNOW HIGH: 38 LOW: 34

www.DailyCollegian.com

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 2010

Investigating UMass' endowment

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This will be the first installment of a five-part series about the University of Massachusetts' finances and changes to the University's endowment and assets since the start of America's recession. In this series, the Collegian will investigate where UMass' funds come from, how they are managed, and how they are then invested in the five campuses of the University system.

The University of Massachusetts had the nation's 145th-largest endowment among colleges and universities at the end of fiscal year 2009, but despite that low ranking, the University's finances could be much worse.

Though the UMass Foundation, the body which manages the University system's assets, clocked in one spot behind the Medical College of Wisconsin and one notch ahead of the University of Mississippi in endowment resources at approximately $367 million, the Foundation actually ranked 53rd in overall losses in FY2009 in a survey of 842 schools conducted by the National Association of College and University Business Officers.

The University's 2009 investment performance was negative 15 percent, compared to a nationwide average of negative 18.7 percent. Over three years, the University saw returns of 0.3 percent, and over five years, that figure jumps to 4.7 percent, putting UMass' returns in the top quartile of all schools over those timetables.

The process is a technical one and involves many levels and individuals working in various departments throughout the campuses and the University system. At the start, though, UMass' fundraising process originates with the Giving Office and the UMass Amherst Foundation.

The Giving Office, in addition to fund raising directors in each college and department, reaches out to alumni, parents, corporations with interest in UMass' various programs, foundations which give grants to different academic fields and other friends of the University to seek donations, and works in a hands-on fashion to actively convince donors of the school's need for gifts.

Mike Leto is the vice chancellor for development and alumni relations and the executive director of the UMass Amherst Foundation. He explained that UMass Amherst's fundraising program is "comprehensive," meaning there are development offices in each of the colleges and schools of the University which work with friends to solicit donations, which in turn collaborate with the Giving Office to bring in donations.

Leto explained that there are two primary forms of gifts: gifts to current funds and endowment funds. Gifts to the current fund will be put to use within the immediate fiscal year for a variety of purposes such as financial need and construction, while endowment funds are established over the long term and are pooled into the UMass system Foundation and then back to the campus for which they are established.

"There's a central staff here that works in collaboration with the college-based fundraising offices," he explained. "Sources of our private gifts run the gamut from private corporations, foundations, non-alumni individuals, alumni, friends, parents, and even students and staff."

Leto explained that the Giving Office attempts to work with interested donors to specify a purpose for their gift.

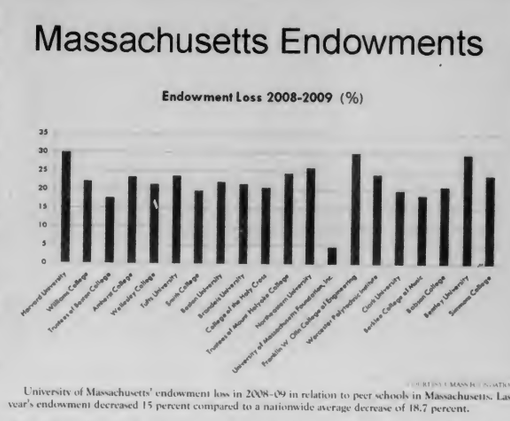
"We encourage all donors to designate their gift to the program that interests them most," Leto said. "Often times, alumni give back to their academic program, [while] corporations often fund the programs that support their basic industry," he furthered.

Leto added that once a gift is established and directed to a specific purpose, it is placed in an account for its stated department to use.

"Most money is restricted by the donor, so it is placed in gift accounts for each department," he said.

Many gifts presently coming to the University are for scholarships, Leto said, adding that there are also multiple types of scholarships which can be established.

"Quite a bit has been contributed for scholarships," he stated, "there are named scholarships versus general scholarships, where if a person gives a sum of money at a certain level they can have a named scholarship."



Tom Navin, director of annual giving, said the University is presently seeking to convince donors of the need for greater financial aid resources.

"One of the things we're really trying to focus on is student need," he said, "there's a lot of people who've seen their portfolios lose value over the last couple of years, but when we try to show them the struggles some current students are having paying tuition, it puts things in perspective for some donors."

Leto explained that financial aid is dispersed both by the financial aid office and through the Giving Office. The Giving Office contacts donors and hopes to make clear the need for more student aid, as students struggle to balance their finances, tuition and other expenses increase. The University generally has less funding to devote to student aid in a precarious economy.

"There are two sources of need-based aid," he said, "part would be through University's financial aid

See ENDOWMENT on page 2

University of Massachusetts' endowment loss in 2008-09 in relation to peer schools in Massachusetts. Last year's endowment decreased 15 percent compared to a nationwide average decrease of 18.7 percent.

Town proposes hike in drinking-related fines

By Nick Bush
Collegian Staff

The Town of Amherst Select Board voted unanimously last night to recommend raising fines for drinking-related bylaws to the state maximum of $300 at the annual Town Meeting this spring.

The item was raised in response to a recommendation by the Campus and Community Coalition to Reduce High-Risk Drinking (CCC). The CCC suggested raising fines in an open letter to the Select Board last week, which stated that "raising fines for violations of the Keg Licensing Bylaw, Open Container Bylaw, Nuisance House Bylaw and Noise Bylaw to the state-allowed maximum of $300 for each offense will offer a stronger deterrent" towards dangerous drinking.

The letter went on to note that many of the current fine levels were instituted in the 1980s, when $50- or $100-fines had a larger relative value than today thanks to inflation.

"Meaningful fines offer law enforcement an additional strategy for addressing problem behaviors without causing the recipient to have a criminal record," said the letter.

Speaking at the meeting was resident John Coull, a former member of the CCC and father of Select Board Chair Stephanie O'Keeffe, who seconded the notion that stricter fines were necessary to curb high-risk drinking habits in Amherst.

While many in the town's student community have long questioned the fairness of the bylaws and the selective manner in which they are often applied, no students showed up at the Select Board meeting Monday night to protest, or support, raising the fines.

Amherst resident David Abrami was the lone voice of public dissent at the meeting, noting the one-sided nature of the bylaws, and the often-unheralded toll they have on the student population of the town.

"I challenge the Select Board to engage in more relevant discussions about the bylaws," said Abrami, after the meeting. "Young people are unaware of their rights and bullied by the police, who are enforcing bylaws that I think no one in our community truly understands."

"I think a lot of it can be worked out at the Town Meeting deliberations," said Coull, speaking after the meeting. He noted that "the increases are mathematically sound," as long as they are used in a lawful manner. "I like the idea that fines can eliminate the need for arrest ... Students should not have to carry a criminal record [for these issues]."

A number of members of the Select Board suggested that the issue would be debated more thoroughly at the Town Meeting, which begins May 3.

"We need to know we are asking the right questions at Town Meeting," said Select Board member Alisa Brewer.

"Hopefully, we can have a representative from the Amherst Police Department answering questions for the next time there is a vote," said Select Board member Gerald Weiss, so that voters can better understand "what possible [factors can result in] an arrest, and the factors that lead to this."

Nick Bush can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu.

The Town of Amherst Select Board voted last night to recommend raising fines for drinking-related bylaws to the state maximum of $300 at this spring's annual Town Meeting.

UMass-Lowell sophomore, 19, to run for state representative

By Chris Shores
Collegian Staff

Many college students are involved in campus politics, but University of Massachusetts-Lowell sophomore Jonathan Loya is shooting for Beacon Hill.

The 19-year-old from Holliston, Mass. has announced his decision to run for Massachusetts State Representative of the Middlesex Eighth District. Loya is a political science major at UMass-Lowell and a member of the Libertarian State Committee. He feels he can make an impact as a member of the state legislature.

"I could bring a new infusion of ideas and a new jumpstart of youth to Beacon Hill," he said. "I can help bring a new face to politics within a state."

Loya is in the process of completing his nomination papers and obtaining signatures. He hopes to be officially on the ballot within a month, facing off on Nov. 2 against Carolyn Dykema. The incumbent and fellow resident of Holliston is twice Loya's age.

Loya said he does not believe his age to be a factor against him. He mentioned names such as Facebook founder and CEO Mark Zuckerberg and Mozilla Firefox founder Blake Ross as examples of successful individuals who made a large impact at a young age.

"It's not actually youth that inhibits success," said Loya. "It's the policies that people put forth and enact that determine if they sink or swim in the world of politics."

Loya believes that as an independent candidate, he can bring a new thought process to a two-party-driven Beacon Hill.

"Right now we have two major parties in Beacon Hill, but nothing really productive has come of having the two-party system," he said. "Running as independent and as a conservative candidate, I feel I can bring a more fiscally responsible candidate to Beacon Hill that can help change our state's budget shortfall."

Loya's plan for reviving the state budget does not involve an increase in taxes. It instead centers around a study released by the Beacon Hill Institute of Suffolk University. The study introduces the concept of TEL, a tax and expenditure limit. Loya said that according to the study, had Massachusetts chosen to adopt TEL in 1999, the state would have an additional $2.5 billion dollars in its budget.

In addition, Loya would push for the creation of private-sector jobs and small businesses because "that's where most of our business and revenue comes in from."

Two other issues shape Loya's campaign. One deals with a revision to education curriculums taught in public schools. A graduate of Holliston public schools, Loya feels that there is too strong an emphasis on test-prep classes.

"Most studies show that students who participate in fine arts actually stat-wise do better on test scores, such as the MCAS or SAT," he said. "If I went down to Holliston High School right now, there's maybe one or two music study courses being offered or a couple of drawing classes. But over a course of a year, [there are] maybe 12 to 15 essay writing classes being taught."

Loya said that he felt these classes were still important to keep in the curriculum, but that they should be balanced with other classes in all subject areas.

"Classes should spend time on different categories that help for the test," he said. "But they shouldn't spend a majority of the entire class or a semester studying to prepare for some sort of test. That's not what a well-rounded education is."

Loya's final issue pertained to the need to maintain clean water in Holliston.

"Back in 2005, there were two incidents of E. coli getting into the well water supply," said Loya. "A recent report came out on Feb 12 by the Chairman of the Board of Water Commissions which said that out of six wells in Holliston, five have significant problems."

Jonathan Loya is running this November for state representative.

"If I did get elected, I would propose to make sure that every well that still has issues has some sort of filtration system or some sort of oxidation system," he said.

Loya offered another solution that involved a "more cost effective" process called sequestration. At the well head or pump intake, chemicals are added to the water before it is exposed to the air. This would get rid of manganese and iron, said Loya.

The candidate transferred to UMass-Lowell for his sophomore year, and commutes there every weekday. Last year, Loya attended Assumption College in Worcester, but said it was not the right fit for him to pursue his interests in political science and music.

Loya has been playing a variety of musical instruments for over 10 years, which include saxophone, tenor sax, clarinet, guitar and piano.

If elected, Loya would continue commuting to UMass-Lowell. He said that the school's online courses and flexible schedule would allow him to have entire days of the week free from classes.

On his website, the candidate said he plans to attend law school after getting his bachelor's degree.

Chris Shores can be reached at cshores@student.umass.edu.

ARTS & LIVING

"This Addiction" is worth it

The Alkaline Trio is releasing its seventh album today, titled "This Addiction", which has a similar sound to many of the group's older pieces.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Ducasse gears up for Combine

UMass football player Vladimir Ducasse hopes that by getting drafted in the NFL, he will be able to help his native Haiti recover from the devastating earthquake.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Scott Harris believes that the Republican Party is opposing bills solely for the sake of opposing rather than for the betterment of the country.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Check out the latest "Weekend at the Movies" podcast from Pete Rizzo and Shayna Murphy.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 24

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Shayna Murphy
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Prowse
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Comics Domonic Mei
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jay Aseer
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Spurr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Senior Producer Sara Cody
Senior Producer Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semesters. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Rocheleau
COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Whitton
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shaina Jackson

'Comfortably Numb'

MATTHEW HARRISON / COLLEGIAN

The Pink Floyd Experience playing at the Calvin Theater in Northampton on Sunday night. A full slideshow is on our website.

WANNA HOOK-UP?
FREE High Speed Internet and Expanded Cable
...ed 4 bedroom apartment homes
RESERVE YOUR APARTMENT TODAY!!!
SUGARLOAF ESTATES APARTMENT HOMES
28 River Road Sunderland
866-301-1445
www.sugarloafestates.com
ASPEN CHASE & ALPINE COMMONS
133 Belchertown Road Rt 9 Amherst
866-301-1445
www.aspenchaseapartments.com
www.alpinecommons.com
Heat, Water, Hot Water, Cable, Internet
Electricity in Select Units
FLEXIBLE LEASE TERMS
$$ MENTION THIS AD AND SAVE ON YOUR MOVE IN COSTS $$

UMass ranks high in patenting

University raised $36M in licenses during 2009

By Tim Jones
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts was recently ranked 13th for total licensing income among institutions, according to a report by the Chronicle of Higher Education.

The data, entitled "Licensing Revenue and Patent Activity, 2008 Fiscal Year," lists the top universities with patent and license revefiue, as well the total research revenue spent to date.

According to the data, UMass has raised nearly $36 million in licenses and grants for the fiscal year.

The University has had two start-up companies formed, 35 licenses executed, has 266 total active licenses, 66 new patent applications, 25 U.S. Patents issued, and has spent $435.2 million total on research.

Northwestern University rests at the top of the list, having generated $824.4 million in total licensing income.

One such company that was formed, Anellotech Inc., which was co-founded by UMass Professor George Huber, is manufacturing a liquid known as "Green Gasoline," a chemical equivalent of gasoline, though it is cheaper and cleaner.

Anellotech Inc. was founded in November 2009, and current plans are to open a demonstration plant within two years that would employ 25 people. A commercial plant is in the works as well, and could possibly open within five years.

Huber said he did not initially have intentions of opening a company, but outside sources convinced him to otherwise.

"CVIP [The Office of Commercial Ventures and Intellectual Properties] was actually the people who wanted the company to be started," he said.

The company does not actually have any licensing income yet. Several years will pass before it will be able to generate a revenue stream, and once it does, it will have to give some of the revenue to the University.

CVIP, which was established for all five UMass campuses in September of 1995, attempts to commercialize the research that the University system performs.

According to their homepage, CVIP evaluates, protects and commercializes research that could have a possible value and supports starting companies through licensing and commercial firms.

The website states that "CVIP's other responsibilities include … proactively marketing UMass technology and negotiating the 'best deal' via University agreements."

CVIP also is responsible for "working with the Research Liaison & Development in creating relationships with the industry."

All new inventions under UMass research can be protected with an invention disclosure. When one is filed with CVIP, funding and research can be protected and possibly commercialized. An evaluation for an invention disclosure can take between three weeks and three months, and if it passes, a patent can take up to and over five years for the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office to issue or deny a patent.

Huber added that UMass research has great potential, and that when discovered, should be used to the fullest.

"Mike Malone, who was Dean of the College of Engineering at the time, told me that [when] we discover something new at UMass, we have a societal responsibility to try and get it commercialized," he said.

Tim Jones can be reached at timothyj@student.umass.edu.

Donors work with UM officials to determine best use for gifts

ENDOWMENT from page 1

office through institutional funds, and part would be privately funded scholarships, basically where we identify that we need more need-based scholarships and we seek out individuals that might have an interest in that and reach out to them."

Janet Muzzy, director of stewardship, is tasked with coordinating with friends of the University where gifts will go and in what amount.

"Usually people just say, 'I want to create a scholarship,'" she said of the typical donor.

"It's my job to figure out what are they talking about," she elaborated, "are they talking about a one-time award, are they talking about an endowment, maybe a scholarship that's going to follow a student for two years and that's it. Then I get an idea what they're thinking."

From there, Muzzy works with the donor to solidify the agreement and establish a tangible purpose for the gift.

"The next thing I try to figure out is, what is the purpose of the fund. If it's for any of the academic areas, I'm going to connect the donor with the fundraiser from that department or college. I just try to get people to think about the fund level and the fund purpose," she said.

While a majority of donations come to the individual campuses of the University system and go into their current fund to be used immediately, large gifts, typically those over $27,500, are what are known as endowments. Endowments are permanent funds given for a stated purpose which are invested in the University Foundation in a pooled account, overseen by an investment committee composed of 20 highly-skilled financial experts elected annually by the Foundation's board of directors, who are either alumni of the University system or friends of the University.

Endowments have a set distribution rate, or amount which is to stay invested and amount to be handed over to the University campus for which they are established yearly, typically 4 to 6 percent.

The next piece in this series will examine how the University Foundation operates and manages the school's financial resources, how the endowment has fluctuated in the recession of the past two years, and how funds are distributed from the Foundation to the individual campuses of the UMass system.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com.

HPV Fact #10:

The treatment for genital warts can be a painful process and can involve cutting, freezing, or burning the warts.

HPV Fact #17:

Even after treatment, genital warts can come back. In fact, 25% of cases come back within 3 months.

Why risk it
Visit your campus health center.

MERCK
Copyright © 2010 Merck & Co., Inc. All rights reserved. Printed in USA
hpv.com
2105004(41)-01/10-GRD

– Community Clips –

Campus Visit Day: Full-Time MBA Program

Learn more about our highly ranked MBA Program at the Isenberg School of Management.
Tue Feb. 23, 8:30 a.m. Isenberg School of Management 305

The Institute of Black Invention and Technology, Inc.

Come view over 100 exhibits and learn about African American inventors who contributed to science and technology.
Tue Feb. 23, 10:00 a.m. Campus Center Auditorium

Lecture: "Comparing Media Systems: Beyond the Western World"

Daniel Hallin, chair and professor of Communication at University of California, San Diego, will discuss his cross-national research on media systems.
Tue Feb. 23, 4:00 p.m. Campus Center 803

Opening Reception for "Home"

The Student Union Art Gallery is hosting a reception for the open-call show "Home."
Tue Feb. 23, 4:00 p.m. Student Union Art Gallery

Lecture by Jane D'Arista: "The Monetary Threat to the Global Economy"

Jane D'Arista, one of the country's foremost thinkers about economics and finance, presents "The Monetary Threat to the Global Economy."
Tue Feb. 23, 4:00 p.m. Gordon Hall Third Floor Conference Room

Intro to Grant Writing for Grad Students I: The Basics

The A-to-Z about external funding for your research.
Tue Feb. 23, 5:00 p.m. Campus Center 101

UMass Amherst Alumni Event: Network Your Way to Success

Learn how to search the web to learn what the career landscape looks like, how to maximize internet searches to find actual jobs and internships, and more.
Tue Feb. 23, 5:30 p.m. Memorial Hall

Lecture: David Horowitz

David Horowitz is a nationally known author and lifelong civil rights activist.
Tue Feb. 23, 6:00 p.m. Student Union Cape Cod Lounge

Renting 101: Your First Apartment

An interactive, information packed, workshop for students intending to leave the residence halls to rent off campus for the fall 2010.
Tue Feb. 23, 7:00 p.m. Franklin Dining Commons Campus Side Dining room

Lecture: George Saunders

Commonwealth Honors College presents the Honors Seminar Series Author George Saunders.
Tue Feb. 23, 7:00 p.m. Student Union Ballroom

L.A. Theatre Works & Producing Director Susan Albert Loewenberg Present "The RFK Project"

"The RFK Project" chronicles Robert Kennedy's dramatic transformation from discomfort with and indifference towards the Civil Rights movement to a champion and crusader. It offers a compelling and dramatic illumination of a crucial decade, enabling a new generation to hear the words, feel the tension, and explore the issues that still resonate today.
Tue Feb. 23, 7:30 p.m. Fine Arts Center Concert Hall

29th Annual Jazz Showcase

Led by producer/director Jeffrey W. Holmes, this jazz showcase entitled "Spotlight on the Sax" features tributes to Sidney Bechet, Charlie Parker, John Coltrane, and more.
Tue Feb. 23, 8:00 p.m. Bowker Auditorium

Lecture: Health and the Public Sphere: The Politicization of Health Reporting, 1960s-2000s

Daniel Hallin, chair and professor of Communication at the University of California, San Diego, discusses his current research on the politics of health reporting.
Wed Feb. 24, 12:00 p.m. Campus Center 803

Weekly UMass Sports Luncheon

This week's buffet luncheon features men's basketball coach Derek Kellogg, women's basketball coach Marnie Dacko, and football coach Kevin Morris with film of our new football recruits.
Wed Feb. 24, 12:15 p.m. Campus Center Room 1009 (Amherst Room)

UMass Alumni Art Stars Speaker Series

The new UMass Alumni Art Stars Speaker Series presented by the Arts Extension Service in partnership with the UMass Art Department, kicks off with a lecture by Larry Bamburg and continues with a lecture by Joomi Chung.
Wed Feb. 24, 4:30 p.m. Studio Arts Building

SPHHS Boston Area Alumni Reception

Reception for School of Public Health and Health Sciences Boston area Public Health alumni. Come meet our Dean, C. Marjorie Aelion and Associate Dean, Dan Gerber.
Wed Feb. 24, 5:30 p.m. The Boston Foundation

Where's Love 101: Creating and Sustaining Healthy Relationships

The Women of Color Leadership Network, Everywoman's Center, the Stonewall Center, Student Legal Services Office and the Graduate Women's Network present the 4th annual "Where's Love 101?"
Wed Feb. 24, 7:00 p.m. Campus Center 917

A Tribute to Dr. Horace C. Boyer

Join us as we remember a UMass treasure with guest speaker Professor John Bracey of the Afro-American Studies Department.
Wed Feb. 24, 7:00 p.m. Student Union Cape Cod Lounge

Mass. Multicultural Film Festival: Lights from Afar

A film screening as part of the 17th annual Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival: "Cinematic Cities."
Wed Feb. 24, 7:30 p.m. Isenberg School of Management 137

University Without Walls Information Session

The UMass Amherst University Without Walls is a bachelor's degree completion program in which students design their own degree using background and interests that reflect their creative and interdisciplinary connections.
Thu Feb. 25, 5:30 a.m. Mass Venture Center Room 229A

16th Annual Du Bois Lecture

The UMass Amherst Libraries hosts the 16th Annual Du Bois Lecture, by Evelyn Brooks Higginbotham, the Victor S. Thomas Professor of History and of African and African American Studies at Harvard University.
Thu Feb. 25, 7:00 p.m. Student Union Cape Cod Lounge

The University Programming Council Presents Sister Souljah

A lecture by Sister Souljah, followed by a question-and-answer session and book signing.
Thu Feb. 25, 7:00 p.m. Student Union Ballroom

Panel Discussion: Sustainability in the Community

A discussion topic with important figures in the area: regional planning and grassroots efforts that are making a difference within the community.
Thu Feb. 25, 7:00 p.m. Fine Arts Center - University Gallery

Magic Triangle Jazz Series: William Parker, Hamid Drake and Conny Bauer

William Parker (bass) and Hamid Drake (drums) invite German trombone virtuoso Conny Bauer to perform this world-premiere.
Thu Feb. 25, 8:00 p.m. Bezanson Recital Hall

Lecture: "From Quabbin to Start-up: Q Microbe to Qterus"

Dr. Susan B. Leschine of the UMass Department of Microbiology will be the guest speaker at the seminar on Organizations, Institutions and Change.
Fri Feb. 26, 11:00 a.m. Isenberg School of Management 112

Renting 101:
How to Rent Your First Apartment
Getting ready to rent an apartment off campus?
* Learn how to "get it right" this important first time.
* Learn how to make good decisions as you take the "next step" in your college life.
* Learn the mistakes you want to avoid making.
* Know your responsibilities. Know your rights!
Come to a crash course in renting!
Tuesday evening, February 23, 2010
7:00 to 8:00pm
Franklin Dining Hall, Private Dining Room
RENTING 101
Come to a crash course in renting!
* DOOR PRIZES
* HELPFUL CHECKLISTS
* EXPERT ADVICE FROM STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE SENIOR STAFF ATTORNEY BERNADETTE STARK www.umoch.org
UMassAmherst
Presented by: Student Legal Services Offices in collaboration with Off Campus Housing Referrals and the Housing Assignment Office

ACTIVIST, LECTURER, AUTHOR and COLUMNIST
THE DANGERS OF POLITICAL CORRECTNESS

DAVID HOROWITZ
Discusses the dangers of Political Correctness
Tonight, Tuesday 2/23/10
Cape Cod Lounge (Student Union Bldg.)
Doors open at 6:30pm
SPONSORED BY THE UMRC, EVENT IS FREE. No large signs, food, fruit, or disruptions of any kind. Shoes must be worn at all times. There will be Q&A

Wednesday, February 24
All DCs · 5–9 pm
Frost Your Own CUPCAKE!

BERKSHIRE DC:
Meet Dede Wilson, TV personality, local author, & Pastry Chef Extraordinaire
UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Suicide pilot makes sense

"Take my pound of flesh and sleep well." These were some of the closing words of the online manifesto left by one Andrew Joseph Stack III before he flew a small private plane into an Internal Revenue Service field office in Austin, Texas on Thursday.

Dave Coffey

Stack, as well as one unidentified worker in the office building, died in the crash.

Let me first begin by stating that by no stretch of the imagination do I condone the destruction of a single innocent life, whatever the justification for it may be. Human life in and of itself is arguably our most precious and priceless resource, and its loss is never something to be celebrated. I should hope that everyone's condolences and thoughts go out to the family and friends of both Stack and all those in the office-building he attacked.

That being said, however, when I first saw this story break, it caught my attention, to say the least. It is not every day that someone becomes so frustrated with the system they are a part of that they not only take their own life, but they do so by piloting a fixed-wing aircraft directly into an office building that largely symbolizes that system.

Perhaps more interesting is the message Stack left behind on his webpage just before he committed the act, which is part suicide note, part manifesto.

Anyone who has read it, and all should, will most likely agree that at the very least the piece is extremely articulate and well written, especially considering the fact that it was authored by someone about to do something as crazy as purposefully slam a plane into a large, populated building.

Here I was, reading the manifesto of someone who was now essentially an independent domestic terrorist, and by the end I was practically sympathizing with him.

The note left by Stack is basically an essay criticizing the "American nightmare" perpetuated by what he calls the "handful of thugs and plunderers" that make up our government.

Throughout his manifesto, he recounts several examples of how he apparently worked hard going through school and working as a software engineer, but on many occasions was forced to lose his income, savings and retirement money because what he thought was an incredibly unfair "atrocity" of a tax system. In particular, he mentions IRS section 1706.

While reading the note, I began to feel pretty conflicted. Here I was, reading the manifesto of someone who was now essentially an independent domestic terrorist, and by the end I was practically sympathizing with him. Once again, I will forcefully assert that I don't embrace or acknowledge the taking of innocent life as a solution to anything, even if it's someone taking his own life.

However, the note is at the very least compelling, if not revelatory. This was someone who diligently stayed in school, obtained an engineering degree and worked hard his entire adult life, only to see the fruits of his labor continuously slip through his fingers.

He describes in depth his experiences living through various negative economic trends such as the "[Los Angeles] depression of the early 1990s," the "COM bust and the 911 nightmare [sic]," saying that, "as usual [the government] left me to rot and die while they bailed out their rich, incompetent cronies WITH MY MONEY [sic]."

Ever since the story broke, both sides of the proverbial political aisle have been pointing fingers as to which side is to blame for the cause and inspiration for Stack's actions. Frankly, I'm not a political genius, so I'm not going to pretend I can and enter the partisan finger pointing game. Rather, my reaction is fairly simple: these circumstances seem to point to the fact that something is very wrong here.

Once again, I say this not from a conservative or liberal or even moderate point of view, but a completely apolitical context. Here, we have a case where an allegedly hard-working, educated individual who feels he, as well as numerous others he has encountered and mentioned in the note, has been robbed of a significant portion of his earned income and livelihood.

While enduring this, however, he did not just sit there and complain – he reached out to officials and individuals who he felt could reverse a system that he felt was screwing over countless Americans.

But, as he writes, it was to no avail: "I spent close to $5,000 of my 'pocket change,' and at least 1,000 hours of my time writing, printing, and mailing to any senator, congressman, governor, or slug that might listen; none did, and they universally treated me as if I was wasting their time."

Here, we have a demonstrably articulate, intelligent, diligent and sane person who was considerably wronged by a system that he continuously and unsuccessfully appealed.

This same individual was evidently convinced that, "violence not only is the answer, it is the only answer."

What I gather from this story is that we reside within a system that teaches educated, strong-willed and hardworking citizens that, "adding my body to the count," is the only way to invoke proper and necessary change.

I will repeat that acts of destruction and loss of life, no matter how small, are nothing less than tragic. But by proxy, a system that encourages those sorts of tragedies from its citizens is a tainted one.

And sure, you could argue that maybe Stack was inappropriately blaming the system for his anger and frustration. Maybe a crazy person just happened to sound sane and reasonable in his suicide manifesto. Or maybe there is something very, very wrong here.

Dave Coffey is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dscoffey@student.umass.edu.

Republicans need to be active

Scott Harris

Lately, people have been laying into the "Party of No" narrative that Democrats have been trying to paint Republicans with because of their unprecedented use of the filibuster and other delaying tactics to prevent Obama administration initiatives from passing Congress. Some have even said that it is basically OK if Congress does nothing because government should be doing nothing. Thus, we should not be criticizing Republicans for blocking everything Democrats propose, rather, we should be celebrating their contributions to effective government and saving the world's puppies.

There is no deficit of crises in America today. From climate to health care to our financial sector, it seems like we need massive changes to take effect right now in order to save us from a very bleak future. I would love for the private sector to handle all of these challenges in a full and fair way. I would love for ordinary citizens to band together and solve these problems in a full and fair way.

Unfortunately, as evidenced by the fact that these problems are only getting worse, that seems not to be the case. This is not to say that the private sector or individual citizens have failed, but it is to say that we do not traditionally view their role in our society as one that can accomplish what we are after. On a basic level, I suppose I should not expect insurance companies to offer their product to everyone at a reasonable level because, in the end, they are a corporation in pursuit of a profit to benefit their shareholders.

The role of government is to take that viewpoint and do what is necessary to reach a desired social outcome within the framework of our system. Our society wants every person to have health insurance, for a variety of reasons. The private sector can offer insurance, but sometimes at too high of a price and with certain discriminations against risky persons. Most individual citizens have health insurance, but there are too many who do not and still need emergency care, while some use health care services too often – both of which help drive up the cost of insurance for everyone.

Democrats have proposed a modest package of reforms, through excise taxes on high-cost health plans and banning discrimination against age or prior medical history in an attempt to create an environment where that desired social outcome is obtainable with the least infringement on the private market. That is efficient government. And it is how the American people want their government to operate.

The role of government is to take that viewpoint and do what is necessary to reach a desired social outcome within the framework of our system.

I could draw similar examples for the other crises afflicting our nation, but the primary point to take away here is that there are many problems that we have to deal with now instead of waiting for the private sector or individual citizens to figure it out. A responsible and effective government should address them. If we do nothing, health care will continue to bankrupt our country, climate change will continue to ravage our world and we will, years from now, wonder why we wasted our time with dangerously naïve utopian claptraps. "Keep your hands off of it!" may be trendy, but there is a reason why the American people have not elevated Ron Paul to the Oval Office.

But the "Party of No" mantra that today's Republican Party has earned has not been one done so through steadfast devotion to principle and ideology. The current Democratic health care proposal, released by President Obama, includes virtually every concession that Republicans demanded that they make.

There is no public option, tort reform is included as are state-based exchanges, subsidies for lower-middle income families would be increased, and so on. Yet the Grand Old Party still plans to vote in lock-step against it.

The jobs bill that may be passed soon dropped controversial tax provisions and included proposals by Sens. Kyl (R-Ariz.), Gregg (R-N.H.) and Hatch (R-Utah). Yet, the GOP still plans to vote in lock-step against it.

Perhaps the best example would be from a few months ago when Democrats sought to extend unemployment insurance and the GOP forced seven different cloture votes – which took up more than three days of the Senate's time – but then voted for the bill unanimously 97-0. This is not about principle; this is opposition for opposition's sake.

Republicans have decided that preventing major progressive initiatives from making their way to the President's desk is the best political strategy for regaining Congress in the 2010 midterm elections. Anyone that tells you otherwise is lying.

The private sector and individuals do indeed bare responsibility for making this nation better. That is the way that our system is set up, and it is the best configuration mankind has come up with so far. But when they are not meeting those objectives, a good government steps in to ensure that the conditions are there to promote success. A crippled, passive government does nothing. A crippled, passive nation does nothing.

Scott Harris is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at smharris@student.umass.edu.

Five reasons why the United States is better in the Olympics than Canada is:

1) We have a snowboarder who is nicknamed "the flying tomato"

2) Lindsey Vonn is as good looking as Derek Zoolander.

3) We beat them in the one sport that they actually take pride in

4) Evan Lysacek is as sly as Brian Boitano as he glides across the ice doing dance and skating stuff

5) Aboot, eh, eh?

Take up violence to give ideas flight

Eli Gottlieb

A crazy man flew a plane into a building after arising anger against tax laws.

Yet, cable news networks were hesitant to call this man a terrorist, including Pete Williams of NBC, who declared he couldn't be because he's an American citizen.

Instead, his upper-class white background, indicated by his wealth and the name Anthony Joseph Stack III, along with his nationality, seems to makes him not a terrorist, but just a crazy person. Meanwhile, being a Muslim or having an Arab background immediately makes a violent mass murderer an act of terrorism. So instead of labeling it terrorism, we have to rationally consider whether his grievances had ground in reality, or whether in fact our society is at fault for his horrific act.

I don't understand why many fail to see the glaring hypocrisy in this. Then again, as I sit thinking on the American public's response to the Stack Attack, there hasn't been that much hypocrisy. Many blamed American laws or policies for what happened on September 11, 2001 as well, and personally, I consider it an absolute travesty that many voices on my own side of the political spectrum, being the left, now shout that if America had given its favor to the Muslim side in various conflicts, like the Iran-Iraq War, the Gulf War, and the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, Sept. 11 would not have occurred.

That idea appears to say that terrorism works and that Americans are pathetic cowards who, when they see a number of their own murdered, think about the wrongness of not doing what the terrorists had wanted in the first place. I can already see Republicans putting forth a Stack's Law bill that will fix the tax-code so that software engineers can pass themselves off as independent contractors while actually working as employees and therefore avoid taxes. The reason for this will be that their new bill could have prevented the tragedy, ignoring the irony in passing a law based on what a terrorist wanted.

It seems, however, that I'm not the first to observe these facts. The tea-baggers beat me to it. According to David Barstow's piece in The New York Times, "Tea Party Lights Fuse for Rebellion on Right," many members of this right-wing movement have "gone so far as to stock up on ammunition, gold, and survival foods in anticipation of the worst."

I might think of that as insane, immoral and a total waste of time, but since it's the only way left to actually get things done in this country, it seems it might just have to do.

They've also gone to websites like resistnet.com and infowars.com, the home of conspiracy theorist Alex Jones. In fact, Jones' latest Internet radio show claims that the Stack Attack could have been staged, possibly by the American Israel Public Affairs Committee or the government. Many tea-baggers have also started forming citizen militias to make sure the federal government can't impose martial law.

While Stack didn't display any actual membership or loyalties to the Tea Party movement, his actions seem to fully represent them. He even added some anti-Catholic ranting to his terrorist note, referring to the Church as "vulgar" and "corrupt." All in all, he displayed what amounts to an upper-class version of the tea-bagger mentality. He just hated everything about current society and blamed all problems on authority figures such as the government, business, intellectuals and organized religion. With attitudes like these coming out of the ever-vaunted "Middle America," I have to wonder how long before pogroms come hunting for educated, coastal, liberal New York Jews.

This is excellent. On one side of me, Islamofascist terrorists want to kill me for being a liberal, educated American Jew. On the other side of me, tea-baggers and their cohort want to defend themselves from me, because as a liberal, educated American Jew (InfoWars says to say "Zionist"), I obviously aim to impose martial law on them for not paying the heavy taxes that my communist political system has imposed on them with a Kenyan, non-American false President. At times like these, I have to say that I feel like throwing my hands in the air, declaring that Rabbi Meir Kahane was right, and choosing violence over nonresistance.

These days, it seems that the only way to attract mainstream American society's attention is to leave mainstream society, adopt some sort of insane and violent extremist ideology and then murder a bunch of people. This ideology falls roughly in line with the radical mainstream of the Northeast, like passing universal health-care, re-enfranchising labor, using taxes to make the rich pay the price of civilization and reforming immigration law to stop the exploitation of immigrants as downward pressure on wages.

But without blood on one's hands, no one listens. In order to get someone to listen, it seems like one would have to drive down to Washington, march outside the Senate building and attack all the Secret Service men, policemen, soldiers, and security guards. Then hold the Senate hostage, threatening to get rid of a Senator for every day that they fail to eliminate the filibuster and pass universal, single-payer health-care. Then do the same with the House, in case some people still weren't listening.

I might think of that as insane, immoral and a total waste of time, but since it's the only way left to actually get things done in this country, it seems it might just have to do. John F. Kennedy said, "those who make nonviolent revolution impossible will make violent revolution inevitable," but I never thought I'd see that slogan taken up by fundamentally regressive, fascist people.

Author Isaac Asimov also, less famously, called violence "the last refuge of the incompetent."

It seems that as fear and acquiescence have made this a nation of cowards and fascism has risen, violence has become more and more of a necessary counter-attack not merely against regressive politics but against itself.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Trio rewards 'Addicted' fans

By Ellie Rulon-Miller
Collegian Staff

Alkaline Trio fans, rejoice! The band has officially released its latest album, "This Addiction," today and, to the delight of many followers, seems to be returning to its old ways. However, if you downloaded your pre-release last week, you already know that.

"This Addiction" is the Trio's seventh full-length release. Its sound is a step backwards from the group's last release, "Agony and Irony," in 2008. Guitarist-vocalist Matt Skiba sings most songs, while bassist-singer Dan Andriano sings only three. Fans refer to these as "Matt songs" and "Dan songs," respectively.

It is in Skiba's songs that the band's sound is similar to its first recordings – songs about heartbreak and drinking, sprinkled with Satanic imagery (Skiba and drummer Derek Grant are members of the Church of Satan).

While it may appear to be an attempt to win back fans the group lost when their sound began to change, the reality is that Skiba spent the entire song-writing process for "This Addiction" in a drunk and heartbroken state, in a recent interview, he stated that his marriage "started to fall apart" and that he and his wife were divorced. He also suffered the death of a close friend. The return to the Trio's old sound is fully authentic.

Andriano's songs, on the other hand, continue to be happy and seem to be written about his love for his wife.

Several of the songs on the new album have a common theme: the ocean. They feature phrases like "the black sea of our love," and the recurring topic makes the record more cohesive.

The first track, "This Addiction," is the current single from the album. The song is a clear indication of the band's – or at least Skiba's – return to early Alkaline Trio style. The music is fast and gives the listener the idea that the song may be a hopeful one – until Skiba starts singing about heroin and methadones. Andriano adds harmonies to the chorus.

Andriano's first track, "Dine, Dine My Darling," is a quintessential "Dan song." Andriano is admired not only as a bassist, but also for his unique voice and perfect pitch. For anyone picking up "This Addiction" as their first Trio album, they will get a perfect introduction to Andriano's stylings, and this is a great first song of his to hear.

Following Andriano's upbeat "Dine, Dine My Darling" is Skiba's "Lead Poisoning." For the most part, this song is solid – until the trumpet comes in during a later chorus. The instrument sounds interesting, and pleases the ear, but seems randomly placed. It appears for a few brief seconds in only one part of the song. Other than that, though, this is an upbeat-sounding Skiba song.

Then comes "Dead on the Floor." Skiba sings about how he was once hopeful about his marriage but that it was a means to an end, saying that it was "way too good to be." He makes it clear that he is heartbroken, repeating that his heart is "falling like snow" over and over again.

"The American Scream" opens up sounding eerily similar to the opening of "This Addiction," but makes up for it with catchy lyrics and images of Skiba lying dead in his own blood in a cemetery.

"Off The Map" is arguably one of the best songs Andriano has ever written, and it continues with the ocean theme that he has also used in songs on previous releases.

Skiba's "Draculina" features even more Satanic imagery, but has a confusing opening: "What ever happened to Wonderland, and where'd Alice go?" The topic is never clarified, only repeated between verses of a completely unrelated topic. That is, unless Draculina is a little-known character in Lewis Carroll's classic.

The members of the Alkaline Trio released their seventh album today, which features songs that are more similar to their older personas than their tunes as of late.

"Eating Me Alive" is easily one of the best songs Skiba performs on the album. Its harmonies are impressive, and it has a light coat of synthesizers, making it sound only slightly like it could have been released on Alkaline Trio's 2005 album, "Crimson."

Next is the song "Piss and Vinegar," though the title does not work well with the song. The phrase "full of piss and vinegar" means "full of youthful energy," which Skiba's lyrics are lacking. Regardless, the song is composed nicely and sounds similar to older Trio songs.

Skiba's last song on the album, "Dorothy," opens up hard and fast, and may be written about his wife, but it is unclear. Skiba sings, "Oh Dorothy, I'm coming home, I hope you're waiting there / I know times have been tough on you, it's all downhill from here." Listeners are led to believe this could be written about the downfall of Skiba's marriage – his wife's name replaced with another.

Thankfully, the album ends on a hopeful note with Andriano's "Fine." The song seems to be for Skiba, perhaps conveying that he will indeed be fine. "It's going to rain like this for days, I'm going to drown in my old ways / But I'm fine, I'm fine." Needless to say, it's nice to finish listening to the album feeling less miserable than Skiba's songs feel.

"This Addiction" is sure to be a hit among fans. The mix of Skiba's old-school Trio songs and Andriano's new-school love songs flows almost perfectly, and the group's continued use of harmonies makes it sound like the new Trio and the old Trio have become one.

This album is absolutely worth listening to, whether you're a long-time fan of Alkaline Trio or not. It is on sale today, and a deluxe edition is also available.

Ellie Rulon-Miller can be reached at erulonm@student.umass.edu.

V-Day brings more cliché to romance

By Matthieu Decker
Collegian Correspondent

Chances are, if you are considering seeing "Valentine's Day," you probably have a pretty good idea of how the film will play out.

Considering the fare generally associated with a V-day weekend release, it takes no great stretch of the imagination to surmise what a film taking the holiday itself as its namesake will consist of: plenty of string quartets, forgive-me kisses, heart-shaped boxes and happy endings. With a film that boasts as impressive a cast as "Valentine's Day," one might expect it to surpass its inherent cliché, but even by the depressingly low standards which the romantic comedy genre has set for itself in recent years, "Valentine's Day" is a thoughtless, passionless repetition of much more affecting love stories.

"Valentine's Day" tries to be the end-all romantic comedy, attempting to weave the love lives of a number of loosely-connected characters into a cohesively uplifting testament to the power of love.

Instead, it comes off as an underdeveloped montage of storylines and scenes from other films, from the innocent little kid with his first crush, to the disillusioned workaholics who fall for each other, not to mention the obligatory airport scene. In trying to deliver as many heartwarming clichés as it possibly can, the movie follows about six such stories, giving several of them less than 10 minutes of total screen-time. This overload results in little chance for the actors to give any depth to their characters, and instead places a premium on the number of recognizable names written on the billboards advertising the film.

The film follows two main characters, played by Jennifer Garner and Ashton Kutcher, who are portrayed from their first scene together as star-crossed lovers in a sickeningly obvious sense. Kutcher plays Reed, a flower salesman looking for a Valentine's commitment. Garner plays Julia, a business woman whose surgeon boyfriend left her alone on Valentine's Day to perform a surgery elsewhere.

They are the prototypical best friends whose love lives are cast into the wanton flailing of plot-driving conflict early on, and the dramatic inevitability of their situation grows more painfully obvious with each passing scene. Even

See VALENTINES on page 6

From 'Good Times' to 'Girlfriends' goofs

By Garth Brody
Collegian Staff

Black Student Union members and non-members alike performed a series of sitcom scenes Saturday night as part of a retrospective "From Good Times to Girlfriends and The Rebirth of the '90s" – to commemorate Black History Month. The choice of showcasing prominent black sitcoms by decade reflected our recent entry into the – what are they calling them – the '10s?

The show, which started at 8:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom, moved from the '70s to the '00s, stopping at each decade in between for a few scenes from a popular black sitcom. "Good Times" and "Girlfriends" were unsurprisingly chosen for the opening and closing scenes. From the '80s, students chose "The Cosby Show," and from the '90s came both "Martin" and "The Fresh Prince of Bel-Air."

With the lights low and the scene set, the "Good Times" cast took the stage, as one then smiled and waved to the audience. From this moment forward, however, it was clear that these students were not professional actors, and were participating in a community theater endeavor, not a stage production. Not that there's anything wrong with that.

The real disappointment was that the format of the show did not seem to acknowledge the distinction. As a community theater piece, it could have worked within its limitations; botched lines would have been forgiven, for those limitations ended up dominating the performance.

Most noticeable were the technical gaffes, which occurred as each actor was outfitted with a personal microphone. Multiple and extremely distracting sound failures proved not only that the microphone system was terribly flawed, or at least terribly implemented, but that the actors were perfectly capable of projecting their voices without them.

Lights also went on and off at seemingly random moments. During one incident, the end of a scene was followed by one set of lights going off and on, and then another, and then the first ones again, and then finally the correct ones – it was not hard to imagine the nervous crew member flipping each switch trial-and-error style.

Then there was the performance

See SITCOMS on page 6

Oscar hopefuls look to March

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

Fret not, pop culture enthusiasts, the nominees for the 82nd Academy Awards, known more commonly as the Oscars, are in, and it is predicted to be a great show. The stars will parade down the plush red carpet, decked out in the latest fashions, vying for the attention of the paparazzi on March 7.

There are slight changes to the show this year. For one, both Steve Martin and Alec Baldwin will host the event together. The funny men battled for Meryl Streep's affection in "It's Complicated" earlier this season and are in a Saturday Night Live hosting competition – Martin is at 15, while Baldwin has had the honor 14 times.

Jokingly, Martin released a statement saying, "I am happy to co-host the Oscars with my enemy Alec Baldwin." Baldwin then retorted, "I don't play the banjo but I'm thrilled to be hosting the Oscars – it's the opportunity of a lifetime."

This year, the Academy has upped the number of best picture nominees from five to 10, probably to account for the number of buzzed-about movies of 2009. Some of the potential winners include: "Avatar," "The Blind Side," "Up," "Inglourious Basterds," and "Precious: Based on the novel 'Push' by Sapphire."

"Avatar" seems to be the early favorite, though there is a good chance "The Blind Side" could steal it. Noticeably absent is "The Young Victoria," one of the better movies of the year, which garnered initial Oscar buzz.

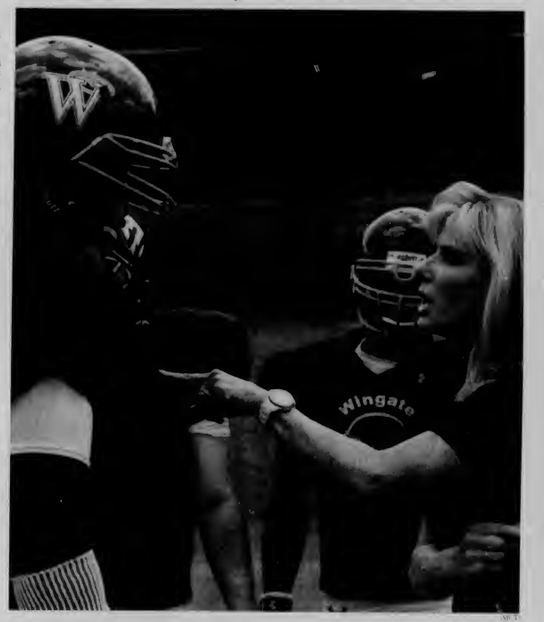
"Avatar" and "The Hurt Locker" are up for the most awards, tied at nine each. They are followed closely by "Inglourious Basterds," with eight nominations, and "Precious," with six.

The best director category is filled with directors of these great movies. James Cameron, no stranger to the award, thanks to 1990s blockbuster "Titanic," could take it for "Avatar," or be contested by the likes of Quentin Tarantino or Kathryn Bigelow, to name a few.

The best actress category is filled with five amazing actresses, all greatly respected in their own right. Meryl Streep is nominated for "Julie and Julia," perhaps simply as a nod for her talents, as the movie itself was not that wonderful. She did what she could with the role, imitating Julia Child nearly perfectly, but perhaps a more deserving actress would be Sandra Bullock for "The Blind Side," or newcomer Gabourey Sidibe for her work in "Precious." Bullock seems to be the predicted winner.

Best actor, however, is more cumbersome. Viewers could see Morgan Freeman clutching the gold man for his role as Nelson Mandela in "Invictus," Jeremy Renner from "The Hurt Locker," or even George Clooney from "Up in the Air." The award may be a toss up as the actors including Jeff Bridges and Colin Furth lack in buzz and outstanding reviews.

Actors up for best supporting roles include Matt Damon, Stanley Tucci (probably the most deserving, thanks to his creepy portrayal of a rapist and murderer in "The Lovely Bones") and Christopher Plummer. Some big name ladies were nominated for best supporting actress. Penelope Cruz or Maggie Gyllenhaal may receive the award, though many tweens would love to see the "Twilight" funny girl Anna Kendrick receive the trophy for "Up in the Air," one of her first major roles.



Last year was a standout year for children's movies. Kids and adults alike went in droves to see many of the movies nominated for best animated feature, such as the illustrious "Up," the darkly humorous "Coraline," as well as the newest Disney princess flick, "The Princess and the Frog." Any of the movies in this category would be extremely deserving of the Oscar.

Many believe that a few films are unfortunately absent from the ballots. These worthy movies include "The Young Victoria," "Alfred Molina," "The Road" and "Nine." In particular, "Nine" did not receive spectacular reviews, but it was predicted to at least make the best movies nominations. The others were relative unknowns, but great pictures in their own right.

Regardless of who should or should not have been nominated, the nominees will make their way to the Kodak Theater on March 7 in hopes of a win. Millions will tune in to see their favorite stars win and make lofty speeches, hopefully retiring to bed satisfied that Sunday night.

Because of the great nominees, and therefore great competition, this year's Academy Awards is sure to be a must-see. This, at least, is an accurate prediction.

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kaithym@student.umass.edu

Sandra Bullock and Quinton Aaron star in "The Blind Side", which has been nominated for best picture at this year's Academy Awards show, taking place March 7.

Stars, but no substance

VALENTINES from page 5

with the disproportional screen time awarded to these two, they can't manage to make either their individual characters or their relationship believable. Deep in contrived dialogue and utterly foreseeable turns of plot, any convincingly human aspects of the characters are lost in the blinding Hollywood veneer.

Each scene in "Valentine's Day" comes off as more forced than the last. Once the novelty of seeing so many familiar faces in one film has worn off, there is little left to keep the viewer's attention. Watching Jamie Foxx serve a dish of Valentine's cynicism is initially hilarious, but the yoke of the arbitrary plot forces his character, and the rest, to undergo changes of heart without even two minutes of intervening screen time.

With such talent the film had to work with, "Valentine's Day" could have been a tolerable romance flick to entertain the sappy side of any couple with minimal effort. All that would be required is trimming it down to one well-told story, rather than a convention of confused plots.

Instead, "Valentine's Day" is an incoherent stream of cliché, which doesn't merit being seen as light fare to bring you and your significant other into the romantic spirit.

Matthieu Decker can be reached at mpdecker@student.umass.edu.

Ashton Kutcher plays a character opposite Jennifer Garner in the recently released "Valentine's Day" flick. While the film boasted many big names, it failed to deliver in plot.

Members of the Black Student Union attempted to recreate skits from popular television series, such as University of Massachusetts alum Bill Cosby's comedic show, at an event Saturday night.

Sitcom substitutes not superb

SITCOMS from page 5

which lacked in memorable and digestible segmented scenes. Entire episodes were incautiously processed into a confounding structure of scene and narrated summary. Instead of actors cast based on their best character impersonations, they seemed to go mostly with physical resemblance.

Before each act, a representative of the BSU delivered a disorganized, unfocused summary of each decade's civil rights history before mentioning the fact that there was a particular style of fashion associated with that time period and said "you know what I'm talking about," proceeding to list popular fashion trends. Even though this was always the last part of the speech, it never correlated with what followed on stage.

In fact, very little attention was paid to detail in the costume department, which ought to have been a particular focus of the organizers. Dr. Huxtable swapped his signature sweater with a tweed jacket, the Fresh Prince substituted hiking boots for Air Jordans, and J.J. from "Good Times" was recognizable only by his hat. For a performance all about the proud history of black television, the students did not seem to take much pride in the shows' iconography.

Adding to the viewers' frustration was the pace of the show. With only four costume changes, an extremely repetitive and uninteresting set, a cast of about 20 and a maximum of maybe seven actors in any one skit, it is inexplicable that the scenes could not flow seamlessly into one another. Instead, the audience was forced to listen to minutes at a time of DJ Relly Rell, who was, at the time, behind a curtain.

However, this did not prevent audience members from having a good time. The event was certainly not worth the $6 entry fee, but it was enjoyable in spite of itself almost the whole way through. Fumbled lines, uncooperative technology, crew incompetence and, yes, occasionally the intended humor of the original sitcom had the audience in hysterics for two solid hours.

Maybe next year they will correct their mistakes and earn those laughs. Really, our only hope is that they will have an Urkel.

Garth Brody can be reached at gbrody@student.umass.edu.

Commonwealth College book author to speak at UM tonight

By Garth Brody
Collegian Staff

George Saunders, an American author known mostly for his short stories, will speak tonight in the Student Union Ballroom.

Saunders' works include the story collections "CivilWarLand in Bad Decline" and "Pastoralia," as well as novellas like "The Brief and Frightening Reign of Phil." He has also published two essay compilations.

Tonight's reading is sponsored by Commonwealth Honors College. A committee of senior honors students has selected Saunders' most recent collection of stories, "In Persuasion Nation," as required reading for the spring semester.

Like much of his work, "In Persuasion Nation" offers a surreal vision of our soul-less consumer culture, while emphasizing the humanity that sprouts through the cracks. Saunders hits human chords with startling emotion, blending a bizarre sense of humor and a loving attention to character.

Saunders' stories are particularly renowned for their humor. Their oddball premises range from orphans as marketing test subjects (and then trendsetters) in "Jon" to a crude zombie spinster in "Sea Oak." The action can be ridiculous, even over the top, but the writing remains subtle in the face of the chaos. His stories, even the goofiest ones, have a knack for blindsiding the reader with gorgeous melancholy.

Often compared to novelist Kurt Vonnegut, Jr., Saunders seems to approach his stories in similar way. He brings rich, relatable characters into a darkly comic variation on reality. The plot builds, the situation gets darker and funnier and the endlessly human characters ground the reader as the story looms in the background, often too big to stomach. The end of a Saunders story, like the end of a Vonnegut story, feels like a punch line; all of the humor and sadness gets twisted together and compressed into a moment of pure literary revelation.

The critics seem to agree. In 2006, Saunders was awarded a MacArthur Foundation Fellowship "genius grant," for "bringing to contemporary American fiction a sense of humor, pathos, and literary style all his own." He is also the recipient of a Guggenheim Fellowship, an O. Henry Award, and several National Magazine Awards, and writes regularly for The New Yorker, Harper's Magazine and GQ.

In a 2000 interview with WAG magazine Saunders attributed his writing style to his unique educational background; he received a Bachelors of Science degree in geophysical engineering in 1981.

He said, " ... any claim I might make to originality in my fiction is really just the result of this odd background: basically, just me working inefficiently, with flawed tools, in a mode I don't have sufficient background to really understand. Like if you put a welder to designing dresses."

Saunders' tender metallurgy may be an accident of science, but what a happy accident it is.

If you can see billboards and pop-up ads for their absurdity, if you think calling good literature "bittersweet" is a criminal reduction, if you love humanity but can't stand people, you want to see George Saunders speak.

The event begins at 7 p.m., is free and open to the public.

Garth Brody can be reached at gbrody@student.umass.edu.

Banking for the EGeneration

We work here and bank here too!

eGeneration banking is delivered by eGeneration bankers like Cara and Mike.

Check out mycoolbank.com today!

Get great info, open accounts online and get awesome stuff like eChecking, eStatements, Online Banking and Bill Pay. It's easy for you to choose your style of banking. There's even online live chat.

*$10 minimum deposit to open eChecking Account. No minimum balance required to maintain account. Other bank's ATM surcharge fees that are charged to the account during current statement cycle will be refunded on the last business day of the current statement cycle. Accounts closed or changed to another product during a current statement cycle will not receive a refund of the other bank's ATM surcharge fees

Easthampton Savings Bank
My Bank...

mycoolbank.com | 413.527.4111
Belchertown | Easthampton | Hadley | Northampton
South Hadley | Southampton | Westfield

Find ESB on facebook

Equal Housing Lender Member FDIC

DIF Deposit Insurance Limit Fund

FDIC deposit insurance temporarily increased from $100,000 to $250,000 per depositor through December 31, 2013. All deposits above the FDIC limit are insured in full by the Depositors Insurance Fund

Check out our website at

www.dailycollegian.com

for a "weekend at the movies" podcast

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
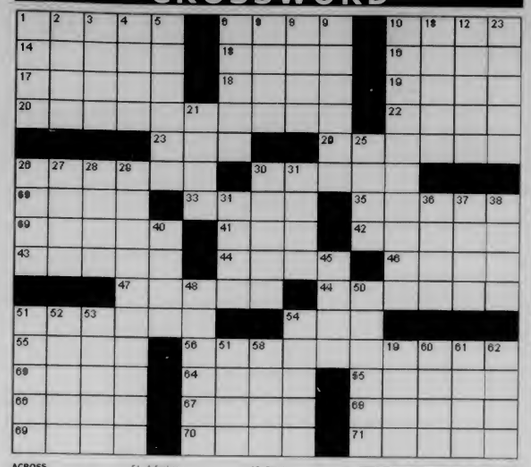
REGISTRATION FOR FALL 2010

The Writing Program Placement Test will be offered on:

Wednesday, February 24, at 6:00pm in Bartlett 302



You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit112 (College Writing).

This test may be taken only once.

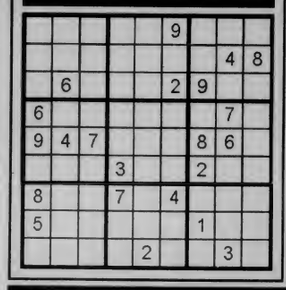
Students do not need to register for the test.

COMICS

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Vertical spars on boats
6. What a dog does with its tail
10. Millisecond
14. Arabic name for God
15. Muslim prayer leader
16. Singer ____ Fitzgerald
17. Craftiness
18. Expunge
19. Henhouse
20. In relations, cold or stiff
22. Expect with desire
23. Uncooked
24. Jumper
26. A derivative of methane
30. Malicious setting of fires
32. A slender woodwind instrument
33. Thin slab of linoleum
35. Shallow recess
39. A writing style
41. Bacon-Lettuce-Tomato
42. Scrub
43. Not liquid
44. Repose
46. Gifts to the poor
47. _____ bear = a child's toy
49. Named or called
51. A fuel gas
54. Mineral spring
55. Assist
56. Rumpled
63. Spore-producing structures
64. Fertilizer ingredient
65. Angry
66. Acquire deservedly
67. Blow to the head (slang)
68. Pertaining to the largest continent
69. Adult male deer
70. Prefix indicating "Within"
71. Leases

DOWN
1. Wise men
2. Anagram of "Maul"
3. A misstep
4. Story
5. A fortified wine
6. A woman whose husband has died
7. Anagram of "Mean"
8. Festivity
9. Stinks
10. Relating to machinery
11. A single-masted sailing vessel
12. Run off to marry
13. Prank
21. Sodium chloride
25. Anagram of "Nose"
26. Swabs
27. A river in Spain
28. Implement
29. Unable to decide quickly
30. Lane
31. Drenches
34. Anagram of "Bird"
36. A hardy cabbage
37. Something that protrudes
38. Formerly
40. Biblical garden
45. Printed characters
48. Conclude by reasoning
50. Roe of sturgeon
51. In baseball, the "bags"
52. Submarine
53. Latin for "The Earth"
54. A bearskin hat
57. To press clothes
58. Dispatch
59. Gaelic
60. Placed in a resting position
61. French for "State"
62. Lairs



SNOWZEES
Bar & Guitar
Formerly Seven O's

Tue: Nintendo Wii Night
Wed: Karaoke Night
Thurs: DJ/Live Music
Fri: Earth Jams by Josh Wachtel
Sat: The Package - Rock & Roll at Its Best
Sun: Nascar - Free Food, Open Mic

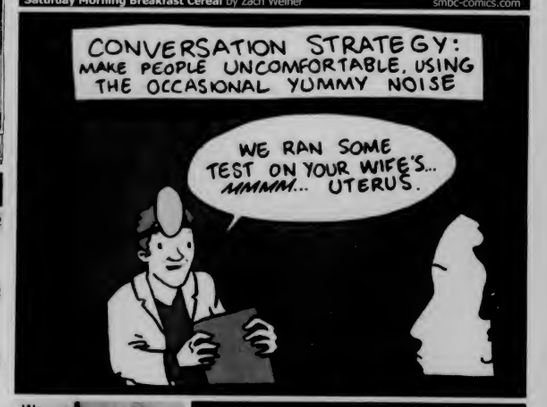
[(7 Minutes from UMass)]
1PM - 1AM · 7 Days a week
330 Amherst Rd.
SUNDERLAND, MA. 01237
413-665-8788

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

The Taco Troll

PUFFTON VILLAGE
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.puffton village.com

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub — chainsawsuit.com



Schrodinger by David Waksman — infinitymaze.com

Maakies by Tony Millionaire — Maakies.com

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal by Zach Weiner — smbc-comics.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Find out where Franklin hides their peanut butter cups. Perhaps they are stowed away with Jimmy Hoffa and Keanu Reeves' talent.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
The American Academy of Pediatrics are trying to change the shape of the hot dog. They forget there are worse things to choke on.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Dick Cheney has been hospitalized for chest pains due to a steady diet of swiss cheese and his close friends.

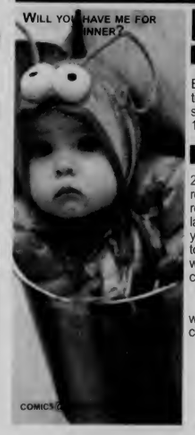
taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
"Stunna" shades are not the only reason why Americans have a scarlet love for the Dalai Lama.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Does Chatroulette.com jumpstart a world wide web of titillation for you?

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
In light of the recent controversy surrounding Tiger Woods, try to make things right by snuggling with your favorite tiger plushie.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Only the steamy and salacious Fox News Network can help you get your groove back. That's what happened with Stella!

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
No matter how much hairspray you use, your foreharm hair will never look like Cher.



libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Wonder what is dumped all across campus before a snow storm? Gallons of Antonio's pizza sauce and some slime from Ghostbusters 2.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Horoscopes are fun. Especially in haiku. Tell me you agree.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Spitting ten seconds of "game" only leads to about 10.58 seconds of "fun".

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Your RA has a dossier on your recent activities. Most of their notes are filed under "Wet Willy Workout Weekend."

Mill Valley Apartments
Looking for a place to live next year?
APPLY DURING OUR OPEN HOUSE
$500 OFF Security
Choice of a $300 Visa Card -or- Wii & Wii Fit*
PLUS
A Whole Foods Gift Card - Just for showing up!*
Saturday, February 27th 11AM-3PM
360 Riverglade Drive, Apt. D
More info at 413-253-7377 - www.MillValleyApts.com
While supplies last, some restrictions apply

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St: 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,575/Mo+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

www.AmherstMARentals.com 413-549-1398

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends From $89 Complete. Montreal Express.Net MontrealBlowout.com 781-979-9001

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTUESDAY

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Ducasse gears up for NFL Combine

BRAD HORN/COLLEGIAN

Senior offensive lineman Vladimir Ducasse will look to help his native Haiti in recovering from a massive earthquake on Jan. 12. The former UMass player has drawn praises from many NFL scouts already.

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

For Massachusetts offensive lineman Vladimir Ducasse, football and service go well together.

Ducasse, who was born in Haiti, had to deal with the news that an earthquake struck his home country on Jan. 12 while he was preparing for the Under Armour Senior Bowl.

Ducasse was born in Port-au-Prince before moving to Connecticut at the age of 14, where he played football at Stamford High School. At some point, he said he hopes to visit Haiti once again when it's safer, but for now, the closest tie he has to home is communicating with relatives.

When the earthquake hit, he said he didn't find out details about anyone in his home country until two days later. He learned that all of his family was safe and his home received no more than some minor damages. However, he was still concerned about his cousins and people who weren't as fortunate as he was.

Although Haiti was still on his mind, Ducasse knew there was nothing else he could do besides play football, so he stuck with his plan of participating in the Senior Bowl on Jan. 30 in Mobile, Ala.

"What happened [in Haiti] is a terrible thing, but I have to move on now… and I just have to keep moving forward," Ducasse said of his decision to stay in the Senior Bowl.

Despite being one of the few players from a Division I-AA school there, he said he felt comfortable playing with some of the top seniors in college football.

Ducasse will likely make the move from offensive tackle, which he played for as a member of the UMass football tear, to offensive guard. In his senior year as a Minuteman, he made all-conference as the top offensive lineman in the Colonial Athletic Association and was also an All-American.

It will now be up to National Football league scouts and general managers to decide if he is good enough to make a roster.

So far, the answer is a yes.

The list of players who stepped foot in McGuirk Stadium and eventually stuck with an NFL team for a long period of time is small. There are three Minutemen currently in the NFL (Jeremy Cain, Matt Lawrence and James Ihedigbo), but none had the buzz around them that Ducasse has now.

The last UMass player drafted by an NFL team was Khan Samuel, who was taken in the fifth round by the Chicago Bears in 1999, and it's been over 40 years since a Minuteman was a first round selection.

If Ducasse made the impression he was hoping to have, he could be the one to break that streak.

He received solid reviews from NFL scouts and is expected to go as high as the late first round or early second round of this year's draft.

"When I was in the Senior Bowl, I felt good, I felt strong and I felt in shape," Ducasse said. "I just did pretty much what I was supposed to do , go to practice, be physical and just doing what I had to do every game."

In the past several weeks, he has been listening to some of the criticism he received during the Senior Bowl and working on those skills while preparing for the NFL Combine at the TEST Sports Club in New Jersey. The combine will begimytomorrow at Lucas Oil Stadium in Indianapolis, Ind. and will go until March 2.

As much as Ducasse has done to impress scouts, he said he still faces doubts about how effective he can be in the NFL when he didn't go to a Bowl Championship Series school. Another obstacle he faces is English not being his first language.

While he understands enough to be in the huddle without a translator, he still speaks with a heavy accent, which will be a challenge during the Combine interviews.

Despite the scrutiny that comes with being a draft prospect, Ducasse feels that he will put many of the questions he faces to rest.

"I don't think I'm at a disadvantage," Ducasse said about being from a Division I-AA school. "It doesn't matter if you're from a small school or big school, you still have to earn your respect, because everyone's looking down on you."

Other NFL draft prospects have not taken him lightly.

"Coming from a small school, I feel like everyone shows that much more respect because there's not many small school players who get drafted," Ducasse said

While Ducasse continues to work on his skills, he hasn't forgotten about what happened recently back home.

After he finished his week at the Senior Bowl, Ducasse put up his signed jerseys used during practice and the game as well as autographed cards, with The proceedsgoing towards relief efforts in Haiti. Although he knows that the wealth that is part of being an NFL player and will be his soon, he said he sees football as much of a philanthropic tool as it is a profession.

Ducasse's agent, Joe Linta, has been helping him with coordinating the charity and putting his status as one of the nation's top collegiate offensive linemen to use.

"[Football] is just my ability, but [Haiti] is the place I was born and raised, so I just feel like if I wasn't playing football and didn't have those skills, I still would want to do stuff like that, but I think it's easier to get more people involved," Ducasse said.

Rather than using his first paycheck to buy a big house or a fancy car, Ducasse wants to donate some of the money that he'll earn as an NFL player to Haiti and help his family.
He also wants to use his influence to encourage others to follow his generosity, because as much as he is a football player, he is someone who cares about the well-being of others first.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

UM wins 4th-straight

By Jeffrey Engmann
Collegian Staff

The winning tradition continues for the Massachusetts men's swimming diving team.

After capturing an impressive fourth-straight Atlantic 10 title, and the program's 12th conference title overall, UMass head coach Russ Yarworth was named the Atlantic 10 Coach of the Year. Yarworth received the award last year, and explained that the success of the team has a lot to do with an established tradition, as well as hard work.

"I'm happy and very pleased overall with our performance," Yarworth said. They deserve it, they work hard all year, and they've persevered. They do a lot of hard work, but I think they enjoy the reward."

The men's team has been lead all season by its senior class, who will end their careers winning every A-10 title throughout their time at UMass.

"They came in as freshmen and got introduced to the tradition, then they became a part of it and help continue it, and now hopefully as alumni, they'll come back and help keep it going," Yarworth said.

In his last A-10 championship, senior Andrew Wilbrandt defended his title for a third consecutive time, as he took home an unprecedented fourth-straight gold medal in the 100 backstroke event. Wilbrandt also finished first in the 200 backstroke as well as the 200 individual medley race.

His strong effort throughout the conference championships earned him the Atlantic 10 Athlete of the Week, along with sophomore diver Jason Cook.

The men's team got off to a fast start and seemingly never looked back in large part due to the standout sophomore diver.

On day one, Cook once again took home the title in the one meter diving event with a score of 333.05. He was named the Atlantic 10 Diver of the Year, his second in two years, for his strong diving throughout this season, including his impressive display during the A-10's.

Cook's teammates also had strong performances during the conference championships. Junior John Clark finished just behind Cook with a score of 283.35 in the one-meter event, while Adam Duffield placed fifth in the event.

The Minutemen received contributions from several members. Senior Mike Berthaume had a strong showing in his last conference championship as his time of 48.73 seconds earned him his first gold medal in the 100 butterfly, as it was the second fastest time in school history. Dan Backler had his most impressive showing of the season in the Minutemen's final meet. In the 200 breaststroke, the junior finished in third place, finishing with a time of 2:05.60.

Sophomore Joey Sbordon took first place in the 1650 freestyle with a time of 15:49. Of all the performances, coach Yarworth stated the performance of Kyle Jennings stood out most, as the sophomore, recorded three personal bests during the championships.

Overall, the Minutewomen had one of their strongest showings in recent history, as they finished third overall, just behind second place finishers Rhode Island and pre-season favorite Fordham, who ended the season undefeated in swim meets. In her first A-10 championship, freshman Amina Meho had a top 10 finish. Her time of 23.63 earned her a ninth place overall in the 50 meter freestyle.

The men's and women's diving team is lead by head coach Mandy Hixon. The success on both the men's and women's side helped earn Hixon her second consecutive A-10 Men's and Women's Diving Coach of the Year award.

Sophomore Hannah Swift won her first A-10 title, as she placed first in the one meter diving event. Freshman Michaela Butler did well in her first ever A-10 championship, placing fifth in the one meter dive event.

One of the Minutewomen's strongest showings came in the 200 meter freestyle from a quartet led by senior Elizabeth Walsh, along with Sarah Kanellas Jennifer Corriveau and Amina Meho. In the 1650 freestyle, sophomore Molly Papish had a very strong performance. Papish finished eighth overall with a time 17:26:36.

Jeffrey Engmann can be reached at jengmann@student.umass.edu.

AMANDA JOHNSON/COLLEGIAN

Members of the UMass women's track and field relay team compete in an event last season. The Minutewomen finished seventh this weekend in the A-10 conference championships.

Upperclassmen help UMass in Atlantic 10 championships

MAXWELL SZARKO/COLLEGIAN

Members of the UMass swim team cheer on a teammate earlier this season. The Minutemen won the A-10 championships last weekend, while the Minutewomen took third place.

Cotto, Aguguo, Okkonen lead field for UM

By Michael Wood
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts track and field teams had a strong showing over the weekend at the Atlantic 10 conference championship.

In Kingston, R.I., the men's team tallied 68 points and finished in fifth place out of 12 teams in the two-day event, improving on their seventh place finish from last season.

The top performers for the Minutemen were upperclassmen who had the experience necessary to gain an edge over the rest of the field. Scott VanderMolen finished second overall in the 1000-meter run with a time of 2:27.39 minutes, and was named to the All-Conference team. He will also compete in the 1000-meter run next weekend in the New England Championship and the Eastern College Athletic Conference championship.

In the 55-meter hurdles, Tyler Cotto continued his dominance in the event, taking third place with a time of 7.62 seconds. He has already qualified for the IC4A and New England championships this season, while setting a school record in the 55-meter hurdles earlier in the year.

Other leaders for UMass included Daniel Schwartz and Chris Dzidek, who took fourth and fifth in their respective events with over 4,000 points each in the first ever heptathlon event – a contest with seven events – in A-10 history.

The Minutewomen were also in competition in Kingston, R.I. over the weekend, and finished seventh out of 12 teams. Like their male counterparts, they relied on strong performances from their seasoned veterans to carry them through the tournament.

Leading the way for UMass were upperclassmen Stephanie Aguguo and Ida Okkonen, repeating their impressive performances from last year's tournament. Aguguo took fifth place in the triple jump and improved the third-best mark in school history that she set last year. Okkonen followed suit by placing sixth in the same event, and qualifying for the New England championship. Her mark of 30-01.25 feet puts her right behind Aguguo at fourth on the all-time school record list.

Also turning in a strong performance for the Minutewomen was freshman Courtney Baldwin, who continues to improve her already impressive first season. Baldwin took fourth in the mile run with her time of 4:58.49 minutes.

Rounding out the scoring for UMass women were Lisa Wilson, who placed fifth in the shot put with a distance of 44-08.25 feet, Holly Heinricher finished seventh in the 200-meter dash, and Gina Perno who took seventh in the 800-meter run.

Both teams will head back to Boston for the fourth time this weekend when they compete in the New England Championship on Friday and Saturday.

Michael Wood can be reached at mcwood@student.umass.edu.

Not Published

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 40 LOW: 34 www.DailyCollegian.com THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 2010

Ideologies clash at Horowitz speech

ASHLEY TESSEAU/COLLEGIAN

The UMass Republican Club hosted contentious speaker David Horowitz in the Cape Cod Lounge Tuesday night, with the lecture drawing a large crowd of protesters.

Conservative author brings out protesters as Republican Club hosts controversial lecture

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

On Tuesday evening, former New Left radical turned conservative pundit and author of such works as "Hating Whitey: and Other Progressive Causes," and "Unholy Alliance: Radical Islam and the American Left," David Horowitz spoke in the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union.

Outside the Lounge two UMass Police officers were stationed at the door, with numerous law enforcement officials inside in plainclothes.

Justin Thomas, vice president of the University of Massachusetts Republican Club, the RSO which brought Horowitz to UMass, defended the heavy police presence at the event, citing previous events including Don Feder's speech in March 2009, which was disrupted by protesters.

David Horowitz is described by the Republican Club as a well-known author and lifelong civil rights activist. He was sponsored to speak at UMass for a payment of $5,000 plus expenses, including transportation, lodging, and payment for protection.

Those protesting disagree that his speech was worth funding.

"I am here protesting because, as a UMass student attending a public university, I don't welcome homophobia, and Islamophobia that is integrated in Horowitz's hate speech," said Marah DeFlavia, a junior at UMass. "I feel that bringing Horowitz to this campus was socially irresponsible, and it sends a negative message regarding our campus."

Protesters passed out flyers labeling Horowitz a racist, citing an article he wrote which likened calling Rush Limbaugh a racist to calling minorities racial epithets.

The evening seemed a perfect test of some of Horowitz's primary tenets, as he has asserted that liberal thinkers suppress free thought in academia in such pieces as "The Professors: 101 Most Dangerous Academics in America."

Ultimately, this forum turned out better than last year's contested gathering. Some protesters did speak out, and while they were asked to leave, none were forcibly removed or arrested.

ASHLEY TESSEAU/COLLEGIAN

Protesters in the audience Tuesday night made their feelings toward Horowitz's politics clear, although no one was forcibly removed.

The UMPD also implemented security measures, including not allowing audience members to bring backpacks with them inside. Members of the audience were also asked not to hold up signs or interrupt, though some disruption did occur.

UMass student Alex Tuffile was excited for the night's events, having read all of Horowitz's books. When asked his thoughts on the protesters, after viewing them quietly passing out flyers, he responded that he liked them. Citing past speeches, specifically the Don Feder speech, Tuffile said he feels the security measures are necessary.

"It was a disaster. I don't have a problem with people when they protest, but it was ugly," he said.

Thomas, the Republican Club vice president, gave opening remarks and thanked everyone for attending the speech, stating that Horowitz's presence would hopefully facilitate conversation and debate.

Thomas explained why the Republican Club chose Horowitz.

"David Horowitz has been a strong proponent of free speech on campus," he said.

Horowitz also provided an outlet for the club to display a more conservative speaker.

"You may remember Ms. Meghan McCain, who brought a more independent viewpoint [coming to campus.] Surprisingly for some, she wasn't conservative enough," said Thomas.

Next to speak was Derek Khanna, the president of the Republican Club. Khanna spoke of Horowitz's lack of political correctness and the need for such candor in the University environment. Khanna spoke of not being able to call his country a "She," and said, "Today, we live in a society where use of the word 'niggardly' requires an apology," which the audience greeted with hissing sounds.

As he took the stage, Horowitz began his speech with an attack on liberals.

"Universities were set up to be free institutions that taxpayers pay for. It is due to out of control spending on faculty and out of control governmental loans that tuition costs are so much," said Horowitz.

He went on to call college professors lazy, claiming they only work "nine hours a week, eight months out of the year."

He continued to claim that professors generally represent just one side of the aisle politically. Horowitz sat in on a 90 minute civil liberties class during Tuesday's classes, which he felt did not show multiple viewpoints on the subject.

"The professor tried to sell students on the decency of the Supreme Court, and denied them key information," he said, furthering that he believes an educator's job should entail "teaching you how to think, not what to think."

Midway through his speech, Horowitz spoke on an educational department with which his views are commonly connoted. Horowitz said that women's studies departments' goals are to "make students into radical feminists."

On the issues of gender and racial hierarchies in society, Horowitz claimed such inequities do not exist in America. He also said, to much audience protest, that the women's studies department "doesn't actually care about women," because of genital mutilation occurring in Islamic cultures.

Horowitz expanded on his view of education stating that "the entire liberal arts college cannot give you a good education." The only department Horowitz felt was of value was the engineering college, because through science, he believes the department presents facts without political slant.

Horowitz also told the crowd his views on religion. He deemed Muslims radicals, citing a poll claiming ten percent of Muslims agreed with jihad, or holy war. Making numerous comparisons to Nazi Germany, Horowitz called the

See HOROWITZ on page 2

ASHLEY TESSEAU/COLLEGIAN

Horowitz took on college professors after attending a UMass class earlier in the day, claiming that he did not hear multiple viewpoints.

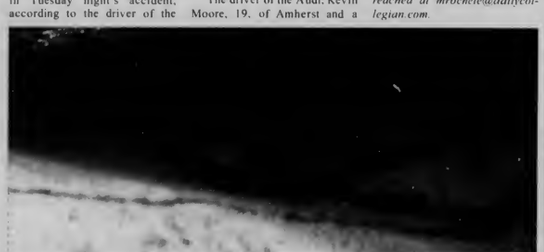
Accident on campus sends car off of road

MATT ROCHELEAU/COLLEGIAN

A two-car collision on Commonwealth Avenue Tuesday night sent one vehicle over a steep embankment, and into the athletic fields across from the Recreation Center. No injuries were reported in the accident.

By Matt Rocheleau
Collegian Staff

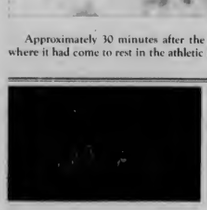
A two-car accident on Feb. 23 sent one vehicle over a steep embankment and into the athletic fields along Commonwealth Avenue across from the Recreation Center, located on the University of Massachusetts campus.



There were no injuries in Tuesday night's accident, according to the driver of the 1999 Audi A4 that lost control, jumped the curb and slid down the snowy embankment after colliding with the other Sedan.

The accident occurred around 7 p.m. Tuesday as area roadways became slick with slushy wet snow, though whether the wintry weather played a role in the accident was not immediately known.

The driver of the Audi, Kevin Moore, 19, of Amherst and a Greenfield Community College student, said he believes the driver of the other vehicle was a student at the University of Massachusetts, though that could not immediately be confirmed.



Officials responded to the accident, and a local towing company pulled the Audi from the field about a half hour later.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrochele@dailycollegian.com.

MATT ROCHELEAU/COLLEGIAN

Approximately 30 minutes after the accident, authorities towed one of the automobiles involved from where it had come to rest in the athletic fields next to the Mullins Center.

ARTS & LIVING

"Monologues" delve deep

The Everywoman's Center explores issues of gender and sexual identity with "The Vagina Monologues," premiering tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Minutewomen fall to Terriers

Despite solid defense from UMass, No. 10 Boston Unviersity pulled off a 10-8 win over the Minutewomen.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Collegian columnist Leigh Greaney discusses the latent splendor of the naked form.

SEE PAGE 3

DailyCollegian.com

Want to know the difference between gold and garbage in theaters? Check out "Weekend at the Movies," an online podcast with Pete Rizzo and Shayna Murphy.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 25

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Jonson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shanna Murphy
COMICS EDITOR Andrew Witts
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolniert
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Prowse
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Scannell
ASSISTANT COMICS Domonic Mei
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Aaser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cody
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1996. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sam Butterfield

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Dugan

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

PUFFTON VILLAGE

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE

EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS

SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses

ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!

ON SITE LAUNDRY, OFF STREET PARKING.

BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.

Off The Wall Games

$12 Thursday Night Draft! MAGIC The Gathering

Look for us at ConBust at Smith College March 26-28!

Mon-Wed 10-8, Thursday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays

WARHAMMER 40,000

Horowitz lecture sparks controversy

HOROWITZ from page 1

Islamic jihad worse.

"Islamists are worse than the Nazis, because even the Nazis did not tell the world that they want to exterminate the Jews," he said. In another comparison to Nazis, he added, "there are good Muslims and bad Muslims just like there were good Germans and bad Germans."

After an hour of speaking, Horowitz took questions. Numerous students asked him about the conflict between Israel and Palestine, to which Horowitz responded heatedly. "The Palestinians are Nazis. Every one of their elected officials are terrorists."

He spoke of how the countries in the Middle East were created and had no right to the lands that now make up Israel. "The Jews were attacked. They had every right to expel every Arab from both Israel and, when they were attacked in '67, from the West Bank."

Zamil Akhtar, president of the UMass Muslim Student Association, spoke of how every Muslim, himself included, did not support the jihad, and said, "You said that you had not heard Muslims condemn the jihad. I can show you hundreds of Muslim scholars that disagree."

"You also spoke of genital mutilation," added Akhtar, "which is not a part of the culture – of my culture – as you said."

Horowitz asked if Akhtar would denounce Hamas, to which Akhtar responded he would, and retorted by asking Horowitz if he would denounce Ann Coulter's Islamophobic remarks, to which he responded, "It was a very apt satire."

On the differences between sex and gender, UMass student Ashley Lesperance tried to explain the differences between gender and sex.

"Gender is defined as socially constructed to oppress women, versus sex which is what you are born with; gender is what is in fact socially constructed," Lesperance told Horowitz.

Horowitz retorted by referencing former Harvard President Larry Summers, who drew criticism when he claimed women had lesser scientific abilities than women.

"Women possibly have a lower aptitude for math and science than men. And that's a gender difference. Women have a lower aptitude in mathematics than men, and that is a scientific fact," said Horowitz.

After a 30 minute question-and-answer of agitated remarks between the protesters and Horowitz, he told audience members lined at the microphone that he was finished answering questions and was escorted out of the room by his bodyguard.

Michelle Williams can be reached at mnwillia@student.umass.edu.

ASHLEY LESPERANCE/COLLEGIAN

The UMass Republican Club hosted a lecture by conservative author David Horowitz Tuesday night, which drew a number of protesters.

GARDASIL®
[Human Papillomavirus Quadrivalent (Types 6, 11, 16, and 18) Vaccine, Recombinant]

INTERESTED IN GARDASIL?

GARDASIL IS WIDELY AVAILABLE AND MANY PRIVATE INSURANCE PLANS* COVER IT.

TALK TO YOUR CAMPUS HEALTH CENTER OR OTHER HEALTH CARE PROFESSIONAL.

You are encouraged to report negative side effects of prescription drugs to the FDA. Visit www.fda.gov/medwatch or call 1-800-FDA-1088.

While your insurance company may reimburse for GARDASIL, your eligibility for coverage and reimbursement for GARDASIL depends on your individual insurance benefit. You can contact your insurance company for details on coverage for GARDASIL.

MERCK

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

Senioritis and its impact

Nick Milano

I thought senioritis was a term meant only for high schoolers. After getting into the college of one's dreams, it becomes much harder to sit through high school classes that no longer have any meaning whatsoever. There may be some incentive if they are Advanced Placement classes, with the exams bearing down, but otherwise, it's a time to sit back and coast – especially once the weather gets warm. College is a different story, however.

Or so I thought.

Grade point average actually is a big deal, unfortunately. Graduating Magna Cum Laude really does have its benefits for graduate school, law school or even just for opening doors. Thus, there is an incentive to work up until the end.

Or so I thought.

What really has happened this year is something a little different altogether. In fact, it is not much different from high school. Going to a high school directly in the city of Boston makes it hard to find the motivation to wake up at 6 a.m. every morning and get to school. I was lucky enough to snag a job in the Red Sox front office that was willing to pay me overtime. It got to the point where I would skip out on school to go to work. The decision was between hanging out at Fenway Park or going to Chemistry with a teacher who could not care less. This was a pretty easy call. There were many other distractions, the Fenway movie theater, basketball or just causing trouble downtown.

Four years later, there are fewer distractions – this being Western Massachusetts – but just as little incentive to get to class. A thesis will not just write itself, although too many hours have already been wasted begging the computer gods for something to just happen.

The worst part is, though, I screwed up. The approach I took to college is not something I would recommend. So, for any underclassmen, heed the warning signs. This may be late for a what-not-to-do column about the creeping disease of senioritis, or a little early for a note from a departing senior, but it's the peak of the semester, mid-terms are approaching and my burning desire to learn is fading. Fast.

Two things should be required of incoming freshmen. First, they should be forced to understand the extent of the general education requirements. Sure, we were beat to death with it at orientation, but a little more of a beating would help. Second, they should be given an extensive crash course on SPIRE. There should be tutorials about how to take one class and make it apply for various different uses. In my case, it is not my inability to work the system, but an unwillingness to pay any attention to it. This mistake should be avoided at all costs.

When choosing classes, it is better to get required stuff out of the way, as soon as possible. This must not fall on deaf ears. Get them done. Taking a language requirement, a Global Education requirement and a Physical Science requirement course along with an Honors Capstone course is not the desired path, especially when an Astronomy test and a thesis draft are due on the same day. Today.

When choosing classes, it is better to get required stuff out of the way, as soon as possible. This must not fall on deaf ears.

In high school, there is very little room to maneuver when it comes to classes. In college, there is near complete independence. I took classes that appealed to me. History courses on Africa, the Middle East and Ireland were all interesting and helped create my worldview – down with England! But due to my own inability to work SPIRE, I will graduate one class short of a History minor. I have more political science courses that count for nothing on my transcript than political science minors are probably required to take.

I always defended this approach to college, and will continue to do so to some extent, but with the stress of a thesis and a parental requirement to graduate Magna Cum Laude, I have begun questioning my decisions.

Waking up everyday to attend two classes that will do absolutely nothing for me has resulted in creeping senioritis.

From one stressed senior to future stressed seniors, measure twice, cut once.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

Fed/Up?
Ed/Op.
editorial@dailycollegian.com

Why not be naked?

Leigh Greaney

There is an expression that sweeps over a person's face whenever something comes along and knifes their bubble. Awkward chills creep up their spine and they start to cringe, pulling away their eyes or their body from whatever irks them. This is an understandable reaction – sometimes.

For instance, when you were young, you might have heard something questionable coming from your parents' bedroom. Good time to cringe.

Another good time is when you're at a bar and some incoherent person starts to rub up on you. This always warrants an unpleasant smirk. However, there are times that people get these same reactions from things that are just not as bad.

Society has plastered a memo into our brains to tell us not to like it and to feel estranged by it.

We're socialized to believe – personally – that certain things people do should not be done in front of us. But does it have to be personal?

Huge reason for society to freak out number one: naked people. If you're home alone watching naked people on your own time, it's no big deal. If you're looking at your significant other, it's no big deal.

Yet, you see your housemate in their underwear and – oh my god, life as you know it is more awkward than it was moments ago.

Take off the underwear and it's a mini heart attack.

Why, though? What's so weird? Chances are it's nothing you haven't seen before. It's just a bunch of skin thrown off a few bones and some muscles. What's the big deal? Furthermore, aren't we supposed to see the body as beautiful – because isn't it?

This is somehow Adam and Eve's fault; if not, it's John Milton's. Supposedly it was their nakedness that caused them to feel shame after the fall of man, and now this is the world we live in. We see a pair of boobs on TV and children's eyes get covered, and girlfriends shoot boyfriends evil stares for looking too long or liking it too much. It's crazy.

In Zulu culture, women let their breasts hang free when they're single. It doesn't matter what she looks like – short, tall, fat, skinny, hot, not. It doesn't matter. Zulu people don't associate beauty or even sexuality with breasts.

The back of the upper thigh is their hot spot and that stays covered. Seeing the booty shorts that people wear around here in the summer would drive a Zulu man wild. It's all skin – so what assigns shame to showing it off?

Someone just decided that when they're sitting on Cape Cod National Seashore they don't want to see below a point immediately above the top of a woman's areola? C'mon.

What if you just don't like wearing restricting clothes? It can be uncomfortable. What if you're hot and want to cool off a little? You could turn on the air conditioning or you could just take your shirt off. Guys do it. Why not girls? Who decided it's overly sexual – some Biblical fairytale character?

The upper thigh Zulu fetish seems to be the opposite for men. When people see the upper thigh of a man, cringing almost always ensues.

This is most likely because men's bathing suits cover that area up and during the summer there are these gauche contrast lines barring upper thigh from mid-thigh (unless of course, you're in Europe).

Once again, who cares? If it's hot out, people should be allowed to be comfortable without feeling guilty for it. You see yourself naked. Hopefully that doesn't make you nervous. It's the lens you put on when you look at other people that makes it sexual or not.

You have the power to decide for yourself.

Well, except for the fact that it's illegal in public. Say you want to go skinny dipping while on vacation on the Cape Cod National Seashore this summer. Not okay with the law.

Chapter 272, Section 7.67 of the General Laws of Massachusetts in Part IV of the Crimes, Punishments and Proceedings in Criminal Cases reads, "Public nudity, including public nude bathing, by any person on Federal land or water within the boundaries of Cape Cod National Seashore is prohibited.

Public nudity is a person's intentional failure to cover with a fully opaque covering that person's own genitals, pubic areas, rectal area, or female breast below a point immediately above the top of the areola when in a public place."

Who decided this?

It's so specific.

This required some serious thought. Someone just decided that when they're sitting on Cape Cod National Seashore they don't want to see below a point immediately above the top of a woman's areola? C'mon.

We should decide how naked we want to be. Your body is your body.

If you want to skinny dip this summer, you should be able to decide – not Massachusetts.

Leigh Greaney is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu.

SGA is not a lost cause, it just needs a fix

Jarred Rose

For many years now, the Student Government Association (SGA) on campus has not been an effective body for students.

Meant to represent 20,000 students to the administration and state, the SGA has been the mouthpiece for only a very small number of voters and active RSOs who try to influence the elections.

This body is one that has been on campus for many, many years. It has done some very good things and some very stupid things. In fact, in the 1920s the SGA passed an Act saying that freshman were not allowed to wear mustaches or smoke (yet they had to carry around matches for the upper classmen). It was strictly enforced (seriously).

My point is that the SGA is not a lost cause. Far from it. It is a great group with a lot of potential. However, there are some things that need to be fixed inside the organization itself before it can reach that potential.

First, the students on campus need to elect a President with experience inside the SGA itself. I know the argument against this: "wouldn't it be better for an outsider who hasn't been corrupted to come in and change it like that?" No, it wouldn't. The reason for this is that the SGA President is a highly administrative job, much more so than I believe many people realize.

When the candidates are running, they are filled with energy and ideas about how they are going to change this and that, and everything will be wonderful. Yet when they get the job, they suddenly realize that the realities of the presidency are far different than they thought. They spend the first eight months of their job just figuring out what their job is.

Elect a president who knows how the SGA functions, who is committed to representing everyone – not just a select group – on campus, and one who is willing to work with the Senate on legislation. This will drastically improve the course of the SGA.

This brings me to my second point. In the 1970s, the Board of Trustees created a document that separated the power of the UMass campuses into three groups: the administration, the faculty and the students. It gave each of these groups select powers. The whole idea was that these three groups would have to work together to get things done.

In the 1920s the SGA passed an Act saying that freshman were not allowed to wear mustaches or smoke (yet they had to carry around matches for the upper classmen). It was strictly enforced (seriously).

One of the mentalities that has affected the SGA in the past was what I call the "independent mind-set." This is the belief that the SGA must remain independent of both of these groups. Now, let me be clear: I agree with this idea. The administration should not dominate the SGA and vice versa. There must be a partnership between the groups.

The administration has the legal authority to do almost anything on campus, and they are not going to seek out the students' involvement or voice. The students must work with the administration to accomplish its goals. For example, which do you think would more successfully persuade the campus to buy from local farms? 1) Passing a Senate resolution saying that we demand it, or 2) Working with someone from food services, doing research, coming up with concrete reasons for making the change, and delivering it to the administration?

The involvement of your residential Senators is my third point.

In case it is not obvious by now, I am an SGA insider. In fact, I am one of the Senate's committee chairs. This article isn't about calling anyone out in the SGA, because I can tell you quite honestly that I have made my fair share of mistakes since taking office.

Yet, for good or for ill, I am an involved Senator. The SGA has a great opportunity to do good work and many take full advantage of the job presented to them. But too many Senators do not. Too many members of the Senate and other SGA bodies go to the meetings, do a project or two when it is required of them and are otherwise not very active. Many readers won't believe it, but the SGA is a lot of work and getting people who are willing to do that work into these roles is extremely important.

My fourth point is one of the most important tasks for the SGA: boosting student involvement in both the governing process and the issues on campus. One of the most important ways we can do this is simply to turn out more voters in our elections. With only 12 percent of the student body voting, how can the SGA claim to be representative? It is my belief that an online voting system would rectify this.

If more people are involved in the voting process, more people will pay attention to the SGA and therefore cast better-informed votes.

However, this is not the only way to involve the people. There are many ways to improve the SGA, but the best start is simple. It is the cornerstone of a democratic government: elections.

The SGA is an important group on campus. It represents the only truly democratic voice of the students on campus. Now is the time to take that group, fix these problems and make the SGA a group that the University's students can cheer about now and for many years to come.

Jarred Rose is a UMass student and SGA Senator. He can be reached at jrose@student.umass.edu.

From a recovering addict: how to fix your money-hungry problem

Shane Cronin

I woke up a bit later than planned on a recent weekday morning. I had an eight o'clock economics class, and I needed a little sustenance to settle my stomach.

I didn't have enough time to enjoy a proper breakfast at the Worcester Dining Commons, so I headed toward Cafe Pura Vida in the Campus Center. I hadn't bought coffee or pastries in a few weeks, so I didn't mind spending the dough.

There was no line. One of the employees was filling the cases with freshly baked pastries.

The aroma of organic roasted beans wafted from the urns. The cafe had just opened for the day. So I walked up to the cashier.

"Hi, may I have a blueberry muffin?" I asked her.

"Sure."

I saw that she reached for a small bag in which to wrap the muffin, and I interjected.

"I don't even need a bag. Thanks, but it's not going to last that long," I lamely joked.

The cashier handed me the pastry in a piece of tissue paper, and I extracted two one dollar bills from my wallet assuming that would more than cover the cost of it. After punching a few buttons on the register she said, "Two forty -"

"Excuse me?"

I couldn't believe the price of such an itty-bitty muffin! At Dunkin' Donuts, muffins are twice the size and about 25 percent cheaper (I won't delve into the subject of calories). I paid for the muffin, but decided to forgo the cup of joe, lest I had to start a tab.

Most of you are probably familiar with the prices at Cafe Pura Vida. Being new to the University this semester however, that was my first experience as a patron. I considered skipping my class, rationalizing that the early morning transaction was as valuable a lesson in economics as any I hoped to learn in the lecture hall.

Before you brand me as parsimonious, hear me out.

I'm a recovering coffee snob. I used to be a Starbucks regular. But last spring, when I began working full time, I needed to make tough budgetary cuts in order to meet a self-set savings goal.

My morning (and sometimes evening as well) ritual was among the first to be pruned. Nine months into my twelve-step recovery, and I conservatively estimate my savings to be at a bare minimum: $720. (This is assuming I bought coffee-pastry five days per week spending four dollars in each transaction over a thirty-six week period.)

The first step: Admit you have a problem.

I tried fruitlessly to stop buying coffee in the past. About ten days in, I'd fall off the wagon.

But after nearly a year into the program, I feel confident I'm achieving long-term success. Part of maintaining success, as any recovering addict should be able to tell you, is helping others kick their habits.

The first step: Admit you have a problem (I jest).

Step two: It's a decision. That's what Oprah always says. You've got to make the decision to stop splurging on coffee.

Step three: Buy a coffee maker if you don't already have one. I bought one last year from Walgreens for ten bucks! No, it isn't equipped with all the bells and whistles, but it gets the job done. I dare say there are scores of neglected coffee makers accessible campus-wide. I saw two sitting next to one another atop a file cabinet in a T.A.'s office the other day. They looked like they hadn't been used since the Clinton Administration.

Step four: Invest in a reusable thermos. Eliminating the use of paper cups is another easy way to save some cash. If you don't have a thermos hiding in an empty kitchen cabinet, they are available in abundance at off-price retailers in the neighborhood of five dollars.

Step five: I know, I know. Making it at home just isn't the same thing as... (insert Dunkin' Donuts, Starbucks, Black Sheep). Get over it. Use the Lenten season as inspiration. Even if you're not Catholic like myself, Lent can be a great motivator to "give up" something, or to start a healthy trend. Yes, we're a week or so into it, but there's still about a month left. Most retail brewers sell their coffee by the pound. A ten dollar bag of Starbucks Coffee can last the average daily drinker a few weeks. Also take note of the variety of regular and flavored coffees brewed at the dining commons everyday.

I'm not suggesting you should boycott coffee shops. I'll be the first to admit I enjoy sitting down with a book and a latte at Rao's, observing the abundance of yuppies laboring over their Macbook Pros, the future Arthur Millers of the world. The key is to make it an occasion, not a routine.

Final step: Take it one day at a time. See how you feel after a week. And after thirty days you'll be in the clear and with a few extra bucks in your pocket. I bet you'll even prefer brewing at home. Best of luck!

Shane Cronin is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at scronin@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS LIVING

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Originally written by Eve Ensler, "The Vagina Monologues" premieres at the Bowker Auditorium tonight at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $5 for students and $10 for the general public.

'Monologues' delve into gender, sexuality

By Elyse Horowitz and Marianne Kim
Collegian Staff

They meet every Sunday as an entire group, with a supplemental smaller meeting during the week, to discuss one thing: their vaginas.

The cast of the "Vagina Monologues," coming to Bowker Auditorium tonight and Friday at 7:30 p.m., has been rehearsing for just under a month, and is made up of over 40 women. While most are University of Massachusetts students, members also include staff from the Everywoman's Center, a haven for students of any gender expression to turn to for help.

The "Vagina Monologues" was originally written by Eve Ensler, who based the show on the findings of personal interviews with over 200 women. The first draft was authored in 1996, and has since been rewritten in over 45 languages and performed in over 120 countries, according to information given by cast members.

With the "Vagina Monologues," Ensler also began a global movement in response to violence against women and girls, which has adopted the name V-day. According to their web site, V-day has raised millions of dollars for new educational, protective and legislative efforts around the world, as well as becoming a means of spreading awareness of sexual violence. However, the most meaningful aspect of V-day is the celebration of women and their right to thrive, rather than suffer.

"The Vagina Monologues" production headlining at UMass chronicles over two dozen different accounts of women's life experiences with their vaginas.

In one such piece, the audience is confronted with the issue of using women as sex slaves, a problem which occurred during the war in Japan many years ago, but remains a prevalent issue to this day in Congo. However, there is also the contrast of these serious and upsetting subjects with more humorous ones.

"It's got the whole package," said Kayla Fasano, a sophomore microbiology major. Although this will be her first on-stage appearance, she remains calm about the opening of the show, saying how moved she was when she first viewed the show and became inspired to be involved.

Fasano said the original production includes only one woman per monologue; however, because so many students auditioned for the show, which took place over three nights last semester, more than one performer is on stage for each piece.

Although the cast is large, there is still a diversity of students in appearance, race and age, and each member brings their unique interpretation of the monologue to the stage, along with strength and pride.

According to one participant, a UMass graduate student, the show is compiled in a women-only space, since it is used to empower female sexuality.

Another member of the cast believes women often fear the idea of talking about their sexuality and need for pleasure. Instead, she says, many remain docile and use the mass market of female sexuality to hide behind because "it's easier than confronting our own issues," said Hannah Reuter.

"Confronting something like this in the 'Vagina Monologues' is really hard and emotional, and I think a lot of women try and avoid that."

Although the production is focused primarily on empowering and instilling confidence in women, men should not be deterred from attending the performance.

"The production isn't about man-hashing or man-hating or anything like that. We actually have a few pieces that do talk about how good men can be," said performer Jennifer Hergus.

The "Vagina Monologues" cast hopes to open the audience's eyes to the struggles women face living in a predominantly male environment.

In this sense, sophomore cast member Samantha Creed believes men will "be empowered by it to support the cause and really learn something from it."

Despite common hesitation when talking about women's sexual pleasure, the "Vagina Monologues" is a production which tries to promote the idea that open discussion about this topic should not be seen as taboo. It is a step towards embracing female sexuality, as well as encouraging women to love their vaginas.

Elyse Horowitz can be reached at ehhorowi@student.umass.edu.

Marianne Kim can be reached at Mariannek@student.umass.edu.

Staging a 'Coup'

By Brendan Murphy
Collegian Staff

Part two of the four-part epic series "Battle for Chile" was screened last Wednesday, Feb. 17, at Food for Thought Books in downtown Amherst. Titled "The Coup d'etat," the screening covered the armed forces' actions, plotting measures, and the fatal bombing campaign staged against Salvador Allende in Santiago, Chile on September 11, 1973.

"Coup d'etat" opens with gunshots fired and utter chaos on the streets of the capital city. The U.S. and the Chilean opposition have failed to unseat the democratically-elected socialist president, Salvador Allende, through constitutional measures. The only way to preserve U.S. interests in Chile – such as gathering continued revenue from the newly-nationalized copper mines – is to take Allende out with a coup.

The shots fired in the opening scene were from a breakaway regiment of the armed forces, part of a preliminary coup attempt in the early summer of 1973.

Due to uncertainty and poor planning, the assault on the presidential palace is quickly quelled by loyal troops, led by General Araya Peters. Peters is later assassinated for accidentally discovering the final coup plot. Meanwhile, members of the fascist "Homeland and Freedom" front, funded by the CIA, reveal their compliance in the coup by taking refuge in the Ecuadorian embassy.

Following the unsuccessful coup attempt, Allende rejects calls from his party members, the Popular Unity party, to temporarily close Congress. At this time in Chilean history, the military is primarily a right-wing organization; Allende and the Popular Unity party are far on the left. The lack of armed forces is distressing to the socialists on the left, and their only weapon to combat the mounting opposition is the nationalization of key industries.

A Chilean official was quoted saying, "Seizing lands and factories is a proper response to rightist sedition."

The socialists in Chile represented the masses – they carried out the will of the middle and lower classes, which comprised most of the population. Chilean government is structured similar to the U.S., with executive, legislative and judicial branches. Within Chile, the right represented the wealthy and powerful classes, as well as the interests of the U.S. Due to an economic blockade much like the one the U.S. imposed on Cuba during the height of the Cold War, there is a shortage of key items and food that hampered the efforts of the socialists. This was put in place as a response to nationalization of copper mines and the election of a socialist president.

Secretary of State Henry Kissinger was quoted shortly after the election of Allende saying, "I don't see why we need to stand by and watch a country go communist due to the irresponsibility of its own people."

This reflects where U.S. interests lay, and America's fervent intolerance of communism around the world.

In response to the mounting opposition, Allende worked to garner support from loyal officers in case of civil war. He established a new cabinet to gain some stability and incorporate opposition voices into his policies.

Meanwhile, the armed forces were busy performing raids on towns and villages, searching for any weapons that could be used against opposition forces organized by the right. The military, fearing that armed factions might resist a coup, set forth to prevent their formation by any means necessary.

Eventually, Allende was forced to incorporate top military officers to key cabinet posts as a compromise. Ultimately, this sealed his fate – officers he thought were loyal turned out to be quite the opposite. He elected Augusto Pinochet – later the leader of the successful coup and one of the most brutal dictators in history – to head the army's branch.

Part two of "The Battle for Chile" ends with the air force bombing of the presidential palace. Jet fighters demanded Allende's resignation, but he refused. Fire in the windows of the palace left viewers with a spine chilling scene. The next scene showed Augusto Pinochet and his generals' television address announcing the formation of a ruling military junta. His dictatorial first speech was riddled with "re-establishment of order" and "our patriotic duty" in reference to unseating President Allende.

Screenings of the "Battle for Chile" series take place at 7 p.m. at Food for Thought Books on Main street, Amherst.

Brendan Murphy can be reached at brendanm@student.umass.edu

New adaptation 'springs' to life

By Alissa Mesibov
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Theater Department's first play of the semester, "Spring Awakening," opens tonight at the Curtain Theater.

"Spring Awakening" tells the story of young teenagers in 1890s Germany. They struggle to deal with their changing bodies and emerging sexualities in a world of complete sexual repression. Without sufficient guidance from the adults in their lives, the teenagers are forced to learn from experience, and must face the consequences of their actions.

"Spring's Awakening," as it was originally titled, was first published in 1891 by German playwright Frank Wedekind. However, it was not performed in Berlin until 1906. The play was considered extremely controversial by contemporaries when it premiered due to its inclusion of young adult sexuality, rape, implied incest, homosexuality and childhood death. As a result, performances of the play were often banned.

Even today, the themes explored in "Awakening" could be deemed controversial. The play's most recent incarnation was the 2006 Broadway musical, directed by Michael Mayer. The play was nominated for 11 Tony awards, of which it won eight. Like previous productions, it did not escape criticism for its controversy.

UMass student Gregory Boover, who stars in the campus production, said, "I feel like when you're watching this play, you're watching what goes on behind closed doors."

This production also features a new adaptation by director Toby Bercovici and dramaturge Emily Denison, both graduate students in the Theater Department.

Bercovici and Denison chose to write a new adaptation, because "none of the other adaptations had everything. There wasn't one that put it all together," Denison said.

A key difference between this adaptation and its predecessors is that the actors who play teenagers also double as the adult characters.

"We see the kids who are going to grow up to be like their parents," said Bercovici.

"It is a very physical representation of this cycle," Denison added.

Additionally, this production runs 55 minutes long, as opposed to the original, which could run two and a half hours or more, according to Bercovici.

"We take the spirit of it, and make it more shocking, relatable and funny for today," Bercovici said.

Tonight's performance will also include a question and answer session with Bercovici, cast members and other members of the production team.

"Spring Awakening" plays Feb. 25 through Feb. 27, plus March 2 through March 6 at 8 p.m. There are 2 p.m. matinees on Feb. 27 and March 6. All performances are at the Curtain Theater. Tickets are $15 for general admission and $7 for students and seniors. Tickets can be purchased at the Fine Arts Center box office, by phone at 545-2511 or or by visiting the box office.

Alissa Mesibov can be reached at amesibov@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY HIT ENTERTAINMENT

Directed by Nick Park, "A Matter of Loaf and Death" is just one of several Oscar-nominated animated film shorts to be screened at Amherst Cinema.

Oscar-nominated short films screened at Amherst Cinema

By Mark Schiffer
Collegian Staff

Every year, the Oscars come and go. You root for the one or two films with artistic integrity that have been nominated, and you laugh as "Thank You" speeches are abruptly cut short. And yet, one category always seems to pass by unnoticed: the short films.

Fortunately, Amherst Cinema is screening both the Live-Action and Animated short films nominated for Oscars before the ceremony airs on March 7. For your benefit, here is a guide to the Animated Short Film Oscar nominees for 2010.

1. "French Roast" (Dir: Fabrice O. Joubert): This quirky and warm morality tale is told predominately without dialogue. It begins with the story of an upper-class cafe patron overly concerned with saving face when he misplaces his wallet.

2. "Granny O' Grimm's Sleeping Beauty" (Dir: Nicky Phelan and Darragh O'Connell): Bringing to mind such stories as "The Stinky Cheese Man," this all-too-brief cartoon features a cantankerous grandmother and her take on the classic story of Sleeping Beauty. Although slim, the laughs this film inspire are something to contend with. And with an effective combination of hand-drawn animation and CGI, this may in fact end up being the dark horse of the category.

3. "The Lady and the Reaper" (Dir: Javier Recio Gracia): This Spanish parable of mortality feels more slight than it probably should. "Reaper" is the story of an elderly woman ready to pass into the next life; it comes to a head when the specter of death finds himself at odds with a doctor with a Matthew Shepard-esque degree of obligation to patients. Although it solicits a chuckle or two from the audience, "The Lady and the Reaper" feels like little more than a Saturday morning cartoon when it reaches its close.

4. "A Matter of Loaf and Death" (Dir: Nick Park): It's not surprising that the new "Wallace & Gromit" is the most deserving of these nominees for the Oscar. What is surprising is that, with his latest effort, Nick Park has surpassed himself artistically on almost every level.

He has gone past simply paying homage to Alfred Hitchcock with his dog and inventor main characters. Instead, he has created something almost on the same level of quality. It is difficult not to be won over by this world of high-flying action and joy.

5. "Logorama" (Dir: Nicolas Schmerkin): Although it's easy to see what's laudable about this film, it is nothing that this reviewer would like to stand behind. What we have here is an empty satire, which populates Los Angeles entirely with logos and mascots from recognizable companies.

From there, director Nicolas Schmerkin proceeds to manipulate these images into a typical Los Angeles-based action film, complete with an earthquake at the close which knocks the city into the ocean. The conclusion of the film seems to be about consumerism and its contributions to the recession. But as a whole, it does little but leave a sour taste in one's mouth.

Rounding out the program were three shorts which were described as "highly commendable" by the Cinema's staff. The most recognizable of these was Pixar's "Partly Cloudy," which you may remember as the introduction to last year's "Up," which is currently nominated for best picture. The other two, "Runaway" and "The Kinematograph," were divergent, covering the realms of energetic slapstick-based British comedy and powerful, would-be naturalistic drama, respectively.

It is surprising that none of these films were nominated, especially with the clout that Pixar has been holding around Oscar-time every year.

One would think that, with their at least partial manipulation of form for their own purposes which is something that much of the nominees for this year lack – they would practically be shoo-ins for the Academy.

But that is neither here nor there. If you feel like an incredibly entertaining night of animation, this is a program you shouldn't miss. You will laugh, be moved and maybe even be won over by the bitter satire of "Logorama." But be forewarned: If you are planning on bringing your children to this program, be sure to leave before the last short ("Logorama") begins. It contains vulgar language and graphic comic violence. You will probably be better off, as it is without question the weakest of the nominees.

Mark Schiffer can be reached at mschiffe@student.umass.edu.

Scorsese's 'Island' will make you shudder

Atmospheric tensions, eerie cinematography make ominous thriller a Gothic horror classic

By Nick Ortolani
Collegian Staff

Martin Scorsese's "Shutter Island" is a movie that builds with such foreboding that it reminds its audience what good horror movies can be. During its nearly two and a half hours, there is never a moment where the tension is released. From the first frames, something feels wrong, and Scorsese never lets go.

A U.S. Marshal, Teddy Daniels (Leonardo DiCaprio), is sent with his partner Chuck (Mark Ruffalo) to investigate the mysterious disappearance of a patient at Ashecliffe hospital, located on the ominous Shutter Island. The asylum houses some of the most severe cases of the criminally insane, and the island itself is only reachable by ferry. The boatman who escorts Teddy and Chuck across the harbor seems determined to leave as quickly as possible.

They are met by Officer McPherson (John Caroll Lynch), who explains the layout of the institution; Ward A is for male prisoners, Ward B for female prisoners. Looming in the background is an old Civil War fort which houses ward C. This is where the most dangerous patients are kept, and it cannot be entered without the presence of McPherson and the chief psychiatrist, Dr. John Crawley (Ben Kingsley).

Immediately, the movie raises numerous questions. Why is Ward C so isolated? Why was Teddy Daniels assigned to this case? Is anyone at Ashecliffe telling the truth? Part of Scorsese's mastery with "Shutter Island" is that he does not rush to answer these questions. Even when a question is answered, more present themselves, and the mystery of the island perpetuates itself.

The film also effectively creates a truly terrifying atmosphere. The asylum and its surrounding areas seem straight out of a gothic horror novel – fitting, as the same aura permeates Dennis Lehane's novel of the same name, from which the film has been adapted. It's easy to see how one could get lost within Ashecliffe's walls, or how one could go mad just from being there. Cinematographer Robert Richardson creates an ambiance which is sweeping yet deliberate, showing the audience only what it needs to see. Robbie Robertson's pounding score is reminiscent of Bernard Herrmann, and is right at home in this setting.

There are several performances that add to the suspense of the piece. DiCaprio, in the lead role, plays Teddy as a man who is never quite at ease, and this is apparent. No answers seem to be enough for him, and it becomes clear that he has brought a great deal of his own emotional baggage to the island. Ben Kingsley's Dr. Crawley is effectively creepy. He seems like he cares for his patients, but his eerie smile suggests some other motive. Likewise, as DiCaprio's unseasoned partner, Ruffalo comes off as uncomfortable and squirrely, as if he is hiding something.

Yet the true star of the piece is Scorsese's direction. He shows his audience the grotesque in an unapologetic manner. Every frame holds some possible clue to the mystery, but nothing is truly solved until the end, and, even then, the audience is left wondering. His only misstep is his use of dream sequences, frequently involving Daniels' deceased wife Dolores (Michelle Williams). The scenes can be a bit clumsy at times; Scorsese does not have mastery over dreams in the way that, say, David Lynch does. They can be quite effective at times, but at others they seem to reveal too much.

Still, those are the few and forgivable flaws of the piece, and Scorsese's mastery of the genre remains rather consistent. These days, most horror movies provide a little tension, followed by a quick visceral scare, and then a release. Scorsese, however, builds the suspense slowly and meticulously through the whole movie.

As an audience, it is truly difficult to predict what will come next, and that is genuinely frightening. In this sense, it is easy to see quite a bit of Hitchcock in "Shutter Island." The film knows how to hold on to the tension, refusing to release the audience from its grasp, to the point where it can be (in the best way) unbearable. The film also knows how to betray the audience's trust.

"Shutter Island" is a true horror film, faithful to the roots of the genre. It builds its suspense in the mind, and the fear lasts longer than a brief moment. Scorsese keeps his audience guessing, and this makes the film creepily effective.

Nick Ortolani can be reached at nortolan@student.umass.edu.

Saddened by the loss of his wife Dolores (Michelle Williams) in a mysterious apartment fire, U.S. Marshal Teddy Daniels (Leonardo DiCaprio) is a perennially downtrodden character.

Director Martin Scorsese has been at the helm of many modern day classics, including "Taxi Driver" and 1980's "Raging Bull." With "Shutter Island" – adapted from the novel of the same name by Dennis Lehane – Scorsese displays his mastery over the genre film.

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St. • 413-253-7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Providing the best off-campus living experience
24 hour maintenance
Safe Apartments
Friendly Staff
Two Great Locations:
Amherst Center and Hobart Lane
We start showing apartments
Feb. 3rd from 11:30am – 4:30pm M-F

Summer Sciences at UVM

Study in beautiful Vermont this summer. With tons of science courses in medical, health, biological & physical sciences offered at UVM, you can focus on the requirements you really need and still be a short walk from downtown Burlington! Post-baccalaureate summer premedical programs also available.

Register today and take advantage of the 15% Summer '10 Tuition Savings at uvm.edu/summer/umass.

Reasons for you to Think Summer U
- Online classes
- Transferable credits
- Four summer sessions
- Housing available
- Special interest programs
- Graduate on time
- Smaller class sizes

Think Summer U

Catch up. Get ahead. Save 15%.

The University of Vermont Summer University

Online Elections

SGA

ELECTION DATES
MARCH 9, 10, 11

VOTE ONLINE VIA CAMPUS PULSE
OR
VOTE AT CAMPUS CENTER
BETWEEN 11AM- 5PM

Online Elections

Benton, Hill to be honored at senior night

By Steve Levine

The abundant youth on the Massachusetts women's basketball team has been the story from the start of the season.

However, that will not be the case tonight as UMass will honor two of the most important players as they play their last games at the Mullins Center. seniors Diondra Hill and Kim Benton.

Hill saw considerable action coming off the bench in her freshman year, helping her team to a 20-10 overall record and a sixth place finish in the Atlantic 10.

Hill was forced to undergo season-ending surgery the following year, allowing her to become a redshirt sophomore in 2008-2009, when she started 29-of-30 games.

Redshirt junior Megan Zullo is expected to take the reigns next season with the graduation of Kim Benton.

Although she averaged 5.3 points per game as a redshirt sophomore, Hill was never known for her scoring touch. It was the other parts of her game that shined through, allowing her to become a fixture in the Minutewomen lineup night after night.

Hill posted career-highs in points with 158, rebounds with 111, assists with 87 and steals with 30 last year. Altogether, the statistics came together to illuminate an all-around player who averaged 5.3 points per game, 3.7 rebounds, 2.9 assists and one steal.

It was Hill's overall ability that earned her another starting spot in the lineup this season, where she continues to impress.

Hill has started all 27 games thus far, averaging 34 minutes per game to go with 5.7 rebounds, 3.9 assists and 1.5 steals. She has helped UMass achieve elite status at the free throw line as well, shooting 86.2 percent from the charity stripe.

Her best game this season came against Saint Louis on Jan. 13, when she led the Minutewomen to victory by scoring a career-high 26 points to go along with 10 rebounds, five assists and four steals.

Kim Benton will also be honored during Senior Night. She made her debut for UMass on Nov. 10, 2006 against Vermont. She made her presence known immediately, registering seven points and two assists in 12 minutes off the bench. She also hit her first two 3-pointers, a facet of her game that currently resides in the Minutewomen record books.

Benton finished her freshman season in good form, averaging six points per game, along with 1.8 rebounds, 1.7 assists and 0.8 steals.

As a sophomore in the 2007-2008 season, Benton played in all 30 games for the Minutewomen, starting 16.

It wasn't until the following season when Benton's presence would truly be felt. As a junior in 2008-09, she started the first eight games of the season and then played considerable minutes off the bench. She finished the season with an average of 4.2 points per game, 1.7 rebounds and 1.8 assists.

This season, Benton is the team's primary point guard. She is having a career year, averaging 3.8 points per game, 2.5 rebounds, 2.9 assists and one steal.

Her best game came on opening night, when UMass upset Boston University in overtime at the Mullins Center. Benton registered 18 points, two rebounds, three assists and three steals in the match. Her Her

Benton is cemented in the UMass record books in three 3-point categories including: fifth most in a single season (50) in 2006-07, fourth in career 3-point field goals made (102) and 14th in 3-point field goal percentage (.309).

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu

Senior Kim Benton takes a 3-pointer during a game earlier this season. She will play her last game as a Minutewoman tonight against Saint Joseph's.

Minutewomen struggle with holding off Terrier offense

W LACROSSE from page 8

With under 20 minutes remaining, Landy scored her second goal to give BU an 8-4 lead. Nearly five minutes later, freshman Cori Murray scored the first goal of her career, in an attempt to mount a Minutewomen comeback.

The Terriers quickly ended any momentum UMass picked up on the goal, as Landy completed her own hat trick over a minute later to match Lyons.

Sophomore Colleen Mulligan then got into the books at the 12:05 mark, scoring her second goal of the season. Then, UMass' leading scorer finally got into the action, as Jesse O'Donnell scored her 10th and 11th goals of the season to cut the deficit back to one.

However, just as the Minutewomen worked their way back into the contest, Landy scored her fourth goal to give BU a comfortable two-score lead heading down the stretch.

Despite UMass' efforts to tie the game, the Terriers sat on the ball, passing it around in the final four minutes to kill the clock and preserve the 10-8 win.

"It's a game of momentum, and I felt we had it at certain times," Venechanos said. "It's frustrating, but the effort was there. BU is a very good team and they proved that they're calm and poised at the end of the game."

After allowing seven goals in the first half, the UMass defense played well and allowed three scores in the second half. Venechanos was pleased with her defense, but feels they have to play even better and not lean on the offense.

"I thought we did a good job on defense after the first half," she said. "We have to still work on the clearing, the ground balls, and make it easier for our attack. Next game we don't want to put so much pressure on the attack and force them to make every shot."

UMass is back in action on Saturday afternoon when it hosts Harvard in the second match of its four-game home stint.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

Draw controls playing large factor in ability to win games

FIRST HALF from page 8

first half, the Minutewomen still had trouble finding the back of the net.

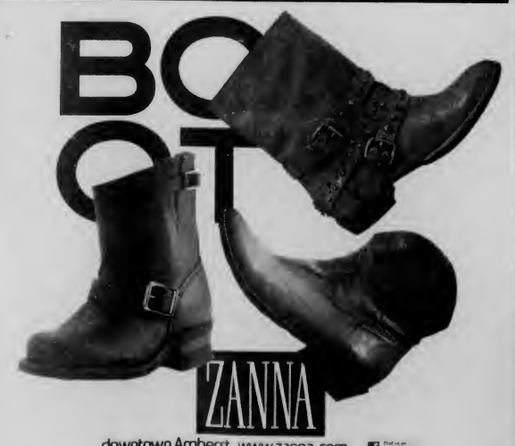
"We need a lot more people producing; we need some different girls stepping up," Venechanos said.

UMass led 6-5 in draw controls in its victory against Holy Cross (13-1 in the second half). In its win against Connecticut, the Minutewomen led by the same margin.

In the opening half of the loss against Northwestern, the Minutewomen were down 15-6 for draw controls.

Midfielder Haley Smith was absent from the first half against the Terriers. In the two wins for the Minutewomen this season, Smith has scored in the opening period of play. Though just like the loss against the Wildcats, Smith didn't produce.

"Other teams know we have a lot of threats," Venechanos said. "Haley is a huge part of our team, when she scores, or the midfielder scores, we're more dynamic. Merritt, Dayna, Haley, are all bonuses for us. If they score, it helps our attack out. Our midfielders do a lot of our dirty work, [and] they're part of our transition. Anytime they score, it's a bonus."



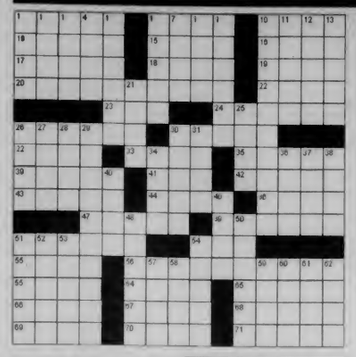
Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribner@student.umass.edu.

WANNA HOOK-UP?
FREE High Speed Internet and Expanded Cable
1, 2, 3, and 4 bedroom apartment homes
RESERVE YOUR APARTMENT TODAY!!!
SUGARLOAF ESTATES APARTMENT HOMES
28 River Road Sunderland
866-301-1445
www.sugarloafestates.com
ASPEN CHASE & ALPINE COMMONS
133 Belchertown Road Rt 9 Amherst
866-301-1445
www.aspenchaseapartments.com
www.alpinecommons.com
Heat, Water, Hot Water, Cable, Internet & Electricity in Select Units
The Best Deals - Most Apartments - Great Locations - Pet Friendly
FLEXIBLE LEASE TERMS
$$ MENTION THIS AD AND SAVE ON YOUR MOVE IN COSTS $$

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
BUY 6 BOTTLES OF WINE WITH YOUR REUSABLE FOUR SEASON WINE BAG AND RECEIVE 10% OFF
MORE REASONS TO SHOP FOUR SEASONS!

BEER * All beer prices plus deposit		LIQUOR		WINE All wine 750 ml except where noted
Corona & Corona Light 24 pk. btl.	$22.99*	Lagavulin 16yr 750 ml	$59.99	Black Box 3.0 lt All Varieties	$19.99
Coors Light 30 pk. can	$20.49*	Patron Anejo 750 ml	$52.99	Bogle Vinyards Phantom Red Blend	$18.99
Bud & Bud Light 18 pk. btl.	$13.99*	Dewars White Label Scotch 1.0 L	$25.99	Moon Dance Cellars Cabernet Sauvignon	$14.99
Keystone Light 30 pk. can	$12.99*	Wild Turkey 101 Proof 750 ml	$20.99	Layer Cake Malbec	$13.99
Busch & Busch Light 30 pk. btl.	$11.99*	Svedka Vodka 1.75 L	$19.99	The Velvet Devil Merlot	$10.99
Opa Opa Light Lager 12 pk. btl.	$10.99*	Admiral Nelsons Spiced Rum 1.75 L	$17.99	Blackstone Merlot	$10.99
Pabst Blue Ribbon 18 pk. can	$9.99*	Kracken Black Spiced Rum 750 ml	$16.99	Mark West Pinot Noir	$10.99
Honey Brown 12 pk. btl.	$9.99*	Southern Comfort 750 ml	$16.99	Santi Pinot Grigio	$10.99
Miller High Life 18 pk. btl.	$9.99*	UV Flavored Vodka 1.75 L	$16.99	Milbrandt Vineyards Riesling	$10.99
Rolling Rock 18 pk. btl.	$9.99*	Clan Macgregor 1.0 L	$10.99	Castle Rock Cabernet Sauvignon	$9.99
Narragansett 16 oz. - 6 pk can	2 for $9.98*	Duggans Irish Cream 750 ml	$10.99	Callia Alta Malbec	$8.99
Dogfish Head 6 pk. btl.	$9.99*	Popov Flavored Vodka 750 ml	$5.99	The Big Red Monster California Red Blend	$8.99

SALE 2/10 - 3/3
333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
584-8174 • Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM



BOOT

ZANNA
downtown Amherst www.zanna.com Find us on Facebook

25th ANNUAL HENRY JACOB MATHEMATICS COMPETITION
2010
MARCH 3, 2010 at 7:00 p.m. in Marcus 131
Sponsors: James Francis with Deutsche Bank
Roy Perdue with Solutions by Computer
FIRST PRIZE = $1600 CASH
SECOND PRIZE = $1000 CASH
THIRD PRIZE = $600 CASH
FOURTH PRIZE = $200 CASH
• Sign-up in room 1623-D LGRT by 3p.m., March 3rd and bring your UMass photo ID to competition.
• Competition is open to all Freshman and Sophomore degree students on the Amherst Campus.
• Continuing Education students and students who are closely related to members of the Math/Stat department are not eligible.

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

CROSSWORD

UMass... San Diego?
Take online classes anywhere this Summer
Registration begins March 15
Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net
UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

Sundays Open at NOON
LA PIAZZA
Best Deals in Town!!

ALL CALZONES	$4.99
ALL 12" SUBS	$4.99
ALL SALADS	$4.99
ALL ENTREES	$5.99
10" CHEESE PIZZA Each X-Tra topping .75	$4.99
12" CHEESE PIZZA Each X-Tra Topping $1	$5.99
16" CHEESE PIZZA Each X-Tra Topping $1.25	$6.99
16" CHEESE PIZZA + 10 WINGS (BONE)	$11.50
16" CHEESE PIZZA + 1/2Th WINGS (BONELESS)	$11.50

OCMP Free Delivery
(413) 253-6444
www.lapiazzaristorante.us

"Club Nights" at the MONKEY BAR
Thurs. 2/25 DJ BIGGZ
Thirsty Thursday.... Top 40, Hip-Hop, Dance, Techno
Fri. 2/26 DJ CONSTRUC
"The Return of Construc"
You've Seen Him Before... Need We Say More?
Sat. 2/27 SPECIAL GUEST DJ
McKnight Past Midnight
DRESS CODE: WELL DRESSED SEXY PEOPLE ONLY
Tues. 3/2 DJ BIGGZ
Techno Tuesday!
Rockstar Party - Promo Giveaways
413-259-1600
63 North Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
www.mymonkeybar.com
21+

WHAT'S ON TAP AT THE AMHERST BREWING COMPANY:
Every Thursday:
JOHN SHELDON'S MASTERS OF THE STRATOCASTER
DOWNSTAIRS 9 PM - 12 AM
Every Tuesday:
LOST IN HD
UPSTAIRS ON THE BIG SCREEN
Saturday, February 27th:
RYAN HOMMEL BAND
GUITAR PHENOM
DOWNSTAIRS 9PM - 12 AM
Wednesday, March 3rd:
SIERRA NEVADA BREWING!
BREWING CHEESE & BEER TASTING
WEDNESDAY MARCH 3RD 6PM - 8PM
Beers obtained on ABC events on facebook
24 NORTH PLEASANT ST. AMHERST
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

SNOWZEES
Bar & Guitar
Formerly Seven O's
Tue: Nintendo Wii Night
Wed: Karaoke Night
Thurs: DJ/Live Music
Fri: Earth Jams by Josh Wachtel
Sat: The Package - Rock & Roll at Its Best
Sun: Nascar - Free Food, Open Mic
[7 Minutes from UMass!]
1PM - 1AM - 7 Days a week
330 Amherst Rd.
SUNDERLAND, MA. 01237
413-665-8788

ACROSS

1. Back tooth
6. Information
10. Sail holder
14. Maxim
15. Goddess of discord (Greek mythology)
16. Reflected sound
17. Supposedly, a cat has nine
18. Tab
19. A natural satellite
20. Lacking the requisite qualities
22. Boast
23. Carry with difficulty
24. Things that happen
26. African antelope
30. Animal with a snout
32. Require
33. 3 feet
35. An analytic literary composition
39. Muscle spasm
41. Cover
42. Complain in a plaintive way
43. Any habitation at a high altitude
44. Where the sun rises
46. False god
47. Famous
49. Urgent request
51. A fine coating of oxide
54. One thousandth of an inch
55. Matures
56. Atheist
63. Breathe hard
64. Cog
65. Banish
66. Basilica area
67. Suspend in the air
68. Shampoo and
69. Lascivious look
70. Tall woody plant
71. A strong metal alloy

DOWN

1. Anagram of "Lima"
2. Chief Norse god
3. Magma
4. Matured
5. Sell again
6. Remove errors from
7. Operatic solo
8. Slant
9. Napping
10. Belonging to a team or group
11. Fruit of the oak tree
12. Young hog
13. Grasping tools
21. Jetty
25. Scene
26. Ancient Peruvian
27. No more than
28. Brandy flavor
29. Manage
30. Threesome
31. Talkes
34. Sheltered, nautically
36. Pro or con
37. Dwarf buffalo
38. Scream
40. Unskilled laborer
45. A dog wags this
48. Instructed
50. A gripping hand tool
51. Ordered by the pope
52. Open-mouthed
53. Anxious
54. Combine
57. Close
58. Curse
59. Not the entrance
60. Tarzan swung on this.
61. Ultimatum ender
62. Whirl

SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

Fun Fact:
There have been 4,286 Robins.

Hark! a Vagrant by K. Beaton harkavagrant.com

$1 rides within Amherst
(413) 306-8298

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
When courting someone that you admire, please refrain from asknq them if the jelly is in the donut.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
As you feverishly attempt to finish your next term paper, you will encounter the key to low-carb dieting: couch cushions.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Not only will T Pain buy you drink but he will also bake you a cake. Anything for his shortaaay.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
You are gonna look fly today. A cheezy 1990's slang allows you to pull it off. Go get jiggy wit it.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
It is Thursday which means you should really think about pencils and how they affect your lovelife.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Do you really need to wear that belt? It looks like something out of Wyatt Earp's summer 1923 hot shot collection.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
One way to fix things with you and your ex includes duct tape, lemon juice, and a squeeze bottle of mayo in a holster.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
What goes around comes around and stays around until it skips out on rent and gives you mensa.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Be more polite. Instead tell her that she looks great in outfits of sheer calamity, not destruction.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Somone owes somebody else a back massage over a candle light dinner of french fries. You better pay what you owe.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
The name on your birth certificate is not your real name. Your true identiy often rhymes with a synonym for "Oops!"

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Do not miss MTV's newest hit show, "Wangsta to Gangsta" hosted by Fred Durst and Lil' Romeo.

Mill Valley
Looking for a place to live next year?
APPLY DURING OUR OPEN HOUSE
$500 OFF Security
Choice of a $300 Visa Card or Wii & Wii Fit*
-PLUS-
A Whole Foods Gift Card - Just for showing up!*
Saturday, February 27th 11AM-3PM
360 Riverglade Drive, Apt. D
More info at 413-253-7377 - www.MillValleyApts.com
While supplies last, some restrictions apply

Puffin Stuff

			4	6		3
					5
		8				5	4	1
5		4		2			9
			5	1
3		1		8				2
	8				7
		9		3
		2						9

MONDAY - SATURDAY
Happy Hour - 1/2 Price Appetizers 9:30 - Close
EVERY THURSDAY:
Promo & Trivia Night
EVERYDAY:
$1.00 Drafts and $5 Movie Tickets!*
21ST BIRTHDAY:
Free Entree or Small Pizza with ID*
Hampshire Mall
Across from Cinemark
413-549-0077
FREE Delivery
ARIZONA PIZZA

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further...CAMP MATAPONI, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (samm crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders and more! Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com

FOR RENT

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

www.AmherstMARentals.com 413-549-1398

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends From $89 Complete. Montreal Express.Net MontrealBlowout.com 781-979-9001

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTHURSDAY

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 2010 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A look at 7 teams fighting to go 'Dancing'

Adam Miller

One of these things is not like the others.

The Atlantic Coast Conference, Big 12, Big East, Atlantic 10 and Big Ten are all predicted by ESPN bracketologist Joe Lunardi to have five or more teams going to the NCAA Tournament.

Out of the five mentioned conferences, the A-10 is the only one that isn't referred to as a Bowl Championship Series conference. In fact, the A-10 (five teams) has more of its members predicted to make the tournament than two of the six BCS conferences (Pacific-10 and Southeastern Conference) combined.

The A-10 has been the most exciting conference to watch all season. Two teams (Temple and Richmond) are in the Associated Press Top 25 Poll and seven of the teams in the conference have surprised the country either by unexpected success with their A-10 schedule (such as Saint Louis) or by rocking its non-conference schedule (such as Rhode Island).

Barring any monumental collapses, Richmond, Temple and Xavier will make the NCAA Tournament. The question is who else from the A-10 will make it. At this point, it looks like it will be five teams or six if the tournament committee decides to be generous towards the A-10, which in all likelihood won't happen.

Here is a look at the four teams currently on the bubble in order of highest RPI.

Rhode Island (20-6, 8-5 A-10, RPI: 26)

The Rams finished their non-conference schedule 12-1, and at one point of the season were receiving votes to be in the Top 25.

But they have yet to show they can compete with the best of the A-10, with losses to all four of the top teams in the conference. URI's best win of the season came on Jan. 2 against Oklahoma State.

The Rams helped themselves by blowing out Fordham, but that's to be expected of a team hoping to make the NCAA Tournament. Their last three games are against St. Bonaventure, Charlotte and Massachusetts.

If URI wins out the rest of the season, it should still find its way into March Madness.

Dayton (18-8, 7-5 A-10, RPI: 42)

For the Flyers, one possession may be the difference between the NCAA Tournament and the National Invitation Tournament.

After losing to Duquesne, 73-71, on ESPN2, Dayton finds itself going from nearly a lock, to a team that is fighting to hang on. It also has the roughest schedule at the end of the season any team can ask for with games against the No. 18 Owls and the No. 24 Spiders on the road.

To make things worse, it has to face the Billikens, who went from a young team on the rise to a serious consideration for the Big Dance.

In fact, the only team the Flyers play the rest of the season with more than three conference losses is the Minutemen.

While wins over Georgia Tech, Old Dominion and Xavier will help Dayton's chances of getting an at-large bid, it either needs to pull a few upsets at the end of the season or make a strong case during the A-10 Tournament. Probably both.

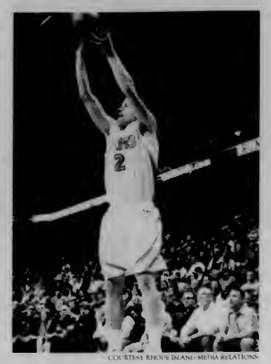
Charlotte (18-8, 8-4 A-10, RPI: 55)

Speaking of teams the Dukes have hurt, the 49ers are another perfect example.

Despite some impressive wins over Louisville, Temple and Richmond, Charlotte is more hurt by the fact that it's been blown out by other ranked teams. That wouldn't have mattered if the 49ers took care of business in the A-10, but after losing three straight games to Dayton, Duquesne and Xavier, Bobby Lutz's team will either have to beat the Spiders again or do well in the A-10 Tournament.

It's one thing to get obliterated by Duke (42 points). It's another when the opponent is a supposedly struggling conference rival, such as Dayton (28).

Saint Louis (18-8, 9-3 A-10, RPI: 82)



The youngest team in the nation is making it very difficult to be excluded from the bubble, especially when they have only three losses in its conference.

SLU is currently on a six-game winning streak, although it will have a rough schedule towards the end of the season. The hardest teams it will face, Xavier and Temple, will at least be home games so the task is a little easier.

But the Billikens have the worst RPI of any A-10 team trying to compete in the Field of 65, so you have to look at that 9-3 conference record critically. Those losses to Iowa State and Bowling Green are certainly going to hurt their chances.

Wins over Xavier and Dayton, however, will make people forget that ever happened.

Adam Miller is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

COURTESY RHODE ISLAND MEDIA RELATIONS

Ben Eaves takes a jump shot during a game against Oklahoma State on Jan. 2.

Minutewomen fall to No. 10 Terriers, 10–8

Slippery conditions, solid defense from BU contribute to 2nd loss

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

On a rainy, slushy day, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team fell short in a defensive showdown against Boston University, suffering its first loss at home this season.

BU entered McGuirk Stadium not having played a game this year, something UMass (2-2) dealt with in its prior two opponents, Holy Cross and Connecticut. This time, however, the Minutewomen wouldn't start off their opponent's season with a loss, as the No. 10 Terriers claimed the 10-8 victory.

Despite the unpleasant conditions, UMass coach Alexis Venechanos was adamant that the weather didn't disrupt the play of her team.

"We practice like this every single day, so it was fine to play in it," Venechanos said after the game.

To begin the first half, UMass and BU exchanged possessions and shots which missed wide and off the mark. Both the Minutewomen and Terriers received free position opportunities, but could do nothing with them, keeping the contest scoreless.

BU	10
UMass	8

When the scoring wave began, goals were exchanged back and forth, with BU getting out ahead and UMass responding to keep itself in striking distance.

BU scored the first goal of the contest and the first of its season from Danielle Ettrasco at the 23 minute, 45 second mark. The Terriers quickly tacked on a second goal from Corcoran Downey just 59 seconds later.

Senior Merritt Cosgrove, however, answered with her fourth goal of the season nearly a minute later to get the Minutewomen on the board.

BU deliberately controlled the possession for much of the first half, passing the ball around the perimeter until choosing to attack. The strategy paid off on the Terriers' third goal of the day, as McKinley Curro scored after BU spent nearly two minutes spreading the field.

Jackie Lyons responded 47 seconds later with her sixth goal of the season to keep the deficit at one.

With five minutes remaining in the half, Curro scored her second goal of the contest to give the Terriers a 4-2 lead.

Lyons replied again 41 seconds later with her second goal to close the gap to one. BU then created separation, netting three unanswered goals from Traci Landy, Ettrasco and Kristen Mogavero to give BU a 7-3 lead heading into halftime.

The second half began with Lyons completing the hat trick in the first three minutes to cut into the Terriers' lead. The score marked the second hat trick of the season for the junior, with the first coming in UMass' home-opening win against Holy Cross.

See W. LACROSSE on page 5

MAXWELL PARK-COLLEGIAN

Junior Jackie Lyons looks to get past some defenders during a game last season. The Minutewomen dropped their second game of the season to No. 10 Boston University, 10–8.

First half lead showing importance early on for Venechanos, UM

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

There was a lack of sun, warmth and first half dominance for the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team in yesterday's 10-8 loss to Boston University. In the 2010 season, whenever the Minutewomen are down after the first half, they have ended up losing.

"[At] the end of the first half, we let them have a little run off the draws, and that proved to be the difference," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said.

The Minutewomen played catch-up in the first half, contrary to their last two matches. With five minutes left to play, BU went on a 4-1 run to close out the half, taking a 7-3 lead over UMass.

"The defense was a little bit behind, but everything else was pretty much even except for the score," Venechanos said. "We had the opportunities and it's up to us to execute them. We adjusted a little bit to the play, it was a physical game, we adjusted, and we had the opportunities on the line. We just ran out of time."

When the Minutewomen opened its season in San Diego against No. 1 Northwestern, the Maroon and White found themselves down 14-2 after the first half. The deficit proved too much to overcome, as UMass succumbed to the Wildcats.

"I thought this game was different from our first loss because we had effort from beginning until the end," Venechanos said. "I thought we had enough conditioning to put ourselves in good position. We just have to play with more urgency from the start so we're not playing from behind in the second half."

In the first game at McGuirk Stadium against Holy Cross, the Minutewomen had a 7-1 lead after the first thirty minutes of play. Similarly, in the opening period of play against Connecticut, UMass held a 7-1 lead. The Minutewomen were victorious in both contests when they led in the first half.

UMass also scored the first two goals of the match against the Huskies. The same story can be told for the match against the Crusaders, as the Minutewomen went on a 5-0 rout to open up the first half.

Just like yesterday's match against the Terriers, UMass let up at least two unanswered goals when it faced Northwestern. The Wildcats kicked off the season opener with a 7-0 run.

One of the things to which Venechanos has attributed her team's success in the past is its consistent effort to gain draw controls. Often, the score emulates the draw control numbers. Despite leading BU, 7-3, in the draw control category at the end of the

See FIRST HALF on page 5

Merrimack freshman having career year

Da Costa leading all freshmen with 13 goals, shows promise

By Michael Counos
Collegian Correspondent

Merrimack's star freshman, Stephane Da Costa, may be having one of the best rookie seasons the Hockey East has seen in some time. After his game winning goal against Vermont Saturday, he is currently second in points among all rookies in the country with 35 (13 goals, 22 assists).

Merrimack (13-15-2, 10-11-1 HEA) coach Mark Dennehy is just happy that the talented 20-year-old center from France is on his side. Da Costa has claimed the Hockey East Rookie of the Month Award all four months of the season and is a strong candidate for the NCAA Rookie of the Year Award.

Dennehy claims that Da Costa may be the best player he has ever coached. His play has contributed to the Warriors' successes, who have won eight conference games for the first time in 13 seasons. Merrimack is also in the Hockey East Tournament hunt, after missing the postseason the past five years.

Da Costa's success has grabbed the attention of professionals. Dennehy says he has never seen so many scouts talk to one player. After his five goal outburst against Army, he gained national attention from the National Hockey League and media, making headlines in publications such as Hockey News.

HEA Notebook

The only concern is that he's not physically ready for the big leagues. Da Costa stands at 5-foot-11 and around 165 pounds.

UNH wins season series

With Saturday night's 3-3 tie against Vermont, New Hampshire improved to 15-10-5 overall and 14-5-4 in the conference. UNH took the season series against the Catamounts, 2-0-1. With the tie, the Wildcats secured home ice for the Hockey East quarterfinals for the 14th consecutive season.

UNH came out firing in the first period, outshooting the Catamounts 22-8 and scoring a pair of goals. UVM didn't go away, skating back to a 3-2 advantage with a trio of goals in the second stanza from Sebastian Stalberg, Matt Marshall, and Colin Vock. In the third period, the Wildcats leveled the score at three with a power-play goal at the four minute, 27 second mark. Peter LeBlanc passed to Mike Borisenok from the high slot, who fired a low shot into the net.

In the five-minute overtime, the play was back-and-forth until the Catamounts were called for a penalty with 19 seconds remaining. The penalty-kill unit kept UNH off the scoreboard. Wildcats goaltender Brian Foster made 26 saves, while his counterpart Rob Madore had 39.

The Wildcats are still atop the Hockey East with 32 points and have a weekend double-header against Northeastern. Vermont is fighting to stay in the tournament picture, currently in ninth place behind Merrimack by one point.

Junior achieves milestone

Junior Brian Gibbons was one of four Hockey East players to record a hat trick this weekend. Along with his three goals, he also scored his 100th career point. The Eagle from Braintree, Mass. is the 93rd player in BC history to reach the 100-point milestone. Gibbons finished the weekend with 103 points.

The Eagles won 7-1 against Northeastern with 6,180 in attendance at Kelley Rink. BC added four goals in the second frame, before the Huskies got on the board at the end of the period. Freshman Parker Milner had 22 saves for the Eagles, while Terrier goaltender Chris Rawlings stopped 39 of 45 shots.

Michael Counos can be reached at mcounos@student.umass.edu.

the daily collegian

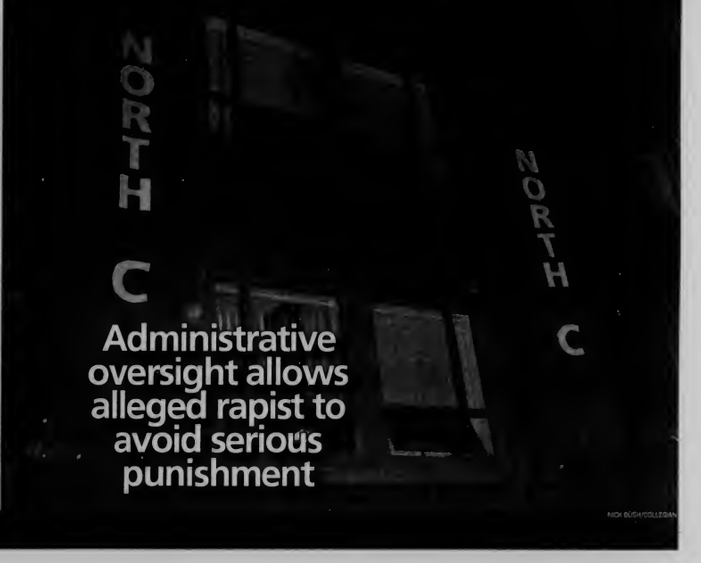
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FEBRUARY 26, 2010

inside this issue:

Senior Night

SEE PAGE 13

Umphrey Me



SEE PAGE 7

Sparking Debate

SEE PAGE 4

Confessed rapist remains enrolled at UM

Administrative oversight allows alleged rapist to avoid serious punishment

NICK BUSH/COLLEGIAN

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXX
ISSUE 26

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S P Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Shayna Murphy
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnerz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Pete Rizzo

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
NICK BUSH
COPY EDITOR
HANNAH MCGOLDRICK
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHELLE ABBASCIANO

Admitted rapist still at UM

Confessed rapist stays a student after dean's error

By Matt Rocheleau
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts student confessed to raping a friend and former student in the fall and was mistakenly given a deferred suspension. University officials allowed him to stay on campus, a move that now has administrators reexamining UMass' sanctioning policies and procedures, according to the New England Center for Investigative Reporting (NECIR).

The University would only confirm that the student was found responsible under the Student Code of Conduct for a sexual assault, and did not confirm that the act allegedly committed was rape, a felony, as the NECIR at Boston University reported in yesterday's Boston Globe.

In the early morning of October 16, the Friday during homecoming weekend, a male student allegedly raped an '09 female alum in the North Apartments Building C, according to the investigative piece reported in collaboration with other media outlets. The victim reported the incident to the dean of students' office in the month that followed. However, an assistant dean of students handed down a deferred suspension to the alleged offender – a decision UMass officials have since said was too lenient and have called the situation regrettable. Interim Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life Jean Kim told The Collegian yesterday.

"Personally, I do not believe the sanction matched the misconduct," Kim said.

The deferred suspension sanction, which notifies students that a subsequent violation of the University's Code of Student Conduct will result in suspension, did not follow the proper procedure to necessitate a final review and decision by Dean of Students Jo-Anne T. Vanin, said Kim.

However, the University cannot change or add to the sanctions already handed down because, as she explained, there is no appeal process allowed to any person other than the accused within the student code of conduct.

According to the NECIR's piece, Christina Willenbrock was the assistant dean who handled the case. University officials declined to discuss any disciplinary action that might have or could be taken against administrators who handled the case. Kim said there was no one individual to blame for what happened. She said the blame instead goes to how the administrative process was set up.

UMass also declined to name either student involved, citing privacy rules – Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA) – in both instances.

The University learned of the procedural error last month after the victim contacted UMass to inquire about the punishment given to the accused student, Kim said. A review of the case was conducted shortly thereafter by Kim, and she has since instituted a written, formal policy that states any cases classified among the most serious offenses – level-3, which includes sexual assault, possessing weapons and distributing illicit substances – are to be sent to the dean of students for review and a final decision.

Kim is also in the early process of putting together a special committee to review the University's Student Code of Conduct in its entirety, she said.

That committee will later present its recommendations back to Kim. However, any recommended changes to the student conduct code would ultimately have to gain the Board of Trustees' approval before their implementation.

"It's important to put a fix in if you think something's not working right. But then again, it should then ask the larger question, 'is it time to take a look at the whole system?' I think it is," she said, adding that such a review "is something that should be done on a periodic basis," but, "sometimes a situation arises that just begs the question."

Following the alleged rape, the University reviewed past cases and said there has been no other case in which proper procedure was not followed, according to Kim.

"I believe we have a good judicial process in place," she said. "This was an anomaly, an aberration, but there's always room for improvement."

When asked if the assistant dean's decision may have been an act of favoritism, Kim said it was absolutely not the case.

"I can't explain why it happened. I don't know," said Kim of the assistant dean's failure to have the case reviewed by the dean. "We take the situation of sexual assault and the safety of all of students very seriously," she said.

Students who report a sexual assault are immediately offered counseling, said Kim. The victim then has four choices: to report the incident to the UMass Police Department and pursue criminal charges, to have the incident go under the dean of students' review, to do both, or to not take action.

According to Kim, the student who was sexually assaulted in October initially went to UMPD first, but later decided against pursuing criminal charges.

Campus spokesman Edward Blaguszewski added that the victim could still decide to pursue criminal charges.

Both Blaguszewski and Kim assert that campus reports of sexual assault have declined in recent years and credited the downward trend to grant money the campus receives from the Office of Violence Against Women of the U.S. Department of Justice.

From July 2003 through June 2007, the Five Colleges received around $700,000 in funding. Of this, $300,000 went to UMass, Blaguszewski said. The grant money is used to enhance preventative and support services for victims and hold perpetrators responsible. Schools receiving the grants are required to report back data on reports of assault.

In 2003, there were 36 forcible sexual offenses at UMass, according to Federal Cleary Report data provided by the University. In each of the following two years, that figure dropped by more than half to 14 such offenses, then dropped again to 12 in 2006, then to nine the next year and then increased slightly to 11 in 2008, the most-recent year in which data is available.

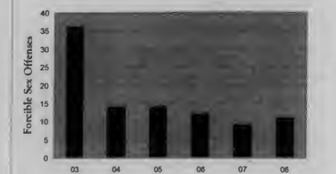
"Clearly we need to continue to work on reducing these incidents, but we have been moving in the right direction," said Kim.

Between 2003 and 2007, 26 reports of sexual assault were brought for review by the dean of students. Eleven of those cases received sanctions – none were expelled, three were suspended – while the other 15 were dismissed due either to insufficient evidence, the victim's request, or the accused student's willful departure from the University, said Blaguszewski. UMass has a broad range of sanctions beyond expulsion and suspension, including probation, removal from housing, and fines, he added.

"The full extent of campus sexual assault is often hidden by secret proceedings, shoddy record-keeping, and an indifferent bureaucracy," said Center for Public Integrity Executive Director Bill Buzenberg in a press release yesterday.

According to the release from center, which was among the collaborative media outlets involved in a larger component of the investigative piece on sexual assaults on college campuses in Wednesday's Globe, "Students found 'responsible' for sexual assaults on campus often face little or no punishment from school judicial systems, while their victims' lives are frequently turned upside down."

It claims UMass is not alone in having mishandled a sexual assault case, and many students were troubled by the news yesterday.



"I think this campus makes a big deal about stupid things a lot of times and not a big deal about serious things like this," said UMass sophomore Tim Miller, a natural resources conservation major. "People are getting all of these crazy suspensions for things like downloading music, and something like this happens and gets overlooked."

Undeclared sophomore Liz Zheng said, "Of course [the sanction handed down] is not right, but there's not really much that can be done about it now, so I'm not sure." She added, "I think what happens from here is really up to [the victim.]"

For details about the safety services provided at UMass, visit www.umass.edu/umpd/safety/rapeprevention and www.umass.edu/ewc.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrochele@dailycollegian.com.

Sex offenses at UMass 2003-2008

SOURCE: CLEARY REPORT

Endowment outperforms local peers

Despite losses in recession, UM Foundation finds self in good shape

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note. This is the second installment in a series about the University of Massachusetts' finances and changes to the University's endowment and assets since the start of America's recession. In this series, the Collegian will investigate where UMass' funds come from, how they are managed, and how they are then invested into the five campuses of the University system.

While the endowment assets of the University of Massachusetts slipped by 4.6 percent in Fiscal Year 2009, the University of Massachusetts Foundation in Boston, which manages the five campus system's finances, seems to have averted some of the financial land mines which struck many other colleges and universities.

The UMass Foundation's assets fell from $390 million to $367 million in FY09, but compared to losses running well into the high 20 percent range for other local schools, UMass may be able to breathe a sigh of relief.

Although UMass had less to lose than some local competitors such as Boston University or Tufts, which previously had endowments over $1 billion, the school's portfolio suffered nowhere near the hit that many neighbors took.

The UMass Foundation manages and oversees the University's endowment fund, the aggregate of individual endowments established by donors to fund specific purposes such as annual scholarships and professorships.

Endowments generally have a principal sum of over $27,500, which are segregated on a fund-accounting basis and placed in the Foundation's pooled endowment fund, and then invested in the stock market by the Foundation's investment managers.

The UMass Foundation, which attempts to grow the University's financial resources, is overseen by a 20-member Board of Directors, each serving three-year terms. The board is mainly composed of University leaders, including the president and chancellors, who serve in an ex-officio capacity, and UMass alumni from each of the five campuses who have become leaders in the various fields of finance and business.

The Board's public members are nominated by President Jack Wilson and the chancellors of the campuses of the University system and elected by sitting members of the board. Some friends of the University and parents of students with expertise in the business world also serve on the Board.

From there, an 11-member Investment Committee is elected annually. With the guidance of a professional advisor, the Committee selects and monitors the Foundation's investments, which are managed by external firms the Committee has deemed sound performers within their particular investment classes, and essentially oversees the performance of these managers. The Investment Committee is also composed of accomplished financiers with expertise in varying disciplines of finance, helping balance the Foundation's objectives and ensure a diversity of views on the direction the Foundation should take.

The Foundation makes its investments under the guidance of the Investment Committee, and, according to senior Foundation officials, essentially manages what proportions of the University's endowment fund goes into different asset classes.

The Committee determines asset allocation, or what percentage of the endowment fund is held in cash, what goes into equities, fixed income, and what proportion is invested in other financial instruments.

At the end of FY09, the Foundation held 40 percent of its assets in fixed income, investments which are more liquid and yield cash income, 25 percent in alternative investments, such as hedge funds, 15 percent in U.S. equities, which compose the three major stock markets, the Dow, the S&P 500 and NASDAQ, 11 percent in international markets, and nine percent in cash equivalents.

These numbers have changed rather drastically as the markets have changed over time, as the University held more than 70 percent of its assets in equities as recently as 1999. The school's share of fixed income has gained significantly in that window, increasing to 40 percent from about 20 at the end of last decade.

UMass Foundation Vice President Katherine Smith explained that the Investment Committee has decided to focus primarily on asset allocation and on selecting talented investment managers, rather than on purchasing individual stocks or buying commodities.

Unlike some schools with larger endowments like Harvard or Yale, UMass places its assets entirely in investments through its managers, as opposed to investing directly.

Smith explained how, once an endowment is given by a donor for a specific purpose to one of the five University campuses, its principal is placed into a pooled endowment fund, the aggregate of all individual endowments given to the University.

Once an endowment is invested, there is a "spending formula," with which the University determines what percentage of the endowment will be used annually for its stated purpose and what percentage will continue to accumulate in the endowment fund.

"There is an agreed upon spending formula," she said. "All gift agreements basically say that the University has discretion in terms of spending formula, the governing law dictates a prudent spending rate, which can be anything up to seven percent," she stated. "Our spending policy is a range of four to six percent on a trailing average, and the actual annual percentage is determined by the chancellors and the president as a group, who recommend it to the Investment Committee, which then enacts the distribution."

The spending formula is determined by the chancellors and the president, who, along with their financial advisors, determine the annual spending rate based on how the Foundation's investments have fared and what the campuses' financial needs are for the funds provided by the endowment. The president and chancellors then recommend the spending rate to the Investment Committee, which enacts the formula, which can change over time depending upon returns.

In terms of strategy, Smith said the Investment Committee's aim is to always maximize return while managing risk, ultimately attempting to increase the endowment's spending power.

"The Investment Committee wants to see the endowment grow so that the long term spending power is preserved and enhanced over time," she said.

The Committee attempts to leverage these risks based on its diverse composition; it includes stock experts, pension fund managers, who are actuarially-oriented, and other experts.

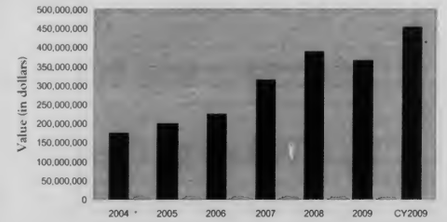
"We've changed our business practices in the last two years so that the campuses have more control and responsibility over the expenditure of endowment distributions," said Smith. "The money is now plugged right into the University accounting system, so each vice chancellor can consider that revenue in each campus budget every year."

While UMass' endowment has historically not been at the level of some more elite Universities, Smith said the endowment fund has seen "extraordinarily good performance" over the last few years and that "every campus is working hard to increase its ability to raise funds for its endowment and for its other spending needs."

Tom Navin, director of annual giving in the Development Office at UMass Amherst, echoed Smith's sentiment that UMass may not historically have a legacy of students giving back to the school, but said the University is attempting to alter that image.

"I don't think we have the same tradition of giving back that maybe other private universities have," he said, "but we're working hard to make that change."

Although UMass had America's 145-largest endowment as of the end of Fiscal Year 2009, which ended June 30, the Foundation appears to have weathered the economic woes beleaguering the nation's higher education community better than many peers.



Though the University's investment returns were -15 percent for FY2009, the median school surveyed in the National Association of College and University Business Officers lost 18.7 percent.

Further, in the second half of calendar year 2009, the Foundation saw returns up 11.93 percent, with market value up to $454 million.

UMass lost significantly less than many local schools. Harvard saw its endowment slip from $36.5 billion to $25.6 billion from 2008 to 2009, a decline of 29.8 percent, while Yale's holdings fell to $16.3 billion from $22.8 billion, a 28.6 percent drop-off. Dartmouth's assets fell to $2.8 billion from $3.6 billion, Brown dropped to $2 billion from $2.7 billion, a 26.6 percent slip, Williams' holdings declined to $1.4 billion from $1.8 billion, a 22.1 percent decrease, Amherst College was hit with a 23.4 percent skid, falling from $1.7 billion to $1.3 billion, Tufts saw its holdings decline 23.7 percent to $1.1 billion from $1.4, Boston University fell beneath the billion mark to $892 million, a 22.1 percent decline, and Mount Holyoke took a 24.5 percent dip, losing more than $155 million to fall to $488 million.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com.

UMass endowment 2004-2009

SOURCE: UMASS FOUNDATION

Smoking ban proposal sparks debate

Citizens turn out in droves to voice opposition to ban at public events

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Concerned citizens turned out at a Board of Public Health hearing at the Bangs Community Center Thursday to protest a proposed smoking ban at public events in Amherst.

By Bobby Hitt
Collegian Staff

Smokers and non-smokers arrived at Bangs Community Center Thursday to discuss possible new changes to the smoking laws of Amherst, which would prohibit smoking on town-owned outdoor properties and outside of restaurants.

According to Julie Federman, health director for the town of Amherst, the amendment is meant to protect the town's workers from the potentially adverse health affects of second-hand smoke.

The room was filled to capacity by many University of Massachusetts students, local business owners, and Amherst citizens, most of whom opposed the proposed amendment to the law.

Members of the Board of Health notified certain organizations and businesses that they thought may be concerned about the amendment.

Many members of the UMass Cannabis Reform Committee attended the meeting to oppose the measure.

President of the CRC Cory Gillis felt this change to the bylaws would adversely affect the Extravaganja event held on the Amherst Common each April.

Extravaganja is an annual festival which invites bands and members of the "smoking" culture to revel in good company and partake in herbal recreation very publicly.

According to Chris Pappademas, a sophomore plant biotech major, the event brings more than 1,000 people to Amherst Commons every year.

"Many people smoking on the common may not be aware that the law exists," said Gillis, who is a Japanese major. "It feels like civil liberties are not being respected by the town."

The proposed amendment would come in addition to the smoking bylaws passed in 1999, later amended June 1, 2009, which banned smoking in bars and restaurants.

Tony Maroulis, executive director of the Amherst Area Chamber of Commerce and also the organizer of the Taste of Amherst festival, voiced concern that the proposed amendment would potentially hurt attendance to such an event.

According to Maroulis, the addition of the new legislation is not necessary, and could potentially deter people from coming to civic events. Maroulis continued by stating that summer events on the Amherst common bring over 30,000 people, which helps to stimulate the local Amherst economy, and that he feels banning smoking at such events could dissuade some from coming out.

Amherst resident and Tabella's Restaurant waiter Chris Powell, 20, echoed others who were worried about the potential impact on the local economy.

"Local businesses have haven struggling over the past couple of years," said Powell. "Why are they trying to make [the town] unattractive to graduates and people who can rectify the situation?" Powell asked the board.

Cindy Walker, 45, also of Amherst, felt the public hearing was a success.

"I think a lot of good points were brought up by citizens [of Amherst]," said Walker. "I don't smoke around my kids in the house or in the car," continued Walker, "If I can't smoke outside, then where can I smoke?"

David Ahfeld, a member of the Board, believed Thursday's discussion proved fruitful.

"There were a lot of interesting comments," he said.

The law already in place imposes a fine of $100 for a first offense on the manager or organizer for smoking in a place where smoking is prohibited. The fine increases by $100 every time a person violates the policy, and runs to $300 per subsequent violations in a two year period between each violation.

Bobby Hitt can be reached at rhitt@student.umass.edu.

Happy 35th Birthday!

Everywoman's Center

Celebrates and Honors

The Women, Gender, Sexuality Studies

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Chris Powell, an Amherst resident, voiced his opposition to the smoking ban proposal Thursday night, citing fears it would hurt local businesses.

editorial&opinion

"FREE SPEECH IS THE WHOLE THING, THE WHOLE BALL GAME. FREE SPEECH IS LIFE ITSELF" - SIR SALMAN RUSHDIE

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Death is inevitable: live with it

Harrison Searles

Around the world on Ash Wednesday, millions of Catholics took part in the continuation of an ancient Near Eastern tradition by having ashes put on their foreheads as a sign of penance before God. This rite is a memento mori, a warning that death is inevitable and will reduce each individual, along with his accomplishments in the secular world, to ashes, and begins the liturgical season of Lent in which each Catholic is called to enrich their spiritual life in preparation for the celebration of Easter.

In a society that has been successful in removing death from the mainstream, the serious reminder that the placing of ashes provides ought to provoke thought and dread – even for those who have never been to a single Ash Wednesday Mass in their lives.

Without a doubt, the concept of death has been sterilized in the modern world to the point of being nigh incomprehensible: the process of death is carried out in hospital rooms, the corpses are immediately removed to an unseen morgue and buried as soon as possible.

After the Black Plague, European culture saw death everywhere and it was a primary cultural focus for the following generations. Our own social environment resulted in death being essentially removed from contemporary culture. Yes, grandma will die, but she will die a dignified death in her sleep after a serious, yet short, illness with pain being minimized through the proper dosage of narcotics.

Nowhere does our culture mention the mental and physical decline that old-age brings, and that, while society's material prosperity has brought greater dignity to all in life, death is simply a brute fact that only the fortunate will be able to experience in a dignified manner. Many will be reminded of the simple fact that nature is red in tooth and claw, and modern humanity has been blessed with the capability of taming her.

Yes, grandma will die, but she will die a dignified death in her sleep after a serious, yet short, illness with pain being minimized through the proper dosage of narcotics.

In fact, most people today will not have to gaze into the Reaper's eyes until their twenties when because they have been sheltered from the deaths of their grandparents during their youth.

Of course, we can all pretend that we are not disturbed by gazing into the eyes of death, that, as the Greek philosopher Epicurus said in his basic teachings, the Tetrapharmakos, that death provides no worries, but we only fool ourselves with such a doctrine. Yes, it may be easy to think of death in clean ideas like the thought of dying suddenly tomorrow, but it sidesteps the slow and vicious decline that is often antecedent to death per se.

Furthermore, death does provide much to be fearful about for it is the black door beyond which we are all doomed to pass through and about which we can only have faith about what will await us.

Much of what we have worked for in our secular lives, the positions we have achieved and possessions we have accumulated, count for naught. To speak of death as if it provides nothing to be fearful about is sheer naiveté.

We need not live out our lives in an unhealthy state of anxiety worried about our final moments because fear can serve good purposes. There are certainly some situations in which fear can provide a healthy motivation; for instance, the first time I had a loaded, semi-automatic assault rifle placed in my hands, I had a healthy fear that kept my attention on the issue of safety.

A proper healthy reaction to the just fear of death is to respond to the memento mori: "Remember, O man, that you are dust and into dust you will return" that will be able to liberate one from any anxiety that the fear might bring up. Many contemporary responses have been "Live each day to the fullest" and "Live for the moment" that have justly emphasized the fact that life is always in the present. In the Catholic tradition, the reply is Mark 1:15: "Turn away from sin and be faithful to the Gospel" and Lent provides us with the opportunity of deepening our own conversation in preparation for the fulfillment of the Gospel on Easter Sunday. Of course, while one might not believe that the good news is the true answer to the problem, it still does not mean that there is no response to mortality (to accept such a premise would merely be the mark of someone who has not bothered to ponder basic philosophical questions facing each individual). In fact, it is imperative to come to terms with the memento mori in order to live a virtuous life in which one can provide a response to our inevitable mortality.

Hence, let me end with a challenge to you, dear reader: take some time out of your day to meditate upon the fact that we are all dust and into dust we will all return once our days upon this earth are done. Time flies and before long if we have never given thought to such matters it will be too late to prepare ourselves and we will have to face this reality. I pray that you will take up this challenge and be prepared before you ever have to face the acerbities of not only our own mortality, but that of every person upon this green earth.

Harrison Searles is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at hwsearles@student.umass.edu.

POINT-COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

Fossil fuel power protest: is it effective?

Camping counterproductive

"The new world demands less obvious heroism," said Ozymandias in the closing chapters of Watchmen.

This is perhaps the best way to sum up my initial reaction to the headline "Amherst sleeps out to protest climate change."

Dave Coffey

Let's get one thing straight: I'm all for climate change. I think nearly all of us can agree that doing something about our negative impact on the environment and the Earth is great. After all, as cliché as it may sound, we only have one planet, and destroying it would be fairly counterproductive, to say the least. Plus, that picture of a lonely polar bear on a fast-melting slab of ice has replaced the white whale in my nightmares. Yar.

So, considering all this, I think Christopher Potter and anyone else involved in the Massachusetts Power Shift should be praised for taking the initiative that many talk about, yet few take, to get down and dirty and do something to further a cause. That being said, perhaps this wasn't the best line of attack for bringing about substantial change on the matter. While I am at first hesitant to question the methods of those who do actually get off their butts and lend themselves physically to a just cause, I also feel I owe them the respect of constructively criticizing their obviously admirable deeds.

As I alluded to in the quote that begins this piece, I would suggest that refusing to sleep in dorms in order to promote new energy legislation is potentially more flash than substance, so to speak. While perhaps a relatively daring idea, one could argue it is more dramatic than, say, informative or inflammatory. Again, I hate to be critical of those whose hearts are obviously in the right place, but couldn't one's time be better spent on furthering the message of necessary climate change instead of purchasing sleeping bags and roasting marshmallows?

Sure, people are out of their dorm rooms and in tents and that's great I suppose, but just because they're now in tents doesn't necessarily do anything. I guess it's supposed to symbolize a protest of the heavy amounts of fossil fuels that almost certainly go into the heating and maintenance of the dormitory buildings, but as commendable as that is, one could assume it's hardly going to result in the shutting down of these buildings.

Civil disobedience is all well and good, but in this case it sort of disarms itself, given the particular circumstances of the situation. This isn't a hunger strike or a march where policy makers and higher ups risk having malnourished and/or dead student bodies and public disruptions and disturbances on their hands. At the worst, the dorms will become less crowded for the foreseeable future. For something that is largely demonstration-based in nature, this doesn't really seem to push the envelope that much, which is sort of detrimental to the cause.

Also, the movement smacks of potential hypocrisy that could possibly lead to unnecessary criticism flak for the cause at hand. For instance, it's all well and good that all these people are living in tents to avoid contributing to the fossil fuel usage of dorm buildings, but I hope none of them rode in a fossil-fueled automobile to the mall or Dick's Sporting Goods to buy their tent and supplies, thereby further contributing to corporations and businesses that most likely contribute to fossil fuel usage and carbon emissions themselves considerably.

In the article, Potter admits to still using, "dirty fossil fuels" to in order to charge his "electronics." If someone can live out in a tent in the middle of a western Massachusetts February, you would figure they could survive without electronics as well. It's one thing to stage a dramatic camp out on the Amherst common to prove you can go without dorm buildings in the name of energy conservation, but still needing "electronics" once again limits the potency of the statement.

To repeat, I'm not exactly happy as a pig in poop to complain about the actions of someone who is acting in the name of a just and reasonable cause. However, someone has to play devil's advocate, and it might as well be the same guy who unceremoniously commented on the domestic terrorist attack in Austin. It's plainly obvious these people are both dedicated and passionate about the issues of climate change and energy conservation. Are there not more productive ways to spend their time and energy?

Dave Coffey is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dscoffey@student.umass.edu.

In a tent for energy justice

Just last week a friend of mine turned to me in class and whipped out her phone to show me a picture. The little still on the screen of her Blackberry showed a tent where she told me a University of Massachusetts student was sleeping. "Who'd be nuts enough to sleep outside in this weather?" she said. It turns out this student isn't nuts, not even close.

Kaya Swainson

My friend was referring to Christopher Potter, a student who has spent the last 121 days sleeping in a tent to protest the use of fossil fuels for electricity. A member of Students for a Just and Stable Future (SJSF), Potter isn't the only one who's been sleeping outside. SJSF have been participating in statewide sleep-outs throughout the state since Oct. 24. In the middle of a New England winter, with a recent snowfall and more expected, it's easy to write off these sleep-outs as nuts, but are they really?

What better way is there to send a message about protecting our environment than to immerse yourself in it? If college is a place where one is supposed to have new experiences, I doubt anyone could refute living in a tent outside during winter is an experience that you'd likely forget.

I think the lesson he is gaining from this experience is one we should all take to heart. What living outside in less than ideal conditions can teach you is appreciation. One gains a newfound respect for the environment because one is experiencing a part of its extremes firsthand in a completely different light. There's a big difference between walking around in winter and sleeping out in it.

Potter is not only in a position to appreciate the environment, but also the amenities we take for granted more since he's distanced himself from them. Flicking on a light has become so routine these days that hardly anyone thinks twice about it. Chances are you don't even blink.

Consider this. Ever since grade school we've been told that fossil fuels are a limited source of energy. Not only are they limited, but they contribute heavily to climate change. There's only so much in the world to go around and yet some of us still leave lights on when we leave our rooms or maybe we leave one small light on downstairs when we go to bed. Well that one small light isn't just draining your savings, it's draining an insufficient supply of energy as well. And the best part? It only harms the environment even further and we're literally paying to do so.

It is reminiscent of a time when students on college campuses attended university to broaden their horizons, find a cause and stand behind it. I believe Potter has rekindled the old spirit of what it really means to be a college student. Many people come to college with the idea that they want to change the world, to make a difference and that's exactly what Potter's protest stands for.

It isn't just the sacrifice of what this student has undertaken that's so admirable, but what that sacrifice signifies. Christopher Potter is doing the right thing at college by standing up for a just cause. Isn't that what our college education is all about? The value of our education isn't just marked by a degree, a mere piece of paper, but what we learn and do. If anything, isn't college supposed to be the place where one starts to become politically active?

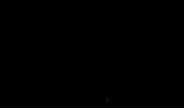
He has suffered since his sleep-out began. On a daily basis he lives without many of the amenities we usually take for granted, heat, electricity, and a legitimate ceiling over our heads. He's even had the Amherst police take his tent away from him, citing it under the guise of abandoned property. But it's exactly those types of challenges that test a person's commitment. If it wasn't a challenge what would be the worth in standing behind it?

Take for example the 200 students who've been arrested for trespassing in the seven weeks since SJSF started hosting sleep-outs on the Amherst Common. If they weren't doing anything do you think the police would have bothered to arrest them? The fact that they were even arrested shows that what they're doing means something. No one pays attention to the inconsequential, the irrelevant. Arresting these students only ensures that their message is spread even farther and wider because then publicity is generated. Perhaps those students should be thanking the police for helping their cause.

After Potter's tent was confiscated by the police, he called it an intimidation tactic – but as anyone can see, he clearly wasn't intimidated, since he got his tent back and went right back to camping. If Martin Luther King Jr. was intimidated after facing angry mobs, riot police and death threats, where would our country stand with civil rights? In a case like this, the intimidation factor only serves to boost the legitimacy of the cause.

In fact, SJSF's cause is so legitimate that they've gotten 17 legislators to listen, and draft a bill creating a Repower Massachusetts Emergency Task Force that they hope to pass this year. This just goes to show that when people come together to fight for change, advances can be made.

Kaya Swainson is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at kswainso@student.umass.edu.



Hey, you,

Get up from playing Call of Duty and send us your opinions!

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

arts&living

YOUR WEEKEND GUIDE TO ART, MUSIC, FILM & CULTURE ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

NoHo Know How

CAFE SCENE:

Where to go for the best cup 'o joe? From study spots to exotic fare, all you need to know to get your caffine fix.

PG. 8

MATTHEW HARRISON COLLEGIAN

Jam band heavyweights Umphrey's McGee will take the stage at the Calvin Theatre on Sunday. The band is know for their extended improvised sets.

Umphrey's to jam Sunday

Tappan Parker
Collegian Correspondent

Umphrey's McGee is one of the bigger names in the jam band scene these days. As a progressive rock band, they have managed to perfect their jamming formula, which will more than likely be in its top form when they perform this Sunday at the Calvin Theatre.

The band has gathered a devoted following since they formed in 1997. With five studio albums already under their belt in addition to a number of live albums, Umphrey's McGee has become what the Washington Post calls "rock's undisputed lord of sonic shape-shifting."

Umphrey's McGee's latest album, "Mantis," was released in Jan. 2009. The album is a first for Umphrey's, as they composed the material for the CD completely in the studio. Normally, they 'road test' most of their songs at live performances before they make it to the studio, but this is not the case with their new album.

The band is famous for its "Jimmy Stewarts," live improvisational jams that they play at nearly every concert. The jams are completely original and rarely include any planned elements. Sometimes these jams will become full-fledged songs if the band really likes what they come up with, as in the case of "Ocean Billy," "Bridgeless" and "95."

The band members have remained consistent since they first played together at the University of Notre Dame on a cold December day in 1997. The band started off with guitarist and vocalist Brendan Bayliss, keyboardist Joel Cummins, bassist Ryan Stasik, and drummer Mike Mirro.

After only 8 months together, they released their first studio album, "Greatest Hits Vol. III," and shortly thereafter added a fifth member, percussionist Andy Farag. In September of 2000, guitarist Jake Cinninger, previously of Ali Baba's Tahini, joined Umphrey's McGee, bringing with him a new heaviness to the band's sound.

In 2002, Umphrey's, as they are often affectionately called by fans, had the honor of being one of the bands to perform at the first Bonnaroo, playing to one of their biggest crowds to date and selling more CDs than any other artist there. The band was invited back to Bonnaroo in 2004, where they played for an even larger crowd, and has played numerous Lollapalooza shows.

The band almost broke up in late 2002, when Mirro left to attend medical school. Farag reviewed hundreds of tapes, however, before finally settling on drummer Kris Myers to replace Mirro.

Currently the band is touring America, selling out shows coast to coast and jamming all across the country. Umphrey's McGee will be playing throughout New England until March 5th, when they will be moving the tour to Ohio.

The band will also offer a $20 voucher for purchase at the show on Sunday that, 10 minutes after the completion of the concert, will be redeemable for a live album from the show. This is a ritual the band has had since 2003.

Umphrey's is relatively good-natured live. They try to make their shows as humorous as possible. With lights, image screens and sometimes even laser shows, the band is bound to put on a good show this Sunday.

Umphrey's McGee will be playing on Sunday at the Calvin Theatre in Northampton, Mass. The show starts at 8 p.m., and tickets are $21. Tickets are still available on the Iron Horse Entertainment Group's website, ihեg.com.

Tappan Parker can be reached at rtparker@student.umass.edu.

Barefoot beats rock NoHo

By Andrew Cogan
Collegian Correspondent

Last Saturday night, the Barefoot Truth came triumphantly to Northampton riding a wave of critical acclaim and burgeoning popular support crested by their newly released album "Threads." They brought with them a heightened energy that permeated the air over Pearl Street as fans flocked to the doors, about to learn why the American roots-rock band is on the rise to mainstream success.

Ascending the stairs to the Pearl Street Clubroom the sounds of excited laughter and giddy anticipation trickled down from above. The crowd gathered in the dim lighting, shadows flickering across their faces as they cast eager glances at the stage where everything was set for the show to begin. Guitars sat idly like horses penned in their stalls. The microphones were perched on their stands as the amplifiers hummed softly. A steady electronic buzz teased everyone's ears, hinting at the volume about to be unleashed. Restless energy hung in the air.

Finally the opening band took the stage and donned their instruments as the crowd murmured with excitement. A few quick strums of the guitar, a couple raps on the drums, the tension broke and the crowd cheered. So began a night of rocking reggae-infused beats and euphoric jams with Barefoot Truth leading the way.

To say the band's music is uplifting is an understatement. They play the kind of music that melts away the anxieties of everyday life and replaces them with nothing but feel-good vibes. They convey a genuine sense of honesty and optimism. There is something about the bands eclectic blend of folk, rock, blues, and jazz that transcends each of the individual styles it draws upon. Their musical fusion known as roots-rock evokes a rich pallet of sounds and colors, enveloping the listener in deep organic textures. The band plays music that paints a harmonious picture framed with catchy up-tempo rhythms.

The band's musical diversity is complemented by their versatile multi-instrumentalism, with each member bringing a range of musical talent to the table. The band features Will Evans on lead vocals, guitar, drums and didgeridoo, Jay Driscoll on electric, acoustic and Weissenborn lap guitar, Andy Wrba on electric and upright base, Garret Duffy on harmonica, and Wayno on piano, organs and keyboards.

The bands all around eclecticism makes for an exciting live show, with Evans emerging from behind his drums donning an acoustic guitar, only to come crashing back down on the drums halfway through a song. While Driscoll and Wrba swap duties on guitar and bass, Duffy roams around the fringes of the stage periodically bursting to the forefront with his harmonica. Meanwhile, Wayno bounces behind his keyboards like he's the happiest man ever to play piano. Indeed, Barefoot Truth is clearly a band that loves presenting its music to their audience. These elements of motion and laid back fun throughout the performance ensure that the band's presence on stage is always fresh and engaging.

Joining the band on stage were opening acts Clogue Inc. and Naia Kete. Kete and her band played a stellar set, bringing fantastic energy to get the night moving. As Barefoot Truth continues to tour in support of their new album, it is clear the band is graduating from the college scene and looking to reach wider audiences. This should only be a matter of time considering the band's fresh music and compelling personality on stage. Barefoot Truth is definitely a band that shouldn't be missed next time they come around Northampton.

Andrew Cogan can be reached at acogan.student.umass.edu

COURTESY SONGBIRD & GUN

Roots-rock up and comers Barefoot Truth thrilled audiences with their energetic sound last weekend. Their latest release, "Threads," represents a new stage of growth for them.

NoHo Know How

Where to go for a cup o' joe

Tappan Parker
Collegian Correspondent

In a college town, a savvy student ought to know the best joint in town to grab a cup o' joe. The following includes a line up of the best study spots, most delicious cafe fare and grooviest music scene. So stay in the know and check out future installments of NoHo Know How.

Best Music Scene: The Yellow Sofa

This is a great place to go for music later in the evening, as the Yellow Sofa has a lot of musical artists come by every Wednesday through Saturday, as well as an open mic night every Thursday starting at 7 p.m. There is a minimum $5 charge on anything bought during the open mic however, which is a little steep if you just want a cup of coffee.

The café has a large variety of pastries to choose from, as well as a wall filled with greeting cards. Everything is made locally and they have even started serving wine and beer. The wi-fi is of course free, although you have to ask behind the counter if you want to use it. There are also plenty of comfortable chairs to study in (or browse Facebook in.)

In short, if you love music, check out the Yellow Sofa.

Best Atmosphere: The Mosaic Café

The Mosaic is a charming Moroccan café located on a side street near Smith College. They serve a variety of Mediterranean appetizers and meals, as well as some specialty drinks, including a Nasnas, named after a monster from Arab mythology. The drink contains milk carefully topped with espresso. They also have crepes available as well as a few unique pastries, all of which look delicious.

The atmosphere is very comfortable, with light Moroccan music in the background. The shop is well lit and every table is inviting with a small vase of flowers on each table. It just feels like a place you want to bring people to or go to study, and with free Wi-Fi there is no reason not to.

Mowen Harper Collegian

La Fiorentina boasts some of the best pastries in town to satisfy your sweet tooth, but may be better suited for casual dates or an after dinner latte, as they don't have wi-fi.

Once the weather warms up the café will also open up its patio, which is in a quiet and secluded area of town. This is a great place if you want exotic food, a good atmosphere or a place to take your next date.

Best Artsy Coffee Shop: The Haymarket Café

The first thing that strikes you when you look at the Haymarket Café is the apparent small size of the shop from outside. Upon entering, a long room and a staircase leading downstairs greet you. The staircase leads to another sitting area where it is also possible to get a meal. At the end of the elongated room up top there is a place to buy a variety of fairly inexpensive coffee at $1.25.

The Haymarket also has a number of fancy looking pastries, but what is most striking is the exquisite feel of the place. A number of statuettes are scattered throughout the small shop, as well as quite a number of hand painted walls and paintings.

The café feels on the fancier side while maintaining a comfortable coffee shop feel. And of course there is free Wi-Fi.

If you want to be surrounded by art this is the place to go. The Haymarket Café is located across from Thornes Marketplace.

Best for a Sweet Tooth: La Fiorentina

For those who have more of a sweet tooth, but are still looking to get their caffeine fix, La Fiorentina is a great place to check out. Located a little ways off Pleasant Street the shop carries a huge selection of pastries, in addition to a small coffee bar. There is a vast selection of flavors for coffee, as well as some sweeter caffeinated drinks.

The shop carries a number of cakes, espresso cups, cannolis and even a pie crust with hazelnut insides. The only drawback is that the shop doesn't have wi-fi, so this is not the ideal place to go to study ... But it is definitely a great spot for after dinner though.

Best Customer Service and Staff: Sam's Pizzeria & Café

Sam's was actually a contender for two other slots: best music scene and best overall coffee shop. With locally brewed Rao's coffee, free wi-fi, fresh baked goods including truffles, and even a wide selection of specialty pizzas, the small pizzeria and café certainly has a lot going for it. They cater to a lot of local tastes and have a hired band play every Thursday and Saturday, as well as jazz on Wednesday nights and Sunday afternoons. According to the staff, Friday nights have a packed open mic that even out does the Yellow Sofa's.

The staff was what really made the shop stand out, though. Walking in you'll be greeted almost immediately and feel right at home. The staff seems to want to talk and interact, which is a welcome change from many shops where counter personnel just shrug you off as another customer. The overall vibe from the shop is really friendly, in addition to the other great things about the shop. Overall this is definitely one of the best cafés in Northampton.

Best Overall Coffee Shop: Woodstar Café

Woodstar Café is what the ideal coffee shop should be like. The shop has a huge variety of freshly ground coffee, tea and other cold beverages. This is in addition to the freshly baked loaves of bread for purchase as well as a few sandwiches and pastries. Everything is fresh and much of it local.

The shop is very clean and exudes a comfortable yet modern coffee shop feel. The sounds of coffee grinding and brewing behind the counter are the sort of ambient noise one looks for in a coffee shop, besides music for the patrons' listening pleasure. This is an ideal place for lunch, or to study, or to just sit down with a friend and talk.

Honorable Mentions:

Two other cafés nearly earned a spot on the NoHo Know How line-up, but closed a little too early to make the cut. Nevertheless, they are worth honorable mentions: the Green Street Café and Elbow Room, both located on Green Street. Both joints are certainly worth a shot to get you coffee fix.

Tappan Parker can be reached at rtparker@student.umass.edu.

Author Donald Antrim 'nailed it' at Visiting Writers Series

By Lindsay Pierce
Collegian Correspondent

The Visiting Writers Series, sponsored by the MFA Program for Poets and Writers and the Juniper Initiative for Literary Arts and Action, hosted acclaimed author Donald Antrim on Thursday, Feb. 18 in Memorial Hall.

As the author of noted works "Elect Mr. Robinson for a Better World," "The Hundred Brothers," "The Verificationist" and "The Afterlife," as well as numerous short stories, Antrim is known for his dark humor and witty, imaginative tales spun in an innovative, unconventional structure. Antrim's works are largely stream-of-conscious musings without chapters or breaks. Yet the risks Antrim takes in his work pay off. In Antrim's introduction to the Visiting Writers Series, it was said that "we are not here because he attempted it ... He nailed it."

With an audience comprised mostly of graduate students, faculty and community members, Antrim read the opening of an unpublished novel, in which his narrator set out to "undertake a study of his father's work and daily life." Antrim "performed" his darkly comedic, refreshingly original work, with the audience attentive, nearly in tears due to Antrim's witty humor. Antrim noted that he does not worry whether his humor will translate from the monologue to the page, he said it would just be a different experience.

Antrim's unfinished story is finely crafted, a tightly woven work that goes off on tangents, a seemingly impossible feat that he pulls off with style and grace. All of Antrim's novels take place in one scene, eschewing the traditional plotline for "faux intellectual musings," as Antrim referred to his works. Antrim admitted, "I fell into the spell of Thomas Bernhard some twenty years ago" and has adopted Bernhard's style of the unbroken narrative.

In his early career, Antrim stuck mainly to short stories. "I had a terrible dread of writing a novel ... But I discovered I liked having a novel in my life, like an accompaniment," he noted.

"All my novels are made up as they go, I never know where they're going," said Antrim.

Of his unique style of writing, Antrim acknowledged that it is close to satire, but he doesn't feel that he's writing satire. "They have no point to make," he explained. Antrim suggested that we don't have his type of literary tradition in this country, and therefore it is often mistaken for satire.

With three published novels and a memoir, Antrim noted that his writing is "becoming more hybridized," between memoir and fiction. "The Afterlife" chronicles the difficult relationship he had with his deceased mother. "I never though I'd do it, I never wanted to, I thought of it as lesser," he said of memoir writing. Straight memoir writing is "rigorous," he admitted, "I don't recommend it."

Much of the action in Antrim's novels takes place in his narrators' minds. "I like them a lot," he said of his narrators, though over time, "I get tired of them, of managing their psychosis."

Yet it is this "psychological fantastic" that propels him to keep writing. Antrim admitted that he hit a roadblock earlier in his career. He had an idea of what he should be writing, was unhappy with it, and stopped writing altogether. Antrim explained that he began to enjoy writing again when he decided to have fun with it.

"The job has gotten harder, I feel less sure of myself now than I ever have," Antrim admitted. "I've wanted to quit a lot." Yet it's safe to say that critics, Antrim's fan base, and the literary community are glad that he didn't quit just yet.

Lindsay Pierce can be reached at lcpierce@student.umass.edu

Glee all around

By Lindsay Pierce
Collegian Correspondent

The Five College Choral Festival, held every two to three years at Smith College, fell this year on Saturday, Feb. 20. A popular event in the Pioneer Valley, the festival featured twelve groups and nearly 500 individual singers from the Five College Consortium.

The Hampshire College Chorus premered with "Cantique de Jean Racine, op. 11" by Gabriel Faure, conducted by Elizabeth Hart and accompanied by Gretchen Saathoff. Beautiful and hymnlike, the piece was sung with nice attention to dynamics and diction. Sung in French, the English translation was displayed on the balcony walls on either side of the stage. Several of the festival's other pieces also required translation.

With four groups performing, Amherst College followed with a diverse array of pieces. The Amherst College Concert Choir, conducted by Mallorie Chemin, performed "Si ch'io vorrei morire," an Italian madrigal by Claudio Monteverdi. The Concert Choir started strong, with great attention to dynamics and a floating harmony. The Amherst College Madrigal Singers, conducted by Zohar Perla (Class of 2012), serenaded the audience with "Il La La La" by Ninot Le Petit. With less than a dozen members, the group kept good tempo and gave a strong performance. "Mary Wore Three Links of Chain," a spiritual arranged by G. Roberts Kolb, was performed by The Amherst College Women's Chorus, with James Luff conducting. Vocals were shallow at times, but the alto part was strong, almost eerie. Finishing off for Amherst was The Amherst College Glee Club, conducted by Mallorie Chemin. With Philip Dupont ('12) and Roger Creel ('13) on piano, the Glee Club performed "Old Dan Tucker," an American folksong arranged by Douglas L. Ipson. The vocals were strong, complimented by lively acting, clapping, and stomping.

The Five College Collegium of The Five College Early Music Program, directed by Robert Eisenstein, sang "Tu solus qui facts mirabilia," a Renaissance piece by Josquin des Pres.

Sleek and uniform, The Mount Holyoke Glee Club and The Mount Holyoke Chorale, both conducted by Miguel Felipe, took the stage next. The Glee Club performed selections "El Grito" and "Malaguena" from "Suite' de Lorca" by Einojuhani Rautavaara, a composer of contemporary classical music. The Chorale sang "Pounding on an Open Door" and "Captain of My Heart" from "The All-Night Vigil or Rabi'a al-Adawiyya" by Forrest Pierce in its premiere performance. With Kivie Cahn-Lipman on amplified cello, the instrumentals emphasized the pieces, especially "Captain of My Heart," which was one of the most beautiful, memorable pieces with its soft dynamics and chants.

Conducted by Tony Thornton, The University of Massachusetts ensembles, looking aesthetically pleasing in uniforms, performed a diverse range of pieces. The Chamber Choir sang "Sure on This Shining Night (Nocturnes)" by Morten Lauridsen, poem by James Agee, which was a peaceful, pleasing, lullaby-like piece. The Chorale performed "Turn the World Around" by Harry Belafonte and Robert Freedman and arranged by Larry Farrow. A bit repetitive and relying heavily on the piano in the beginning, the piece was inspiring by the end. The ensembles combined for "Va pensiero (Nabucco)" by Giuseppe Verdi, accompanied by pianist Nicholas Shaneyfelt. With a long piano intro, the piece was emotional, powerful, and inspirational, with a strong attention to dynamics.

The Smith College Chorus, conducted by Greg Brown and accompanied by Catherine M. Kay, performed "O Sonne, O Sonne" from "Zwold Gesange" by Cornelius Uwe Gustav Jenner, text by Ferdinand Gregorovius. The piece was light and airy, with a unison sound and rich harmony. The Smith College Glee Club, conducted by Jonathan Hirsh, performed "Tidings of Great Joy" by Clifton J. Noble Jr., who also accompanied the piece. The composition was upbeat, with strong vocals and great intonation.

For the finale, the choirs from all five colleges combined for a rendition of "Plorate, filii Israel" from "Jephte" by Giacomo Carissimi, chosen by guest conductor Kristina Boerger. With the conductor on stage and the choirs in the balcony, the arrangement had the effect of surround sound. Strong and rich, each vocal part had its moment to shine in this beautiful, culminating piece.

Lindsay Pierce can be reached at lcpierce@student.umass.edu

Def Poet celebrates Afro–Dominican culture and 166 year independence

By Rachel Dougherty
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts will celebrate the sights and sounds of Dominican Independence Day this Saturday, February 27, with a series of cultural performances in the Fine Arts Center. The event is organized by the UMass Casa Dominicana, a cultural RSO that provides students with social and educational events that celebrate Dominican culture.

"The program will consists of Highlighting individuals and organizations that are working on a Black expression in the Dominican Republic, Blas Jimenez, Xiomara Fortuna and Bayahoma foundation," says Gisel Saillant of Casa Dominicana.

The semi-formal event will celebrate 166 years of Dominican independence with a range of performances that highlight the unique traditions and history of Dominican culture. This year's Independence Day event focuses on Afro-Dominican culture, with performances from the Afro-Dominican Ensemble KumbaCarey and Dominican-American slam poet Oveous Maximus.

KumbaCarey is an ensemble group that seeks to preserve African heritage in Dominican culture in their performances of traditional rhythms. They recreate the rhythms of Palos, Congos, Bambula, Machaco, Mangulina, and Carabine, as well as Merengue and Gaga. They are directed by master dancer Pedro Raposo and master percussionist Alexander Callendar, and have performed at colleges and festivals across the country.

Oveous Maximus is a Dominican-American spoken word artist whose poetry has won numerous awards and garnered a devoted fan-base across the country. Maximus began his poetry career in 1993 following the suicide of his brother, Carlos "Zinc Blue" Salcedo, a fellow poet and rapper. Since his first open mic at the Nuyorican Poets Café in New York in 2003,

Maximus has been featured in the documentary film SPIT, Showtime at the Apollo, the sixth season of the HBO original series Def Poetry, and the television video "The Millions." He was also the GrandSlam Poetry Champion of the LouderARTS 2006 slam team and placed third in the National Poetry Slam with LouderArts. Oveous Maximus has dedicated his career to the preservation of his history and culture, and to the memory of his brother Zinc Blue.

The program also features performances from local groups such as Ritmo en Mi and UMass professor Augustin Lao-Montes.

"Ritmo en Mi, a dance group from Peck Middle school in Holyoke, will be performing during the event," said Saillant. "We also invited Professor Augustin Lao-Montes to speak about the formation of a Dominican Racial Identity."

The event will celebrate the Dominican Republic's split from Haiti on February 27, 1844. The Dominican Republic had historically been occupied by both Spanish and French colonists since the arrival of Columbus in 1492. Casa's Independence Day Event will explore the history of the island from its various occupations to its recognition as an independent country.

The Casa Dominican Independence Event will take place from 8:00 p.m. to 1:00 a.m. in the lobby of the UMass Fine Arts Center. The event is $8 for Five College students and $10 for general admission. It is a semi-formal event, and dinner will be provided to those who attend.

Rachel Dougherty can be reached at rdougher@student.umass.edu.

Mill Valley
E·S·T·A·T·E·S
Looking for a place to live next year?
Apply during our
OPEN HOUSE
$500 OFF Security
Choice of a $300 Visa Card ~or~ Wii & Wii Fit*
~PLUS~
A Whole Foods Gift Card – Just for showing up!*
Saturday, February 27th 11AM-3PM
360 Riverglade Drive, Apt. D
More info at 413-253-7377
www.MillValleyApts.com
While supplies last, some restrictions apply

UM hopes to make A–10 Tourney

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

Although getting an NCAA Tournament berth is out of the question, the Massachusetts men's basketball team still has something to fight for: making the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

The Minutemen (10-17, 4-9 A-10) are 1.5 games ahead of Saint Joseph's, who is currently in 13th place. The top 12 teams in the conference will play in the A-10 Tournament.

UMass is coming off of two straight losses to George Washington and Saint Louis, and hopes to knock Dayton out of its chances to make the NCAA Tournament after a week of rest.

The Flyers (18-9, 7-6 A-10) are also coming off of two straight losses to Duquesne and No. 18 Temple. Their losing streak hasn't only hurt their chances of making it past the A-10 Tournament, it has also given the Minutemen a slight chance of finishing the league in seventh place.

If UMass can beat Dayton, it will be two games behind the Flyers with games against La Salle and Rhode Island. But before the Minutemen can worry about any of that, they have to overcome playing in a hostile environment.

The Flyers' home-court is one of the few arenas with NBA-caliber facilities and holds 13,500 people. UMass coach Derek Kellogg expects the arena to be packed and rowdy.

Dayton media relations reports the game is sold out, the fourth time this season that the team has reached maximum capacity for a home game.

"It's a huge homecourt advantage," Kellogg said.

Despite having a high RPI and wins against quality opponents, Dayton's performance in the A-10 schedule has put itself in danger of missing the NCAA Tournament. It is currently the only team with six conference losses still on the bubble, and suffered a devastating loss earlier this season to the Hawks.

For Kellogg, it means his team will have to work harder to avoid its 10th in-conference loss.

"The one thing you're going to know is that they're going to bring maximum effort and play as hard as they possibly can, because when you have a berth like that at stake, that's what they're striving for," Kellogg said.

At this point of the season, Kellogg has two objectives in mind. The first is to make sure his senior captain, Ricky Harris, leaves UMass on a positive note.

Kellogg also wants to allow the future of the Minutemen to gain experience heading into next year. Since losing sophomore David Gibbs to a broken foot, Kellogg has been starting three freshmen, and at times has played four at the same time.

"I'm interested to see where the young guys are," Kellogg said. "Sometimes, young [players], especially freshmen, either kick it into high gear at this time of the season, or they hit a wall. I think my guys are ready to go."

Unlike the last game the Minutemen had against the Billikens, the Flyers are an experienced team with seven seniors and four juniors. One of those juniors is Chris Wright (14.6 points per game, 7.4 rebounds per game), who leads Dayton in scoring and rebounds.

He also gives the team a strong defensive presence, averaging 1.4 blocks per game.

As a team, the Flyers (44.1) have the fifth best field-goal shooting percentage in the A-10. While their offense isn't going to scare anyone, they have allowed 61.2 ppg this season. The only teams allowing fewer points are the three currently tied for first place in the conference (the Owls, SLU and Richmond).

"We need to play smart and make sure we take care of the basketball, because they're really good when they can pressure you," Kellogg said.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

Mass Attack to bounce back against Eagles Friday

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

It's hard to ignore the past, when the past you're facing is a five-game losing streak and a free fall in the conference standings.

But for the Massachusetts hockey team, looking forward is all it is trying to do, as they travel to Boston College Friday night in hopes of staying in the top eight of the Hockey East Standings.

"The mentality is more that we just have to look ahead, we're trying to forget what has happened," Marc Concannon said. "We can't change the past. We're just trying to stay positive and take care of what we can take care of right now."

What has happened has been more than just a five-game skid. The Minutemen – who fell out of the national rankings for the first time since the fourth week of the season – have lost seven of their last eight games, with their only win coming at Providence, who sits at the bottom of the Hockey East standings.

During the eight-game stretch, UMass' (16-15-0, 11-13-0 HEA) has seen one of the best offenses in the conference go to one of the worst, as it averaged 1.38 goals per game during the stretch and was shutout three times. In the Minutemen's previous 23 games, it had not been shutout and averaged 3.3 goals per game.

"I think we just haven't been doing the little things – screening, putting the pucks on pads and just working hard," Concannon said. "A lucky one would definitely help, I think once we start scoring, we'll start scoring in bunches."

For the No. 7 Eagles, their offense is a different story, as they have gone 7-2 in their previous nine games, scoring 4.5 goals per game during the stretch and 5.43 goals per game in the seven wins.

"We got James Marcou, Casey Wellman and Will Ortiz, they are a little cold right now, but as soon as they get going, everybody is going to follow them and if we score one, we'll score five or six," Concannon said.

One of the seven wins came in Amherst back on Feb. 5, as BC (19-10-2, 14-8-2 HEA) hammered UMass in a 7-1 victory. At that time, the two were both tied for second place in the conference, but now sit far apart. The Eagles still remain in second place, while UMass has dropped to a tie for sixth place with UMass Lowell.

The win was the second for BC this season in Amherst, as it took an earlier meeting, 3-1 on Dec. 4, giving it the season series.

Seeing the Eagles twice so far has familiarized the Minutemen with how they play, as well as showed them what they can do better.

"[The games showed us] that they are a terrific team, and we'll have to play really well to beat them," UMass coach Don Cahoon said.

"I'd say we just need to tighten our defense up a little bit. The last game they beat us up pretty good, but it's a different game, it's nothing-nothing," Concannon said. "We just have to start scoring, we haven't been scoring as of late, so we're still just trying to find ourselves a little bit and hopefully, it comes together on Friday night."

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Junior forward Mike Lecomte shoots on goal against Merrimack last week. The Minutemen hope to rebound against BC Friday night.

UMass to play in Classic weekend

By Geena Lombardi
Collegian Staff

Coming off of four wins at the Florida International University Combat Classic, the Massachusetts' softball team looks to continue its dominating pitching and intense hitting this weekend at the National Fastpitch Coaches Association Leadoff Classic.

The Minutewomen (4-1) rank No. 20 in the USA Today/NFCA Poll after last week's classic.

Pitcher Sara Plourde went 3-0 while striking out 37 opponents, while bringing a 1.84 ERA into the classic. First baseman Sarah Reeves' .571 batting average and 1.071 slugging percentage is also something that will help the Maroon and White, while also posting no errors at first base.

The Minutewomen will travel to Columbus, Ga. to face Mississippi State (7-2). The Bulldogs started its season with a sweep over the University of Alabama at Birmingham and Stephen F. Austin in the Bulldog Round-Robin, followed by a 3-1 showing at the Aggie Classic.

MSU brings strong pitching to the table; freshman Kylie Vry threw a no-hitter in her first career start, while both Stephanie Becker and Misty Flesher boast ERAs of 2.00 and 2.59, respectively.

Ka'ili Smith leads the Bulldogs, hitting with a .429 batting average, 11 RBIs and two home runs. Brittany Bell is not far behind, with a .385 batting average and a team-leading .500 on base percentage.

Mississippi does, however, have a fairly young team, with just two seniors compared to six freshmen. The Bulldogs are currently in second place in its conference, behind Alabama.

UMass will then face North Carolina State (6-4) for the second time this season. In their first matchup, the Minutewomen took the 1-0 victory in a rain-delayed game.

Plourde dominated over the Wolfpack, striking out 15 and allowing just four hits in the shutout. It was sophomore Katie Bettencourt who hit a solo home run off of Lindsay Campana to win the game for UMass.

At the Leadoff Classic, NC State is 3-6 and 2-2 against UMass. The Wolfpack have won four games since its loss to the Minutewomen, mainly behind strong hitting from Stephanie Call. Call has a .406 batting average, along with a .926 slugging percentage. She has four homeruns this season, followed by offensive threats Bridget Desbois and Claudia Cooper. Landon Warren also set school records this season with four runs scored in an impressive 24-1 victory over North Carolina Central.

Lindsey Campana's one loss of the season was to UMass, where she allowed five hits. Campana has a 0.27 ERA for the season and averages 9.33 strikeouts per game.

The Minutewomen then meet No. 6 Missouri (3-2) Saturday morning. The Tigers have beaten the Minutewomen in all four of its previous meetings, the most recent being in the Leadoff Classic in 2002. Mizzou also outscored UMass 16-4 in total.

The Tigers are coming off of a split series against Arizona, led by junior Megan Christopher. Christopher leads her team with a .538 batting average and .615 slugging percentage. Not far behind are Nicole Hudson and Jenna Marston with a combined five RBIs for the season.

Sophomore Chelsea Thomas comes into the game with a 3-1 record and a 3.57 ERA. Thomas did struggle against Arizona, giving up two early walks and a homerun. Jana Hainey and Kristin Nottlemann have also made appearances at the plate for MU.

UMass' second game on Saturday will be played against Illinois State (5-3). The Redbirds come into the Leadoff Classic after a 3-1 showing at the Arizona State Littlewood Classic.

ISU holds a 3-0 record over UMass in the Leadoff Classic. In the Littlewood Classic, Michelle Henderson had 36 putouts, a .500 batting average and a 1.143 slugging percentage.

Megan Warner is 2-0 this season with a 2.18 ERA, while Chrissy Burton also made a good impression in the final two games of the Classic, striking out nine batters to help her team to the wins.

The Minutewomen will finish the five-game classic against No. 18 Louisiana (8-2), who comes in off of a 3-2 run at the Houston Marriott Classic.

The Cajuns are 20-13 in their seven appearances at the Leadoff Classic. The last time they faced each other, UMass was also defeated by UL at the 1997 Classic, 6-0.

Two strong pitchers, Brittany Cuevas and Donna Bourgeois, helped Louisiana in its three wins. Cuevas is 5-0 in the season, followed by Bourgeois who is 3-2 with a 1.22 ERA.

Christi Orgeron and Melissa Verde lead Louisiana with 12 RBIs. Five of Orgeron's seven hits have been homeruns, while Lana Bowers also helps out with a .371 batting average.

The Maroon and White have been invited to and competed in the Leadoff Classic every year it has been held. UMass looks to improve on its 2-0 record at last year's classic, which was shortened due to rain.

Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombard@student.umass.edu.

P.J. STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Kyllie Magill rounds third base and looks for home plate in a game last season. Magill hopes to lead the Minutewomen to victories at the Leadoff Classic.

BRIAN TEDDER/COLLEGIAN

Senior shortstop Whitney Williams makes a play last season. Williams helped the Minutewomen to four wins in the FIU Combat Classic.

CINEMARK
For advance tickets & showtimes visit
cinemark.com
or call 1-800-FANDANGO + Exp Code 1118#
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
FIRST MATINEE SHOWTIME (7 DAYS A WEEK) $5.00
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.25 • STUDENT $7.00 (WITH ID)
AVATAR - REAL D 3D ($2.75 SURCHARGE) [PG13] 110 440 810
◆ COP OUT [R] ① 155 430 715 955
◆ THE CRAZIES [R] ① 120 415 730 1025
DEAR JOHN [PG13] 130 425 720 1005
EDGE OF DARKNESS [R] ① 150 440 725 1020
PERCY JACKSON & THE OLYMPIANS: THE LIGHTNING THIEF [PG] 115 410 655 940
THE WOLFMAN [R] ① 120 435 735 1010
TOOTH FAIRY [PG] 145 650
VALENTINE'S DAY [PG13]
105 200 355 450 645 740 935 1030
WHEN IN ROME [PG13] 420 920
CinéArts
◆ SHUTTER ISLAND [R] ①
1245 220 400 530 705 840 1015
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

MAXWELL SPARR/COLLEGIAN

Junior Jackie Lyons scored six goals in a 13-12 victory over Harvard last season. The Minutewomen host the Crimson Saturday at McGuirk Stadium.

UMass looks to rebound against Crimson Saturday

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

Every opponent the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team has faced this season has opened their season against the Minutewomen.

That trend will continue this Saturday, when UMass (2-2) takes on Harvard in the Crimson's season opener. The contest marks the second of four straight home games for the Minutewomen, while Harvard begins the year with four consecutive road games.

UMass is coming off a gritty 10-8 loss to No. 10 Boston University in game played in rainy, slushy conditions Wednesday afternoon at McGuirk Stadium. After allowing seven goals in the first half, the Minutewomen held the Terriers to three scores in the second half, giving them a chance to make a comeback.

A late rally, however, came up just short, as those three goals were all BU needed to claim the victory. In the game, junior Jackie Lyons led UMass with three goals for her second hat trick of the season, with the first coming in a win against Connecticut. Not to be outdone, Traci Landy scored four of the Terriers' 10 goals in the game.

Jesse O'Donnell, the leading scorer for the Minutewomen this season, scored a pair of goals down the stretch to close the gap. UMass goalkeeper Katie Florence made 10 saves in the contest, but was outplayed by BU's Rachel Klein, who made eight saves to earn the win.

The Terriers continued the pattern of the Minutewomen playing opponents in their season openers, and Harvard will be no different, as it will be the fifth- straight team to fall into that category.

Last year, the Crimson were 6-10 overall with a 2-5 record in the Ivy League. Junior Jess Halpern returns this season after a team-high 46 goals and 55 points in her sophomore year. Goalkeeper Kerry Clark also returns after starting 14 games in cage last season, while posting a 12.95 goals against average and a .385 save percentage.

Where Harvard struggled last season was getting off to a good start rather than playing from behind. The Crimson were outscored 105-79 by their opponents in the first half last season, but fared better in the second half, being outscored 89-86.

UMass, however, isn't the type of team to exploit Harvard's inability to keep opponents off the board in the beginning of the game. The Minutewomen play better in the second half as well, while being outscored 25-20 in the first half.

Last season, the Crimson won four of their six games on the road and held only a 2-5 record at home. Harvard's only two-game winning streak of the year came in the final two games against Cornell and Boston College on the road.

One of the losses the Crimson suffered at home last season was against UMass on Feb. 28, nearly a year ago. After dropping three games in a row, the Minutewomen finally got their first win on the year against Harvard in a closely-contested 13-12 victory.

Lyons led the scoring attack for UMass, having a career-day with six goals, including the game-winner with two minutes, 43 seconds remaining in the second half. Halpern sparked the Crimson with three goals for the hat trick.

The Minutewomen hung on for the win behind Florence's career-high 18 saves, the biggest one coming in the final two minutes in a final attempt by the Crimson to tie the game.

Mass will look for a similar result this weekend with the game set to begin at 1 p.m. in a Saturday matinee.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

UM takes on OSU

Team leads NCAA in goals

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team leads the NCAA in goals scored with 35 in victories over Saint John's and Hartford, and have scored the most goals in their first two games since the 1990 season.

The No. 18 Minutemen hope to have that type of offensive production when they head to Ohio State to face the Buckeyes for the first time in program history Saturday afternoon.

"Every game on the schedule is a big game, we tell all our guys it's another game in the season, but there's some travel involved, we're going to be playing inside for the first time since I can remember," UMass coach Greg Cannella said.

The Minutemen have not played a game west of Pennsylvania since 2000, when UMass beat Butler, 12-9 on March 25.

"They're home, and I'm sure they will be fired up and ready to go, and they're comfortable playing indoors," Cannella said.

OSU is coming off a 5-11 loss to No. 15 Bucknell on Saturday after opening their season with a 10-8 victory over Villanova on Feb. 13, opening 2010 as a new member of the Eastern College Athletic Conference, UMass' former conference.

UMass scored the most goals since 2002 in its 20-10 victory over the Hawks in its home opener last Saturday. Junior midfielder Ryan Hantverk led the way with a career-high four goals, while senior attackman Ryan Smith tallied the first three goals of his career, and senior midfielder Bobby Hayes had his second-straight game with a hat trick.

Even with his team's ability to score as of late, Cannella knows that the Buckeyes cannot be taken lightly, and wants his players to continue being effective in their offensive zone.

"I try not to get too excited about it, you just hope those guys can be consistent in what they do and their approach," Cannella said.

The Minutemen got off to a similar start last season, scoring a combined 43 goals in their first three games, with just one ending in defeat.

"It seems as though we are sharing the ball a bunch, which is great news, and we have some guys that can distribute," Cannella said. "The more you can share the ball, the better off you are going to be."

Sophomore attackman Art Kell, freshman midfielder Will Manny and Hayes have been instrumental in creating UMass' offense, especially extra-man opportunities.

Manny leads the team with five assists on the year, and was named the Colonial Athletic Associations Rookie of the Week, while Kell has five goals and two assists.

The Minutemen scored six man-up goals against the Hawks, tying a mark set in 1999. The Buckeyes have allowed 3-of-5 man up goals against opponents so far this season. Even with the two victories, Cannella wants his team to prepare for the Buckeyes like any other opponent.

"Well, obviously you have to prepare to defend OSU the best you can," Cannella said. "They're a really good transition team as well, so you want to try to keep them out of transition as much as you can."

OSU is led by Jeff Tundo, who has four goals and one assist on the year. Both Logan Schuss and James Green each have three goals and one assist. On the defensive front, the Buckeyes have one of the best defensemen in the ECAC in senior captain Scott Foreman, who is second on the team in ground balls with five.

"They're a very good riding team, and very aggressive on the defensive end, so you have to prepare for all that stuff," Cannella said. "We need to get our guys ready for really the kind of intensity they bring to the game, they play really hard."

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Senior midfielder Bobby Hayes leads the Minutemen to Columbus this weekend as the Minutemen look for their third-straight win.

Senior successes

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

On their night, the seniors delivered.

On Thursday night, the Massachusetts women's basketball team welcomed Saint Joseph's into the Mullins Center for a game that carried a little extra significance, as UMass recognized its senior players, Diatiema Hill and Kim Benton. The two veterans went on to lead their team to a 75-62 victory over the Hawks.

Although UMass (10-17, 4-8 A-10) already secured a spot in the Atlantic 10 tournament, it wanted to take care of a few things during their final game at home. For one, the Minutewomen wanted to do something that's been difficult for them all season – win at home. Most importantly, however, they wanted to send their seniors out of the Mullins Center with a lasting memory – a win against a strong conference rival.

"I'm just so happy," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "I'm happy for Kim and [Diatiema]. This is the way we practice every day, so it was so nice for the kids to come together and beat a very good St. Joe's team on our home floor."

The Hawks (15-12, 8-4 A-10) entered the building on a three-game winning streak, with a victory potentially giving them a first-round bye in the A-10 Tournament.

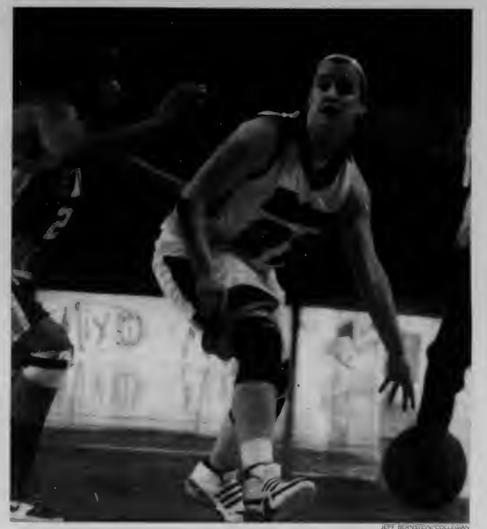
After losing their initial momentum, the Minutewomen regained their swagger when seniors Diatiema Hill and Kim Benton took over the contest.

With an energetic crowd on hand, the seniors paved the way for UMass' 29-23 lead at the half.

"It was the last home game playing in the Mullins Center – you have to go all out," Hill said, who likely will be returning next year after receiving a medical redshirt. "I played as hard as I could, and I saw that they couldn't guard me sometimes. When I got help, I would give it to my teammates, and they would hit the shot. I saw everybody was on, so I kept passing it."

Hill, who dedicated the game to Benton, played one of the best games of her career, finishing with 20 points, four rebounds and 11 assists.

The Minutewomen padded their six-point first half lead by outscoring the Hawks by seven in the second half. UMass shot 61.5 percent in the second half en route to its largest offensive outburst of the season.



Benton added to the onslaught by scoring seven points to go along with three rebounds and three assists. After celebrating the two seniors' accomplishments at half-court following the game, the aspiring basketball coach couldn't fight the tears.

"It's been a great experience, and I couldn't ask for anything more," Benton said. "The coaches are great, the team is great, and it has just been such a great experience."

UMass looks to add to its momentum when it plays Charlotte (15-12, 8-5 A-10) on Sunday in North Carolina.

"[Charlotte's] big, and we're on the road," Dacko said. "It's a great challenge for us to match up with them inside and out. If we can play this kind of game against Charlotte, we'll take our chances. I want us to continue this run we're on now and extend Kim's career as long as we can."

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Senior guard Kim Benton added seven points in her final game at the Mullins Center Thursday evening. UMass takes on Charlotte on Sunday.

UM heads to NECs

By Jeffery Engmann
Collegian Staff

After placing fifth and seventh respectively at the Atlantic 10 Championships, several members of the men and women's indoor track teams will head to Boston, Mass. to compete in this year's New England Championships.

The meet will take place at Boston University's Track and Tennis Center on Friday and Saturday, and will feature many of the top collegiate indoor track athletes in the region.

The Minutemen and Minutewomen will look to improve upon their performance last year, in which the men's team finished 10th, and the women earned ninth place.

Key members of each team will look to carry momentum generated from last weekend's A-10 championship.

Competing against some of the conferences best performers, junior Sean Busch put forth a performance that earned him the UMass Athlete of the Week award. Not only did Busch place first in the individual pole-vaulting event, but he did so with a mark that was record breaking. His mark of 15-03.00 was the second highest in school history.

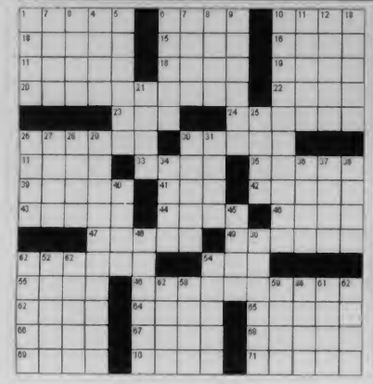
Two other juniors also jumped into the record books last weekend. Teammates Stephanie Aguguo and Ida Okkonen had stand out performances in the triple jump event. The duo had marks of 38-06.75 and 38-06.00 that placed them third and fourth respectively all-time in the UMass triple jump record books.

Junior Scott VanderMolen earned All-Conference honors in last weekends A-10 Championships for his performance in the 1000 meter run.

Senior Jonathan Pierce will also be looking to perform well in his last NEC. In last years' race, he recorded his fastest time of the season in the 5000 meter run. This season, he will run alongside three of his teammates in the 500 meter run.

Holly Hemricher' blistering mark of 25.25 in the 200 meter was the third fastest ever in UMass indoor history, and was one of the top performances for the Minutewomen. As a senior, she will be competing in the same event this weekend. Senior Lisa Wilson, who has already broken five records in the shot put and weight throw events during her collegiate career, will look to break more this weekend, as she will compete in those two events.

Freshmen Courtney Baldwin and Nalis Mbanda will be competing in their first indoor NEC this weekend. Baldwin will be competing in two long distance events, the long jump and the 1000 meter, while Mbanda will compete in the shot put event.



The meet will kick off for both teams on Friday Feb. 26 at 1:30 p.m., and will continue on Saturday at 10 a.m.

Jeffrey Engmann can be reached at jengmann@student.umass.edu.

SPARE TIME FAMILY FUN CENTER & CITY SPORTS GRILLE
Premier Sports Bar
7 Foot HD Projection TV ~ Over 10 TV's
Pub Style Menu ~ Weekly Drink Specials
Live Entertainment Every Weekend
Live It Up! Go Bowling
$1.99 per game
Tues & Wed 9pm-Close
All You Can Bowl & FREE Pizza
Thursdays 9pm-Close $13 per person
Unlimited Bowling & Shoe Rental
SPARE TIME & CITY SPORTS GRILLE
www.sparetimenorthampton.net
525 Pleasant St. 584-4830

comics

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Lariat
6. Swill
10. A period of discounted prices
14. Homeric epic
15. Cab
16. Blockage
17. Skin disease
18. Cards with just one symbol
19. Employ
20. Appraisal
22. Japanese sashes
23. A small drink
24. Woodwind player
26. A frenzied woman
30. The unsaturated organic radical C_3H_5
32. A single time
33. Europe's highest volcano
35. To curve
39. Celebrate
41. Also
42. The wife of Abraham
43. Rinse, as with a solvent
44. Marsh plant
46. Ritual
47. Rubber
49. Maximum
51. A photographer's need
54. Recent
55. Matures
56. Einstein's theory
63. North Atlantic Treaty Organization
64. Streetcar
65. Leg bone
66. Detail
67. Initial wager
68. Office worker
69. And
70. Require
71. Spells

DOWN
1. City in Peru
2. "Oh, my!"
3. Transgressions
4. Wise one
5. A city in the Ukraine
6. At least one on an envelope
7. Shoestring
8. Beasts of burden
9. Handgun
10. Schoolmistress
11. Excuse
12. Large-eyed lemur
13. Discharge 21. Fries, maybe
25. Farewells
26. Brood
27. Freudian stage
28. Almond
29. Irritating
30. Building addition
31. Stow, as cargo
34. Container weight
36. Verve
37. Feed bag contents
38. Sharpen
40. 365 days 45. Song for two
48. Plaid
50. A sudden muscle spasm
51. ___ Major (southern constellation)
52. Marble
53. Almost 40 inches
54. Appointed
57. Coastal raptor
58. Tardy
59. Loathsome
60. Wild goat
61. Rubber wheel
62. Tibetan oxen

Summer Session Just Got 50% BIGGER!!!

3 Sessions to Choose From:
- Session I: May 17 - June 7
- Session II: June 8 - July 13
- Session III: July 14 - August 17

Registration Begins March 15

Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net

UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

-SPECIALTY-
COIN SHOW
of Copper & Bronze
U.S. & Worldwide, Ancient & Medievil
Coins and Artifacts
FEATURING: ANCIENT CHINESE MONEY
Sunday, Feb. 28
9AM-2PM • 582-0032
Right side, Rocky's
ACE Hardware Bldg,
299 Russell St. (Rt. 9),
HADLEY • Free Admission

WE WANT YOUR COMICS
DON'T EAT THOSE COMICS! Give them to me!
E-mail: comics@dailycollegian.com

SNOWZEES
Bar & Guitar
Formerly Seven O's
Tue: Nintendo Wii Night
Wed: Karaoke Night
Thurs: DJ/Live Music
Fri: Earth Jams by Josh Wachtel
Sat: The Package - Rock & Roll at its Best
Sun: Nascar - Free Food, Open Mic
[[7 Minutes from UMass!]
1PM - 1AM · 7 Days a Week
330 Amherst Rd.
SUNDERLAND, MA. 01237
413-665-8788

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
PUFFTON VILLAGE
EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS
SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!
ON SITE LAUNDRY, OFF STREET PARKING.
BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.
OFFICE HOURS: 8AM TO 4PM MONDAY - FRIDAY
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

Cockadoodle

				2
8	6					2		9
		1	4	5			8
		2		9		3		5
		9			1			2
			3
5
	3							4
	8			7		9	3

amherst cinema
Fri Feb 26 - Thu Mar 4
THE LAST STATION
2:30 5:00 7:30 10:00 +12:00pm Sat & Sun
THE OSCAR NOMINATED SHORT FILMS 2010
LIVE ACTION: 2:15 7:00
ANIMATED: 4:30 9:15 +11:45am Sat & Sun
CRAZY HEART
2:00 4:45 7:15 9:45 +11:30am Sat & Sun
28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst
www.amherstcinema.org
(413) 253-2547

PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri Feb 26 - Thu Mar 4
A SINGLE MAN
4:30 6:45 +10:00am Wed
SHUTTER ISLAND 4:00 7:00 10:00 +1:15 Sat & Sun +10:30am 1:15 Wed
UP IN THE AIR 9:30 +1:30 Sat Sun & Wed
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasantsttheater.org
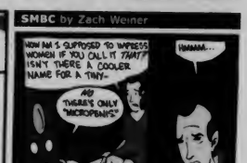
(413) 584-5848

Bridges by David Waksman infinitymaze.com



Hark! a Vagrant by K. Beaton harkavagrant.com

SMBC by Zach Weiner

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Perhaps it is not best to finagle with your best chance at happiness. This includes your significant other.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Often times a scone is what the body needs to cure indigstion and most importantly, gout.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Not everything is as bad as you say it is. There are people out there in worse situations ... like everyone who works with Michael Bay.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Barack Obama may be a phenomenal public speaker, but his phone sex voice is just down right legendary.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Stop! You have had enough Blue Wall burritos to last a lifetime! Do you really want a burrito on your epitaph?

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Though many cartoons are fake, no one can deny that ACME Inc. is balls-to-the-wall awesome.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Your imagination can not even comprehend the offspring of a liger, a tiger, and a descendent of Mighty Mouse.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Don't be so sa1, someone out there loves you dearly. Kirk Cameron is all about spreading the love.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
This weather, though dreary, can be enjoyed with a little bit of courage and massive mudslides.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
You have not experienced life until you have watched at least one episode of Jersey Shore while on psychedelic mushrooms.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Cabin fever can take its toll on any student here at UMass. If you find your roommate outside with Cheetos and rolling papers, call the police.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Your school work should take a page out of Domino's book: Admit it is terrible, but just send it in to those poor suckers who praise it anyhow.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

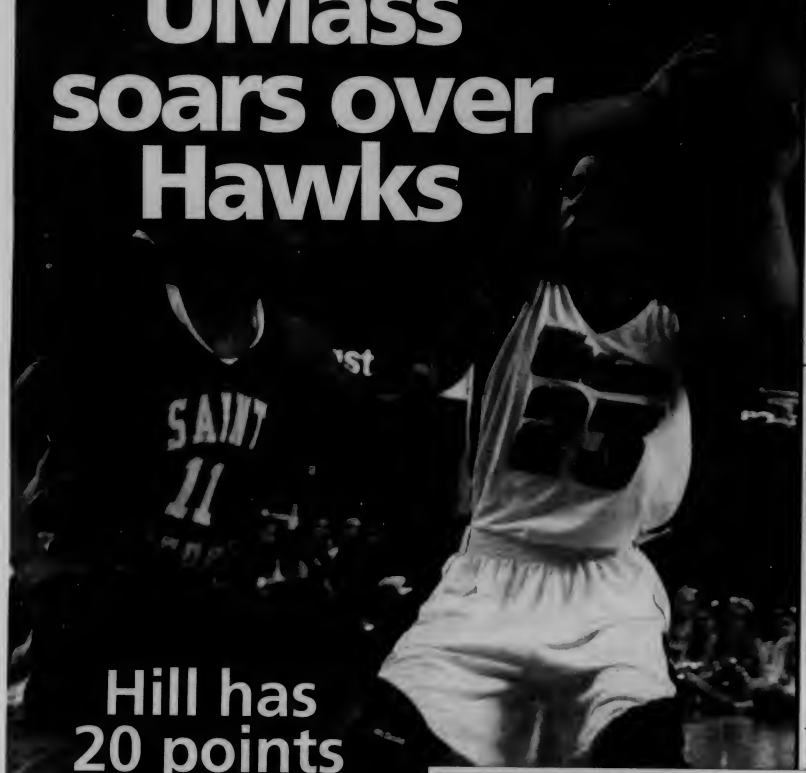
FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com. Stop by or Call 549-0600

28 Stockbridge St: 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,575/Mo+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

FOR RENT

www.AmherstMARentals.com 413-549-1398



SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hot-line 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends From $89 Complete. montrealExpress.net MontrealBlowout.com 781-979-9001

UMass soars over Hawks

Hill has 20 points in UM victory

MEN'S LACROSSE

After a 20-10 victory, UMass looks to make it three in a row against the Buckeyes of Ohio State on Saturday. The Minutemen lead the NCAA with 35 goals scored so far this season.

SEE PAGE 12

SOFTBALL

With four wins at the FIU Combat Classic, the Minutewomen hope to gain more momentum when they compete in the NFCA Leadoff Classic this weekend.

SEE PAGE 11

DAILY COLLEGIAN sports WEEKEND EDITION

MARCH

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 40 LOW: 30 www.DailyCollegian.com MONDAY, MARCH 1, 2010

8.8 magnitude quake strikes Chile

UMass study-abroad student Rebecca Walsh is safe in Chile after massive earthquake

By Matt Rocheleau
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts junior studying abroad in Chile said she is safe after the South American nation was rocked by one of the strongest earthquakes ever recorded over the weekend.

Rebecca L. Walsh, 20, of Lowell, Mass., was in Santiago, Chile – the nation's capital and largest city – when an 8.8-magnitude earthquake hit early Saturday morning, killing an estimated 708 people, displacing 2 million and severely damaging around 500,000 homes, according to the Associated Press (AP).

Walsh, a Spanish and sociology double major, arrived in Chile on Thursday.

"I'm fine, all is well," said Walsh in a Facebook message to the Collegian yesterday. "As bad as the news is, I didn't go through that bad of an experience."

The worst part of it, she said, was that she was out with friends and far from the hotel when the quake hit.

"We stayed away from the buildings as much as possible, just in case of falling rubble," said Walsh. "We ended up walking back to the hotel when the sun came up and got to see a lot of the damage before it was cleaned up."

The structural integrity of the hotel she was staying in was questionable, so she said she and her friends left as soon as they could.

"Luckily, the building codes in Chile are really strict, and I didn't see any serious damage," she added.

Walsh and the other students in the study abroad program will be going to meet their host families today in Valparaíso and Viña del Mar, Chile. Walsh will be staying in the coastal city of Valparaíso, where she will live until the study abroad program ends in July.

"Unfortunately, two of the families – we don't know which yet – are currently looking for new homes because theirs sustained too much damage," she said.

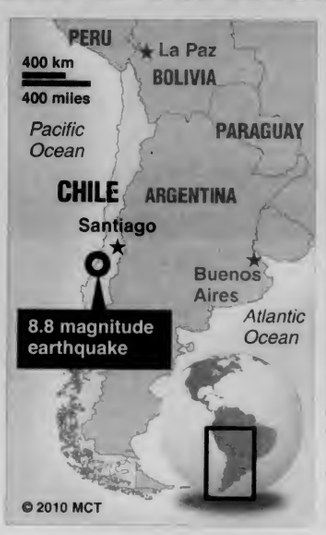
The hotel she was staying in is an all-inclusive resort hotel, "which is really bizarre, considering the country is in a disaster mode," she said.

"Having this many people so worried is really weird for me," Walsh added. "We finally have Internet, which is nice because I've been able to actually talk to my family."

Walsh's boyfriend, Kenneth Burdett, a UMass junior and nursing major from Branford, Conn., said his mom called him Saturday when she heard the reports of the earthquake, and he was relieved when Walsh's sister, Theresa Walsh, called him later that day to say his girlfriend was safe.

Burdett, who said he has been in a relationship with Walsh since fall 2009, told the Collegian he has spoken with Rebecca Walsh several times since Saturday's earthquake.

"She sounded pretty calm," said Burdett in a phone interview late afternoon on Saturday. "Her hotel had some structural damage, but I don't think anyone around where she's staying was injured."



Walsh said the best thing members of the UMass community can do is to help support and donate to the various ongoing relief efforts there.

A $10 donation will be made to the Red Cross' relief efforts in Chile from those who text "CHILE" to 90999. Other organizations, including Habitat for Humanity, World Vision, Salvation Army and The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), set up similar donation systems for mobile phone users.

"Honestly, what I've been through hasn't been too traumatic, and I just hope that this gets people to help out those who have been truly affected more towards the south," Walsh said.

"Maybe the weirdest thing about this whole experience has been talking to Chileans, who showed up to work in the hotels we're staying in, despite having family in the worst-struck areas who they hadn't been able to talk to yet," she added. "One woman apologized to me for not having

See CHILE on page 2

Largest quakes

The world's highest-magnitude earthquakes since 1900:

Location	Year	Mag.
Chile	1960	9.5
Prince William Sound, Alaska	1964	9.2
Off coast of Northern Sumatra	2004	9.1
Kamchatka, Russia	1952	9.0
Off coast of Ecuador	1906	8.8
Chile	2010	8.8
Rat Islands, Alaska	1965	8.7
Northern Sumatra, Indonesia	2005	8.6
Assam, Tibet	1950	8.6
Andreanof Islands, Alaska	1957	8.6
Southern Sumatra, Indonesia	2007	8.5
Banda Sea, Indonesia	1938	8.5
Kamchatka, Russia	1923	8.5
Chile-Argentina border	1922	8.5
Kuril Islands, Russia	1963	8.5

Source: U.S. Geological Survey
Graphic: Judy Treible © 2010 MCT

Online gaming offers sense of community

By Elizabeth Tran
Collegian Staff

Imagine a world where you can make friends and enemies without ever having to meet them face-to-face, or even leave your dorm room: Welcome to the online gaming community.

Online gaming is a booming part of modern society, expanding since the invention of the Internet and thriving successfully with technological advances such as high-speed connections and Wi-Fi.

People originally started playing online with the rise of the personal computer in the 1990s, and the field eventually expanded to gaming consoles such as Microsoft Xbox, Sony PlayStation and Nintendo Wii – the bestselling console of the present generation. GameSpot.com listed Nintendo selling 67 million Wii consoles as of January 2010.

Today's gamers often join a "clan" to enhance their gaming experience. The concept of a clan is basically like that of a team competing against other groups of players in various games such as "Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 2," a first-person shooter video game.

The game sold 4.7 million copies in the first 24 hours it was released last year, and sold over eight million in its first five days. "Modern Warfare 2" is a reaction-based game where you compete against up to 18 other players in real-time, while trying to complete various objectives such as 'capture the flag.' Players can receive promotions in rank for continued success.

Chris Maxfield, 21, of Amherst, N.H., is an avid online gamer and can play an average of two hours every day. However, his two hours are miniscule compared to other online players.

While the average gamer only logs a few hours per day due to jobs and other priorities, some dedicated souls are "hardcore" players. According to Edge Magazine, these "hardcore" gamers can play for 39 hours a week or more.

Maxfield is part of "The Bomb Squad" gaming clan, which was created a year ago by Robert Gicherman, a 30-year-old from New Jersey. The "clan" not only plays together online, but communicates through its own website where members can talk about any topic relevant to video games or not.

Most of the members have not met each other, although they spend a great deal of their personal time playing together online, and consider themselves a thriving electronic community.

"We have a great community," said a member who goes by the online name deliveryboy555, a 24-year-old from London, England. "It's easy to get to know people quickly."

No one is prohibited from joining the clan. Anyone over the age of 16 is allowed to play with the team, with its members ranging from teens to adults in their 40s.

The only rule regarding joining the clan is that one must be an active member both on the website and in online game play; this aspect appears to help engender true personal ties between the gamers.

A majority of The Bomb Squad clan and the online gaming community in general are males. Females are a minority when it comes to video games of any kind according to Edge Magazine, citing that only 28 percent of online players are females.

Whether playing with friends or anonymous people, "it has the same effect as face-to-face meetings with regards to some people you can't stand and others you like instantly," said Zachary Flowers, 23, of Mineral Bluff, Ga.

Some people even find it easier to play with others online than deal with real teammates.

"I don't have to actually see them," said Gicherman, "so if I want to leave I can just turn off the PS3 or PC."

Online gaming offers players the opportunity to interact with humans who possess actual reasoning skills, rather than a computer-generated player. Often times, playing against a computer is too easy.

With a human opponent, even one on the other side of the world, there can be more strategy to consider, and the unpredictability provides more of a challenge.

There are various types of strategies one can choose for domination in online play – whether that means sticking together with a clan, or just taking a chance on your own; it all depends on what each person wants to do in the context of the game.

"That's what makes playing in a clan better; you know people's strengths and weaknesses," said Maxfield. "Even if you are not following a specific strategy, just knowing how your teammates play gives you a better chance of winning."

The online gaming community does not always revolve solely around video games. Almost any relevant topic can be touched upon when you join the community, including some very personal concerns.

Ultimately, online gaming offers yet another electronic location for social activity and interaction, but in an especially unique manner that allows genuine friendships to span the globe.

Elizabeth Tran can be reached at ettran@student.umass.edu.

Hurricane-force winds slam northern Mass.

Winds topping 90 miles per hour knocked over trees in Amesbury, Mass., as well as a sign on Rt. 110. Nearly 100,000 homes lost power on the northern coast of the state this weekend as a result of the storm.

ARTS & LIVING

'Monologues' mesmerize

The UMass performance of "The Vagina Monologues" took place last Thursday and Friday night to a sold-out auditorium full of eager spectators.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

UM struggles on defense

Freshmen shooters lead Minutemen in scoring as UMass loses to Dayton, 96-68, on Saturday night.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Pete Rizzo and Dmitry Shapiro explore the different sides of the Conservative Political Action Conference (CPAC).

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Head online to check out a photo slideshow of damage caused by the hurricane force winds in northern Mass.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 26

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sirkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Scannell
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Prowse
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Assistant Comics Domonic Mei
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Senior Producer Sara Cody
Senior Producer Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914, and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

COPY EDITOR
Elizabeth Tran

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Dan Centola

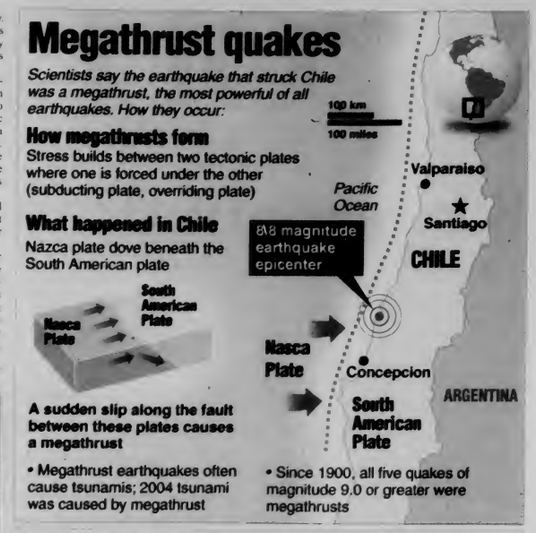
UMass student in Chile found safe

CHILE from page 1

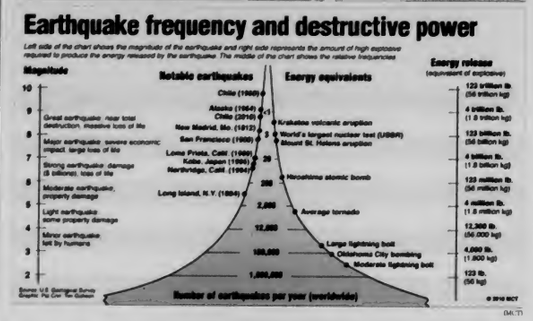
ing clean towels for us, because some of the staff hadn't shown up to work. It was like 'Are you kidding? I can't believe you're even here.'"

Walsh was one of 14 UMass students who received funding to study abroad this semester through the Gilman Scholarship program, said a December 2009 University press release. The other 13 students who received the scholarship are studying abroad elsewhere.

A U.S. Geological Survey geophysicist told the AP that the Chilean quake was hundreds of times more powerful than the Jan. 12 magnitude-7 earthquake that devastated Haiti. However, the one that struck Chile Saturday hit deeper below the Earth's surface and has cost far fewer lives.



The quake was felt as far away as Sao Paulo, Brazil, which is about 1,800 miles east of the earthquake's epicenter, according to the AP. Santiago is about 200 miles northeast of the epicenter, while Valparaiso is about 75 miles west of the capital city. The full extent of the damage remains unclear as Chile has been struck by more than 50 powerful aftershocks throughout the day, said AP reports.



Saturday's quake also sent a tsunami through the Pacific Ocean, which left Hawaiian residents scrambling to find higher ground after the Pacific Tsunami Warning Center issued a tsunami warning earlier in the day. However, the AP has reported that the warning was later canceled, and little damage has been reported there thus far.

The earthquake in Chile matched one that struck off Ecuador's coast in 1906 as the seventh-strongest ever recorded, according to the AP.

The largest earthquake ever recorded — a magnitude-9.5 quake that killed 1,655 people and left 2 million homeless — struck the same area of Chile on May 22, 1960, according to the AP. It caused a tsunami that killed people in Hawaii, Japan and the Philippines and caused damage along the United States' west coast.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrochele@dailycollegian.com.

Campus to Career Programs
in Memorial Hall
(between Herter Hall and the Old Chapel)

ULead Speaker Series Night
A Student and Alumni Networking Event
March 1 • 7-9 p.m.
Have you ever asked yourself, "What can I do now to be a better leader?" or, "How far can great leadership skills take me after UMass Amherst?" If so, join us and you will have the opportunity to meet and network with successful alumni currently working in a variety of fields as they discuss leadership
Co-sponsored by ULead

Enter to win a UStore gift card at all Campus to Career events.
Seniors can also enter to win a $1,000 cash prize from Liberty Mutual!
Drawing will be held at Commencement Ball on May 7, 2010

Covering Your Assets
March 3 • 5:30 p.m.
Learn the steps you need to take to make sure the insurance you have is covering what it needs to. Find out more about auto, home and renters insurance. Learn what they cover, why you need them and how to determine what is best for you

Sponsored by the Student Alumni Association and the Alumni Association in partnership with Liberty Mutual
Register for both events at UMassAlumni.com/students

HPV Fact #16:
It is estimated that each minute in the US, there is a new case of genital warts.

HPV Fact #8:
Guys can't get screened for HPV. So there's no way to know if a guy has the virus or is passing it on.

Why risk it
Visit your campus health center.

MERCK
Copyright © 2010 Merck & Co., Inc. All rights reserved. Printed in USA
hpv.com
21050004(39)-01/10-GRD

CUT WATCH

University of Minn. resists Pawlenty's cuts

The Minnesota Daily
Via College News Network

In an effort to dissuade the Legislature against cutting higher education funding, University President Bob Bruininks and Chief Financial Officer Richard Pfutzenreuter met with the House higher education finance committee Thursday, urging legislators to make higher education a priority for the state.

Last week, Gov. Tim Pawlenty proposed cutting $46 million from higher education — $36 million from the University and $10 million from the Minnesota State Colleges and Universities system — in his budget plan to fix the $1.2 billion state budget deficit. Members of the House and Senate are now in the process of drawing up their own budget.

"These cuts are very deep and they're very real," Bruininks told the bipartisan committee of lawmakers. A decision to cut state funding for higher education would be a "deliberate decision to compromise our future," he said.

Bruininks made his case that state funding is critical to the success of the University. He stressed the importance of having an educated workforce, and said the success of the University is directly tied to that of the state's business climate.

"We've got to fight to keep our edge," Bruininks said. "I don't want to be known as the generation that pulled the ladder of opportunity up behind us," Bruininks said.

Ryan Kennedy, Minnesota Student Association legislative certificate program, said he agreed with Bruininks' appraisal of the University's dire financial situation.

"There's not an easy fix to this, but certainly part of the solution does include getting as much support as possible from the state," Kennedy said.

Rep. Tom Rukavina, DFL-Virginia, who chairs the higher education committee, said he won't propose a budget plan made of all cuts to the University.

"You make the cuts. I'm done cutting," Rukavina told the Republicans on the committee. "You cut what you want to cut."

Rukavina said he plans to find money to replace the governor's cuts through revenue-generating programs, including a possible sales tax on personal electronics and an income tax surcharge. He estimated he could find enough money to fill the hole from cuts to higher education.

Higher education makes up about 9 percent of the state budget, with the University set to receive $627 million from the state in 2011. If the governor's recommended cuts go through, University funding from the state would revert back to its 2006 levels.

Rep. Keith Downey, R-Edina, said the University is lucky to be getting funding at its 2006 levels and asked University officials why tuition couldn't be raised even more to help cushion the state cuts.

Rep. Tim Mahoney, DFL-St. Paul, answered Downey by saying the state has abandoned its two-thirds funding obligation commitment to the University, where the state pays for two-thirds of the University's operating budget.

"It's totally wrong," he said, calling the cuts "an abomination of what this state has always stood for."

Bruininks said the University does the best it can to keep cuts from hitting students.

"When it comes to budget reductions, we try to do everything possible to shield students," Bruininks said. "But you can't make reductions of this size without touching education."

The University is required to submit a detailed budget report to the Legislature outlining its plans for applying possible cuts by March 15.

Students at Ohio University fight for recreation funding

The Post
Via College News Network

Finally given their opportunity to weigh in on pending budget cuts, students asked Ohio University's top administrators to safeguard recreation funding and study spaces at two budget forums yesterday.

The forums, which were the final two in a series this week, come as the University prepares to cut $13.75 million from its $280 million budget.

In a general budget forum yesterday afternoon, the provost and head of Finance and Administration heard concerns about whether the university should spend money on building renovations and whether costs for students are already too high.

People attending that session asked specifically about plans for renovating Former Baker Center and some of the residence halls, as well as Hudson Health Center services.

The general forum, which was the most poorly attended of all four forums, also offered an opportunity for faculty to outline clearly their most pressing concern. Faculty Senate Chairman Joe McLaughlin said he thinks the University needs to spend time defining its mission.

"This is an institution suffering from an identity crisis," McLaughlin said, pointing specifically to language in proposed budget cuts released last week that referred to a "core" of priorities administrators hoped to protect. "I think those categories that we've set up have really not done us much service - the primary, secondary and tertiary. I don't think there's enough definition to them."

Students later had their own opportunity to hone in the proposed cuts that concern them the most, asking primarily about proposed changes in Campus Recreation, but also looking at possible tuition increases and the possibility of cutting some hours of operation in Baker University Center and at Alden Library.

Questions at the student forum often revolved around recruitment and how some of the proposed changes, such as moving to pay-for-play in club and intramural sports, could discourage prospective students.

Some of the nearly 60 students also said that having the library and Baker Center open for fewer hours could cut the number of places to study.

The budget cut proposal includes a 7.55 percent cut of Campus Recreation's $4.8 million budget, and a 5.29 percent cut of the library's $11.2 million budget.

Administrators responded that they are simply trying to preserve as much of the student experience as possible, but that they will not be able to spare it all.

Unlike at the other forums, Executive Vice President and Provost Pam Benoit opened the standing-room-only student forum with an explanation of the budget process and the proposed reductions. She said that choice was in response to a request from students for clearer information.

Benoit and Mike Angelini, interim senior vice president for Finance and Administration, said after the final forum that they were impressed with students' understanding and thoughtfulness.

The administrators also said they thought the forums had been useful.

"I was very encouraged by all of them and by the participation," Angelini said. "It's clear people are passionate about finding ways to save jobs."

Both Angelini and Benoit said they had been listening carefully to suggestions this week and that some of them are particularly important.

Administrators released their initial budget cut recommendations last week, and they hope to have final recommendations to President McDavis by March 29.

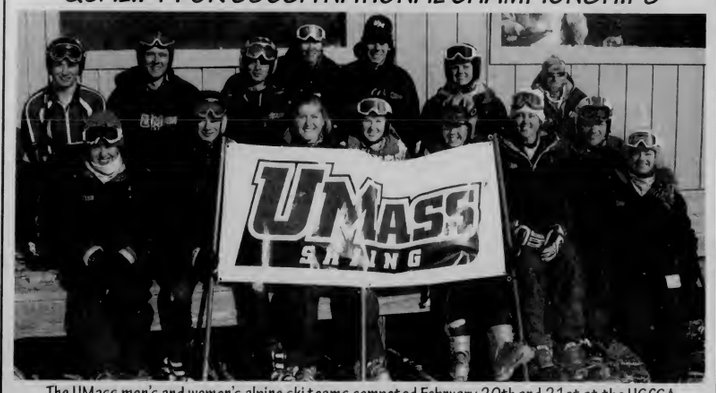
The Board of Trustees will consider McDavis' recommendations at its April meeting.

Do you like words?
Writing things down?
What have you been waiting for?!

WRITE FOR NEWS!

Contact Nick Bush
at news@dailycollegian.com

UMASS DINING PARTNERS WITH LAND O' LAKES



COWS FOR AFRICA™

Tuesday, March 2
7am –9pm • All DCs

- Learn how a better quality of life is being created worldwide
- Points earned by UMass will provide a cow for an African family
- Sample products made with Land O'Lakes ingredients
- Win prizes

LAND O'LAKES FOODSERVICE
Your Passion. Our Promise.®
Alpine Lace
UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

UMASS MEN'S AND WOMEN'S ALPINE SKI TEAMS QUALIFY FOR USCSA NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIPS

The UMass men's and women's alpine ski teams competed February 20th and 21st at the USCSA Eastern Regional Championships at Waterville Valley, NH against athletes representing some 23 Eastern Conference schools. The men finished fourth overall with a third in the slalom and a fourth in the giant slalom and the women finished tied for first place with a second in slalom and a third in giant slalom, ending up third overall after tie breaker rules apply. Six racers – Matt Small, Adam Pogorzelski, and Stefan Ogle for the men and Emily Shilletto, Heidi Skinner, and Amy Gifford for the women- finished in the top fifteen racers.

These results qualify both teams to compete in the USCSA National Championships this week (March 1st-6th) at Sunday River, Me. Drew O'Connor, Cameron Geller, Abby Nolan, and Alison Hubbard join the above named athletes and coach Peter Anderson to comprise the teams representing UMass at this premier event. Go you Minutemen and women! Go UMass! View results and progress on UMass Alpine Ski Team /Facebook.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, MARCH 1, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself." – Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass students at CPAC: what they saw

Deeply divided Republicans have identity crises

Pete Rizzo

It was not a safe place for a college student from Massachusetts, an Obama-voting, Earthfoods-frequenting liberal, to suddenly find myself surrounded by the reddest of the red, the pure-blood conservatives who, after all the years of escalating budgets, the never-ending Iraq war, Hurricane Katrina, the bathroom stall- foot-tapping, and the Bush backlash, still identify as conservatives. Who were these 10,000 people? The miniature flag-waving, three-piece-suit-wearing bodies came together for the same reasons they convene every year – Underneath the hanging crystal chandeliers and emblazoned NRA signs hanging in the Wardman Park Marriott in Washington, D.C., conservatives hope that after all their recent struggles they can find what it takes to get America back from what only a year ago had appeared to be an insurmountable public referendum.

So here conservatives gathered from 50 states to hold conferences, exposing "The Hoax of Global Warming" and to "Save Freedom from College Campuses," all in hopes that someone or something would emerge from the seemingly leaderless throng. That any of the gathered speakers over the course of these three days – from Massachusetts veterans Mitt Romney and Scott Brown to those with moderate appeal like Ron Paul and Allen West – would, through their rhetoric, unite the scattered herds of the party and lead "A Conservative Comeback in 2010."

But why was I there? Well, I'd like to think that it's because democracy is a conversation. It takes two equally engaged parties. Sure, I'm on the executive board of the UMass Democrats, but as a newly inspired Democrat waiting for all this hope and change stuff to pass through a Congress that's about as clogged as a rush hour thru-way, I figured I'd hop over the aisle and see what the other side had to say.

But why was I there? Well, I'd like to think that it's because democracy is a conversation. It takes two equally engaged parties.

And they had a lot to say, as this year's Conservative Political Action Conference (CPAC) burned with a fire as if the future of America was at stake last weekend. An annual event since 1973 – not openly affiliated with the Republican Party but visited by every major Republican from Karl Rove to Ronald Reagan – preach to its flock. The overarching theme of the conference, "Saving Freedom," was underlying the rhetoric of most of the conference's speakers. The Republican Party has been accused of being bankrupt of ideas, and more unfavorably as being, "the party of No."

In short, the Republican Party has an identity problem, one that was addressed head-on and most passionately by keynote speaker, Glenn Beck. He reckoned the Republican Party with images of his own life filled with addiction and eventual recovery, and more aptly with Tiger Wood's recent apology to the American public.

"The first step to getting redemption is you've got to admit you've got a problem," Beck said. He was railing against the crowd with a piece of chalk gripped in hand, his face flushing, his words serving to stop in their tracks those who wanted only to clap at something optimistic.

"I have not heard people in the Republican Party admit that they have a problem," Beck continued. "And when they do say they have a problem, I don't know if I believe them. I don't know what they even stand for anymore."

What does a post-Bush Republican stand for? If you're Rep. Mike Pence (R-Indiana) it means you still want to go back and retroactively "deny Planned Parenthood funding." That in order to best deal with our biggest economic alley and bottomless pockebook, China, America "needs to have one-hand extended in diplomacy, and the other on the holster of the arsenal of Democracy."

If you're Rep. Michele Bachmann (R-Minnesota) you blame the "media and elites for bailout nation" and "turning a manageable recession into a 10-year depression," while you equate America with a story of brave soldiers on a sinking ship, ones who "chose greatness rather than American decline."

If you're Newt Gingrich, the architect of the 1994 Republican takeover of Congress, you walk to Survivor's "Eye of the Tiger" and shake hands with the crowd before championing this nay-saying sentiment, "the best way to defeat [health care] is to slow the debate down" to a chorus of applause. Then you thank President Obama. You thank him for the "coming massive conservative majority" that without him "would not have been possible."

Well, there I was in the midst of this throng that was about as diverse as a bag of green M&Ms, tagging along with Brad DeHumeri, one of the most hated ideologues that the UMass campus has yet produced and the one-time leader of the UMass Republican Club when it was our most outspoken and controversial student organization. During his tenure as the club's president, it was one of the most infamous campus groups, going to war with the Radical Student Union and even the Collegian by printing his own monthly "newspaper," the now-defunct "Minuteman."

However, according to DeHumeri as we lounged about a hotel room in Bethesda, Md., even he "hasn't identified as Republican for the last 13 months." So what does the modern-day conservative stand for?

In order to figure that out, CPAC turned to its annual straw poll, the barometer by which those who identify with this ideology gauge their beliefs and values. Every year before the keynote speaker, CPAC founder David Keene, and for the last seven years its leading pollster Tony Fabrizio, have announced the results of the CPAC straw poll. With more than 2,300 voters, 64 percent of which were male and 54 percent of which constituted young Americans ages "18-25," the poll served to give conservatives something to chew on before midterm elections. It attempted to give an idea of where the party's constituents stand on issues that could serve to coalesce the party in hopes of reaching that great majority.

So what did they learn? Well, some things were more obvious than insightful. Of the gathered conservatives who voted, 98 percent "disapprove of Obama's presidency." However, the poll did show significant fluctuation on many issues. 80 percent listed "individual freedom and size of government" as the most important goal for the party, while in contrast only nine percent voted for "advancing pro-life agendas." Similarly, 52 percent voted that the size of government was the most important issue facing the party, while only one percent voted that it was gay marriage.

One issue came to a head when Ryan Sorba, the head of the California Young Americans for Freedom, took the stage with his peers and used the platform to blast CPAC for inviting GoProud, a pro-gay Republican group. As he was booed off-stage he mocked the crowd, shouting, "the lesbians at Smith College protest better than you," twice, for the extra emphasis. He was referring to protests against his speech promoting his book, "The Horn Gay Hoax" at Smith.

While one would likely think that with all the pragmatic refrains for fiscal responsibility, Mitt Romney repeated as the 2010 straw poll winner for the most likely political candidate in 2012, holding on to his 2009 crown. However, despite dealing with a medium level of boos and deviating substantially from the party line, omitting mentions of Reagan and Obama from his speech, Ron Paul rose from a 13 percent third-place finish last year to first place, taking 31 percent of the vote.

Until then, however, the Republicans have some work to do figuring out which platform will be best to win back the hearts and minds of the American people. Some ways that they plan to do this are by learning from their mistakes. At the "Television Training Workshop," which asked its audience to talk about how the American public views conservatives, more than a few uttered the word "un-cool."

The rest of the talk focused on future politicians studying the way television can be used to sway voters, with more than a few references to the last champion of conservatism, Ronald Reagan.

There were other small signs the Republican Party is becoming susceptible to new ideas. Campusreform.org, a new social networking site for conservative students, was tabling the conference. The new service offers those on campuses a chance to voice their ideas to a large audience, promoting discussion of conservative ideas.

Yet another independent lobbying group, Citizens Opposing Prohibition, was successful at drawing people from all walks of life to talk about our nation's drug policy. No doubt spurred on by its spokesman, the 10-gallon hat wearing Howard "Cowboy" Wooldridge, a retired police detective who lobbies on behalf of legalizing all sorts of drugs from marijuana to heroin.

There was still an overwhelming feeling of a railroad car that was about to come unhinged that just couldn't be shook. For every "Cowboy" Wooldridge that championed new ideas and different approaches, there were the tea partiers harkening back to patriotism's revolutionary roots.

It seems that even though the GOP recently has been handed the blueprints for the Republicans of tomorrow in the form of Scott Brown, the schism of the party is only widening. And if the GOP wants any shot at 2010, they need to figure out how to bridge the gap between the fiscally friendly moderates and the growing radical right. Let's just hope that this is one time the Republican Party doesn't produce a "bridge to nowhere."

The great conversation that is democracy depends on it.

Pete Rizzo is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu.

Extremism endangers future; moderation is key to victory

Dmitry Shapiro

This past weekend, I embarked on a road trip to our nation's capital to attend the annual Conservative Political Action Conference, better known as CPAC. CPAC may be the largest meeting of conservative pundits, journalists, pollsters, politicians, donors, activists and students in the country. In my car, I drove a group about as eclectic as can be found at CPAC: Collegian journalist and columnist Pete Rizzo, a devout liberal; Joe Robichaud, a UMass alumni who is a traditional conservative and also a gun owner; Brad DeFlumeri, UMass' most well-known ultra-conservative; and myself, a proud subscriber to neoconservativism.

Prevented from going last year because I volunteered to play in the orchestra of the biannual Five College Operas, I was determined to make it to this year's convention. CPAC often determines the agenda and direction for the conservative movement for the coming year. Last year would have been interesting to attend because the attitude would have been, "We screwed up." "Who's fault is it?" "What do we do now?"

While at CPAC, I saw how my party is being stolen from the people under the guise of "doing what the people want."

At that convention, the party was re-energized by the keynote speaker, Rush Limbaugh, who went over his allotted time to set a new agenda for the party. This agenda was the inspiration for the activism to follow, such as the successful tea party movement, although that is officially a Glenn Beck movement.

This year, after the quick turning of the tides to favor the Republicans again, I was interested in seeing the energy, plans and ideas that may have emerged from a victory in the struggle against the Democratic supermajority that had existed until almost this year's CPAC convention. I also wondered what kind of party the Republicans are becoming, and if they learned their lesson after the 2008 elections. I left CPAC highly disappointed and marginalized: The wrong lesson was learned from the election.

While at CPAC, I saw how my party is being stolen from the people under the guise of "doing what the people want." Most people would agree that one of the reasons John McCain performed poorly during the presidential race was because of his blundered pick of Sarah Palin as his running mate.

McCain firmly held the majority of the moderate voters in the country and would have kept them because Barack Obama was seen as a very liberal candidate. Though conservatives say that McCain would have lost because Republicans would have not voted for him, I believe that faced with the choice of a moderate McCain to a liberal Obama, even the most extreme paleo-conservatives would have still supported McCain.

He should have called their bluff. Instead, he broke under the pressure of pundits like Rush Limbaugh, Ann Coulter and the Karl Rove and Newt Gingrich types, to tragically nominate Palin. Sarah Palin is still a disaster for the Republican Party. But at CPAC, I saw her glorified from all corners. For some reason, the CPAC conservatives are betting their money on the horse consistently in the back of the pack.

The CPAC attendees thoroughly disavowed the big-tent political theories. Tea partiers and Ron Paul libertarians formed a significant number of attendees.

They were set on reverting the Republican party from a successful neoconservative direction to an old interpretation of what it means to be a Republican – often termed paleoconservative and in extreme cases, libertarian. They seem to have the idea that people should conform to unchanging ideals of the party or leave; a very small-tent policy.

I find this trend absurd. A party is not an ideology, it is a term applied to a group of people after they have already mostly agreed on some ideas that bind them in a voting block. Yet there would still be disagreement because not everyone always agrees on all issues. A party is comprised of citizens with ideas and opinions, without whom the party has no values or ideology. Therefore, a party that a certain name applies to should be allowed to change its values and ideologies based on the opinions of its members. The people aren't wrong for not supporting the party, the party is wrong for not supporting the people.

At CPAC, they try to pretend that there are unchanging, core "Republican" ideals, saying that if you disagree with the party on any issue, you are not a real member. This culture ostracizes moderates and average Americans who are not zealots of any party, and forces the zealots to pick a unified side on every issue, devolving the process of thought and need to be educated on issues.

The keynote speaker at this years' CPAC was Fox News political opinion show host, Glenn Beck. Once thought of as the "poor man's Rush Limbaugh," while at CNN, Beck's exposure to Fox News' audience catapulted him to Limbaugh-status. His speech on Saturday afternoon exposed the new agenda against those whom they call "false Republicans," or those who call for a moderate, big-tent party.

He antagonized many in the Republican Party by attacking Theodore Roosevelt, a Republican president who many moderate Republicans admire. He quoted Roosevelt, "'It's not even enough that it [money] should have been gained without doing damage to the community. We should permit it only to be gained so long as the gaining represents benefit to the community.'"

Then he asked the audience if that was what their Republican party stood for. "No," was the response.

Really? We as Republicans support illegal and unethical methods of gaining wealth? We will not prosecute Bernie Madoff, Al Capone or a CEO that drove their company into the ground, causing families to lose their incomes?

Should the conservative stance on Bernie Madoff be that it is the investors' fault that they didn't watch what they were doing with their money, and therefore he stole it legally?

This should be absurd to anyone sensible, but that participants of CPAC did not boo Beck off the stage after he so misinterpreted and defamed a Republican president who should be our model of progressive conservatism is a testament to the conservative movement's current waywardness. Not to mention Beck convincing the audience that the Bull Moose Party's progressive conservatives were the same as the communists of later progressive movements.

Mr. Beck, just because the word is the same does not mean that its users mean the same thing.

Ron Paul won the straw poll for the question "Who would you want to be the next presidential nominee?" Though there were a lot of tea partiers and libertarians there, conclusions about the accuracy of the polls cannot be made.

A man on the Metro on the way to the convention center said he was tea-party organizer and was going to CPAC only to vote for Paul in the straw poll. He said that they were busing tea partiers in from all areas.

It seems tea partiers are the Republican Party's answer to the jobless liberal activists that conservatives complain about. They have nothing better to do with their lives than to travel to a convention in order to vote in an insignificant, unscientific, straw poll.

This was a problem with CPAC.

Although a registration was needed to attend, anyone was able to attend and participate. In a famous moment, young right-wing nut Ryan Sorba was booed off the stage for his condemnation of CPAC for inviting GoProud, a pro-gay Republican group. Because of the open nature of CPAC, whether this was a sign that attitudes toward homosexuals are changing in the party, or that his opponents planted themselves in the audience, is uncertain.

It's true that the current success of the Republican Party is owed to the tea partiers. Because of them, guys like Beck could push the conversation so far to the right. But the actual victories are being won by the moderates.

Brand-new Massachusetts Sen. Scott Brown addressed the convention on opening day; a surprise appearance to introduce speaker Mitt Romney. He received thunderous applause and plaudits as the savior of the party for the rest of the weekend. I wonder if this reaction would have been the same if his vote in support of Obama's "jobs" bill happened not on the Monday after CPAC but before it?

Probably not. Scott Brown is about as moderate as Republican candidates get, but a significant reason for his victory was his ability to garner support from the tea partiers, who were happy to be in the freezing cold all day holding his signs.

The moderates are now afraid to come out as moderate or neoconservative Republicans. Instead, they are using the paleoconservatives and libertarians as footmen, lying to them about their intent in politics. This has been the case for a long time, probably since Ronald Reagan's first term, but I think we might be approaching a time when the old right will rebel, thus driving the Republican Party into insane extremism, making it forever inapplicable to the beliefs of average Americans, the "silent majority."

At least this year, rocker Ted Nugent wasn't encouraging paleoconservatives to use their Second Amendment right to hunt RINOs.

Dmitriy Shapiro is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dshapir@student.umass.edu.

Fed/Up? Ed/Op!

editorial@ dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MARCH 1, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Audience and performers unite over vaginas

By Elyse Horowitz and Marianne Kim
Collegian Staff

A sell-out for both nights of its performance, "The Vagina Monologues" made a large impact on the University of Massachusetts community this weekend.

Held in Bowker Auditorium on Thursday and Friday night, each show offered standing-room-only seats to viewers who were too late to find seats, but wanted to see the show no matter what. The audience members varied from college students to parents of performers with flowers in hand to other community members and a few young children. All came to experience the widely-spoken about interpretation of over 200 women's accounts of their bodies in a performance authored by Eve Ensler.

The overwhelming success of this performance was only one indication of its appeal. The show reveals the fears, anxieties, joy and pain women had in association with their vaginas, and how their experiences shaped their lives forever.

At the opening of Friday night's performance, staff from the Everywoman's Center were seated outside the auditorium, selling t-shirts and water bottles sporting "The Vagina Monologues" title in purple, as well as chocolate lollipops in the shapes of men's and women's bodies. Shania Twain's "Man! I feel like a Woman!" greeted audience members as they stepped into the auditorium and a mix of similar songs swum through the crowd as before the slightly delayed start to the performance.

When the lights finally dimmed, five female members of the production staff, Rosaline Abraham, Angela Bruns, Caitlin Baker, Yesenia Rivera and Dawn Kennedy took the stage to introduce the show and touch upon what would be happening in the next two-and-a-half hours. They mentioned the availability of counselor advocates who stood at the rear of the auditorium for the entirety of the show, as some of the topics mentioned have been known to bring deep emotion to some audience members.

As the female participants began to emerge, decked out in all black clothing with accents of purple accessories, they explained the basic premise of the show – to uncover the emotions and experiences women have had with their vaginas.

According to the introduction, although some women cringe when even hearing the word vagina, once women are asked about their own genital area, they can't stop talking about it. As one performer exclaimed, "Women love talking about their vaginas!" And so began the journey into the many facets of "The Vagina Monologues."

The monologues addressed many of the insecurities women have about their vaginas – from hair to lesbians to marital bliss. One skit, "The Flood," was taken from the perspective of a 72-year-old woman, reminiscing about her experience with rejection and embarrassment caused by her excessive vaginal fluid. The monologue was well executed by Emily Myhrum Adams, who took the character of the elderly woman, too scarred by her experience that she stowed her vagina along with her memories in the dark cellar of her mind.

Audience members witnessed the portrayal of how women view the impracticalities of what their vaginas are subjected to – feminine products, uncomfortable doctors appointments and thong underwear, to name a few. Other monologues touched upon more serious subjects, requiring strong reflection and thought. Coming to the show with an open mind and a certain amount of mental preparation was necessary since many of the monologues were, at times, emotionally overwhelming, and included issues like rape and violence. No matter what the subject matter, however, the performers remained poised and honest about the character they portrayed.

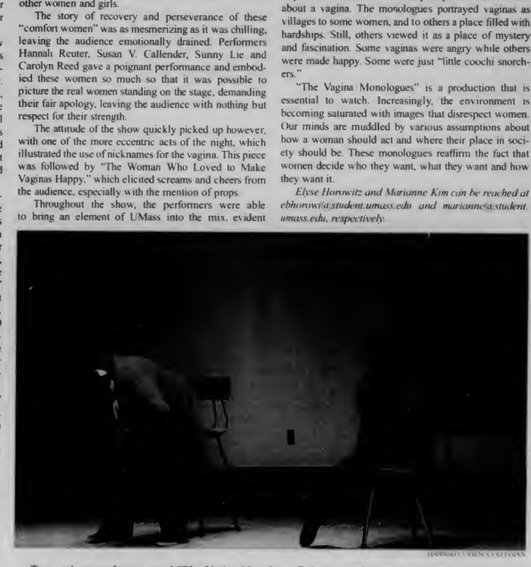
"Under the Burqa" was a moving monologue delivered by Dawn Kennedy that discussed the unbearable suffering that women in Iraq experience on a daily basis as a demeaned part of society, forced to hide beneath heavy clothes. The vivid language and passion in her voice silenced the auditorium, as the words humiliation, fear and tombstone cut into the air, and feelings were described as "suffocating while still screaming inside." One could only wonder how Kennedy herself did not break down while delivering words of pain and suffering.

According to the background given on this piece, 130 girls in 28 countries have experienced vaginal mutilation. While this mostly occurs in African countries, the account of "Under the Burqa" was written by Ensler after a visit to Afghanistan in 2000, while they were under the control of the Taliban.

"A Teenage Girl's Guide to Surviving Sex Slavery;" delivered by Caitlin Baker, Erika Sian, Quincy Lacwasan, Kayla Fasano and Sarah Shepherd; was an interpretation of the everyday guides people use to get by in life. However, this guide was for those teenage girls whose worst nightmares have been turned into harsh realities. Directions such as, "Never look at him while he is raping you," were suggested as the way to make life only slightly more bearable for these girls, and encouraged and supported girls who have gone through such tragedies.

By far the most powerful monologue of the evening was the shocking portrayal of four women, now aged between 70 and 90 years old, who were placed into Japanese sex slavery during World War II. "Say It for the Comfort Women" described Japan's dehumanizing acts against women, as well as furthering their hardship by refusing to release a formal apology to the women affected by the violence. At the time, these women were threatened or tricked into working as sex slaves to the Japanese military, like approximately 50,000-200,000 other women and girls.

The story of recovery and perseverance of these "comfort women" was as mesmerizing as it was chilling, leaving the audience emotionally drained. Performers Hannah Reuter, Susan V. Callender, Sunny Lie and Carolyn Reed gave a poignant performance and embodied these women so much so that it was possible to picture the real women standing on the stage, demanding their fair apology, leaving the audience with nothing but respect for their strength.



The attitude of the show quickly picked up however, with one of the more eccentric acts of the night, which illustrated the use of nicknames for the vagina. This piece was followed by "The Woman Who Loved to Make Vaginas Happy," which elicited screams and cheers from the audience, especially with the mention of preps.

Throughout the show, the performers were able to bring an element of UMass into the mix, evident in their mention of the Bursar's Office, the "UMass moan," which sexualizes the UMass cheer "go, go U, go UMass," etc., as well as the mention of accepting Amherst as a vagina-friendly town.

Without witnessing this show for yourself, it is impossible to fathom how many ways there are to think about a vagina. The monologues portrayed vaginas as villages to some women, and to others a place filled with hardships. Still, others viewed it as a place of mystery and fascination. Some vaginas were angry while others were made happy. Some were just "little coochi snorchers."

"The Vagina Monologues" is a production that is essential to watch. Increasingly, the environment is becoming saturated with images that disrespect women. Our minds are muddled by various assumptions about how a woman should act and where their place in society should be. These monologues reaffirm the fact that women decide who they want, what they want and how they want it.

Elyse Horowitz and Marianne Kim can be reached at ehhorowi@student.umass.edu and mariannek@student.umass.edu, respectively.

Two students perform part of "The Vagina Monologues" during a rehearsal for the show, which ran at UMass' Bowker Auditorium last Thursday and Friday night.

Saunders illustrates life through writing

By Garth Brody
Collegian Staff

George Saunders, author of "In Persuasion Nation," spoke on Feb. 23 at the University of Massachusetts in the Student Union Ballroom. After a Commonwealth Honors College faculty representative's warm yet lengthy introduction, which described the writer with an exhaustive series of figurative flourishes from "comedic chameleon" to "a one night stand between Kurt Vonnegut and Flannery O'Connor," Saunders took the stage.

Over the next hour and a half, the thin, bearded Chicagoan told the standing-room audience something like his life story. In his words, he set out to describe "the way art actually works." As a writer, he did this by telling stories. As a funny writer, those stories tended to put him as the butt of the jokes.

The stories moved from one past misconception about the nature of writing to the next, sometimes punctuated with a moment of literary discovery. The first of these discoveries was a single sentence by Esther Forbes in the children's classic, "Johnny Tremain." She wrote:

"On rocky islands gulls woke."

Saunders explained that the feeling he got from that sentence, his sheer delight in its words and syntax, is what initially drove him toward writing. This feeling is felt in his current methodology, to "put one sentence after the next. And try to make it compelling."

"Like a dumbass, I forgot all about it," Saunders continued. The remainders of his formative years were dominated by various pretensions.

He was crippled for some time by a condition he calls "Hemingway boner." Its symptoms were sentences like, "Nick went into the Wal-Mart. It was pleasant." Hand-in-hand with this affliction was his refusal to read any literature published past approximately his year of birth.

As a young man, he read Ayn Rand's "Atlas Shrugged." The connection he made with the book as a literary experience triggered his ensuing objectivist alignment. He went through college with that mindset, as well as being under the continuing influence of the "Hemingway boner."

"At one point I read Kerouac, and I realized I was a corporate shill," he quipped.

Saunders graduated from the Colorado School of Mines with a B.S. in geophysical engineering in 1981, and thereupon shipped straight off to Sumatra. He was officially there to put his engineering skills to work on an oil exploration crew, but he was really there to find what he described as his "exotic experience." Hemingway had one, so the presumption was that all great writers must have one.

In fact, his plan was to shortcut the conception of his first real story by drawing on the Sumatran expedition for inspiration. He traveled, gained his exotic experience and moved on.

Several years later he was married, and was "kinda the photocopy guy" at the environmental engineering lab where he worked. He had a ponytail, and still hadn't written anything he considered to be good. At this point, he was under the poisonous impression that in writing, "the reader should feel what I feel."

He spent months of sleepless nights working on his first novel during this time. The novel's title, which Saunders felt was the sole piece of evidence necessary to prove to us its hideous stupidity, translates to "The Wedding of Ed" (The title was originally in Spanish). When the manuscript was complete, his wife read only the first few pages before informing him that he needed to start over. She also pointed out a genuine humor in his writing, which was the part of his voice – his "most urgent self," as he explained it – that he had been holding back in all of his pieces.

"I would always be funny," he said. It was this monumental realization that eventually pushed his writing into maturity. He stopped worrying about making the reader feel, and allowed himself to feel the writing himself.

He once asked his editor at the New Yorker, admittedly fishing for a compliment, what he liked about his stories.

The editor, Bill Buford, said, "I read one line. And I like it. So I read the next one."

This, for Saunders, is success. He explained that all he is really trying to do in his writing is "keep your attention away from the Nintendo for a few minutes."

Writing now with more spontaneity, he finds that conceptual elements – such as character development, plot and theme – no longer require much thought.

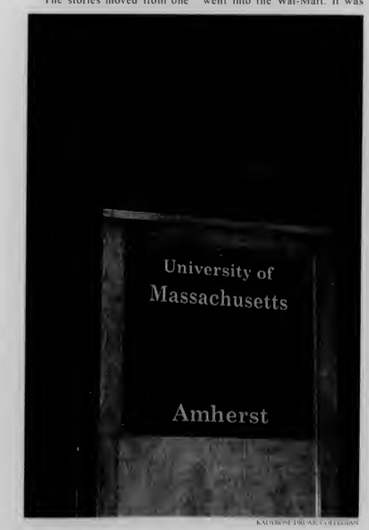
"It all sort of magically appeared," he explained.

Having at this point in his talk (and career) finally reached a moment of lucidity, Saunders turned over the floor to the audience.

One question concerned the role of consumerism in his stories.

"I kinda like it," Saunders said. He qualified this by admitting that, partially due to commercial media saturation, "our country has gone from a spiritual culture to a material culture." He explained that a bit of cognitive dissonance is healthy, at least for a writer.

"Take this argument and this argument, sit them down, and let them resonate," said Saunders.



Several of the questions that followed centered on the same theme. The subject matter in Saunders' stories generally includes some form or derivation of consumer culture, so this trend came as no surprise.

One audience member asked if Saunders sees himself in any of his works. Seemingly caught a bit off guard, he confessed that "Jon," one of the stories from "In Persuasion Nation," was in part about the relationship between him and his wife.

"She has taught me so much about how to grow up," he said.

The growth Saunders has experienced as a person, but more saliently as a writer, guided the course of the speech last Tuesday night. Carefully communicating the process of self-education through repeated failure, he gave the audience a richly entertaining and insightful rendition of a time-honored lesson: Learn from your mistakes.

Garth Brody can be reached at gbrody@student.umass.edu.

KATHERINE TREACY/COLLEGIAN

American novelist George Saunders speaks to students in the Student Union Ballroom last Tuesday night.

Taken in sickness or in health insurance

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

What sort of world do we live in where a mature, pretty and leggy blond woman has to create a website to find a husband? A world where healthcare is a growing problem for millions. Terri Carlson, a 45-year-old divorced mother, took to the Internet to form Willmarryforhealthinsurance.com to find a husband that could give her health insurance, putting love on the back burner for now.

During a time when Tila Tequila is looking for "A Shot at Love" and Flavor Flav seeks a "Flavor of Love," Terri Carlson is actually facing a life-or-death situation.

Carlson is looking for a man she terms a "health care husband" because she cannot afford health insurance for herself. She was previously covered under her former husband's employer for 24 years, but that all changed when they divorced two years ago. Carlson is now faced with a choice: backbreaking co-pays or food and shelter.

The issue that complicates Carlson's case is that she has a pre-existing condition, something most companies stray away from or charge more in their premiums for. Her condition is called C4 complement deficiency, an illness similar to lupus. Because of a genetic defect, her body cannot identify bacteria and viruses that she comes in contact with. Her body's cells end up attacking themselves.

She has been able to survive for the last few years due to COBRA (Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act) health insurance, a plan that covers people in the event of divorce or job loss, situations in which people forcibly lose their insurance. The former housewife currently relies on Cal-COBRA, the state division, as she has already used up the funds available to her through the federal COBRA program.

This form of insurance, however, runs out for Carlson on May 1, 2011. Faced with the possibility of having to pay thousands of dollars in co-payments, or eating all of the costs of her "numerous doctors appointments and dozens of medications" her condition requires, she decided to forgo the romantic side of marriage and seek a husband for his insurance plan. As Carlson states, "I am looking for 'the one' with the lowest co-pays."

The saddest part about her situation is that, despite her current insurance plan, she still devotes 90 percent of her income to medication and appointments. Carlson had to get a job to cover these expenses, but her employer cannot offer her health care. Carlson's employer specializes in hiring those with disabilities, but because of this, an employer-based program would cost thousands because of the disorders it would have to cover to keep all employees healthy. So she works long hours from home (to avoid contact with viruses), just to get by.

Carlson stresses that hers is not a special case. A link on her homepage shows that she has received hundreds of e-mails from other Americans telling of their health care nightmares. She says she is "just like every other middle American that's suffering from a pre-existing condition and caught in the middle."

She also notes that this is not a political issue to her, but that "it's about humanity." Carlson does not seek Democratic or Republican support and does not want to get involved with the political machine. She simply wants to fight a fair fight against her illness.

In April of 2009, while Carlson was in a hospital and on the verge of death, she wrote letters to President Obama and other public officials, all of which went unanswered. The heinous fact, that she herself acknowledges, is that she could go out and commit a crime, wind up in jail and receive free health care, on top of three free meals and free access to a gym. She, instead, just wants a companion that is willing to share her load.

"The one" has yet to be found, despite multiple YouTube videos (under the username decon4) and numerous pieces on her by MSNBC, CBS News and the New York Daily News, just to name a few. Terri Carlson is still on a quest to seek her "Mr. Right," one that she does eventually want to find love with. She just needs to make sure she doesn't end up on the streets, or worse.

This is not such a crazy idea. Terri Carlson is simply a mother with a potentially lethal condition that she has no control over. Desperate times call for desperate measures. She is simply trying to use technology to her advantage. She has featured a photo slideshow, including very attractive photos of herself, so it is entirely possible that a well-established man could be interested.

With a sky-blue background, birds and flowers placed around a picture of Carlson's face, the main page of Willmarryforhealthinsurance.com seems almost misleading. To capitalize on the seriousness of her situation, Carlson features a message at the bottom.

"I know my site looks like a memorial and it will be unless I get health insurance, that's the point!"

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kathymac@student.umass.edu.

Plourde pitches strong

BY STANLEY SULLIVAN

Whitney Williams attempts to tag out a runner at third base in a contest last spring. The senior is batting .179 early on this season and committed three errors in 10 starts at shortstop.

SOFTBALL from page 8

classic, No. 6 Missouri drove in two late runs to defeat the Minutewomen, 2-1.

After three scoreless innings and strong pitching on both sides, the Minutewomen struck first in the top of the fourth. Michelle Libby singled to left field, followed by a Katie Bettencourt single that advanced Libby to third base. Audrey Boutin came through with another single to drive in Libby and take a 1-0 lead.

Missouri (7-2) came alive in the bottom of the fifth inning with a double and a walk to start off the inning. A wild pitch and a stolen base set up an RBI, followed by a single to score the second run.

UMass attempted a comeback in the bottom of the seventh with two players on base, but was stopped by relief pitcher Jana Hainey who was credited with the win.

Plourde was charged with her first loss of the season after allowing two runs on three hits.

UMass' Offense Stuggles

Game 2 of Friday resulted in a 3-1 loss to North Carolina State after three early runs that the Maroon and White could not recover from.

Pitcher Sanders struggled against the Wolfpack (7-5), giving up three runs off of an RBI single and a two home runs from Stephanie Call. Plourde came in as relief for Sanders, striking out 12 opponents and allowing just one hit to keep North Carolina at three runs.

However, the Minutewomen could not generate enough offense to come back after the first inning. Whitney Williams doubled to center field, followed by a Meghan Carta single that brought home Williams and scored the lone run of the game for UMass.

Wolfpack pitcher Lindsay Campana earned the win for her team after a strong showing in the circle with 11 strikeouts and four hits allowed.

Magill lifts Minutewomen

A late two-run home run from Kyllie Magill proved to be the difference as No. 20 UMass defeated Mississippi State, 7-6, to start off the weekend at the Leadoff Classic.

The Bulldogs (7-3) took a 1-0 lead when Chelsea Bramlett doubled to left center to get on base first for her team. A wild pitch sent her to third base, followed by a passed ball that allowed her to score an unearned run.

The Minutewomen were quick to answer with three runs in the bottom of the first with a Michelle Libby double to tie up the game. Boutin followed with a single to bring home Libby and pitcher Plourde doubled to right field for her first career hit.

After Mississippi added a second run in the second inning, an Ali Bainbridge two-run home run in the third inning gave the Bulldogs a 4-3 lead.

A double-steal of second and home base from the Maroon and White in the bottom of the third scored Libby and tied the score until the eighth inning, where both teams would score a run.

The Bulldogs took a one-run lead again in the top of the ninth inning, however Magill came through for UMass with a two-run home run to win the game by a single run.

Plourde was credited with her fourth win of the season, striking out nine to help out the Minutewomen.

Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombard@student.umass.edu.

Cosgrove nets two as UMass falls in back-and-forth contest

LACROSSE from page 8

Crimson. Goals by midfielder Haley Smith and attacker Jesse O'Donnell tied the game back up with roughly eight minutes left to go in the half.

Similar to earlier in the game, Harvard halted UMass from taking the lead, after a two-goal run by the dynamic offense duo of Dal Col and VanderMeulen to close out the half.

"I was glad to be down by two goals at halftime," Venechanos said.

The opening of the second half showed the Minutewomen upping their defensive pressure and maintaining their umbrella offense for the first five minutes of the game.

The Crimson eventually found its way passed the Maroon and White in route to Dal Col's third goal of the game to give Harvard a 7-4 lead. UMass came right back, with a score by midfielder Merritt Cosgrove, cutting the lead to a pair of goals.

The Minutewomen had two free-position shot opportunities within the first 10 minutes of the half. Cosgrove earned one after surging down the field and being tripped up near the net. While her attempt was saved by Crimson goalkeeper Katherine Matrino, attacker Ryan Gorman's free-position opportunity did produce a score, resulting in a one-goal deficit to for UMass.

After back-and-forth momentum shifts between the two sides, the Minutewomen found a way to control the ball behind the Crimson net. After setting up the patient umbrella offense, the perseverance of the Minutewomen paid off as Cosgrove scored her second goal of the contest, and UMass' third straight goal to knot the game up.

Dal Col could not be silenced in her collegiate debut, netting another goal at the 13 minute, 49 second mark for Harvard. The goal came off a cluttered defensive transition of the Minutewomen, resulting in the return of the one goal deficit.

Early in the second half, Smith was taken out of the game for an injured ankle. Smith came back in a big way nearly two-thirds into the second half, scoring a goal to level the score at eight goals apiece.

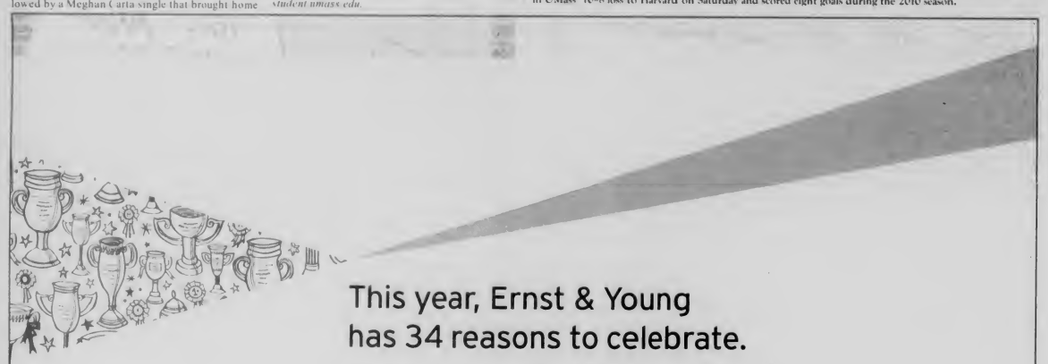
Just when UMass caught a break with Smith's goal, the Crimson reclaimed the lead after VanderMeulen notched her fourth goal of the match.

In the final five minutes of the game, Harvard held onto the ball and watered the clock down for the better part of four minutes. After cluttered play and two free-position shots, which included two saves by goalkeeper Katie Florence, the Minutewomen retrieved the ball back with 2:35 left to play. Venechanos called a timeout to prepare her team for the final moments of the game.

"I said let's bring the ball up safely," Venechanos said. "Same situation happened [on Wednesday], take care of [the ball] safely. The [players] was wide opened, we through the ball away, and that was the theme of the game. It kind of symbolizes what happens; not making passes when we need to and the [players] were wide opened and we didn't connect."

The timeout lead to a turnover by the Minutewomen, giving the Crimson the ball back and inevitably the game. Off a its own time out, Harvard moved the ball around and led to Dal Col scoring her final goal of the game and sealing the 10-8 victory for the Crimson.

"We had an opportunity to redeem ourselves from last game, and we folded. With their ball possession they proved to be the better team," Venechanos said.



UMass will have another shot at redemption on Wednesday, when it takes on New Hampshire at McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu.

BY STANLEY SULLIVAN

Jackie Lyons races past a Stony Brook defender at McGuirk Stadium last season. The junior had four shots in UMass' 10-8 loss to Harvard on Saturday and scored eight goals during the 2010 season.

This year, Ernst & Young has 34 reasons to celebrate.

Thank you University of Massachusetts.

We can't wait to welcome our brightest new colleagues. From the moment you walk through the doors, you'll hit the ground running. Look forward to a career that challenges you, offers diverse global opportunities and on-the-job training that will help you realize your true potential. Congratulations on moving forward with the organization named to FORTUNE's "100 Best Places to Work For" list for the 12th year in a row.

Sarah Brennan
Jacleen Casinelli, intern
John Connelly
Kim Crowell, intern
Elizabeth Davidow
Derek Defronzo, intern
Christine Dzwill, intern
Matthew Gannon
Tomer Halevy
Virginia Hsia
Joseph Judge, intern
Christopher Kalmbach
Wendy Kwan, intern
Thomas Lam
Josh Lanouette, intern
Angela Lee, intern
Sean Marquis, intern
Erica Miller
Kevin Nee
Marisa Pacifico
Carly Payne, intern
Devan Post, intern
Austin Read, intern
Paul Reynolds
Ryan Roy
Matthew Schoenberg
Keith Sheffer
Naval Singh
Branden Steinberg, intern
Jason Thurm, intern
Bo Wang, intern
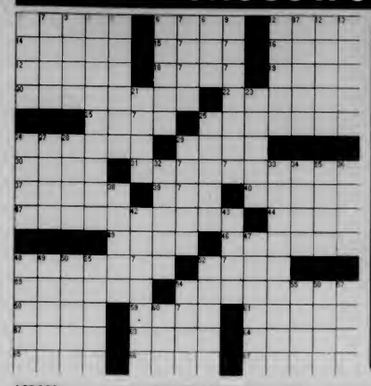
Ryan Werner
Richard Yennaco
Larry Yusuf



To launch your career, check out ey.com/us/dayone.

ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Visages
6. Resorts
10. Pull an all-nighter
14. Do penance
15. South American country
16. Domicile
17. Exploded stars
18. Backside
19. Dogfish
20. Phantom
22. Woods
24. Not this
25. Skin disease
26. Shrewdness
29. Departure
30. It smells
31. Unable to read
37. Flip over
39. 52 in Roman numerals
40. Lure
41. Characterized by order and planning
44. Make reference to
45. Renown
46. Wears away
48. Guts
52. Scheme
53. Bring in
54. A compound with silicon and oxygen
58. Expressed
59. Graven image
61. Temptress
62. Monster
63. A city in France
64. Homeric epic
65. Marsh plant
66. Writing fluids
67. Approaches

DOWN
1. Air movement devices
2. At the peak of
3. Sheltered nook
4. The passing of a law
5. Be in an agitated emotional state
6. Small herring processed like a sardine
7. Rind
8. A southern constellation
9. Overabundance
10. Small trout-like fish
11. Juliet's beau
12. Out of place
13. Substantial
21. Hindu princess
23. Chose
25. 63 in Roman numerals
26. Excretory opening
27. Reproduction
28. Purposes
29. A-list
32. Andean animal
33. Patch up
34. Corrosive
35. Carry
36. Visual organs
38. Put off
42. Cocktail
43. A prisoner's room
47. Dried grape
48. Eyeshade
49. Picture
50. Steeple
51. Encrypted
52. Heaps
54. Worn on a foot
55. Operatic solo
56. Rip
57. Concludes
60. Cacophony

UMass... Cape Cod?
Take online classes anywhere this Summer
Registration begins March 15
Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net
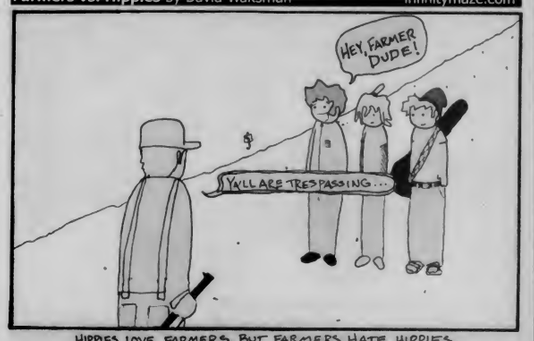
UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

SUDOKU

		7						2
	6		4					1
3				5	6
5			7	8
		9			3
7	3	6		1		4
	8			2			4
	7			3				6
6		3				8

CITY FOOTWEAR
Students and Staff of the five Colleges Eligible for 10% of with ID
nike · NEW ERA · Clarks · TIMBERLAND OUTDOOR PERFORMANCE
34 Pleasant Street · Northampton
413.341.5581



APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Opium for the People by Emily Regan

Farmers vs. Hippies by David Waksman infinitymaze.com

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Basic instincts help you survive from day-to-day but memorizing all 79 original "Star Trek" episodes is just essential.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
I do not know where you heard that, but I assure you that it is false. We never wanted the deli meat THAT much, I swear!

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
How come every time I'm in the kitchen, you're in the kitchen? I want some of that chicken! Gimme that chicken.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Your current business model is good and all, but how many people are actually going to buy a ghost in a jar on eBay?

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
There ain't nothing better than being licked by a thousand small kitties with sandpaper tongues.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Someday people will realize how boss you are. However, there can be only one "Boss of all Bosses," and we all know who that is.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Do not ignore your senses, there is something strange going on over at the heating plant. Sauron is on the move.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Perhaps since Canada won the gold medal in men's hockey, Tim Hortons donuts can finally make their way stateside!

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Who could read a horoscope at a time like this when you could be thinking about scrumptious Tim Hortons!

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
For those of you still looking for the meaning of life, it is nestled somewhere in next week's episode of "Days of Our Lives."

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Pick-up line #24: "Hey baby, you heard of the iPad? Well, I'd love to introduce you to myPad."

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Ready your breakfast and eat hearty, because tonight we dine at Applebee's!

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further...CAMP MATAPONI, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (samm crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders and more! Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com

FOR RENT

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing. 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends From $89 Complete. Montreal Express.Net MontrealBlowout.com 781-979-9001

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MARCH 1, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass struggles on defense against Flyers

Freshmen lead team in scoring with 47 points, Riley scores 12 while Harris nets season-low 9

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts men's basketball coach Derek Kellogg knew that playing an away game against Dayton was going to test his young team. He also knew that with an NCAA Tournament bid on the line, the Flyers were going to be difficult to beat.

Dayton	96
UMass	68

What he didn't know was just how difficult they would be.

UMass (10-18, 4-10 Atlantic 10) dropped its third-straight game in a 96-68 loss to Dayton on Saturday. It was the worst defeat for the Minutemen since Nov. 28, when they lost to Michigan State by 38 points.

Although Dayton didn't take UMass out of the game until the second half, the Minutemen never had a lead past their first two baskets of the game. The Flyers were up by 33 points with two minutes, 34 seconds left in the game after Rob Lowery stole the ball from senior Ricky Harris and converted on a lay-up.

"For their team and their program to come home in a game which I think was somewhat of a must-win for them to play the way they did was a testament to their maturity and their age," Kellogg said.

Dayton's offense controlled much of the game, shooting 54.8 percent from the field and 46.4 percent from 3-point range.

Six different Flyers scored in double-figures. Mickey Perry scored a team-high 15 points and finished with five 3-pointers while forward Chris Wright added 14 points.

Meanwhile, Harris (nine points, 3-of-15 shooting), who recently has been on a scoring surge, had his worst offensive performance since Jan. 24, 2009 against La Salle where he finished with six points. Five of his points came in the first half.

The Flyers (19-9, 8-6 A-10) contained Harris by rotating three guards and made him a focus of the defense. As a result, the team captain also led his team with three turnovers.

"I thought they did a very good job of forcing him into some tough plays," Kellogg said.

Despite a rough night for Harris, Kellogg was encouraged by his freshmen's performances. Terrell Vinson (16 points) led the team with 60 percent shooting while Freddie Riley (12 points) had a hot shooting night from beyond the arc with 4-of-6 shooting.

"When your four freshmen are your four leading scorers, that's a good sign for the future, but when you're playing that many, sometimes it doesn't work out that well right off the bat," Kellogg said.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Freddie Riley drives past a St. Louis defender on his way to the basket earlier this season. Riley hit four 3-pointers and scored 12 points for UMass in Saturday's 96-68 loss to Dayton.

The Minutemen will play their last road game of the season on March 3 against La Salle, who is also fighting for a spot in the A-10 Tournament, before ending the season at home on Saturday against Rhode Island.

Game notes

Center Hashim Bailey didn't play in the loss to Dayton. It was the first time the Memphis transfer didn't see playing time since Dec. 2 against Quinnipiac ... Dayton's bench dominate UMass scoring 48 points in comparison to the Minutemen's 22 ... The Flyers sold out their fourth game of the season on Saturday with an attendance of 13,435.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller2@dailycollegian.com.

MAYETTE SPARR/COLLEGIAN

Junior Paul Dainton clears the puck from behind his net earlier this year. The goaltender made 31 saves while allowing two goals in UMass' 2-1 overtime loss to Boston College on Friday night.

Minutemen fall out of postseason picture

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

For three periods, the Massachusetts hockey team played the way it has hoped to play for the past few weeks.

Once it gave up a lead in the second period to Boston College, it fought back and tied the game. Instead of letting the feeling of defeat sink in prematurely, it got strong goaltending from Paul Dainton (31 saves) and played in a disciplined manner, not being called for a penalty during the entire game.

Still lacking was the offense that had been so strong earlier in the season, and despite holding the No. 7 Eagles to just one goal in regulation, the Minutemen fell in overtime 2-1 Friday night at the Kelly Rink.

"I was real happy with the effort, obviously not producing enough finish play," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "We get one goal and it makes it a pretty fine line.

"There were positives but obviously it is a tough nut to swallow."

Two minutes, two seconds into extra time, all of the effort put in by UMass (16-16-0, 11-14-0 Hockey East) went for nothing as BC's (20-10-2, 15-8-2 HEA) Chris Kreider put away the game winner after Pat Mullane came down the right wing boards, forcing Dainton to commit before he centered a pass in the front of the net. Kreider redirected the pass into the net past Dainton for his 11th goal of the season.

The Eagles struck first in the contest on a quick goal off of the opening face-off in the second period. After BC won the face-off, Patrick Wey centered a pass that was deflected in by Joe Whitney 18 seconds into the period.

Unlike what they had done so much of in the first five games of their now-six-game losing streak, the Minutemen stepped up after the goal and dominated the period over the Eagles. With 2:19 remaining in the period, UMass knotted the game at one.

Justin Braun found sophomore Danny Hobbs on the play who backhanded a shot toward the net. Watson deflected the shot for his first goal of the season and first in 82 games.

"Danny [Hobbs] is starting to play just great," Cahoon said. "He's starting to be that strong skating power forward we thought he'd be and you can always depend on him [Watson] to have big games in big moments, so I was really pleased with him."

BC	2
UMass	1

The Minutemen held the edge in shots in the second period (15-9) as well as in the scoreless third period (12-10) where both teams fought for the winning goal, but could not find it.

With 8:02 left in regulation, UMass was awarded its second power-play chance of the game on a tripping penalty by Brian Gibbons, but could not convert. The power-play unit was 0-for-2 on the night and has failed to capitalize on their last eight power-play opportunities.

"Our overall effort was far superior to anything we've seen recently, it's just a shame that we don't have anything to show for it," Cahoon said.

The loss, coupled with Vermont's weekend sweep of Boston University, dropped UMass down to ninth place in the conference standings, far from the second place tie it was in at the beginning of the month when it faced BC on Feb. 5. If the Hockey East Tournament were to start today, the Minutemen would not qualify for it.

With two contests on the road this weekend against third-place Maine, UMass needs at least one win against the Black Bears and either Merrimack or Vermont to lose both of its contests over the weekend to qualify for the tournament.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Minutewomen fall to Harvard at home

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

The combination of Alexis Dal Col and Jen VanderMeulen were too much for the Massachusetts lacrosse team, as the two combined for nine goals in UMass' 10-8 loss to Harvard Saturday afternoon.

Harvard	10
UMass	8

"When you walk on that field, you have to be ready from the start," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "It's a mental thing, it's an emotional thing and it's a physical thing. I think we have one of those three things, or two of those three things, but this is Division I lacrosse. Every team is going to be a big game, everything's going to be a fight. This game could have been a lot worse than a two-goal loss for us."

Right out of the gate at McGrath Stadium, the Minutewomen (2-3) found no budging from the Crimson defense, despite a goal early on from midfielder Dayna Deffrese nearly three minutes into the contest.

"We came out flat from the start. Harvard looked really sharp and they looked like at the time they had been playing for five or six games," Venechanos said. "They looked really experienced, and they took it to us."

Harvard (1-0) struck right back with two straight goals to get ahead of the Minutewomen when attackers Dal Col (five total goals) and VanderMeulen (four total goals) knocked in two scores.

"We were playing catch up, but we continued to throw the ball away," Venechanos said. "Harvard deserves the credit, they're a great team. They came in a lot more focused and poised, and they played great. I thought we were flat, and we were playing catch up the whole game. We needed to find some ownership of this team."

Five minutes went by before the UMass offense could find a way to break its opponent's stiff defense trap. A goal by attacker Nina Sarcona came, tying the game between the two sides.

Once more, the Crimson held off a Minutewomen run after VanderMeulen scored her second goal of the game. VanderMeulen put UMass down again with an assist to Danielle Tetreault, who scored some insurance for Harvard, giving it a 4-2 lead.

The Minutewomen tried again to bring the game back in their favor and did just so with a two-goal run on the

See LACROSSE on page 6

Offense struggles in Classic

By Geena Lombardi
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball team went 2-3 this past weekend of play at the National Fastpitch Coaches Association Leadoff Classic, with two of the defeats coming from nationally ranked teams.

Louisiana routs UMass

UMass ended play at the Leadoff Classic with a tough 14-0 loss to No. 18 Louisiana.

The Ragin Cajuns (10-5) took a 1-0 lead in the top of the first on a wild pitch from Sara Plourde that allowed Erikka Murphy to score the first run for Louisiana.

The score would not change until the top of the fourth inning when the Ragin Cajuns' offense took off and scored 13 runs. Christi Orgeron started off with a solo home run to left field. An error put Gabrielle Bridges on base, followed by a single from Lana Bowers that set up a three-run home run from Taryn Broussard. The bases were loaded again due to a second error from the Minutewomen, a walk and a single. Melissa Verde singled to bring home two more Louisiana batters. Two players were left on base, setting up Orgeron's second homerun of the inning, this time scoring three runs.

After Plourde gave up 10 runs, four of which were earned, Bailey Sanders came in as relief. Bridges hit a solo home run to right center, followed by a two RBI single from Vallie Gaspard and a RBI single from Murphy to end the offensive attack.

Pitcher Donna Bourgeois earned the win, allowing no runs on three hits and striking out six UMass batters. Plourde suffered her second loss of the season.

The Minutewomen will return to action this weekend at the University of Southern Florida Under Armour Invitational.

No-Hitter Leads UMass

The Minutewomen bounced back in Game 4 of the Leadoff Classic, defeating Illinois State, 1-0. Plourde was credited with the win after pitching her second career no-hitter and tying a UMass record set by Danielle Henderson of 18 strikeouts in seven innings.

"My mindset was just to go after them with everything I had," Plourde said.

Brandice Balschmitter still holds onto the record for the most strikeouts in a game when she struck out 19 opponents in eight innings.

Redbird's (8-4) pitcher Megan Warner also had a strong showing, keeping the game scoreless until the sixth inning when the UMass broke through.

BRIAN FLEVOR/COLLEGIAN

Audrey Boutin swings at a pitch at the UMass Softball Complex. The junior started all eight games for UMass this season and is batting .238.

Meghan Carta started the bottom of the sixth inning with a double to left center. Jordan Storro singled to drive in pinch runner Jill Andrews to score the game-winning run. The single also served as Storro's first career hit.

The no-hitter improved Plourde's record to 5-1 for the season. Plourde has struck out 89 batters in 49.2 innings pitched.

"I think her endurance really paid off, she's one of the strongest kids on the team," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "She was really able to move the ball around effectively."

UMass falls to Missouri

On day two of the Leadoff

See SOFTBALL on page 6

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

CLOUDY HIGH: 39 LOW: 32 www.DailyCollegian.com TUESDAY, MARCH 2, 2010

UM system president to step down in 2011

By Matt Rocheleau
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts President Jack M. Wilson announced yesterday he will step down after eight years as head of the five-campus system when his current term ends in June 2011.

"It has been an honor and privilege to serve as a steward of this University," said President Wilson in a University press release on Monday. "It has been a joy to work on behalf of the students, faculty and staff of the University through the good times and through the challenges. But now it is time for me to prepare to hand the baton to the next President."

Wilson's contract required that he declare his future plans by the end of this coming June, so that the University would have adequate time to arrange for his successor, if necessary, before his term ends June 30, 2011.

Because Wilson said Monday he will not return after June 2011, the University subsequently announced that a search committee, which will include students, faculty and staff, will be formed and a consultant hired to take part in a national search for a replacement.

A 64-year-old physicist and career educator, Wilson has been University president since September 2003. During his tenure, the release said, he has emphasized access and affordability for students, has focused on research and innovation, and has supported a capital program aimed at providing new facilities and renovations on all five campuses.

He said he is particularly proud of the University's increased enrollment and financial aid availability. This academic year the University has met 93 percent of students' demonstrated financial need – a new record for UMass and "a number far higher than any of the other public universities in the region," he said.

However, Wilson has also faced criticism, including recent revelations that his overall compensation level increased by 15 percent last year the same year in which the University faced major budget cuts and enacted both a student fee increase and a salary freeze for UMass faculty and employees.

"Leaving at this time is a bit easier knowing that there is a uniquely qualified leadership team of chancellors guiding the five campuses. I have complete confidence in their ability to continue the progress that we have seen on the campuses, and I know that the Board of Trustees shares my confidence in their superb leadership and in the prospects for the future," Wilson said.

"I assure you that I gave this very serious consideration but have concluded that this is the time for a change. I am very proud of what we have accomplished together," Wilson added.

LOU MANFREDO/COLLEGIAN

President Jack Wilson announced today that he will step down in June 2011.

He will continue to serve as president until his current term expires. Over the course of the next year, Wilson will consider future opportunities both at and beyond the University, according to the release.

Gov. Deval Patrick and Board of Trustees Chairman Robert J. Manning applauded Wilson's achievements during his time as president, according to yesterday's release.

"By any measure – enrollment, endowment, test scores or capital improvements – Jack Wilson's tenure has moved the University of Massachusetts forward," said Patrick. "He has been a terrific partner in our shared commitment to making the public higher education system in Massachusetts a national model for excellence while keeping it affordable and accessible for our students."

Wilson joined the University in 2001 to become the founding CEO of UMassOnline, the University's distance-education program.

He said he is looking forward to working with students and working on the technology, innovation and economic development issues that have interested him throughout his career.

"At my core, I am an educator, and I look forward to being able to focus on teaching and to advancing research," said Wilson in the release. "I feel that it will soon be time to open a new chapter in my career."

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrocheleau@dailycollegian.com.

Sophomore studying abroad witnesses restaurant bombing

By Chris Shores
Collegian Staff

A bomb went off in a restaurant last month in Pune, India and University of Massachusetts sophomore Katie Mills was just a few miles away.

Mills, an individual concentration major focusing on international business, has been studying abroad this semester in India. She is living with a group of students at a hostel in the city, just miles from the German Bakery, the site of the bombing. Initial media reports, both in India and in international news outlets, suspected the incident was an act of terrorism.

"Our program contacted all of us through text message and said there was an incident," said Mills in an interview conducted over e-mail. "At first they thought the cylinder in the kitchen went off, but they later learned ... [a] bomb was placed there in a backpack under a group of students."

"I could steadily feel the panic level rising," she added. "We were so scared because the bomb had been in a western part of town called the German Bakery, and it was said to be intended for foreigners. In a city of close to 6 million, it's safe to say it isn't that diverse, and we are the largest group of Western students

See GERMAN BAKERY on page 2

COURTESY KATIE MILLS

The German Bakery, a popular eating spot for both locals and foreigners in Pune, India was bombed last month. An investigation is underway to determine if the bomb was an act of terrorism.

SGA to discuss elimination of ALANA Caucus seats tomorrow

By Hannah McGoldrick and Alyssa Creamer
Collegian Staff

Senators will discuss the controversial removal of the Asian Latino African Native American (ALANA) Caucus seats at tomorrow's University of Massachusetts' Student Government Association (SGA) Senate meeting.

Two motions involving the removal of these seats have passed through the SGA's Administrative Affairs (AA) committee, and will come to vote at Wednesday's 7 p.m. meeting.

According to a document titled "Summary of CEPA Research On ALANA Caucus Appointed Seats" by the Center for Educational Policy Advocacy (CEPA), all appointed seats, particularly the ALANA Caucus seats and the Area Government appointed seats, are deemed unconstitutional. This research began in the fall 2009 and concluded this spring when CEPA representatives D'Alesyandra Acosta and Yevin Roh presented the agency's findings to the SGA's AA committee on Thursday.

However, there is controversy over whether or not CEPA's research and findings concerning the Area Government appointed seats' alleged unconstitutionality has changed.

In the Senate Election, students vote for their area governor. Once the area governor is elected as an ex-officio member of the SGA, that governor has the power to appoint a senator to the SGA from their area.

According to Senator Patrick Kenney, this disturbs the "assumption that there is one vote for one person." By voting for a governor, that governor can appoint another person "who presumably holds the same ideas they do" giving that governor "double the representation. That's why the appointed Area Government seats are undemocratic."

According to Senator Derek Khanna, Acosta and Roh could not indicate specifically how the Area Government appointed seats were unconstitutional at last Thursday's AA meeting.

"Yevin was perfectly clear," said Kenney. "He laid out exactly what was in their report, and it was quite clear. I don't know what pieces of their presentation Khanna was talking about, but to me it was perfectly clear."

"There is the issue of the seats not being allowed in the SGA Constitution," stated CEPA's document, referring to all appointed seats. "This is essentially a point of research that we need a further analysis on, due to information very recently acquired ... The Area government seats were apparently deemed legal by a report written by Michael Marin. Yet there is no information on the name of the report or how to acquire this report. We feel this report will also aid us in making informed recommendations."

"I trust the research that CEPA has done and stand behind their findings," said SGA Student Trustee Emily Bloch.

Many SGA senators agree with Bloch in trusting the research done by CEPA, and CEPA's argument that the appointed seats from the ALANA Caucus are unconstitutional because they violate the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution's Equal Protection Law.

"All I want done is what is right," said Kenney. "I don't particularly want to remove any seats, but that is a tough question. It is necessary that we follow the law."

"According to the research by CEPA, yes, these seats are unconstitutional. I believe they are all, including the area government seats, undemocratic," Kenney continued. "However, it is clear that while the area government appointed seats are undemocratic, the ALANA [Caucus' appointed] seats are unconstitutional. I feel as though many of the arguments for the removal of the ALANA Caucus seats coincide with the removal of the area government appointed seats."

"Appointed seats are also quite literally unconstitutional as our SGA constitution does not recognize senators except through election, yet our bylaws do," said Roh. "This lack of congruency makes appointed seats unconstitutional."

Khanna stated in a formal complaint to the Office of Civil Rights under the U.S. Department of Education, after speaking with members of the American Civil Liberties Union, that "the [ALANA] appointed seats violate the Equal Protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States

See SGA on page 3

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

SGA senators debate changes to their bylaws concerning appointed seats after elections.

How credit card restrictions will affect college students

Business

By Matt Bouteillier
Collegian Staff

A series of new restrictions for credit card companies, which went into effect last week after being passed Congress a year ago, will impact anyone who has a credit card, but it will especially affect college students.

Credit card companies have long used questionable marketing practices in order to get America's youth to sign up for a credit card. The companies often see young adults as being inexperienced with managing finances and therefore much more likely to misuse credit cards and therefore pay more in penalties.

"In spring of 2008, only 15 percent of freshmen had a zero balance, down dramatically from 69 percent in the fall of 2004. The median debt freshmen carried was $939, nearly triple the $373 in 2004," according to Sallie Mae's "How Undergraduate Students Use Credit Cards," published April 2009.

Generally, credit card companies use methods such as switching payment dates and raising credit limits so that cardholders incur debt. This extra debt means a number of new fees and increased interest rates, which is how these companies make their money.

With the new legislation kicking in, these practices have been at least regulated, if not banned. The following restrictions in the "Credit Card Accountability Responsibility and Disclosure Act" (Credit CARD Act) passed on March 19, 2009, will directly affect students:

New laws will require a cosigner for student applicants under 21, unless they can prove they have a steady source of income.

No more freebies: companies are no longer allowed to offer students token gifts such as free pizza or t-shirts, etc. just for applying.

Fewer prescreened offers, meaning companies such as Equifax or Experian can not send credit card companies your information in order for them to send out "pre-approved offers."

More transparency about college affinity card programs, meaning that credit card companies will have to disclose their marketing deals with colleges to the Federal Reserve Board. Schools must also disclose how much they make off these deals.

Colleges are urged to limit, or restrict, credit card marketing on their campus.

While these new regulations will limit the credit card companies' ability to use their old tricks, it certainly does not prevent them from implementing new ones.

"Of the 10 practices that have been outlawed, the credit card companies have already found eight new devices for getting around them," said Elizabeth Warren, Chair of the Congressional Oversight Panel, in a recent television interview.

Even with all their traps, credit card companies cannot take advantage of consumers if the cardholder borrows responsibly and takes the time to read the fine print on their statements. Just keep one thing in mind: caveat emptor, these companies are after their pound of flesh.

Matt Bouteillier can be reached at mbouteil@student.umass.edu.

ARTS & LIVING

Saigon serves savory selection

The Vietnamese restaurant in downtown Amherst packs pounds of flavor into its inventive menu. Read our review and check it out for yourself.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

UMass looses regular season finale

The Minutewomen fall to the 49ers with a score of 85-51 as Megan Zullo scored 11 points for UMass.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Roy Ribitzky says it is time for men to take action and stop rape, especially since the University of Massachusetts doesn't seem to be taking any.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Contribute to the ongoing constructive conversation on our "Breaking the Silence" page about policy changes that need to be made on this campus regarding sexual assault.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 27
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Scannell
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolniert
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Elle Rulon-Miller
Assistant Comics Dominic Mei
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Senior Producer Sara Cody
Senior Producer Pete Rimo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Bi-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Rocheleau
COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Whitton
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shaina Jackson

CAMPUS PERSPECTIVES

What do you have to say about this UMass issue?

How do you feel about the University of Massachusetts administrator's decision to allow an allegedly confessed rapist to continue to live on campus and attend classes?

Patrick Ashline,
Junior
Astronomy, Political Science

"I do feel as though it was actually a very negligent and irresponsible decision on the administration's part to allow someone to live here when they are perceived as an alleged rapist who allegedly raped someone who was quantified as his friend. Unless this student is heavily monitored, I don't like having that kind of threat on campus."

Matt Liptak,
Junior
Sports Management

"I'm not very comfortable with this. If I were a girl, I definitely would not be comfortable with it. It just makes this University feel less safe. I think the University should definitely not let him live on campus. I'm surprised they let him still go to school here."

Samantha Aldrich,
Junior
Accounting

"I don't feel very good about this actually. It doesn't make me feel safe. Walking around at night is scary as it is, never mind knowing that there is somebody who is a rapist living on campus. I think rape is horrible, and it doesn't make me feel good knowing that it happens on campus. Although I am also sure there are a lot more people we haven't heard about who are sex offenders who haven't had any legal action taken against them."

Katie Belifore,
Freshman
Undeclared

"It makes me nervous because he could do it again. Especially with him living on campus, what if you're his neighbor or you live in the same hallway and you're walking down the hall in a towel. The administration should at least send out an e-mail to let everyone know where he is living. I don't think he should be allowed to live on campus because there is clearly something with you if you are a rapist."

By Alyssa Creamer, Collegian Staff

Even though the career fairs are over Career Services still has a lot to offer you

- ✔ Summer Jobs
- ✔ Internships
- ✔ Co-ops
- ✔ eRecruiting data base with thousands of opportunities
- ✔ Resume and cover letter assistance
- ✔ Career advising
- ✔ Workshops in job search strategies, resume writing, career options
- ✔ Jobs after graduation

Walk in hours Monday through Friday Noon to 4 pm in Goodell 512

Intro to internships and co-ops workshops are Monday or Thursday at 3 pm in Goodell 508

Web site www.umass.edu/careers

Phone 413-545-2224

Intl. leaders respond to India bombing

German bakery from page 1

currently here."

The German Bakery is a popular eating place for both locals and tourists. It is located near a Jewish Chabad house and Osho Ashram, which frequently attracts tourists. Because of this, media outlets suspected the bomb was targeting foreigners.

Initial reports announced eight dead and 30 injured. Those numbers have now risen to at least 16 dead and over 60 injured by the bomb.

"The past week has definitely felt somber [because] so many people had died, especially young students," said Mills.

Among those who died were a group of Indian students who were seated at the table above the bomb. These students were schoolmates of one of the girls who Mills lives with, she said.

"This place is usually so vibrant and happy, but there has been a dark cloud looming over the city since the attack," she said, "literally, as it rained [a week after the bombing] which is completely unheard of unless its monsoon season."

Immediately following the incident, Mills called her family, friends and boyfriend. They were concerned about her safety, but Mills plans on staying in Pune unless another event occurs.

Leaders of various nations expressed swift reactions to the bomb. The Hindu newspaper reported that Indian Prime Minister Manmohan Singh called for a speedy investigation so that "the culprits responsible for this heinous act are identified and brought to justice at the earliest."

The Hindu went on to report that United States Ambassador Timothy J. Roemer denounced the bombings.

"On behalf of the people of the United States, I extend heartfelt sympathy to the Government of India and the victims of this tragic terrorist blast in Pune," said Roemer. "The US remains shoulder-to-shoulder with India in the fight against terror and will assist as needed to help bring the perpetrators of this cowardly act to justice."

President Barack Obama called Singh to "condemn the blast that took place in Pune on Saturday and to condole the loss of lives," according to The Hindu article, which also stated that, "the Obama administration has offered FBI help" in the investigation.

Media outlets also wondered if the incident would sour peace talks between India and Pakistan. Those talks ended last week when, according to the Telegraph, "India's foreign secretary Nirupama Rao said dialogue 'holds tremendous potential' but progress had been repeatedly 'thwarted' by acts of terrorism."

Chris Shores can be reached at cshores@dailycollegian.com.

(Courtesy Katie Mei)

The German Bakery in Pune, India was destroyed after a bomb was detonated in the restaurant last month. At least 16 people have been confirmed dead, many of them local citizens.

Dominican Independence Day

Jasmin Ramos-Fuentes/Collegian

KumbaCarey performs at the Fine Arts Center as part of Casa Dominicana's Independence Day celebration on Saturday at the University of Massachusetts.

Colleges ditching hardcover yearbooks for digital version

By Sam Hayes
Collegian Staff

To communicate with their former classmates, more and more students prefer social networking sites over the traditional hardcover yearbook, according to a recent report from the Associated Press (AP). Instead of tangible yearbooks, organizations on campuses across the country are using tools like Facebook to post pictures and create a digital yearbook. The University of Massachusetts abandoned its yearbook, The Index, three years ago.

"Yearbooks [at UMass] were discontinued because of costs," said Gloria Fox, director of commencements at UMass. "They could not sell enough to break even."

Most UMass students, who were unaware that the University once had yearbooks, thought they were a good idea.

"It is an excellent idea to have yearbooks," said 19-year-old undeclared freshman Hillary Mahoney. "It's nice to look back to high school and middle school. Why would college be different?"

"It's a good idea to keep and hold on to, to see who's in your class. I probably would buy one," said Seth Oliver, 20, a French and Spanish double major. Like Oliver, the majority of students interviewed said that they would buy a yearbook if it was offered their senior year.

"I will never know everyone in the class of 2013," said Ken Sena, a 19-year-old undeclared freshman, but a yearbook would help.

"I could stumble upon someone later in life and check the book. If they went to school with me, then I could point myself out and say 'Look we went to school together. Now give me a job,'" Sena joked.

Students did not take as kindly to the idea of a digital yearbook.

"I think you either have one or you don't," Oliver said, while Sena simply called it "a terrible idea."

"Yearbooks are material, they are tangible," said Mahoney. "Facebook is ever-changing and people may leave." Brandon Pelrine saw it differently. "I think it is a good idea paper-wise," said the 21-year-old finance major. "There could be a website with photos and people could submit whatever they wanted."

Major college yearbook publisher Jostens estimates that last year only 1,000 colleges published yearbooks. Jostens declined to comment on this story.

Some websites, like old-yearbooks.com, are digitalizing old yearbooks and posting them on the Internet.

Sam Hayes can be reached at sdhayes@student.umass.edu

Senators to evaluate legality of SGA seats

SGA from page 1

Constitution as well as Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964."

In his complaint, Khanna wrote that "the student government of UMass Amherst, a subsidiary of the Commonwealth has an affirmative action program in regard to appointment seats that does not prescribe to the parameters outlined by the Supreme Court of the United States. Similar systems throughout the country have been struck down. I believe that the University of North Carolina was most recent."

"The system allots quota seats on the basis of race with no regard for how many students of that race populate the student government," he continued. "In other words, it is a quota system on top of the election results. In the election minority students do exceptionally well, achieving over a majority of the Senate body itself. This in itself is not my grievance; the grievance is that the 'affirmative action program' exacerbates this lack of diversity."

Much of Khanna's research derived from a thesis titled "Race and Representation: A Case Study of Racial Diversity in Student Government" presented by Rhys James Livingstone to the graduate department of sociology at UMass, which can be found at http://scholarworks.umass.edu/cgi/viewcontent.cgi?article=1260&context=theses.

According to Khanna, the Office of Civil Rights has been investigating the legality of the ALANA Caucus' appointed seats for over seven months.

Interim Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Jean Kim, according to Khanna, had set in place a plan to remove the appointed ALANA Caucus seats by yesterday. Although the seats are vacant, several senators say the ALANA appointed seats are vacant mainly because of concerns surrounding the legality of the seats and knowledge about their pending removal.

The first motion sponsored by Senator Scott Aldrich-Holmes states that the "SGA recognizes the need for diversity within the SGA Senate" and that "Senate seats may be appointed by the ALANA Caucus." The motion then calls for the removal of the ALANA Caucus' appointed seats by removing from the by-laws sections two, three and four of Title II Chapter 3.

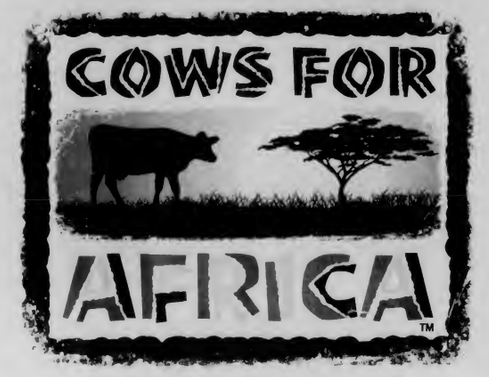
Title II Chapter 3 Section 2 states that "The ALANA Caucus shall be apportioned a number of Senate seats equal to 13 percent of the total of those seats apportioned to the Electoral Districts, and the Charter of the ALANA Caucus shall prove for the appointment and removal of SGA members said seats in a manner consistent with the By-laws of the SGA and prescribed the Charter of the ALANA Caucus."

Within the first motion, Title II Chapter 3 Section 1 remains intact and states that "The ALANA Caucus shall be the official representative of those groups prescribed by the Charter of the ALANA Caucus."

However, within the second motion sponsored by Khanna and passed through the Administrative Affairs committee held that Title II Chapter 3 Section 1 be removed. The Preamble of the Charter of the ALANA Caucus also states that "the ALANA Caucus is the official representative of those groups prescribed by the Charter of the ALANA Caucus."

"The policy intent was to achieve campus fair and just minority representation in UMass student government," said Khanna about the policy of having appointed ALANA seats. "In reality, however, the policy produced unintended consequences instead bitter, and sometimes violent racial tensions, and widespread and prolonged charges of reverse and illegal discrimination."

"The language used in the motion presented by Sen. Khanna is offensive," said Kenney. "I have a problem with the wording of that motion, but I do not have a problem with what it is asking [the SGA] to do … I support the motion submitted by Scott Aldrich-Holmes."



When asked if he believed the SGA would remain as diverse should the ALANA seats be removed, Roh said, "Diversity has always depended on the students, the ALANA Caucus was not the sole arbiter of insuring diversity. Each senator as an individual brings a great amount of diversity, each having their own unique life experiences."

"An important issue deserves serious consideration and deliberation. I was pleased to see that the committee members gave both," said Roh. "I will feel truly happy about the meeting when both ALANA Caucus appointed seats and Area Government appointed seats are removed."

He continued, "The same constitutional concepts of viewpoint discrimination and equal voice apply to both ALANA Caucus appointed seats and Area Government appointed seats, it is just for both to be removed. As MLK Jr. said, 'The moral arc of the universe is long but it bends towards justice.' We as students and as people must do our best to help bend that arc."

Hannah McGoldrick can be reached at hmcgoldr@student.umass.edu. Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu.

UMASS DINING PARTNERS WITH LAND O' LAKES

Tuesday, March 2
7am –9pm · All DCs

- Learn how a better quality of life is being created worldwide
- Points earned by UMass will provide a cow for an African family
- Sample products made with Land O'Lakes ingredients
- Win prizes

Land O'Lakes FOODSERVICE Your Passion. Our Promise. Alpine Lace UMASS DINING UMassAmherst umassdining.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, MARCH 2, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Losing dignity through tourism

Nick O'Malley

I have two Irish roommates: Sean and Mark. I was supposed to have a French roommate too, but he never showed. But that's beside the point.

When I told Sean that I was going to visit Blarney Castle to visit the Blarney Stone, he laughed a little, telling me that he'd never done so himself. This is strange considering Blarney is a half hour away, and that's by bus.

It's like that episode of Futurama where Fry wants to visit all of the amazing things in the future that he couldn't do in the past because, you know, it was the future. He then goes to the edge of the universe and rides a dinosaur. The funny thing is, the other characters in the show say that they never do these things, since they live in said futuristic world. That's what it's like studying abroad.

My roommates have never kissed the Blarney Stone, gone to the Fota Wildlife Reserve or been in the Cork City Gaol. That's for jackass yank tourists.

My roommates have never kissed the Blarney Stone, gone to the Fota Wildlife Reserve or been in the Cork City Gaol. That's for jackass yank tourists. It's just like how I've never been to Plymouth Rock, bought a Cape Cod sweatshirt or walked the Freedom Trail in Boston. That's for jackass tourists.

Because I thoroughly enjoy making up terms, I'm going to dub this the Jackass Tourist Principle (JTP). I was originally going to call this the Domestic Proximity Effect because of the idea that most landmarks are so close, residents of the area just tell themselves "oh, I'll just go eventually." I do this every time I say I want to go to the Professional Basketball Hall of Fame in Springfield.

There's a difference, though. The Basketball Hall of Fame is awesome (if you like basketball). But, Plymouth Rock? No. That place sucks. I've never been there and have no intention of going there. The only people that go there are wait for it … jackass tourists.

It's not like when people from the area say they've never been to New York, Philadelphia or even Montreal. They're all a reasonable distance. Heck, Montreal's an awesome summer break idea for people who are under 21 and want to drink. The problem is that there's no real rush to go there since they're close enough that you believe you'll get there eventually.

Unfortunately for me, Blarney Castle is the Plymouth Rock of Ireland. No self-respecting Irish young adult wants to go there. It's the place that parents drag their kids to have them dangle over a hole in a castle wall a couple hundred feet off the ground to kiss what Tripadvisor.com called "the most unhygienic tourist attraction in the world."

Me? I'm a jackass yank tourist that runs around taking pictures of the three C's – castles, cliffs and cathedrals – everywhere I go. I do the sort of things that I wouldn't be caught dead doing back in the States. There's a reason my last complete photo album before I went abroad is from high school.

In Ireland? I have no dignity at all. Everything is photo worthy: every cool building, every funny piece of graffiti and every picture of a penis on a wall somewhere. But it's alright as long as I'm saying I'm performing a journalistic duty, even if the photos just end up on Facebook and my mom and aunt "like" them.

There's nothing that screams "I'm a jackass tourist" as much as the camera. A flash is essentially a lighthouse beacon that sends the tourist signal to everyone in a 20 foot – excuse me, like a six meter – radius.

And as cool as it seems to take that quintessential picture of someone holding a pint glass in a pub, it's a horrible idea. That is, unless, you actually want to talk to Seamus, the inebriated bus driver that will talk to you in an unintelligible mumble for 25 minutes about nothing else other than you being from America and the one person he knows that went there a decade ago.

Yes, this happened, and my friends all made fun of me because of how ridiculous I've gotten with my camera. And I deserved every minute of it. But who cares? It's not like in America where tourists are looked upon with a certain scorn. It's just some middle-aged guy at a pub saying, "Oh, a flash. Those kids are obviously Americans, I'm going to go talk to them."

Plus, I'm out of here in three months, and all I'll have left are my photo albums on Facebook and the shot glasses I've been collecting. I'm definitely not leaving here with my dignity intact at this rate.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

Time for men to end rape

Roy Ribitzky

The Dean of Students' office has failed us.

When presented an easy opportunity to expel an allegedly rapist who reportedly admitted his crime, the University of Massachusetts buckled under what interim Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life, Jean Kim called a "really unfortunate" situation, according to last week's shocking – but not surprising – Boston Globe article "No crackdown on assaults at colleges".

I can be kicked out of housing for having too much alcohol in my fridge, but I apparently will be allowed to graduate if I rape a friend. Do we have to wonder why women rarely report being raped? Either no one believes them or nothing happens to the assailant.

This is not just at the UMass Amherst. College campuses are infected with an unhealthy, oppressive and violent hegemonic masculinity. Men are raised in an invisible cage of what it means to be a man: to never cry, to own at Halo, to drink more than anyone else, to have sex with more women and to view women as ends to our sexual desires. And because we cannot talk about our feelings – God forbid a man actually feels something – we are pressurized to conform to this impossible image of manhood. By not talking about ourselves, we become trapped.

When an insecure, unsympathetic and immoral man encounters a situation where he wants sex, but the woman he's with does not, he rapes her. There is a difference from having sex and rape. Rape is about taking out men's anger over the feminist movement for challenging us to actually think; it is about ripping away the pride and soul of a woman from beneath her; it is about showing women that men are superior; it's about power. Rape is a choice – always – that someone thinks about, commits to and executes.

Whenever stories are reported on this subject, such as the sexual assault in the library last fall or the Boston Globe article, we wonder why this happens. But I will not talk about the victims. Our schools, disciplinary boards (clearly an oxymoron) and our justice departments need to stop asking if the victim's skirt was too short, if the victim was flirting with him, or if the victim was drinking. We need to start talking to men. We need to talk about the men who rape women and find a safe haven in the Dean of Students' office. Instead to telling women to not walk alone at night, instead of telling women to dress more "appropriately," instead of telling women to use their rape whistles in case of emergencies, we need to tell men to stop raping women. We need to tell men to stop raping our mothers, our sisters, our girlfriends, our aunts and all the women in our lives.

It seems like UMass cares more about its furniture policy than about educating men and women about rape.

I'm not sure what scares me more: the fact that the vice chancellor failed to hold her staff accountable, that the assistant dean who reviewed the case, Christina Willenbrock, did not expel the victimizer, or the fact that the vice chancellor, the assistant dean and the head dean of students, Jo-Anne Vanin are all women of power who let an inferior man get away with rape. There is no way that in all their respective lives, that they were never once harassed because of their gender or ethnicities, yet all three passed on rape as though he failed an exam.

Kim wants to continue as vice chancellor. Her resume is filled with student affairs experience. Too bad she forgot the most important thing about student affairs: caring for them. Her interests lie in throwing the blame to someone else and "making adjustments."

The only adjustment she needs to make is getting out of Amherst, because I do not want to send my future daughter to a school where not even women with power give a damn about rape.

You'll notice in our Student Code of Conduct – if you've ever read it – that the "Appliance Guidelines" are about half a page. You know, stuff like unplugging your refrigerators over break. Sexual assault? One sentence. Rape? Nothing.

It seems like UMass cares more about its furniture policy than about educating men and women about rape. The very day the Boston Globe article and subsequent Collegian coverage came out, UMass students got an e-mail from Housing and Residence Life reminding us about the "Fire safety Policy Compliance Advisory."

Seriously? How about e-mail reminders to all the men on campus that rape is illegal? Plagiarism is not illegal in American law, but I can get expelled for that. Rape is illegal, but I can still graduate with honors.

Now, we need a solution, but where begin? UMass can start expelling rapists. That would be nice. UMass should also be allowed to press charges against the accused if they see fit, even if the victim chooses not to.

What was it that I read in the sexual harassment policy written by UMass? "In most instances, complaints will be initiated by the target of the alleged harassment.

However, the University reserves the right to initiate a formal grievance (or to continue processing a complaint even after a request to withdraw has been submitted by the Complainant in accordance with Section IV) when, in the opinion of the Chair of the Sexual Harassment Board, it is appropriate to do so.

In such instances the Chair of the Sexual Harassment Board, in consultation with the Chancellor, will designate who will present the University's case."

It looks like the Dean of Students' office had the full power and authority to charge that man with rape, chose not to, and not is saying "reversing a decision is not an option," according to Kim.

But ultimately, the power is not in the hands of administrators.

The power and choice to acknowledge women as human beings starts with men. Men are the ones who commit the most rapes in relation to females, but it is true most men in general do not commit rape. It is those men, the ones who do not commit rape, who need to speak up.

In the book by Robin Warshaw, "I Never Called it Rape", it reports that one in four college women will get sexually assaulted, raped, or harassed.

Men, how many women do you know? More than four I bet, so you better think twice before you say another rape joke.

In the same book, surveys showed that one in 12 college men committed acts legally definable as rape.

Men, how many men do you know? Odds are that you might be friends with a repeat rapist and not even know it.

UMass has some misplaced notion that by keeping these issues secret they won't happen anymore. The UMass Police Department should post the picture of every rapist on its website so we know exactly who did what and who is getting away with it.

But why would the school do that? UMass cares more about planting trees and prettying up Southwest to attract prospective students instead of caring about their current students, the ones that pay thousands and thousands of dollars to funds that ultimately help rapists succeed.

You don't need to be a woman to be outraged by this crisis, you just need a heart, a mind and no mind for rape.

So men, the next time you and I go to the bathroom, remember that we hold in our hands the ability to end rape.

Roy Ribitzky is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at rribitzk@student.umass.edu.

Five things I'm going to do now that the Olympics are over:

5. Watch all the NBC shows that were cancelled for the last two weeks.

4. Take down my Shaun White posters above my bed.

3. Join a local curling club and hang out with old men.

2. Continue to pretend I actually enjoy hockey.

1. Go back to thinking that Canada is a useless country unless you want to import clubbed seal meat.

– Boo! These columns are really quite awful.
– They're terrible!
– Well, I kind of liked Roy's.
– Oh yeah?
– There were some parts I liked.
– Well I liked Nick's.
– Yeah, his was good, actually.
– So was Kaya's!
– It was wonderful!
– All three were!
– I want to read more!
– We should write one by e-mailing editorial@dailycollegian.com!

Being a Yankee in Red Sox Nation

Kaya Swainson

Being a New York Yankees fan at the University of Massachusetts Amherst is a lot like a soldier being behind enemy lines. Everywhere you go people are always out to get you.

One of my first campus experiences in this respect happened as a freshman while walking to my first class. People were giving me filthy looks and looking at me as if I were lower than dirt. I couldn't figure it out. Did I smell? Did I have a stain on my shirt? Nope, even worse – I was wearing a Yankees hat. This sort of scene would replay itself approximately 5,000 times that year.

I've had some interesting experiences because of that Yankees hat on top of my head. A typical day for me involves hearing "Yankees suck!" from at least one person. In fact, if I don't hear it at all I feel like my day isn't normal – like it's missing something.

I've been called every name under the sun just for wearing something with a simple logo on it. My usual interaction with one person I know involves me hearing "take that hat off" as soon as I'm in sight. Another friend likes to greet with, "what's up Kaya, Yankees suck." After two years, I find those funny, but the really amusing ones are from the people who don't even know my name.

Strangers are always quick to get their digs in. On a Friday night walking up Fearing Street, I'll pass a group of guys, and it's always the one lagging behind who'll yell the usual, "Yankees suck!"

I once made a derogatory comment about a girl's shirt one night and she came back with "at least I'm not wearing a Yankees hat." Maybe I deserved that one, but everyone else just feels obligated to dish out some hate. Even the old crossing guard on Massachusetts Avenue during the week gives me his two cents whenever he can.

I may not get respect for supporting my team, but what I can respect about the people and fans up here is their commitment.

I could tell he was from the older generation of no-nonsense Red Sox supporters because of the scowl I receive as I walk by everyday, and the fact that he's never seen without a Boston hat on his head no matter what the weathers like.

The bus rides on weekend nights are always full of anti-New York sentimentality. They wouldn't be complete without someone in the back starting a 'Yankees suck!' chant that ends up with the whole bus joining in every Friday or Saturday night. What these types of interactions have really taught me though is a lesson in respect. I knew what I was getting myself into going to school at the heart of Red Sox country, but what I didn't expect was to meet such a united front of opposition.

I may not get respect for supporting my team, but what I can respect about the people and fans up here is their commitment. Sox fans are a passionate group of supporters who've stood behind their team through the best and the worst. I mentioned a united front earlier, and to me that was a completely new concept.

You will see some Red Sox fans sport numbers and statistics to back up their arguments, but all I see is a championship drought of 86 years with 27 championships for us. But if you disrespect the Red Sox up here, you can be sure someone is going to jump headfirst into that argument, and if crazy enough, maybe even a fight.

Part of the charm of UMass for me is this constant back and forth between opposing fans. In fact, it actually helps to keep me on my toes.

There's nothing like hearing a comment about my teams and coming back with an even better one.

Up here it's all about the teams you love and the teams you love to hate, because it just wouldn't be UMass without hearing "Yankees suck!" wherever you go.

As a native New Yorker – if you haven't guessed by now – all I saw before coming to UMass is a medley of teams to support. In New York we have at least two teams to cheer on in every sport, so there's always a sense of division. And that's not even counting New Jersey teams, as many people support them as if they were there home state teams as well.

Here, it is a completely different story. Almost everyone from Massachusetts supports a Boston-based team.

In a way, the unity of the native fans helps push out-of-state students who support the same team together or you risk cheering alone. Then you realize that it's not just standing against Massachusetts, but all of New England. No wonder I feel like I'm surrounded by a sea of enemies.

I've come to realize that I'm not about to get respect from most die-hard Sox fans. The old crossing guard tried to make me wait unnecessarily at the divider this past fall. I've seen arguments over who is a better team, Boston or New York, turn violent.

You will see some Red Sox fans sport numbers and statistics to back up their arguments, but all I see is a championship drought of 86 years with 27 championships for us. But if you disrespect the Red Sox up here, you can be sure someone is going to jump headfirst into that argument, and if crazy enough, maybe even a fight.

Part of the charm of UMass for me is this constant back and forth between opposing fans. In fact, it actually helps to keep me on my toes.

There's nothing like hearing a comment about my teams and coming back with an even better one.

Up here it's all about the teams you love and the teams you love to hate, because it just wouldn't be UMass without hearing "Yankees suck!" wherever you go.

Kaya Swainson is Collegian columnist. He can be reached at kswainso@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MARCH 2, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Saigon serves authentic Vietnamese cuisine

By Brendan Murphy
Collegian Staff

If you've ever wondered to yourself 'where can I get a good pho noodle bowl?' look no further than Miss Saigon, located in downtown Amherst. The restaurant's signature dish boasts rice noodles, various beef cuts, bean sprouts, basil, cilantro and lime in a hot, savory broth. In fact, all noodle bowls are delicious and stay true to the traditional style of authentic Vietnamese cooking.

Miss Saigon opened in October 2008, and is owned by Vincent Tran.

"We use a lot of traditional recipes you would find back in Vietnam," said Tran. "In addition, some of our recipes are passed down through our family and some are chef-inspired."

On the question of what he would recommend to first-time diners, Tran responded, "The pho noodle bowl. It's a very popular dish at our restaurant. We use a combination of beef and chicken broth to make our signature dish."

Some of their beef cuts can be a little unusual for the average American palate, but are the typical taste in Vietnamese cooking. For instance, the various beef cuts in the pho range from run-of-the-mill flank and brisket to the more daring choices of beef balls (balls of meat, not testicles), tripe, a selection of meat from the cow's stomach, and tendon.

It's their bold selection that makes Miss Saigon unique, and they prepare their food wonderfully. Their menu selection mirrors similar Vietnamese restaurants in highly populated areas such as Boston and Springfield.

The eatery's vegetarian selection is fresh and flavorful as well. They offer a variety of delicious vegetarian stir fry options with ingredients such as bok choy, eggplant, crispy bamboo shoots, sweet snow peas, tender mushrooms and zucchini. The combination of green and red peppers and the purple eggplant make this not only a delicious offering, but a visually satisfying one as well.

Their egg noodle chicken soup will kick Campbell's to the curb when a cold or flu is coming on. Their mix of chicken, noodles, and various Asian veggies is a pick-me-up that would send swine flu running.

Their sugar cane shrimp and vermicelli plates are delightful, and represent some of the better Vietnamese cooking found around big city areas.

The newest offering at Miss Saigon is the Banh Mi sandwich. It consists of a mix of pickled carrots, onions, cilantro, paté and mayonnaise with a choice of BBQ beef or chicken, cold cut pork or veggies on a baguette. It's the perfect lunch item on-the-go for the low price of $3.50.

Many of the dishes on the menu taste very similar to those found in typical Vietnamese restaurants around Boston. However, there aren't many Vietnamese eateries in Amherst, which makes Miss Saigon stand out as a unique offering.

They also offer a selection of light desserts that compliment the meal perfectly. Various ice creams are on the menu with flavors ranging from the typical strawberry or chocolate to the more obscure red bean or lychee. The taro custard is soft and delicious, and the mixed fruit with tapioca will have any diner in harmony before leaving the restaurant.

However, the price range may be a little high for a downtown eatery. Vietnamese restaurants found in Boston are typically less expensive than Miss Saigon. Noodle bowls range from $8 to $9, but are delicious and filling, and diners can expect to bring home a doggie bag for a late-night snack. Entrées are priced more appropriately for a dinner menu, with veggie stir frys and chicken dishes running around $11.

Additionally, it can be a mixed bag when it comes to the wait service.

Miss Saigon will leave your stomach full and your spirit at peace. The restaurant is open weekdays from 11 a.m. until 10 p.m.

Brendan Murphy can be reached at brendanm@student.umass.edu.

Miss Saigon restaurant in downtown Amherst is widely known for its generous and delicious noodle bowls, as well as other eclectic food selections, although the prices are slightly higher than expected.

DIY: make a gaping shirt fit any size

By Ellie Rulon-Miller
Collegian Staff

I love going to the University of Massachusetts hockey games. I get pumped up beyond belief when the main lights dim, the spotlights go on, the Minutemen skate out and the announcer yells, "PAAAUULL DAINTOONN!"

And, like most Minutemen fans, I love getting a free T-shirt when they're being given away, mostly because I can't afford the real Minuteman memorabilia. Case in point: Bright Out Night.

As usual, I arrived at the game a few minutes too late, and was assaulted with an extra-large white T-shirt. Great, I thought. I wear a small. This is useless to me. Or is it?

After leaving the poor, neglected T-shirt draped over my desk chair and scouring the Internet for a decent reconstruction tutorial, I have come up with a way to not only make the shirt fit me, but also make it somehow pass as both dangerously sexy and simply sensible, without sewing.

For this slightly modified tutorial, you will need an extra large T-shirt, a pair of scissors, and a marker or pen. To make the last step a little easier, you can cheat by using yarn or string.

Lay your shirt out flat on your work surface. I used the floor. Be sure to smooth out any wrinkles and that both sides of the bottom hem are lined up. This will make your cutting even and your finished product look less choppy. Next, cut off the sleeves and lay it flat again.

Take a T-shirt that you already have, preferably one that fits you in a way you like, and lay it flat over your extra large shirt, lining up the collars. This will give you a good idea of where you want to make your next marks and cuts.

Next, using your marker or pen, lightly draw a line down the sides of your extra large T-shirt an inch or two from your fitted T-shirt. Draw a horizontal line across the bottom of the shirt about an inch below the waist of your fitted shirt.

Remove your fitted shirt and put it away. Cut through both layers of the extra large T-shirt where you marked. Take the excess fabric from the bottom of the shirt and set it aside. The rest can be thrown away.

Now, mark up each side of the shirt with dots. Make sure you mark an equal number on each side. Then, use your scissors to snip these dots into holes no bigger than a pencil eraser.

For the next step, take the extra waist band you set aside and cut all around it, making one long strand of T-shirt, and cut it in half so you have two. You can use an alternative material if you'd like; I used two long strands of yarn, and you can use safety pins for a more punk rock look. This will be used to lace the sides of your shirt together.

Tie the front and back pieces of shirt together like a shoe by using the small holes you've created for yourself up and down each side, from armpit to waist. You should have some excess string hanging at the bottom of your shirt. Before tying it off, slip the shirt on so you can tighten it as much as you like. This is where you can vamp it up by tying it tightly to make the shirt look sexier, or keep it a little looser and simple.

This method includes elements from several tutorials, but the most reliable one can be found in the book "Generation T: 108 Ways to Transform a T-shirt" by Megan Nicolay. The book has a ton of easy tutorials for awesome T-shirts in any size and allows for readers to re-create them in any style.

Ellie Rulon-Miller can be reached at erulonmi@student.umass.edu

This photo demonstrates placing a fitted T-shirt on top of a larger shirt to provide guidelines for where you should measure your shirt to fit.

At left, a photograph of the large shirt with small holes cut through the front and back to insert string, safety pins or another fastening device. At right, the finished T-shirt, with strings tightened to fit accordingly.

Carmen Lei's Tip Style

Name: Carmen Lei

Year: 2010

Major: Hospitali

– Kaitlyn Bigica
(kbigica@student.umass.edu.)

What she's wearing:
Glasses- Newbury
Jacket- Hong Kong
Leggings-Burlington Coat Factory
Rain boots- Burlington Coat Factory
Umbrella- Burberry Outlet

The look:
Spotted walking to class past the Student Union, Carmen Lei was dressed for the season. On a rainy day at the University of Massachusetts, Lei definitely didn't let her style wash away with the dreary weather, and was able to find a way to both look cute and stay dry. Lei finds her inspiration in her daily mood.

"I follow my feelings everyday" Lei said. She described her style as an culmination of Asian and Japanese, and finds her style inspiration through her culture.

Matching her outfit to perfection, Lei used a basic beige color scheme as the main tone in her clothing. Her jacket may be plain, but it meshes perfectly with the black leggings and white rain boots, which feature character designs, creating a more playful look. The bottom Burberry design on her beige umbrella creates a break between the matching color of the jacket and matching color of the top of the umbrella. This also attracts the eye to the unique design the umbrella has. Its wooden handle also creates a classic look.

Lei's rainy weather outfit exhibits practicality. In opting to wear rain boots, she is actually saving money by not ruining her other shoes. So grab your umbrella and a pair of rain boots next time it starts to pour instead of hiding under a hood and stay warm and dry.

Correction:

The Arts and Living section printed an article yesterday which incorrectly stated that the production of "The Vagina Monologues" said that 130 females in 28 countries have experienced vaginal mutilation. The article should have said that an estimated 103 million females in 28 countries have experienced vaginal mutilation.

UMass falls to Eagles

Boney's abscence felt by UM

TENNIS from page 8

on this match, as freshman No. 2 singles player Julia Comas was unable to play. Comas had won four straight contests entering the Saturday match, and was replaced by Candynce Boney at No. 2 singles. Boney had the most competitive match of the day, but fell 7-6, 6-7 (10-6) to freshman Olga Khmyley.

Comas' absence hurt the Minutewomen in more than singles play as well. Junior Kaitlyn Carpenter stepped up to fill Comas' normal spot in doubles play, teaming up with sophomore Magdalena Ploch. However, the makeshift team was unable to overcome the well-seasoned squad of Katherine Atwell, who earned an eight-match winning streak earlier this season, and senior captain Brittany Delaney, as they lost 8-6.

No. 1 singles competitor Magdalena Ploch fell in straight sets to freshman player Alex Kelleher 6-2, 6-3. The result brings Kelleher's record to 3-3 at No. 1 singles this season, while Ploch falls to 7-2 in dual match play and 9-3 overall. The loss also snapped Kelleher's four-match winning streak.

At No. 3 singles, sophomore Katarina Gajic defeated senior Maude Lecluyse 6-4, 6-2. Gajic recorded a 7-5 mark in No. 3 singles action last year, and has been successful this season. The match was Lecluyse's first at No. 3 singles this season, as she has earned a 4-4 record at No. 4 singles before this match.

BC earned the doubles point by sweeping the doubles matches.

The No. 1 doubles team of Lecluyse and Boney, who had a 10-2 mark going into the match, were unable to overcome the skill level of Kelleher and Khmyley, as they fell 8-4.

In No. 3 doubles, Gajic and junior Jacqueline Mabatah teamed together to beat junior Tanisha Hodgson and freshman Jocelyn Providence. Hodgson and Providence records together fell to 8-3 with the loss.

In other singles action, Atwell defeated Carpenter at No. 4 singles 6-1, 6-1, freshman Ina Kauppila beat Hodgson 6-3, 6-0, and senior captain Brittany Delany defeated Providence 6-4, 6-2.

The Eagles begin their annual southern spring break road trip after the match. They'll also compete against Florida International before beginning Atlantic Coast Conference conference play.

The Minutewomen travel to Dartmouth to face the Big Green at 5 p.m. tomorrow. Dartmouth is 9-1 on the season and is coming off an 8-0 victory over Quinnipiac University on Sunday.

Ben Lambert can be reached at wlambert@student.umass.edu.

Minutemen, Minutewomen both finish in 6th place, look to ECAC and IC4A's dles, by beating his own record-breaking time and moving on to Saturday's final.

TRACK from page 8

Rounding out the first day of competition, Ryan DiOrio continued to emerge as a dependable distance runner by finishing third in the preliminaries of the 800-meter run and qualifying for the IC4A meet. Sam Laorenza also qualified for the IC4A in the 500-meter run, and Sean Busch placed sixth in the pole vault.

The Minutemen stood in 10th place after the first day of competition. Matching their male counterparts every step of the way, the Minutewomen were also in good standing upon the completion of day one in Boston.

Just as it has been several times this season, freshman Nicole Pompei led the UMass attack. Adding to her already impressive first season, Pompei finished in sixth place in the pole vault with a mark of 11-05.75 feet. She was the only member of her team to score during the first day of competition, leaving the Minutewomen in 17th place.

Although they did not gather points in any other event, five Minutewomen advanced past Friday's preliminary events. Holly Heinricher set a mark of 25.21 seconds in the 200-meter dash. Brittany Bakanowski and Deanna Julian nearly set personal bests in the 500-meter run, Courtney Baldwin qualified with a time of 2:57.82 minutes in the 1000-meter run and Gina Perno moved on in the 800-meter run as well.

On day two, neither team held back, as six records were either broken or improved upon, and five events saw qualifying marks.

A leader of the Minutemen all year long, Cotto proved that he can not only compete with the best, but that he can beat them as well. His time of 7.41 seconds in the 55-meter dash earned him the title of a New England Champion and UMass' highest scorer in the meet. In doing so, Cotto bested his own record-breaking time by .13 seconds and missed qualifying for the National Collegiate Athletic Association meet by .24 seconds.

Finishing the meet in sixth place with 33 points, UMass also saw its 4x400-meter relay team, as well as its 4x800-meter team qualify for the IC4A Championship this weekend.

The Minutewomen were not far behind their peers on Saturday, as they successfully rebounded from Friday's preliminary events. UMass records were set by four athletes on day two of the meet, catapulting the Minutewomen up 11 spots in the standings to a sixth place finish.

Leading the attack for a second straight week was junior jumper Stephanie Aguguo. With veteran leadership and experience, Aguguo won the triple jump event with her distance of 39-08.75 meters. She was the highest scorer for the Minutewomen and moved into second place in school history in the event. Aguguo also qualified for the Eastern Conference Athletic Conference championship with the win.

Senior Lisa Wilson improved on her school record in the shot put with a toss of 45-03.50 feet. That mark was good enough for fifth place. Freshman Nalis Mbianda was right behind Wilson with a mark of 43-09.75 feet, good enough for a seventh place finish.

Bakanowski and Courtney Baldwin also set all-time school marks in their events. Bakanowski now sits fourth in the record book for the 500-meter run, and Baldwin, in her first season, is fifth in the 1000-meter run.

UMass will travel to Roxbury, Mass. this weekend for the ECAC and IC4A Championship events which are scheduled to begin on Saturday.

Michael Wood can be reached at mewood@student.umass.edu

Six teams battle for five spots

Hockey East tournament shaping up, UNH, BC and Maine all in, UM-Lowell, BU, Northeastern, UVM hoping for birth

By Michael Counos
Collegian Correspondent

Vermont moved into a tie for fifth place in the Hockey East standings with a win over Boston University on Sunday. On the No. 20 Catamount's "Senior Day", it was junior Josh Burrows who scored the game winning goal with three minutes and 42 seconds left in the third period to improve their record to 15-11-6 overall and 9-10-6 in the Hockey East. The game was aired on ESPNU at a sold out Gutterson Fieldhouse in Burlington, Vt.

Seniors Brayden Irwin and Colin Vock both scored power-play goals for the Catamounts. The game entered the third period knotted at 2-2 until Burrows buried the Terriers with a goal assisted by freshman David Pacan with an in-between-the-legs pass. For the seven Vermont seniors that were honored following the game, the win was their 72nd of their Catamount careers.

Sophomore Rob Madore of UVM turned away 25 shots in the victory, while Burrows was named the first-star for the second time in the weekend double-header against BU. The Catamounts terrorized the Terriers on Friday with a 7-3 win, finishing 2-0-1 against BU in the regular season series. Vermont trails fourth-place Massachusetts Lowell by just one point for the final home ice spot in the Hockey East Quarterfinals, as the Catamounts play the River Hawks twice next weekend in Tsongas Arena at UMass Lowell.

Playoff Picture

With the regular season wrapping up this upcoming weekend, Hockey East has six teams battling for the final five seeds in the Conference Tournament. With two games remaining for each team and valuable points up for grabs, only three teams have secured their spot in the bracket.

New Hampshire, Boston College and Maine are among the top three seeds with a guaranteed berth, with BC and UNH clinching home ice in the quarterfinals. Six teams, UMass-Lowell, BU, Northeastern, UVM, Merrimack and UMass are separated by only three points. All but the Minutemen will be fighting for the third- and fourth-seeds to have home-ice in the quarterfinal round. Providence, while already out of the tournament, will be playing spoiler as they take on the Warriors for a weekend double-header.

The top eight of the 10 Hockey East Conference teams make the tournament, with the four highest seeded schools to host the lower berthed teams in quarterfinal action. If a tie-breaker is necessary due to the same amount of points, there are four different criteria to be considered in primary order: head-to-head record, number of wins in conference play, best record against the top-ranked teams, and if necessary, a coin flip. Quarterfinal action kicks off March 12.

Michael Counos can be reached at mcounos@student.umass.edu.

UMass celebrates a goal earlier this season. The Minutemen, who have dropped considerably in Hockey East standings, sit in ninth place and are in jeopardy of missing the tournament.

Most intriguing Olympic sports

The Daily Titan
(UCLA - Fullerton)
via College News Network

During this winter season, I have watched more Winter Olympics than ever before. It wasn't just because it was constantly running on several different channels either, but because I was amazed that some of these games don't require any athletic talent. Here are a few of the least-known games in the Winter Olympics, some of which give us all that feeling that we too can compete for international bragging rights.

Curling – Yeah I know, most people have at least heard of curling by now, but where else can you find a group of men and women with day jobs sliding a rock down a flat sheet of ice in a shuffleboard/dart-throwing hybrid? It's a fact that three of the four players for the men's U.S. team have been living in the same apartment for the past year. How's that for getting to know your teammates?

Or if that doesn't seem too out of the norm for you, how about a pregnant woman curling? Canada's Kristie Moore is over five and a half months pregnant and, in my opinion, shouldn't be walking on thin ice and vigorously sweeping the surface.

Olympic sports should have an athletic aspect to them, one with shock value, much like NASCAR. Come on, you know nobody enjoys watching cars driving around in circles. People want to see crashes.

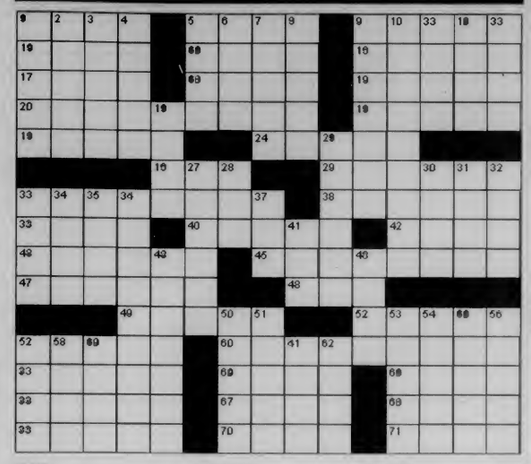
Luge – Another sport I find fascinating. Microsoft Word must think so too because it doesn't even recognize the word. It's a sport that only the brave, or the completely insane, would even attempt. No Americans walked away with any medals in the event this year, which is surprising because I would think the poor American diet would only contribute to heavier athletes, which would only help in this event. By the looks of it, you don't need to be too physically fit. However, the extra layer of fat might help if you were to crash.

Noelle Pikus-Pace of the United States completes her final run in the women's skeleton competition at the Whistler Sliding Centre in Whistler, British Columbia, during the 2010 Olympic Games/ Photo Courtesy MCT.

Skeleton – The opposite of luge. The only visual difference is that you do this on your stomach. It's basically tobogganing, so sorry Kristie Moore, this may not be a good sport for you right now. First of all, who in their right mind would compete in an event called "skeleton" and slide down frozen tubes on top of a modified shopping cart, going head-first into a pile of foam padding? I guess I would if I was guaranteed to make it to the foam. But it must be nice to compete in the Olympics while sitting down. I don't see where being physically fit is a requirement here too. But being so similar to luge, wouldn't it be funny if America didn't walk away with any medals in this event too? That's right, they didn't.

Biathlon – My favorite event that I was recently introduced to this year. It's a mixture of cross-country skiing and good, old-fashioned rifle shooting. The only thing to make this even better, besides the skiing uphill and downhill in tights with a rifle strapped to your back, would be if the skiers didn't stay stationary to take aim and fire. I would much rather see the skiers still skiing on a downhill slope, almost like a drive-by. Then maybe one day, America might have a chance at this incredible event. France walked away this year with six medals.

The games should be made for athletes who are willing to be injured. That way, when they come back to the sport, they can have an amazing come-back story waiting for them. But no one gets injured in a game like curling, right? That would be just too embarrassing. Well only in America has that happened.



U.S. team captain John Shuster now has a finger that gets locked because he once swept with a broom that was 1/8 of an inch too thin. So from clenching too hard, he sometimes wakes up with a stuck finger, according to nbcolympics.com. True athletes don't admit to such bogus "injuries." Especially when you're acting as the team "skip" by throwing the "pancake" down the ice. The minimal hand injuries paired with the cutesy nicknames will only justify that curling should be kept as a hobby.

WANNA HOOK-UP?
FREE High Speed Internet and Expanded Cable
1, 2, 3 and 4 bedroom apartment homes
RESERVE YOUR APARTMENT TODAY!!!
SUGARLOAF ESTATES APARTMENT HOMES
ASPEN CHASE & ALPINE COMMONS
28 River Road Sunderland
866-301-1445
www.sugarloafestates.com
133 Belchertown Road Rt 9 Amherst
866-301-1445
www.aspenchaseapartments.com
www.alpinecommons.com
Heat, Water, Hot Water, Cable, Internet
Electricity in Select Units
On the Bus Route · Sat Water Swimming Pools · Fitness Center Pool Tables
FLEXIBLE LEASE TERMS
$$ MENTION THIS AD AND SAVE ON YOUR MOVE IN COSTS $$

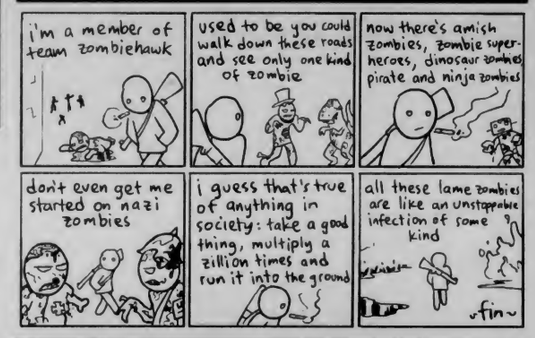
Renting 101:
How to Rent Your First Apartment
Getting ready to rent an apartment off campus?
* Learn how to "get it right" this important first time.
* Learn how to make good decisions as you take the "next step" in your college life.
* Learn the mistakes you want to avoid making.
* Know your responsibilities. Know your rights!
Come to a crash course in renting!
Tuesday evening, March 2, 2010
7:00 to 8:00pm
Worcester Dining Hall, Overflow Dining Room
RENTING 101
* DOOR PRIZES
* HELPFUL CHECKLISTS
* EXPERT ADVICE FROM STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE SENIOR STAFF ATTORNEY BERNADETTE STARK
Come to a crash course in renting!
www.umoch.org
UMassAmherst
Presented by: Student Legal Services Offices in collaboration with Off Campus Housing Referrals and the Housing Assignment Office

COMICS

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Swindle
5. Carries
9. Amounts of medicine
14. Anagram of "Rail"
15. Look lasciviously
16. Era
17. Keen or zealous
18. Winged
19. Used in flavoring food
20. Repudiate
22. Bottomed
23. Oleoresin
24. S S S S
26. South southeast
29. Infractions
33. Hackers
38. Capital of Canada
39. Subtle emanation
40. Sing
42. Biblical garden
43. Author
45. Chests of drawers
47. Goddess of the moon (Greek mythology)
48. East southeast
49. Release (2 words)
52. Roof overhang
57. Anagram of "Lamps"
60. Indispensable
63. Half-diameters
64. Short sleeps
65. Be defeated
66. Angry
67. Breastplate
68. To the windward side
69. Actors who communicate entirely by gestures
70. Minor Western Samoan monetary unit
71. Anagram of "Pals"

DOWN
1. Anagram of "Deals"
2. Sufficient politeness
3. Get up
4. A woman of refinement
5. A unit of bread
6. Hybrid fruit
7. Look with a fixed gaze
8. Appears
9. After dinner sweet
10. Antonyms
11. Humus and dirt
12. Latin for "Behold!"
13. Small storage building 21. They swim in the ocean
25. Small biscuits
27. Something hidden
28. Go astray
30. Created or built
31. Pitcher
32. French for "Without"
33. Wood-cutting tools
34. Entice
35. Anagram of "Lair"
36. Circles the Earth
37. Mat of grass and soil
41. Mineral-bearing rock 44. Foes
46. Observed
50. Parts of a chromosome
51. A tributary of the Missouri River
53. One of the Titans (Greek mythology)
54. A stringed instrument
55. Artist's workstand
56. Slumber
57. Dainty or priggish
58. Indian dress
59. Biblical first man
61. Rotate
62. Nature of being



SUDOKU

7		8	2			4
			7
6		4			9
			3	9		6
4		5
		6		1
8					6	2
				3	4
					7

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

PUFFTON VILLAGE
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry,
off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Lady Gaga is incapable of decrypting your gambling visage.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
The world is imperfect. This is also why the gumball eyes on Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles ice cream bars are so misplaced.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Put your left foot in. Put your left foot out. Put your left foot in and never touch it again.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Were you born in Canada? No? Then put the stick down and get off the ice while us Canadians get our ceremony on!

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
There once was a man from Nantucket. He has got some big plans for you. Call the police.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Believe in me and I'll believe in you, tonight. Not tomorrow or the day before, just tonight. Take it or leave it.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Remember that episode of House where he saved that person on a hunch while his job was on the line? Be that repetitive.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Axel Foley puts bananas in your tailpipe. Good luck solving the crime now.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Bake a cake with a file in it for your prison pen-pal. Tell him to eat around the file.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
You know that popcorn trick you pull at the movie theater? Stop it. That's illegal

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
You'll find that your spirit animal is a muppet. Then you'll find that your vision quest is just Sesame Street.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Pretty soon you'll be milking your virtual cows and goats for more than just fake money and an orange tabby cat.

BASIC INSTRUCTIONS How to Pose a Photo by Scott MEYER

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

MISCELLANEOUS

Looking for a business opportunity that alllows you to not only market services people use everyday, but the services of the future too? This opportunity provides outstanding earning potential with ongoing training and support. You are in business for yourself but never by yourself. Stop imagining and start living.

ACN Independent Representative William Carey 774-232-8604 wmc.7771@gmail.com httpL//4incomefromhome.acnrep.com

FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors, study in basement. Cable & Phone in all bedrooms & study. NOW SHOWING for June & September. NO FEES www. amherstlincolnrealty.com 413-253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug. or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

www.AmherstMARentals.com 413-549-1398

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends From $89 Complete. Montreal Express.Net MontrealBlowout.com 781-979-9001

TUTORING SERVICES

Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats, GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 Jbold42@yahoo.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTUESDAY

TUESDAY, MARCH 2, 2010 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutewomen can't get past 49ers

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Staff

The Charlotte 49ers apparently saved the best for last.

In what was the last game of the regular season for the Massachusetts women's basketball team, the 49ers had an almost flawless first half, and eased their way to an 85-51 victory over the Minutewomen Sunday afternoon.

The 49ers offense had a great performance in the early going, and was led by senior Aysha Jones. In the first half alone, Jones had 14 points, two steals, two assists and two rebounds. She was 4-of-4 from beyond the arc and stretched UMass' defense on the fast break, while finishing the game as the leading scorer with 18 points.

Charlotte also dominated possessions in the key, scoring 40 points in the paint, while UMass scored just 19 on the inside.

Ashley Spriggs was second in scoring for the 49ers with 14 points, four rebounds and six assists. Spriggs was 7-of-12 from the floor in the game and yielded little success to the UMass forwards.

Megan Zullo scored 11 points leading the Minutewomen, as she went 3-of-6 from the field. The red-shirt junior has been dealing with a case of plantar fasciitis – the irritation and swelling of the thick tissue on the bottom of the foot – in her right foot, but is now playing through the pain.

Zullo put the first points on the board for UMass with a 3-pointer with 15 minutes, 26 seconds left in the first half.

The UMass deficit was in double-digits for most of the game, and the Minutewomen were forced to play from behind.

Kristina Danella – UMass' leading scorer coming into the game – was again held under 10 points. This makes the fourth game in a row that Danella has been limited to a single-digit point total.

Freshman Jasmine Watson was second in scoring for the Minutewomen. The forward had eight points in the second half and finished the game with 10 points to go along with seven rebounds. Charlotte's Spriggs and Amanda Dowe hounded Watson inside on the boards, but the freshman finally broke through in the second half.

Although the 49ers scored 85 points on the Minutewomen defense, it was UMass' offense that initially caused the problems for the team. UMass turned the ball over 21 times in the game, while Charlotte had just eight turnovers. The surplus of turnovers by UMass gave Charlotte extra possessions – ultimately meaning extra attempts at the basket.

The 49ers also ran an effective fast break with the turnovers they forced. Shannon McCallum had five steals and seven assists, to add to her 11 points and five rebounds. The junior's six-foot frame was useful both on transition offense and defense. She also matched up against Danella, giving UMass coach Marnie Dacko match up problems.

Charlotte finished the regular season with an impressive 12-1 record at Halton Arena after Sunday's victory over UMass.

Coming into the game, UMass was fresh off of a 10-point upset over St. Joseph's at home, which brought a major morale boost going into the end of the regular season. However, for UMass, the reigning A-10 tournament-champion 49ers were too much for the Minutewomen to handle.

The Minutewomen take on No. 8 Richmond in the opening round of the A-10 tournament Friday at noon.

Neil Carroll can be reached at ncarroll@student.umass.edu

Senior guard Kim Benton scored five points in a 85-51 loss to Charlotte Sunday afternoon. The Minutewomen take on Richmond in the opening round of the A-10 tournament Friday.

Senior guard Ricky Harris looks to score against Xavier earlier this year, one of many games played on a Wednesday this season.

Popular non-conference slate will bring fans

By Adam Miller
Collegian Columnist

If you've been to a Massachusetts men's basketball game this season, you've probably noticed that the Mullins Center is a little more empty than usual.

Although based on the empty seats I've seen at most games, you probably don't know what I'm talking about. Last month, The Springfield Republican reported that hockey outdrew basketball at home games for the first time since the 2003-04 season.

At the time the article was printed, Feb. 14, The Republican reported hockey averaged 5,407 fans per home game, while basketball, which is usually the biggest sport at UMass, drew 3,322 fans. There are a variety of reasons for this year's disparity – controlled under the marketing department and coach Derek Kellogg, while others are just bad luck.

The first few games of the season are a good place to start. Hockey started the season by beating then-No. 2 Boston University on Friday, Oct. 16.

The basketball team nearly lost to Dowling, a Division II school, during the Minutemen's exhibition game, and then lost to Cornell in the home opener. The problem with playing the Big Red is that they're one of the 30 or 40 best teams in the country, but has no appeal because it's an Ivy League team.

It also didn't help that the game was on a Wednesday.

The Minutemen killed their next opponent, Arkansas-Fort Smith on a Saturday night, but that's not exactly going to make anyone living in Puffton want to go hop on a bus to watch the team.

At the end of the year, the basketball team will have played three Saturday night games and a Friday night game that was right before finals week. The hockey team's first game on a day other than Friday or Saturday was Sunday, Jan. 24 against Vermont, but it was ranked 17th in the nation at that time.

Kellogg doesn't have the fortune of playing in a big conference such as the Hockey East. Sure, the Atlantic 10 has been exciting to watch with Xavier, Temple and Richmond as the top three teams, but they aren't nearly as big of a deal as Syracuse or West Virginia in the Big East.

The luck of the A-10's scheduling allowed the Minutemen to play the Musketeers and Charlotte, which drew the biggest crowd all season, but Kellogg needs to focus more on getting a sold out crowd to Amherst before worrying about the rest of the state.

UMass played Memphis at the TD Garden in Boston before front of a crowd of over 8,000 people on ESPN2. That game was the biggest marketing success of the team this season. But even a win against the Tigers did little to propel attendance in Amherst.

If the basketball team hopes to raise its numbers for next year, it needs to put more of its games on Saturday nights. Winning more games would also help, but the marketing department can't do anything about what happens on the court, and the team is going to be in rebuilding mode for another year or two anyway.

However, playing an opponent most students recognize would be a huge step in the right direction.

Duke doesn't have to be on the schedule, but teams like Texas Tech, Notre Dame and Indiana would bring students to the Mullins Center because of their names, but these teams are not good enough to slaughter the Minutemen.

Fresno State is a great example of a team that manages to put fans in the seats despite having a losing team. The Bulldogs (13-21, 3-13 Western Athletic Conference) finished dead last in a mid-major conference during the 2008-09 season.

However, their average home attendance was 8,969 people. Granted, their stadium is twice the size of the Mullins Center, but Kellogg would be thrilled if his team could pull in an average of just 5,000.

One of the ways Fresno State brought people to the stadium was by bringing Big West powerhouse Pacific, Oregon State from the Pacific 10 and UNLV, who is a pretty popular team on the West Coast. The timing wasn't ideal, but the Bulldogs filled the 50 to 60 percent of the stadium almost every game.

UMass can do the same by giving a call to Rutgers or Providence instead of Quinnipiac.

Adam Miller is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

Xavier, Temple battle for top spot

By David Martin
Collegian Correspondent

As the men's basketball season draws to a close, it remains unclear where their teams will end up this postseason, as many seeds are still ripe for the taking.

Near the top of the Atlantic 10 conference, the first-place seed is separated by four games for seven teams, with the top four teams being separated by just two games. Temple (24-5, 12-2 A-10) is tied with Xavier (21-7, 12-2 A-10) for first place, with Richmond (22-7, 11-3 A-10) trailing by one game, and St. Louis (19-9, 10-4 A-10) by two.

For the number eight seed in the conference, four teams are within two games of each other. Duquesne (15-13, 6-8 A-10) is in the eighth seed, tied with George Washington (16-11, 6-8 A-10) and St. Bonaventure (13-14, 6-8 A-10). Massachusetts (10-18, 4-10 A-10) is behind them by only two games, and still has a chance of getting into the top eight.

With only two games left in the season, every win is important to the top 11 teams in the A-10. Each of these teams has a major opportunity to either gain or lose crucial ground in the postseason race, adding to the already huge drama of the playoff scene.

In their final two games, the Minutemen will face the Explorers on the road on tomorrow, and the Rams at home in the Mullins Center on Saturday.

Xavier gets past Spiders

In thrilling fashion, guard Terrell Holloway helped Xavier keep both its home winning streak and chances at taking the A-10 conference championship alive against Richmond in double-overtime on Monday afternoon.

The Musketeers (21-7, 12-2 A-10) were led by Holloway's 24 points and five rebounds on Monday, with seven of those points being scored in the second overtime period. Forward Jason Love and guard Jordan Crawford also had big games, with Love scoring 16 points and nine rebounds and Crawford scoring 19 points. Though only 10 points came from the Musketeer bench – all of which were scored by Mark Lyons – the team was still able to hang tough and outlast a Richmond team that gave them a run for their money.

The Spiders certainly did not disappoint, bringing everything they could muster to the table, and were led by guard David Gonzalvez. Gonzalvez finished with 18 points, nine rebounds, five steals and an assist, with guard Kevin Anderson and forward Justin Harper contributing 17 and 15 points, respectively.

Richmond, which at one point led by three, came into the game riding an eight-game winning streak against a Musketeer lineup that has won 31 straight home games, the first of which dates back to the tail end of the 2005-06 season. They had also stopped multiple Xavier surges, including ones at both the end of the second half and in the first overtime period, but could not hold up against the final push of Holloway in the second overtime. The Spiders are currently one game behind the Musketeers.

Temple Defeats Slumping Explorers

The Owls made a conference-shaking statement in their second-half domination over the Explorers on Monday afternoon.

The Owls revealed their offensive prowess in guard Juan Fernandez, who scored 23 points against the Explorer defense. The big star of the day for Temple, however, was forward Lavoy Allen, who had an impressive 21 rebounds to go with 17 points.

The Explorers, despite 21- and 17-point efforts by guard Rodney Green and forward Jerrell Williams, could not match the explosive second-half surge of the Temple offense. To make matters worse, a short-handed bench was only able to provide three points in the game.

Though the Owls were down by one point in the first half, they went on an 18-0 run at the start of the second half and outscored the Explorers 33-20 overall in the half. The game was a big boost for Temple, as they used it to send a message to the Musketeers, who are tied atop the A-10 standings. The Owls have two games left on the season, with the Billikens and the Colonials both looking to make some noise in the A-10 standings.

David Martin can be reached at dhmartin@student.umass.edu.

Guard Freddie Riley guards Dante' Jackson earlier in the season. Jackson and the rest of the Musketeers are tied with Temple for the top seed in the A-10.

Four-match win streak snapped

By Bee Lambert
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts tennis team fell to Boston College 7-0 on Saturday at the Bay Road Tennis Club in Amherst. The loss was the second of the season for UMass, breaking their four-match winning streak and bringing their record to 7-2, while the Eagles raised their record to 4-5.

With the victory, BC runs its all-time mark against UMass to 14-2. One of the oldest rivalries for the Minutewomen, the series between the two schools dates back to 1975. UMass has not beaten BC since the 2001-02 season.

UMass was battling injuries

See TENNIS on page 6

Cotto, Aguguo lead UMass in NEC's

By Michael Wood
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts track and field team looked impressive, as they completed the two-day New England Championship event in Boston on Saturday.

Serving as an opportunity to compete against the most elite individuals in the region, the New England Championship meet was expected to be a trial for all the men and women who entered. However, the competition did not deter either team, as both the men's and women's team finished in sixth place overall in a field of over 30 teams.

The Minutemen started the meet off on the right foot with performances by Zach Koncki and Tyler Cotto. Koncki took third place in the long jump by jumping to a distance of 23-01.25 meters. That mark was good enough for the fourth-best distance in UMass history, and also qualified Koncki for the IC4A Championship. Cotto once again dominated his signature event, the 55-meter hur-

See TRACK on page 6

Tyler Cotto beat his own record in the New England Championships Saturday in the 55-meter hurdles.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 37 LOW: 30 www.DailyCollegian.com WEDNESDAY, MARCH 3, 2010

Court postpones Vassell motion for dismissal

Northampton Superior Court judge delays motion for dismissal of charges against Vassell

By Caitlin Soto
Collegian Staff

A judge of the Superior Court of Hampshire County has postponed a motion on Tues. March 2 to dismiss the case against former University of Massachusetts student Jason Vassell until March 26.

The motion was proposed in late 2008 by Vassell's defense team, and seeks to dismiss the charges against Vassell based on claims of selective racial prosecution.

The pre-trial hearing for Vassell was to be presented at the court house in Northampton on Tuesday, but it was rescheduled at the request of the prosecutor for the case against Vassell, Assistant District Attorney Elizabeth Farris.

The postponement was requested on the basis of the prosecution, stating its need to review files related to the case against Vassell.

Regarding the motion to dismiss, the pre-trial hearing was held in order to discuss the defendant's plea to discharge the indictment against Vassell.

On Feb. 3, 2008, Jason Vassell was involved in a struggle with two caucasian males, who were not UMass students.

The males involved in the aggravated assault against Vassell, were identified as Jonathan Bosse and John Bowes.

Currently, Bosse has faced no charges. Bowes was charged with civil rights violation, but was later acquitted on March 13, 2009.

He was sentenced with one year probation and a $200 fine. As for Vassell, he could be facing a maximum of thirty years in prison for two counts of aggravated assault and battery with a dangerous weapon.

This pre-trial hearing was the first in six months. It has been two years since the assault, and no verdict regarding Vassell has been decided upon by the courts.

"It's terrible how they have railroaded him these past two years.

Especially when the others involved received a slap on the wrist," stated a Justice for Jason supporter, who chose to remain anonymous.

"What happened to the sixth amendment of the Constitution?" asked UMass student Joseph Muccio.

"The constitution states that everyone deserves a speedy and just trial. I don't see that happening here."

In the brief, which supports the motion to dismiss the charges against Vassell, the defendant accuses the district attorney of engaging in selective prosecution on the basis of race.

This trial has opened a series of debates regarding the question of civil rights in the Pioneer Valley. On Feb. 3, supporters outside the Northampton Courthouse held signs supporting Vassell.

One sign suggested that institutional racism was alive and well in the Pioneer Valley.

Caitlin Soto can be reached at csoto@student.umass.edu.

30 Justice for Jason supporters marched on the District Attorney's office in Northampton Wednesday Feb. 3 in protest of what they have deemed an unfair prosecution.

UM quiet on sexual assault case

By Matt Rocheleau, Alyssa Creamer and Hannah McGoldrick
Collegian Staff

The assistant dean who reportedly handed down the wrong sanction to a student that allegedly confessed to rape said yesterday she wanted to speak to the press, but is being prevented from doing so by administrators. And, repeated requests for further information regarding how the case was mishandled have been thwarted thus far by multiple campus officials.

A University of Massachusetts student confessed to raping a friend and former student in the fall and was mistakenly given a deferred suspension, according an article by the New England Center for Investigative Reporting (NECIR) at Boston University published late last week. University officials allowed him to stay on campus, a move that now has administrators reexamining UMass' sanctioning policies and procedures, as reported in Friday's Collegian.

Assistant Dean of Students Christina Willenbrock, according to NECIR, handled the case, did not properly report it to her superior and decided on the sanction – which notifies students that a subsequent violation of the University's conduct code will result in suspension – ultimately given to the accused student.

Willenbrock reluctantly declined to comment to Collegian reporters who visited her South Hadley home yesterday.

"The University won't let me speak about it," she said. "I would love to tell you all my opinions and thoughts on the matter, but I really can't."

Blaguszewski confirmed that Willenbrock has had discussions with the dean of students' office, but declined to comment on Willenbrock's allegation that the University is preventing her from discussing the incident because he said he is "not familiar with the details of that."

The University has repeatedly refused to confirm NECIR's reports that the case was handled by Willenbrock, and has also declined to disclose any disciplinary action that might have or could be taken against administrators who mishandled the case. UMass is not legally required to withhold that information, but rather it is UMass' choice to do so and is consistent with how UMass handles what it considers personnel matters, campus spokesman Edward Blaguszewski said.

The Dean of Students office has also been silent on the issue. Assistant Dean of Students Shawn McGuirk said Thursday questions regarding the matter will not be handled by the Dean of Students office and referred questions to interim Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life Jean Kim.

However, Collegian reporters and several Student Government Association (SGA) officials have been invited to meet tomorrow evening "to discuss the sexual assault that has recently been reported in the media."

Both Kim and Vann "will be available to answer questions and to address any concerns you may have on this issue," said yesterday's e-mailed invitation, but University officials with knowledge of the meeting could not be reached last night to say whether any presently unreleased information will be discussed and whether or not the meeting will be public.

The deferred suspension sanction did not follow the proper procedure to necessitate a final review and decision by Dean of Students Jo-Anne T. Vann, said Kim.

Kim said last week there was no one individual to blame for what she said was too lenient of a punishment and a regrettable situation. She said the blame instead goes to how the administrative process was set up.

"Personally, I do not believe the sanction matched the misconduct," Kim said.

"I can't explain why it happened. I don't know," added Kim Thursday of the failure to have the case follow proper protocol. "We take the situation of sexual assault and the safety of all of students very seriously."

However, the University cannot change or add to the sanctions already handed down through the student judicial system because, as Kim explained last week, there is no appeal process allowed to any person other than the accused.

The Collegian in an interview with Kim Thursday was told and reported that the school could not release the names of the two students involved because they were legally prohibited under the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA).

However, with assistance from the NECIR the Collegian has found, and the University subsequently confirmed, that the federal privacy law does not apply in this case. UMass is instead choosing to not release the names case "due to privacy considerations," Blaguszewski said Tuesday.

"We are confirming, as allowed by FERPA, that a UMass Amherst student was found responsible for sexual assault and received a deferred suspension. The victim was a UMass alumna, and the incident occurred during Homecoming Weekend," said an e-mail press release sent to media members last week.

Kim also confirmed that the accused student is currently enrolled, living on campus and expected to graduate in May. She added that the victim initially went to UMPD first, but later decided against pursuing criminal charges.

FERPA does, however, prohibit the University from confirming NECIR's reports that the act allegedly committed was a felony rape, that it happened in North Apartments Building C on Oct. 16, 2009 and that the victim reported the incident in November, according to Blaguszewski, who said he consulted with UMass's lawyer on the matter.

The only information the University is allowed to release or confirm under FERPA is the accused suspect's name, the sanction given to the student found responsible and the name of the violation the student was found responsible for under UMass' Code of Student Conduct (CSC) – which is only specified in the CSC as sexual assault, said Blaguszewski. There is no violation in the CSC that specifies what form of sexual assault a student is accused of or found responsible for.

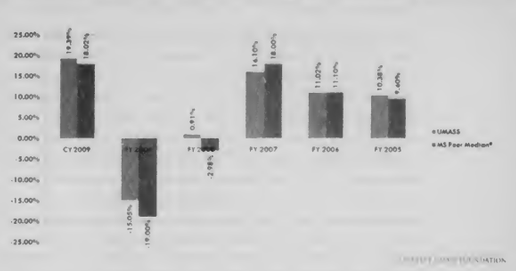
According to a 1998 FERPA amendment, colleges and universities are not prevented from speaking about disciplinary matters if those matters involve a violent offense – such as sexual assault – and if the accused student is found to be in violation of the school's conduct code – as University officials said happened in this case.

The amendment, 20 U.S.C. 1232g (6)(B), states, "Nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit an institution of postsecondary education from disclosing the final results of any disciplinary proceeding conducted by such institution against a student who is an alleged perpetrator of any crime of violence (as that term is defined in section 16 of title 18, United States Code), or a nonforcible sex offense, if the institution determines as a result of that disciplinary proceeding that the student committed a violation of the institution's rules or policies with respect to such crime or offense."

"In short, FERPA does not require the University to release the name, charge, or sanction connected to a student disciplinary case," said Blaguszewski in an e-mail yesterday.

The University has since tried to clarify misconceptions among its own leaders about why the University is not explaining the incident further.

In an e-mail titled "Daily Collegian Sexual Assault Articles" sent to Housing and Residence Life staff Friday by Associate Director for Residence Life Laura Giles said, "The law requires that details of the proceedings be confidential."



Blaguszewski confirmed last night that this statement – which "was the longstanding guidance and practice [UMass] was given" – is no longer true under FERPA and that campus officials have since been briefed on the law's 1998 amendment.

"There was no intent to misguide anyone," Blaguszewski said yesterday.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrocheleau@dailycollegian.com. Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu. Hannah McGoldrick can be reached at hmcgoldrick@student.umass.edu.

UMass distributes donations, aids school with Current Fund

Performance vs. Peers 2005-2009

The Development Office received endowments for the University from an excess of 30,000 donors in the 2009 fiscal year, including those made by UMass alumni and private foundations.

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the third installment in a series about the University of Massachusetts' finances and changes to the University's endowment and assets since the start of America's recession. In this series, the Collegian will investigate where UMass' funds come from, how they are managed and how they are then invested into the five campuses of the University system.

Most donations to the University of Massachusetts go immediately into the school's Current Fund.

The Current Fund is the pool of gifts to the University available for use in the current fiscal year.

Donations are coordinated by the University's Development Office, which works hands-on with potential donors to establish gifts to aid a variety of the school's needs.

Gifts to the Current Fund are immediately deposited into the account of the department for which they are specified, with fundraising officers working with friends of the University in each department and school.

While a majority of the income the Current Fund receives comes from foundations and corporations with interest in the departments to which they donate, the University has had gifts bestowed upon it by some 30,000 individual donors during the last fiscal year, according to Vice Chancellor for Development and Alumni Relations Mike Leto.

"In the second half of FY2009 there were about 16,000 donors," said Leto, "that would mean there would be in excess of 30,000 donors, including alumni, friends of the University, corporations and other sources."

In terms of the distribution of gifts to the University, Leto called the blend "a big mix."

The most funding "is probably on the foundation side," he said, furthering that "private foundations and corporations are the biggest donors."

The average gift among those 30,000 donors as of Dec. 31, Leto said, was around $455.

Leto said the Development Office attempts to attract potential donors by describing their needs, often seeking alumni and others who have benefited from a particular department.

"Often times it's us reaching out to donors and identifying a particular need to them and convincing them why we have that need and how they can help," he said.

While Leto said that donations were down last year, he added that as of the end of Jan., gifts to UMass were up 23 percent from the same time last year.

He attributed this increase to several factors.

"I see that people think greater private investment in the University is needed," he said. "Students have increasing need, some of that increase is for student scholarship support, and people are also feeling a little less apprehensive about their own finances."

He added that he believes the Development Office is "being more effective in making the case of supporting public higher education's importance."

While donations are up this year, Leto said the school could still improve showcasing the need for superior public higher education in Massachusetts.

"I think we need to do a better job in really demonstrating the value of public higher education in the state," he said. "If you look at the number of citizens that are educated in our public institutions,

See ENDOWMENT on page 2

ARTS & LIVING

'Spring Awakening' opens eyes

The UMass theater department is showing its own rendition of "Spring Awakening" through March 6.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Minutewomen host Wildcats

After losing its last two games against Harvard and Boston University, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will look for a victory against UNH at McGuirk Stadium this afternoon.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Columnist Lauren Vincent believes many men perpetuate stereotypes about female subservience by dismissing sexism as a "joke."

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Check out the Collegian's site for an exclusive slideshow of last weekend's performance of "Spring Awakening."

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 28

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Johnson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Cal Scannell
COMICS EDITOR Andrew Witts
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jarvinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elwe Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ellie Rulon-Miller
ASSISTANT COMICS Domonic Mei
ASSITANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSITANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSITANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Aser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cody
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nick Bush

COPY EDITOR
Hannah McGoldrick

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Guarino

Crime Log: Feb. 19 – March 1

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

The week of Feb. through proved a busy one for the University of Massachusetts Police Department who had made several drug and alcohol related arrests involving students of the University.

FRIDAY FEB. 19

David Clark of Providence, RI was arrested at 4:20 p.m. for drug law offenses. An officer of the University of Massachusetts Police Department (UMPD) was stationed in Lot 12 on the University campus Friday night had suspected Clark of selling drugs. Dressed in casual street clothes and using marked bills, the officer bought $60 worth of marijuana. Clark was arrested on charges of distribution of a Class D drug, possession to distribute a Class D drug and possession of a Class D drug.

Jason J. Pearson of Jamestown, VT, Joseph Citera of Londonderry, VT, William Shupp of Moosic, PA, and David Anthony Corigliano of North Syracuse, NY were arrested at 4:34 p.m. for drug law offenses. A UMPD officer wearing casual street clothes suspected a group of men in Lot 25 of selling drugs. Using marked bills, the officer bought an unspecified amount of marijuana. All were found to have marijuana on themselves, and Corigliano was found to have cocaine, as well as hashish. Pearson, Citera and Shupp were arrested on the charges of distribution of a Class D drug, possession to distribute a Class D drug and possession of a Class D drug. Corigliano was arrested on the charges of distribution of a Class B drug, possession to distribute a Class B drug and possession of a Class B drug, as well as distribution of a Class D drug, possession to distribute a Class D drug and possession of a Class D drug.

William Burton Lewis of East Amherst, NY was arrested 4:54 p.m. for drug law offenses. A UMPD officer on foot patrol witnessed Lewis holding a bag of white powder inside of a car and place it in between the seat cushions. The powder was identified as cocaine, and Lewis was arrested. In adherence to the UMPD policy, the officer did an inventory of the vehicle prior to it being towed and found a plastic container containing psilocybin mushrooms and six tablets of LSD. Lewis was arrested on charges of two counts of possession to distribute a Class B drug, two counts of possession of a Class B drug and possession of a Class C drug.

Sean N. Donovan of New York, NY was arrested at 6:17 p.m. for drug law offenses. A UMPD officer witnessed Donovan take a hit of nitrous oxide in Lot 25. Donovan was arrested on the charge of inhaling a glue/toxic substance.

Bryan-Michael Allen Parks of Middlebury, VT was arrested at 8:39 p.m. due to a traffic stop. Stopped on Commonwealth Ave., Parks was found to have an outstanding warrant in his name, and was arrested.

Adjatay Yondo Nyadjroh of Somerville, Mass. was arrested at 8:55 p.m. as the result of a traffic stop. Nyadjroh was stopped on Massachusetts Ave. for not having an inspection sticker on his vehicle. Nyadjroh was arrested on the charges of unlicensed operation of a motor vehicle, unsafe operation of a motor vehicle, and failure to have the motor vehicle inspected.

Carl Louis Sepheus of Springfield, Mass. and Thomas J. Kyles of Springfield, Mass. were arrested 11:00 p.m. due to a traffic stop. Sepheus was found to have an outstanding warrant in his name and arrested. Kyles was found to have an unspecified drug on him and was charged with possession of a Class B drug.

SATURDAY FEB. 20

Christopher James Gareis of Charlotte, VT was arrested at 1:12 a.m. as the result of a traffic stop. A UMPD officer on patrol viewed a vehicle traveling west on Massachusetts Ave. with no tail lights on. A search of the police database showed that Gareis' license was suspended. When asked, Gareis admitted to having marijuana in the vehicle. Prior to being towed the officer took an inventory of the contents of the vehicle. The officer found psilocybin mushrooms in the car. When being booked at the UMPD station Gareis was found to have two bags of LSD hidden in his sock and a large amount of cocaine. Gareis was arrested on the charges of possession to distribute a Class B drug, possession of a Class B drug, possession to distribute a Class C drug, possession of a Class C drug, unlicensed operation of a motor vehicle and a motor vehicle lights violation.

Matthew A. Calivas of Medfield, Mass., William Hunter Martin of Nantucket, Mass., and Jacob Forrest Visco of Nantucket, Mass. were arrested at 1:59 a.m. as the result of a physical altercation. Two police officers viewed 15 people watching a verbal altercation between two of the arrested men on Sunset Ave. The officers hurried to the scene when one male pushed another causing them to fall off an eight foot cliff where they continued to fight. The other male involved jumped down to join in the fight. Calivas, Martin and Visco were charged with disorderly conduct. A UMPD sustained an injury as a result of the incident.

Janet Monica Baker of Leverett, Mass. was arrested at 7:09 p.m. as the result of a traffic stop. A UMPD officer noticed a red Chevy did not have its lights on and signaled for the vehicle to pull over in Lot 32. The vehicle also did not have a valid inspection sticker. Baker was arrested for unlicensed operation of a motor vehicle, failure to have the motor vehicle inspected and a vehicle lights violation.

Ian R. Babson of Duxbury, Mass. was arrested at 8:35 p.m. as the result of a traffic stop. A UMPD officer noticed a white Ford did not have a valid inspection sticker on North Pleasant St. Babson appeared under the influence of a substance and was asked to perform field sobriety tests, of which he failed. During the inventory of the vehicle, the officer saw an open container of alcohol. Babson was arrested on charges of a liquor OUI, possession of an open container of alcohol in a motor vehicle and failure to have the motor vehicle inspected.

SUNDAY FEB. 21

Katelyn Mary Martinson of Reading, Mass. was arrested at 6:27 p.m. as the result of a traffic stop. In Lot 22 an officer noticed a white Ford without its lights on. A search of the police database revealed that Martinson's license was suspended. Martinson was arrested on the charges of operation of a motor vehicle with a suspended license, and a vehicle lights violation.

TUESDAY FEB. 23

Tyler Peter O'Neil was arrested at 10:22 a.m. due to a disturbance call. The roommate of O'Neil called the UMPD and said that O'Neil had punched him during a physical altercation they had in their dormitory room in Webster Hall. O'Neil was arrested on the charge of domestic assault and battery.

THURSDAY FEB. 25

Katelyn Mary Martinson of Reading, Mass. was arrested at 1:55 p.m. as the result of an outstanding warrant for her arrest. Martinson was placed under arrest in McNamara Hall dormitory.

FRIDAY FEB. 26

Nicholas Rizzo of Bloomfield, NJ was arrested at 9:47 p.m. as the result of a liquor law violation. In Lot 33 Rizzo was pulled over in a green Jeep of which the authorities discovered to contain alcohol. Rizzo was arrested on the charge of possession of alcohol under the age of 21.

SATURDAY FEB. 27

Matthew Chau of Winchester, Mass. was arrested at 1:41 a.m. as the result of a disturbance call. The UMPD were called as the result of a loud disturbance in Kennedy Hall dormitory. When the arresting officer attempted to restrain Chau, he allegedly resisted. Chau was arrested on the charges of disorderly conduct, disturbing the peace and resisting a police officer making a lawful arrest.

Oscar Orengo Jr. of Teaneck, NJ was arrested at 5:07 a.m as the result of a disturbance call. Called to North Apartment Building A, the UMPD found an apartment holding 40 people to be the cause of the noise complaint. While clearing the apartment, numerous fights allegedly broke out involving Orengo. He was arrested on the charges of disorderly conduct and disturbing the peace.

- Collegian News Staff

Development Office hopes to raise awareness with alumni

ENDOWMENT from page 1

you'll see how important public higher education is."

To keep levels escalating, Leto said the Development Office must keep in touch with the University's graduates and the Commonwealth's citizens.

"We need to stay engaged with our alum, we need to let our citizens know the valuable contributions we're making, we need to let them know how we're excelling," he said.

Tom Navin, Director of Annual Giving Programs, said that while last year was a rough one for fundraising, the Development Office is striving to increase awareness and enthusiasm among the University's alumni base to give back.

"Obviously when the economy is troubled, it's a lot more difficult to raise donations," he said.

"We're doing everything we can to reach out more to alumni and show them not only what kind of impact they can have by investing back in their alma mater but making sure they can provide the type of opportunities they were able to have," he said.

Navin said he feels that often alumni have a misconception that state schools do not need private backing.

"We're often combating the impression that the state takes care of everything," he said.

Janet Muzzy, the Director of Stewardship at the Development Office, coordinates establishing scholarships.

"If a fundraiser [in a department] already has a donation with a donor, and that donor wants to create a scholarship, that conversation happens here," she said.

Muzzy said the benefit of gifts to the Current Fund is that "it is immediate," adding that she believes the school's benefactors "are very sensitive to what students are going through in terms of a low yield on the endowment, and a lot of people have stepped up to come up with new current funds or supplemental funds to make up for what was lost in the endowment."

Muzzy detailed one particular way donors have compensated for what was lost in the recession.

"Say a scholarship is for $1000," she posited. "the payout for this fiscal year was much lower, and many of them [donors] supplemented it to bring it back to what the fund had been able to give out."

Investments of more than $27,500 become endowments and are handled by the University of Massachusetts Foundation in Boston. The Development Office at UMass still works with donors to solicit these gifts, but once a gift agreement is made, the funds are turned over to the Foundation, which invests the endowment in the stock market. From there, the endowment's proceeds are returned to the area of the University for which they are specified on an annual basis at an agreed upon spending rate, typically between four and six percent.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at shutterfield@dailycollegian.com.

COURTESY PHOTO

According to Vice Chancellor for Development and Alumni Relations Mike Leto, UMass saw an increase of 23 percent in donations from the same time last year.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
Ads for 6.70
inch
On-Ca
Local
Ads for
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

UMass is a
BIG
campus,
and we need your help covering it.
Know of something that's happening?
Want to see an event get news coverage?
Let us know!
Go online and head to
DailyCollegian.com
and click "Submit a Tip."

Community Clips: March 2–8

LECTURE: "MUSIC AND CENSORSHIP IN AFGHANISTAN, 1973-2003"

A lecture that precedes the 17th annual Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival screening of Afghan Star.

Wed. Mar. 3, 4:00 p.m. South College 108

RENAISSANCE WEDNESDAY: INCUNABLES

A discussion and examples of books from the infancy of printing.

Wed. Mar. 3, 4:00 p.m. Renaissance Center Reading Room

INTRO TO GRANT WRITING FOR GRAD STUDENTS II: FOCUS ON PROPOSAL WRITING

A seminar on the elements of a competitive proposal essay for graduate students who will be applying for external (non-UMass) funding for their research.

Wed. Mar. 3, 5:00 p.m. Campus Center 168C

STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION EVENT: COVERING YOUR ASSETS

Learn the steps you need to take to make sure the insurance you have is covering what it needs to. Find out more about auto, home and renters insurance.

Wed. Mar. 3, 5:30 p.m. Memorial Hall

MASSACHUSETTS MULTICULTURAL FILM FESTIVAL: AFGHAN STAR

A film screening as part of the 17th annual Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival: "Cinematic Cities."

Wed. Mar. 3, 7:30 p.m. Isenberg School of Management 137

WORKSHOP: PASW STATISTICS (SPSS) SOFTWARE

An introduction to PASW statistics software.

Thu. Mar. 4, 1:30 p.m. Lederle A210

UMASS AMHERST ALUMNI EVENT: NETWORK YOUR WAY TO SUCCESS

Learn how to search the web to learn what the career landscape looks like, how to maximize Internet searches to find actual jobs and internships, and more.

Thu. Mar. 4, 5:30 p.m. Isenberg School of Management 119

UPC PRESENTS: UMASS' LAST COMIC STANDING

Come and enjoy a night of great entertainment and lots of laughs with comedy host Hasan Minhaj.

Thu. Mar. 4, 7:30 p.m. Student Union Ballroom

VISITING WRITERS SERIES PRESENTS RAE ARMANTROUT

A poetry reading by Rae Armantrout, professor of writing in the literature department at the University of California at San Diego.

Thu. Mar. 4, 8:00 p.m. Memorial Hall

LECTURE: "SMART GRID DEVELOPMENT"

Richard Brooks, Principal System Architect at ISO-New England, delivers this lecture as part of the Spring 2010 Operations Research/ Management Science Seminar series.

Fri. Mar 5, 11:00 a.m. Isenberg School of Management 112

REFWORKS WORKSHOPS

Learn to use RefWorks, a program that manages citations and creates quick bibliographies.

Fri. Mar. 5, 1:00 p.m. Integrated Sciences Building 3rd floor

LECTURE: CIVIL AND ENVIRONMENTAL ENGINEERING HISTORY AND HERITAGE

This year's History and Heritage Lecture, given by Michael J. McGuire, is titled "Conquering Waterborne Disease: How a Physician and an Engineer Revolutionized Public Health Protection."

Fri. Mar. 5, 2:00 p.m. Engineering Lab II Auditorium

GAMELAN GALAK TIKA AND ENSEMBLE ROBOT IN CONCERT

Experience Galak Tika, America's most innovative Balinese gamelan, performing traditional and contemporary music and dance for Balinese gamelan, electric guitars, electronics, and more.

Fri. Mar. 5, 8:00 p.m. Bowker Auditorium

PANEL DISCUSSION: MONDRAGON IN THE U.S.

UMass graduate and current organizer for the United Steelworkers discusses the USW's recent monumental agreement with the Mondragón International, the largest network of worker-owned cooperatives in the world and a model for green economic initiatives.

Sat. Mar. 6, 6:00 p.m. Holyoke Community College

FIRST SUNDAY CONCERT SERIES: 16TH CENTURY MUSIC FOR TURKISH OUD AND ITALIAN LUTE

Featuring Kevin Germian on oud and Christopher Stetson on lute.

Sun. Mar 7, 2:00 p.m. Renaissance Center Reading Room

SPRING AWAKENING: A SIN OF OMISSION

A devastating yet magical play that follows a group of school-children on their search for the truth about love, sex, and the meaning of their lives.

Sat. Mar. 6, 2:00 p.m. Curtain Theater

ALVIANI MASTERCLASS IN VOICE

Featuring guest artist and tenor Raúl Melo of the Metropolitan Opera.

Sun. Mar 7, 4:00 p.m. Bezanson Recital Hall.

DINE & WIN!
ENTER TO WIN A TRIP FOR TWO WITH $500 SPENDING MONEY
UMass Dining and Coca-Cola want to fly you and a guest to any destination during Spring Break in North America including 48 states and Canada!
Enter between Monday, February 15 and Thursday, March 4, 2010 at any UMass Dining Commons or retail location.
Drawing will be held Friday, March 5 at 6 pm in Berkshire Dining Commons!
*OFFICIAL RULES
No purchase necessary
Must be 18 years old or older
Open to UMass Dining customers
FOR MORE DETAILS:
Visit umassdining.com
Or see entry boxes
YOUR CAMPUS MEAL PLAN
THE BEST VALUE ON CAMPUS RESIDENTIAL MEAL PLAN
RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS Ivy Awards

Off The Wall Games
$12 Thursday Night Draft!
Look for us at ConBust at Smith College
March 26-28!
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
WARHAMMER
MAGIC Dungeons & Dragons

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 3, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
-Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Women are not just for sandwiches

Lauren Vincent

Recently, a male Facebook friend of mine became a fan of a Facebook page called "I'm the boy. You're the girl. Make me a sandwich, or we don't talk today."

The first thing that came to my mind when it came up on my News Feed was, gee, how original, a sandwich joke. Then, I became furious. When I typed in "make me a sandwich" in the search box, I was disgusted by how many results I got. One of them is even titled "backhand MAKE ME A SANDWICH." Furthermore, a good majority of the fans of it are girls and women.

What is wrong with our society when females are actually proclaiming themselves as "fans" of domestic abuse and taking on subservient roles to men?

Well, when I drew this to the attention of a few female friends, some agreed with me. But one of them actually said "Oh, lighten up. It's just a joke."

Really?

First of all, even if it was "just" a joke, all jokes are rooted in fundamental truths about society. That's why they're supposed to be "funny."

Secondly, last time I checked, women are not treated the same as men in this society, as much as people would like you to believe that they are treated equally.

Women are still paid less than men in almost all occupations. The only jobs that women earn more than men are – drum roll – modeling and prostitution.

Women are still paid less than men in almost all occupations. The only jobs that women earn more than men are - drum roll - modeling and prostitution.

The other night I went to see "The Vagina Monologues" here at the University of Massachusetts. What I saw was a display of women proclaiming themselves as independent and free, and proclaiming it loudly. It was awesome, and it showed just how powerful women can be when they stand up for their rights.

But how is it that there are still so many men out there that think that making jokes about women waiting on them and getting hit as a thank you are funny?

At my high school, sexist jokes were made all the time. Teachers sometimes even laughed at them. This is something that astounds me when I think about it now.

And if an intelligent girl responded, the joker would respond with a witless "Why are you even here, shouldn't you be in the kitchen?" Or just another request for a sandwich.

The same dynamic is going on in these Facebook groups. When a female responds in the group, guess what? She gets the same dumb responses such as: "You have a computer in your kitchen?" Wow, so clever, guys.

And when one girl dared to make a similar, reversed joke in response, the guys in the group started insulting her, and not about her intelligence, not about her personality, but they insulted her on her appearance. Because that's the most important thing about a woman.

Forgot that. Next, she was called a lesbian. Because only lesbians stand up for their rights as human beings. I forgot about that one, too.

Feminist backlash has been going on for far too long.

And it seems like too many women have taken it to heart. While I identify myself as a feminist, a majority of the girls I know don't. They believe women should be equal, that we should have the same opportunities as men and be paid as much as them for the same work. But they won't call themselves feminists. Why? Because feminists don't shave their armpits, feminists are lesbians, feminists hate men and feminists are too radical.

Yes, asking for what we deserve is so radical. And asking for men to not joke around about backhanding women and demanding things from them is radical, too, and makes you unattractive to men, I guess. Well, if a man finds that unattractive, why would any woman care?

I don't mean to generalize about men. I know that there are males in the world that don't find this funny, that respect their girlfriends and listen to what women have to say. I know that there are males that identify themselves as feminists.

And I actually realized that the first page I mentioned is in response to a page called "I'm the girl. You're the boy. You text first or we don't talk today."

I don't think I have to point out that that page is ridiculous as well. I'm all about equality.

It wouldn't be so infuriating if there was no meaning behind these jokes. But we live in a world where women are treated as second class citizens, and it's not acceptable.

These boys need to grow up and learn how to respect women. And these girls need to take a stand against sexism, not get behind it.

Lauren Vincent can be reached at lvincent@student.umass.edu.

Put a little 'spring' in your step

Scott Harris

I think we can all feel it coming. A week-long winter slump has ended, and we have emerged on the other side to find sunshine and high forty-degree days. Residents of New England suffer six months out of the year to experience what we will over the next couple of weeks and months: spring.

America needs spring right now.

Congress has been gridlocked on basically every major initiative, from health care to climate change, at a time when action is of the utmost importance. Our economy has stepped back from the brink thanks to President Barack Obama's stimulus plan and will continue to recover this year, and hopefully some spring optimism will lead employers and job-seekers to find each other.

If we use spring for its intended purpose, we can accomplish a lot, both individually and as a country. With a clear head and optimism in our hearts, To-Do lists will have nothing on us.

We can all step out of the dungeons of our heated living rooms and out into our streets, parks, stadiums and greens to help those in need get back on their feet; we can make a contribution to our country, whether it is something as simple as putting in a few hours at a community center or projects that take a more long-term commitment.

While it was possible to forget huddled under blankets, we cannot ignore the passion of our national spirit when this time of year comes along, and it seems like we may have never needed the spring as much as we do right now.

It is this season of optimism that makes me more confident, as a progressive, that we will get big things done this year.

It looks as though Democrats may finally be growing a spine, tired of unprincipled Republican opposition and getting ready to pass health care reform into law using the Senate's reconciliation procedure.

Financial sector reform is not quite as incredible as it could be, but it still includes some key provisions, like the Consumer Financial Protection Agency, and the Obama administration has indicated that it will stand behind the "Volcker rule" to prevent some of the risky trading that helped lead to the banking crisis.

Climate change legislation does not look like it will be passed this year, but some moves by President Obama and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency suggest that at least some action will be taken. It will not be perfect, and there will be things for both the Left and Right to crow about; it may even seem a bit naïve and idealistic, but that is what the spring is meant to be.

What is ultimately important about this time of the year is that we take Mother Nature's cues on how we should approach our lives and how we interact with other people. It is a great time to refocus on the work ahead of us, both in our jobs and here at school.

You could take from the clear skies a clear mind that puts in an extra hour or so to study for an exam.

Maybe you might ask that girl or guy in your Engineering class out for a bite to eat, instead of walking by her or him again? Come on! It's spring! They'll say yes. Why would they not?

For me, spring is a time where all my passions collide. I can put the six winter issues of Golf Digest down, finally take the cover off my clubs and head back out to the links (and empty my wallet on new gear in the process).

March Madness in college basketball begins and, though the path to a national championship does not look too bright for my Connecticut Huskies, anything can happen, or at least people can root for Syracuse to get bounced embarrassingly early.

I can start to run outside, rather than the ever-crowded Recreation Center track. Baseball starts.

I will be starting a new job, along with the other seniors that will be graduating in May. It is the kind of renewal that comes only once a year. There is a wealth of new possibilities that come in the spring, and I cannot wait for a chance to get after them.

If we use spring for its intended purpose, we can accomplish a lot, both individually and as a country. With a clear head and optimism in our hearts, To-Do lists will have nothing on us. The question is whether or not we take the opportunity.

Scott Harris can be reached at smharris@student.umass.edu.

Students hoping to live off campus better hurry

Yevgeniya Lomakina

On the evening of Feb. 23, a group of students gathered to attend a crash course about off-campus residency. The group was tightly packed into the small space of a reserved room in the Franklin Dining Common.

"Renting 101: What you should know about renting your first apartment" was the title of the first of its three sessions. Bernadette Stark, the senior staff attorney, presented the joys and mysteries of renting an apartment to the students. The room became so packed that extra seating needed to be found, a sign that the renting apartment communities of Amherst will soon have a great deal of clients.

The meeting covered a variety of topics such as selecting a roommate and how to move out of an apartment.

More importantly, students learned all the possible motives for a lawsuit against their potential future landlords. These lawsuits must be, of course, backed up by concrete facts and arise from problems encountered during the residency.

When given a chance to ask questions, however, students inquired mostly about the various illegal practices of landlords, each of these questions was answered by a referral to the Office of Student Legal Services. That office, located at 922 Campus Center, is ready to assist any aspiring tenants. As it turns out, most students are misinformed about the renting process and are therefore potential baits for scams.

The prospect of living off-campus may be tempting, but as the audience listened to the attorney's advice, one could not help but wonder about all the drawbacks of renting that first apartment. Though the crash course is aimed at helping students avoid these mistakes, the amount of petty details is somewhat overwhelming.

With all the information about future residency available to them, students should have no trouble finding a space. Those willing to find lodging, however, should hurry.

Before students can surrender the keys to their dorm in exchange for the keys to their new apartment, they must, in most cases, find a roommate.

One could also consider rooming alone, but that is relatively expensive.

The roommates should be reliable in paying the rent and in keeping their share of the lease agreement. The ideal scenario presented in the television sitcom "Friends," though appealing, is rarely the case in real life.

Most of the hassle comes from the formalities required from each person that will be living in the apartment. The standard paperwork includes a rental application and lease contract guarantor form. A guarantor is most likely a parent or a guardian who will ensure the payment of the rent if the student does complete the minimum income requirements.

The standard rent application asks information such as residence history, employment information, bank references, amount of vehicles owned and questions pertaining to the residence, such as the number of pets.

Pets could be an issue. Squire Village, for example, does not allow residents to have dogs in their apartment complex. Other paperwork that is sometimes required are forms from the University releasing disciplinary records from the students' on-campus residency.

Students soon find that, as residents, they do not have as much authority as they thought: the apartment owners, well aware of the abundant student population, often treat student tenants with disdain.

Service calls often go unanswered and the apartments remain in imperfect conditions.

The residential problems do not end there, however. After the lease has been terminated, there is also a procedure to be followed upon moving out. Because most leases are year-round, there is also the work of subletting the apartment during the summer months, which requests its own effort. The details of all or any of these aspects of residency may be acquired at any of the crash courses at the times listed below.

The next session of "Renting 101: What you should know about renting your first apartment" will be held on March 9 at the Berkshire Dining Commons at 7 p.m. Students will have a chance to put all their new knowledge to good use at the Apartment Rental Fair on March 25.

Still unsure where to live? There is a variety of housing options both on-campus and off-campus. The dorms located on-campus are an option, as well as the North Apartments, which are owned by the University and living there does not require a lease. There are numerous apartment complexes in Amherst and the surrounding area for off-campus living. Individual postings, available on websites such as umoch.org, offer students a place to call home.

With all the information about future residency available to them, students should have no trouble finding a space. Those willing to find lodging, however, should hurry; available apartments fill up fast.

Yevgeniya Lomakina can be reached at ylomakin@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 3, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Spring Awakening' succeeds as an eye-opening production for crowds

Alissa Mesibov
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts theater department's production of "Spring Awakening: A Sin of Omission" is a pleasing new adaptation of Frank Wedekind's 1891 play.

The story revolves around a group of adolescents in provincial Germany. In a time when repression reigns, the young teens are unable to receive the necessary guidance from the adults in their lives. They are left to navigate the confusing and terrifying maze of puberty on their own.

The new rendition of the classic play was led by UMass theater graduate students, director Toby Bercovici and playwright Emily Denison. The revision is much quicker paced than the original, with new twists and turns in nearly every one of the small, vignette-like scenes that make up the play. The language has been simplified from the original, without losing any of its beautiful imagery.

Bercovici's dark vision has a constant presence in the play. Her best decision is to have the same actors play the children and the adults. The children's purity is haunted by the knowledge that they, too, will grow up to be the same repressive adults as their parents and teachers.

An attempt to distinguish adults from children was made by giving the teachers German accents. Though it added a comedic element to the play, it created inconsistency. It would have worked better if all adults had an accent. This would have helped further distinguish adults from children. Instead, the audience gets a funny, but misguided attempt at directorial creativity.

Duncan Grossman plays the lead role of Melchior Gabor. A rebel among his peers, he has been given too free of a reign by his mother. The role is so rich with opportunity to create a dynamic character. It is disappointing that Grossman's Melchior is apathetic toward nearly every other character for most of the play. Luckily, Grossman does deliver in Melchior's most important scenes. His emotions shine through with abusive violence when faced with sex, expulsion from school and death.

At first, Michael Greehan seemed no more or less than a nondescript, scholastically-challenged best friend of Melchior, Moritz Stiefel. Greehan seemed to have a general idea of his character, but trended towards over-the-top delivery that is more suitable to a musical comedy than a tragedy. However, in his final, haunting scene, the reason for the casting choice became clear. Normally, nauseating is a very negative word in a review, but not here. Greehan was so thoroughly disturbing that it was positively stomach-churning.

Anneliese Nielsen is nothing short of terrific as Wendla Bergmann, the subject of Melchior's desire. No matter if she is alone on stage or just one of the girls, Nielsen is constantly in character, reacting to her situations flawlessly and effortlessly. She is also, perhaps, the best dancer in the ensemble of actors.

Other standouts in the cast include Christian Hoots and Linda Tardiff. Hoots delivered every single one of his characters fearlessly. As sex-crazed George, he tackled the controversial scene without a second thought. Hoots never backed down as the headmaster of the school. Tardiff brought a graceful timelessness to boherman runaway, Ilse, and was fantastic as Wendla's misguided, but good-hearted mother.

A completely new concept to Wedekind's play is the dance sequences, choreographed by Madelyne Carnera. Simple stage dance was used to perfectly capture the essence of the play. As one character is about to masturbate to a picture of Desdemona from Shakespeare's "Othello," a dancer comes out as the object of the boy's affection. Their dance is beautiful and disturbing at the same time. The audience knows what the teenage boy is doing, but it is never actually seen. We only see right before and right after the boy has "destroyed" the picture. Another excellent dance is a group piece. The children run out, dancing and playing, but morph into hunched over, rickety, old teachers. It serves as another excellent metaphor for the idea that the children will grow up to become these horrific beings. The only flaw is that it relied far too heavily on repetition.

The makeup design by Faye Richards and Toby Bercovici is risky, but worth it. The children wear standard stage makeup. They carry around black makeup crayons, and add mustaches, monocles, moles, and other facial markings on stage, in front of the audience, rather than concealing the transformation backstage. Again, it contributes to theme of the children growing up to be repressive adults.

By far, the best element of "Spring Awakening" was the wardrobe. It was clear that costume designer Faye Richards, put a great deal of time and thought into the clothing for these characters. Every character wore simple, white clothes. In the beginning, they are clean white and pure. As the show goes on and the characters' impurities are revealed, the characters wipe their adult makeup off on their clothes. The clothes become stained and impure, just like the characters that wear them. For Melchior, Moritz, and Wendla, who do not play adults, their costumes become stained red after their severely impure actions.

The play's sound design possesses both good and bad qualities. Kyle Lampe's design is terrific, but overused. The sounds of children laughing, wind, rain, and church bells contribute to the show's concept. However, they volume is too loud and the sounds are used far too often, distracting viewers from far more important action going on.

The lighting design by Jonathan Hicks is much more suited to the play. At first, the light on children is softer, while the adults are under much harsher light. As the children are corrupted by the world, the light on them becomes more severe and frightening.

"Spring Awakening" delivers enough to please an audience, but there is a great deal of room for growth.

"Spring Awakening" is playing at the Curtain Theater till March 6 at 8 p.m. with a 2 p.m. matinee on it's final day. Student and senior tickets are $7 and general tickets are $15. Tickets can be purchased at the Fine Arts Center Box office, online at umafacweb.admin.umass.edu. Online , or by calling 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS.

Alissa Mesibov can be reached at amesibov@student.umass.edu.

Michael Greehan performs as Moritz Steifel in the UMass Theater Department's production of "Spring Awakening." The play is showing each night till March 6 at 8 p.m., with a bonus performance at 2 p.m. on the last day.

Amherst opens up Winter Olympic Games and shares secrets provide golden memories

Kaitlyn Bigica
Collegian Corespondent

"I live on the second floor of a Southwest tower and my new past-time is getting myself off while watching people walk by. They can't see what I'm doing but it makes me feel naughty!"

On Feb. 9, 2009, Craig Durham and Zach Cohn opened the Web site BuffSecrets.com to listen to the secrets of the Buffalo area. One year later, Durham and Cohn opened a similar site to the Amherst area, Amherstsecrets.com. As fans of the famous Post Secret blog, both men decided to create their own Web sites geared towards communities rather than the world.

Receiving over 7,000 secrets in one year on BuffSecrets.com, Durham and Cohn decided to create AmherstSecrets.com in hopes of receiving the same success. In just two weeks, the site has received over 100 secrets, and continues to grow each day.

The Web site consists of eight categories of secrets. While the student who pleasures herself to the crowds walking through Southwest was placed in the sex category, other secrets may fit into general, love, missed connections, friends, family, to you and serious. Amherst Secrets receives a "whole spectrum of emotions, some are very serious and some are lighthearted," said Durham.

While scrolling through the hundreds of secrets posted on the web site, you can experience the spectrum of emotions that peers in your English class feel on a daily basis. Some secrets may have you bent over with laughter, while others might connect to issues or feelings you have about your own life. The beautiful thing about this site is that many people comment on the posts to share similar experiences or give advice.

In one secret Durham read, a girl was too afraid to talk to a boy who sat next to her in class. With support via comments made on her secret, the girl wrote back explaining that she had finally talked to him, and they were going out for coffee soon.

Unlike Post Secret, the Amherst edition allows you to either simply post a secret or upload pictures to essentially create an online postcard. Durham feels the "fact that you can do it while sitting in class allows you to vent." As soon as you feel any type of emotion, you can immediately share it with the people around you. Instead of reading secrets from people across the country, you can read secrets posted from people in the Amherst community, and know that you share humor or anguish with the people you may walk past each day.

AmherstSecrets.com was created as an outlet for emotions, as well as a place to help others through their problems or share laughter; therefore, gossip or trash talking are not welcome. In fact, each secret is screened before it is posted in order to ensure that names or gossip have been left out.

For now, the site is strictly anonymous and in that, there is no way to directly meet with people that have shared their secrets. However, the comment box next to each secret has allowed people to share their similar stories, or give advice.

As the site grows each day, there are sure to be posts that will leave you with your mouth wide open in shock, your stomach in pain from laughing or a realization that you are not the only one who feels the way you do. Whatever mood you're in the site has a place for you to go. Whether you simply want to read funny posts, tell a haunting secret or share how you got revenge on your ex-girlfriend after you "posted her number in the personal ads on Craigslist in New York, Chicago, Ill. and Boston," AmherstSecrets.com is the place for you to go.

Kaitlyn Bigica can be reached at kbigica@student.umass.edu.

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

After lifetimes of practice, years of preparation and 16 days filled with moments of glory and disappointment, the 21st Winter Olympic Games are over. Held in Vancouver, Canada, there were many remarkable moments of the games, some of which will remain in the record books for years, while others will be long forgotten by the time the winter games are held again in four years in Sochi, Russia.

Dozens of moments stick out important to the 21st Winter Olympiad. Here are just ten of the events (in no particular order) that helped make the Vancouver games "excellent and very friendly," as International Olympics Committee president Jacques Rogge deemed them.

Canadian figure skater Joannie Rochette seemed to be the personification of elegance and perseverance during her short time in the rink. Her mother, Therese, died of a heart attack while in Vancouver to see her daughter skate. A true professional, Rochette decided to continue to compete for her country, despite visible emotional turmoil. She went on to win the bronze, as well as the hearts of the world, as NBC announcer Bob Costas noted.

In a different sort of ice rink, U.S. speed skater J.R. Celski became the newest focus of American speed skating fans. With Apolo Ohno's future as an Olympian uncertain for now, Americans have found new hope in the teenager. The two-time bronze medal winner in 2010, Celski was almost unable to compete. At the Olympic trials, he sliced his left leg open, missing a vital artery by millimeters.

These games were also the scene of many firsts. Alexandre Bilodeau became the first Canadian to win a gold medal at home, in freestyle skiing. The Canadian national anthem would be played 13 more times before the flame was extinguished. The American Nordic combined team also saw their first medal after 86 years, thanks to Bill Demong and Johnny Spillane.

These winter games will also be known for their very public feuds. American skiing teammates Julia Mancuso and Lindsey Vonn traded barbs, with Mancuso upgrading to public insults and jeers.

Also pitted against each other were American figure skating gold medalist Evan Lysacek and Russian Evgeny Plushenko. Plushenko told the media that Lysacek was undeserving of his honor because his routine didn't include the difficult quad jump, whereas his did. Prime Minister Vladimir Putin agreed. What sort of example were these world class athletes setting for their young fans?

Though negative aspects to the games were found, shining moments of athleticism and bravery were shown by two athletes. Lindsey Vonn and Slovenian Petra Majdic played for their countries, though injured. Vonn prevailed over a shin injury, which she stated was "excruciating," and a broken finger to win gold and bronze medals. Majdic, a cross-country skier, won a bronze medal after a fall in a trial run left her with four broken ribs and a collapsed lung.

No one watching the games could forget the tragic death of Georgian luger Nodar Kumaritashvili hours before the Opening Ceremony. He lost control of his board on one of the big turns at the Whistler track, flying off the ice and into the stands, where he perished upon hitting his head against a steel beam. Tears followed as public statements were made and lugers competed in his name.

The Russians performance will also be remembered. Once predicted to win about 40 medals at the winter games, which they usually dominate, they earned only 15. Russian president Dmitri Medvedev has recently called for the resignation of Russian officials and coaches as a result.

Also expected to do well was Norwegian speed skater Sven Kramer. He would have won the gold in the 10,000 meter race, had his own coach, Gerard Kemkers, not told him to switch lanes. The switch disqualified him, which many media outlets hailed as karma after he publicly insulted an interviewer who had trouble with his last name.

Shaun White, called the flying tomato, is being revered for an amazing trick he completed while snowboarding down the halfpipe. Though he had already won the gold, he decided to please the crowd by executing the Double McTwist 1260 (two flips and three rotations). Simply amazing.

Finally, though Team USA lost, Zach Parise's goal in the men's hockey final lifted the hearts of Americans everywhere. The U.S. was not slated to do well in the games up against their foreign teammates in the National Hockey League. They did awesome. Parise scored with less than 30 seconds on the clock, sending them into overtime against Canada, a hockey powerhouse. Though Canada won, it was one of the most important moments in American hockey.

So many other memories in these games should be cherished. Bode Miller's comeback, Apolo Ohno's performances making him the most decorated winter Olympian, the U.S. men's bobsledding team and Shaun White's coaches swearing like sailors on live TV. These moments taught us the value of athleticism and courage.

One can only hope that the next Olympic Games bring the happiness and entertainment that hailed from Vancouver this winter.

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kaitlynma@student.umass.edu.

UM attempts to break skid

UMASS from page 8

In its last win against No. 16 Dartmouth, UNH received three goals and two assists from Jo Jo Curro to defeat the Big Green, 9-8. The victory ended the Wildcats' 15-game losing streak against Dartmouth dating back to 1991.

Despite allowing the Big Green to close the gap to one score in the final minutes of the game, UNH was able to hold on and control the possession long enough for time to expire.

Last season, the Wildcats played better at home than on the road with five of their 12 wins coming on the road. One of the six wins at home for UNH came against UMass on Mar. 18, nearly a year ago.

After trailing 8-3 at halftime, the then-No. 13 ranked Wildcats scored 10 goals in the second half to defeat the upset-minded Minutewomen, 13-10.

Venechanos sees a lot of similarities between her team and UNH, especially on the offensive side of the ball.

"The play a really good team defense with either a zone or man to man," Venechanos said. "They have a balanced attack like us and will be hard to stop, so we will need a team effort on defense. They also have some good dodgers up top and some good shooters down low to get them the ball."

The game between the Minutewomen and Wildcats is set to begin this afternoon at 3 p.m.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

MAXWELL SHARK / COLLEGIAN

Goalkeeper Katie Florence has started all five games this season for the Minutewomen and has a .420 save percentage.

Mineau earns A-10 accolade

By Kara Deyermenjian
Collegian Correspondent

Fordham sophomore Jen Mineau earned her second Atlantic 10 Pitcher of the Week accolade of the season, along with freshman Jamie LaBovick who was named A-10 Rookie of the Week.

Mineau, who shared this week's pitching honor with Emily Jeffrey of Charlotte, has been awarded the honor four times throughout her career, while LaBovick received her first career award.

During this past weekend's Palm Springs Classic, Mineau took the mound five times in which she pitched three wins, two shutouts and 44 strikeouts. In the Rams' opening game of the tournament against Texas A&M, she struck out a record-breaking 15 batters, and currently holds Fordham's record for the top two strikeout performances in history. Mineau struck out 11 batters in a win over Oregon State as well, leading the way for Fordham to win over a Pac-10 program for the first time ever.

Mineau finished out the tournament on a strong note against UNLV with a one-sided 13-strikeout shutout.

With the tournament, she improves to 5-1 on the season with 75 strikeouts, three walks and a 0.72 ERA.

LaBovick, who is currently hitting .261 on the season, also had a strong presence at the tournament with two home runs and four RBIs. She had a two-run homer against Texas A&M which locked in the victory, and another two-run homer in the shutout against UNLV.

Fordham is currently 6-3 overall and has yet to compete in A-10 play. The squad will take the field again March 5-7 to compete in the USF/Under Armour Invitational.

SLU disappointment

Saint Louis fell to 4-5 after suffering its fourth-straight defeat in the Cardinal Classic held in Louisville, Ky. last Saturday. The Billikens lost 5-3 to Louisville (13-2) as well as 12-6 to Northern Illinois.

SLU got off to a promising 2-0 start in the top of the first against the Cardinals after sophomore Liz Jones hammered a RBI double to left field.

In the same inning, however, Louisville made a comeback and managed to take a 3-2 lead as the inning came to a close. The Cardinals continued to extend their lead and the Billikens were only able to tack on one more run by the end of the game.

The matchup with Northern Illinois later in the afternoon didn't go much better as the Billikens trailed the entire game. There was a sudden flash of energy from SLU when they were able close the scoring gap to just three runs in the bottom of the sixth, making it 9-6. This was as close as the Billikens would come to taking the lead, however, and the Huskies later tacked on three more runs to come away with the 12-6 victory.

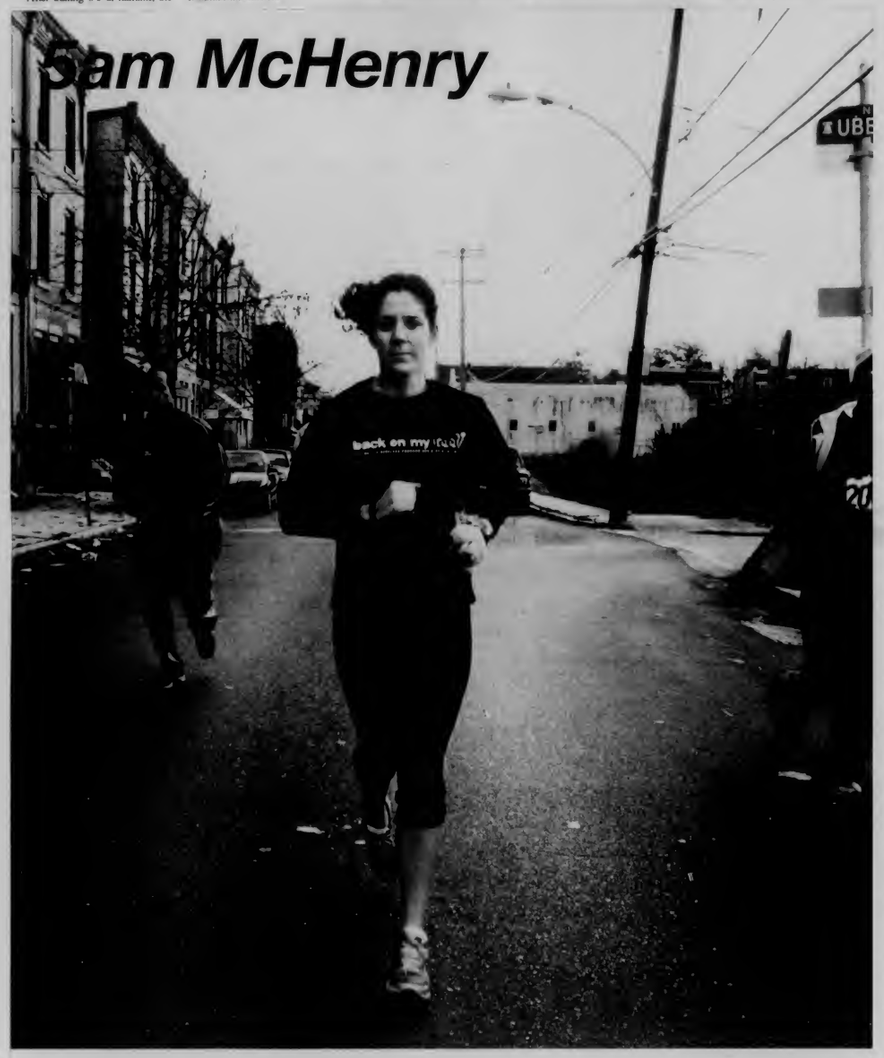
Despite a discouraging afternoon for the Billikens, SLU senior Brittney Schmidt was awarded A-10 Player of the Week for her efforts. Not only did she hit .500, but she also made a strong impact at the tournament with 13 total bases, a 1.083 slugging percentage and a .571 on-base percentage.

SLU will try to get some momentum going this weekend at the Missouri Breast Cancer Awareness Tournament.

Dayton unsuccessful

Dayton suffered losses in both games Monday at the Rebel Spring Games tournament in Kissimmee, Fla. The Flyers' first outing of the afternoon resulted in a close 9-7 loss against Holy Cross.

Three players, including seniors Anne Maci and Molly Meyer, and freshman Kathleen Maloof, were responsible for all but two of the Flyers' total eight hits. Out of the nine runs scored by the Crusaders, only two were earned as Dayton was plagued with defensive errors from the very beginning. Inning after inning, Holy Cross was able to capitalize on the Flyers' errors and tack on runs.



After the Crusaders took a 9-4 lead in the third, Dayton spent the rest of the game attempting to close the gap. In the fifth inning, the Flyers managed to drive in two runs to bring the score to 9-6.

The seventh inning showed promise for Dayton after Kathleen Maloof hit a RBI double to drive in a run, but it ended up being the only run scored in the inning and the Crusaders went on to win the game.

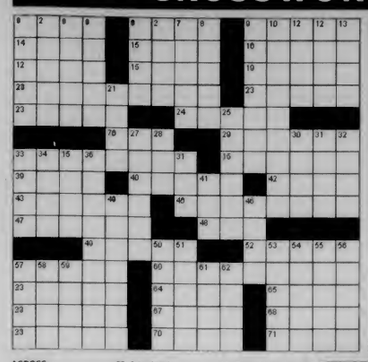
The Flyers' second game of the afternoon against Maine ended in heartache as the contest abruptly ended when the Black Bears hit a game-winning walk-off home run.

Dayton will try to get wins as the Rebel tournament continues through this afternoon. Next up, the team will travel to South Carolina for the Charleston Southern Tournament from March 5-6.

Kara Deyermenjian can be reached at kdeverme@student.umass.edu.

Suzanne McHenry is no feather in the wind.
Every day, she rises with the sun to run with the homeless.
Every day, she's feeding her life, her career and her future.

Feed your future at www.pwc.tv



PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2010 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Tableland
5. Russian emperor
9. Challenged
14. Distinctive flair
15. Not deceived by
16. Manicurist's board
17. Slant
18. Not bad
19. Marsh plant
20. Wise
22. Hair net
23. Bloodsucking worm
24. Ran
26. The genus of macaws
29. Fleet
33. Ranking above all others
38. Steroid alcohol
39. Culminating point
40. Fire a weapon
42. A city in France
43. It contains a British beverage
45. Pass
47. Withstand
48. Beer
49. Big
52. Inundated
57. Part of the human torso
60. Impertinence
63. Audio transmission
64. Lamented
65. Dwarf buffalo
66. Eagerness
67. Tall woody plant
68. A hole for the escape of gas or air
69. Spring bloom
70. Female chickens
71. X X X X

DOWN
1. Steel or tin
2. Leave out
3. Soothing ointment
4. Shenanigan
5. Roman robe
6. Ping
7. Coral island
8. Cowboy sport
9. Cake or pie
10. A correction or change
11. Start over
12. Therefore
13. Turned blue, maybe
21. Fraud
25. Soft shade
27. A list of names
28. Residue from a fire
30. Operatic solo
31. Curtail
32. Away from the wind
33. Destiny
34. Not closed
35. Absorb written material
36. Ejection
37. As well
41. Egg cells
44. Speech
46. Not fake
50. Circumference
51. Habituate
53. Interlace
54. Building addition
55. British biscuit
56. Warms
57. Crummy
58. Rabbit
59. Cocoyam
61. Espied
62. Lync poems

SNOWZEES
Bar & Guitar
Formerly Seven O's
Tue: Nintendo Wii Night
Wed: Karaoke Night
Thurs: Eric Holmgren Back from Nashville
Fri: Outer Stylie Rockers
Sat: The Reprobates Rock & Blues
Sun: Open Mike Night
Free WiFi
[(7 Minutes from UMass)]
1PM - 1AM · 7 Days a Week
330 Amherst Rd.
SUNDERLAND, MA. 01237
413-665-8788

SUDOKU

1					6			7
					7		4
						9	1
	4			7		1	3
			4	6
7		9			3		5
3				8			7
					9	8
2		7	3

PUFFTON VILLAGE
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry,
off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.puffton village.com

UMass... San Diego?
Take online classes anywhere this Summer
Registration begins March 15
Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net
UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

Hark! a Vagrant by K. Beaton harkavagrant.com

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

Many of us were opposed to the game of airplane chicken.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Though stuffing your iguana in a condom is funny in theory, the reality of it is that it's still animal cruelty.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Those of you who have not heard the wonderous and thoroughly masculating voice of David Attenborough are not real people.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
When caught in an incriminating situation, all that you need to say is "Hola at your gender!"

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Solo cups are getting expensive, but that does not mean that you need to play beer pong with opened soup cans. Maybe?

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Taping your remote to your futon is not the work of a stoner college student. Instead it is the work of a mechanical mastermind!

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
If you are ever in a situation where someone may have been offended by your actions, do not forget tension easing fist bump.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Today you will suffer from confusion. This is a nice astrological way of saying that you will have a hangover.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Who can think about American Idol on a night when the Discovery Channel is airing a special on blue whale procreation?!

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Eventually the awesome frat party that you go to every weekend is going to have more 40–year–old guys than usual.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Your fear of six armed bears roaming the campus streets at night does not explain all that grey poupon stuck in your drawers.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Things are not looking too good for you. Steve Buschemi just "unliked" your Facebook status.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Do not waste class time by looking at all the things that are for rent on Craigslist. Think of the time you have left!

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided, 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further...CAMP MATAPONI, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (samm crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group

EMPLOYMENT

Leaders and more! Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.campmataponi.coM

FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St. 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,575/Mo+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last.

FOR RENT

www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends From $89 Complete. Montreal Express.Net MontrealBlowout.com 781-979-9001

TUTORING SERVICES

Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats, GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 Jboid42@yahoo.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSWEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 3, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

JUSTIN EDELSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Junior Jackie Lyons and the Minutewomen will look to end their two-game losing streak at home when they host New Hampshire at McGuirk Stadium this afternoon.

McGuirk hosts UNH in UMass home stand

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

Yet to earn a win in its four-game home stand, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will attempt to break its losing streak when it hosts New Hampshire at McGuirk Stadium this afternoon.

After winning its home opener against Holy Cross, UMass has had difficulty claiming a victory in Amherst in its last two home games. The Minutewomen (2-3) are coming off two losses in the past week to Harvard and No. 10-11 Boston University, both ending in a 10-8 score.

"Protecting your home field is really vital," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said after Tuesday's practice. "The girls understand that the games are adding up and we're already through a third of our season. They are excited to play on their home field and sleep in their own beds, so we're looking forward to it."

Like the contest against the Terriers (1-0), UMass came up on the short end of a back and forth affair with the Crimson (1-0). Alexis Dal Col and Jen VanderMeulen combined for nine of Harvard's 10 goals to lead the offensive attack for the Crimson.

For the Minutewomen, senior Merritt Cosgrove and junior Haley Smith each tallied two goals apiece. Nina Sarcona, Dayna Deffiese, Ryan Gorman and Jesse O'Donnell, the leading scorer for UMass this season, all added goals on the day to round out the Minutewomen attack.

Goalkeeper Katherine Martino made seven saves to earn the win for Harvard, while Katie Florence made seven saves in cage in a losing effort.

Though the Minutewomen held a 24-to-22 shot advantage, the Crimson controlled the groundball battle, 16-to-9. Harvard was also a perfect 10-for-10 in clearing attempts, whereas UMass managed just 9-for-14 on clears.

In practices this week, Venechanos worked with her team on situations at the end of games.

"We just got back to the basics," Venechanos said. "We're looking forward to a new beginning tomorrow, and when you have these close games, the little things really matter. We want to work on throwing and catching, things you learn when you're younger and having them in our back pocket at the end of close games."

UNH, meanwhile, enters McGuirk having won both its games this season. The matchup against the Minutewomen, however, will be the first road test for the Wildcats.

See UMASS on page 6

Venechanos looks for improvement in areas

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

After suffering its second straight loss on Saturday, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will look to improve aspects of its game when it faces New Hampshire this afternoon.

"Our first three games were lop-sided in both directions," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "We're really taking care of those little things: ball possession, running for the ball. [We're] going through the things that you need to reexamine when we look back at the game tape."

The loss against the Crimson (1-0) produced three obstacles for the Minutewomen (2-3) to improve on in today's contest against the Wildcats (2-0).

"We're trying to get used to each other, we're trying to get people comfortable in certain spots," Venechanos said. "It's a work in progress, and I think we're getting there."

Clears

In the contest against Harvard, UMass could not match the Crimson in the clears category. Harvard went 10-for-10 in clears, well above the Minutewomen's 9-for-14 mark. UMass totaled the same amount in clears in its 10-8 loss to No. 10-11 Boston University.

"We were not ten-for-ten, I think we're more worried about that and we're worried about what we need to do," Venechanos said. "A lot of it is timing, getting used to each other, and getting each other's tendencies. We've done a lot of clearing these last couples of days. We've been working on making better passes, running for your catches."

In their first game of the season against Northwestern, the Minutewomen did not clear the ball once during the contest.

During its first two wins of the season, UMass cleared the ball 10 times against Holy Cross and 11 times against Connecticut. When the Minutewomen have failed to earn double-digits in clears, they have gone on to lose the contest.

This season, UNH has had success with clearing the ball, going 23-of-30 in clears in its first two victories of the spring.

Turnovers

In the match against the Crimson, the Minutewomen found themselves down a goal with the ball at midfield. After calling a timeout, the opening pass went wide and UMass suffered one of its 17 turnovers in the contest in what Venechanos called "the theme of the game."

"We put ourselves in about ten of those situations again," Venechanos said. "We put two minutes on the clock [at practice] and went through those situations. I told them that we have the ball, it's not like you need the ball back."

The Minutewomen have struggled this season with keeping the ball, accounting for 77 turnovers throughout their first five games. Meanwhile, UMass' opponents have earned 67 in the same category.

"We did the hard work," Venechanos said. "We usually do the hard work in finishing the play, but that comes with maturity, that comes with experience. It's hard to simulate those game situations in practice, but I think we did the best we can in these last couple of days."

Despite Venechanos' worries about the turnover ratio, UNH has had its own set of faults when it comes to keeping possession.

The Wildcats have committed 34 turnovers in their first two games, an amount that the Minutewomen reached after their third game.

"We got the ball a couple of times," Venechanos said. "We turned the ball over. That's what we've been reassessing in these close games, every turnover. Everything is a lot more magnified when you play in these one-goal games."

Draw Controls

One key piece of the puzzle for the UMass squad has always come from its belief in draw controls.

Coincidentally, in its last two losses of the season, the Minutewomen were the victors in draw controls. While it was ousted 21-5 in draw controls to Northwestern, which lead to a 18-8 loss, UMass has been successful in the category since.

In the match against the Crusaders, the Minutewomen had 13 more draw controls than their opponents (18-5), and four more than the rival Huskies when they faced them on Feb. 20.

Despite the two losses against the Terriers (1-0) and the Crimson, UMass beat both teams in draw controls by a 13-6 margin and an 11-9 margin, respectively.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu

Win gives UM berth

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team needs to do one thing in order to make it into the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

Win sooner, rather than later.

The Minutemen (10-18, 4-10 A-10) take on La Salle in their final regular season road contest this Wednesday at 7 p.m. at the Tom Gola Arena, in hopes of clinching the final spot in the conference tournament.

UMass can clinch a spot with a victory over the Explorers (11-17, 3-11 A-10) or with a win over Rhode Island on Saturday, two opponents the Minutemen have already faced this season but have had little success against.

If the team loses both games, it could get in if Saint Joseph's loses either of its remaining games against George Washington or the Explorers. Both the Explorers and Hawks are tied for 12th place in the A-10, while the Minutemen sit in 11th place.

The two most active scorers in A-10 history will square off in UMass' Ricky Harris and the Explorers' Rodney Green, who have scored 1,858 and 1,872 points, respectively, throughout their collegiate careers.

Harris is second in the A-10 in scoring average with 18.9 points per game, while Green is third with 18.3.

The Minutemen saw their four-game winning streak against Dayton come to an end on Saturday in the way of a 96-68 defeat.

The Flyers made a season-best 13 3-pointers while shooting 46 percent from the field, while freshman forward Terrell Vinson led the Minutemen with 16 points. Harris saw his stretch of 37-straight games scoring in double figures come to an end, as he was held to nine points, a season low.

The Flyers are in seventh place in the A-10, right behind the Rams, and have an 8-6 conference record.

The Explorers are coming off a 65-53 loss to No. 20 Temple on Sunday, as Green scored 21 points on 10-of-23 shooting in 29 minutes.

UMass and the Explorers have met 23 times, with the Minutemen holding the all-time series advantage, 13-10. But the Minutemen have dropped their past three games against La Salle, including this year on Jan. 10 at Springfield's MassMutual Center.

The Explorers used an 18-5 run in the second half to get rid of a seven point deficit, as UMass was outscored 16-10 in the final five minutes of play. The Minutemen were coming off their first A-10 victory of the year against Fordham, and went on to drop its next four contests.

Freshman guard Freddie Riley led all scorers with 22 points, going 6-of-14 from 3-point range, while Harris finished with 17 points. Green was held to 17 points, but La Salle used the contest to give it momentum in a win against GW three days later.

Along with Green, who is third in the conference in assists with 4.3 per game, the Explorers are led by Kimmani Barrett (13.3 ppg) and Aaric Murray. Murray is 14th in the league with 6.5 rpg.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

JEFF EDELSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Senior Ricky Harris leads the Minutemen in scoring with 18.9 point per game. UMass can earn a berth in the A-10 Tournament with either a win against La Salle tonight or a win against Rhode Island on Saturday.

After being a bubble team looking to make the NCAA Tournament, Saint Louis improved its chances with a win this past weekend.

Saint Louis making case for tournament

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

The NCAA Tournament bubble got a little clearer for the Atlantic 10 over the weekend. Xavier topped Richmond in double-overtime and joined Temple in the Associated Press Top 25 poll, but the only thing that game affected was the seeding for the A-10 Tournament.

Three of the four teams left on the bubble have lost games against teams they should've beaten, while Saint Louis continues to make a case for being in the NCAA Tournament.

At this point, none of the bubble teams look particularly appealing. As late as last week, it looked like five teams could make the tournament, but Rhode Island, Charlotte and Dayton have all been struggling, which makes the possibility unlikely.

ESPN bracketologist Joe Lunardi has three teams going to the Big Dance, but the NCAA selection committee will choose a fourth if any of the teams can impress during the last two games of the season or the conference tournament.

Here is a look at the four teams on the bubble in order of highest RPI:

Rhode Island (20-7, 8-6 A-10, RPI: 37)

In one month, the Rams went from an unbeatable team to one that is on the verge of collapsing. Despite going through their non-conference schedule with one loss, the A-10 schedule has been a different story.

In February, URI went on a three-game losing streak before pounding Fordham, the worst team in the conference.

However, a loss to St. Bonaventure really hurt its chances of an at-large bid and URI needs to win both of its games against the 49ers and Massachusetts to deserve a shot. The non-conference win against Oklahoma State should help a little bit, but the Rams have a long way to go if they want to earn an at-large bid.

Dayton (19-9, 8-6 A-10, RPI: 41)

The Flyers should've been a shoo-in for the NCAA Tournament, but they have not helped themselves much, with the exception of a 28-point win over UMass.

Dayton did fairly well during the non-conference schedule, but losses to Duquesne and Saint Joseph's made its job pretty difficult going into the final stretch. Its last two games are against Richmond and a hot Billikens team.

If the Flyers don't make it in, it will be their loss to the Dukes that pretty much ended their season. When you're trying to make a case for making a 65-team tournament and don't come from a Bowl Championship Series conference, dropping to a team that has a record below .500 isn't going to do much good.

Charlotte (19-9, 9-5 A-10, RPI: 62)

The 49ers are done.

Getting blown out by Dayton and losing to the likes of Duquesne and George Washington isn't going to get Charlotte anywhere. Beating the Owls might've been good enough to offset the loss to the Flyers and even a 42-point drubbing by Duke earlier in the season.

However, there are only so many games a team can lose against teams it should beat or get taken out of against quality opponents before it becomes better suited for the National Invitation Tournament.

According to ESPN, 15 of Charlotte's 19 wins came against teams with an RPI no higher than No. 119. This year was certainly an improvement compared to years past, but not enough.

Saint Louis (19-9, 10-4, RPI: 87)

SLU is the only bubble team that hasn't had any bad losses in February. It lost to George Washington by five points and scored just 36 points against Richmond, but has since won seven of its last eight games.

The only loss in that stretch was to Xavier by two points. The Billikens now have a chance to make themselves look very good in front of the selection committee at the end of the season.

Their final opponents are No. 16 Temple and on the road against Dayton. Slamming the door on the Flyers' chances of making it past the A-10 Tournament on their home floor certainly wouldn't hurt.

So far, the youngest team in the nation has looked the most composed out of the A-10 bubble teams. If it keeps that composure, the selection committee will have no choice but to ignore the No. 87 RPI.

Adam Miller is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

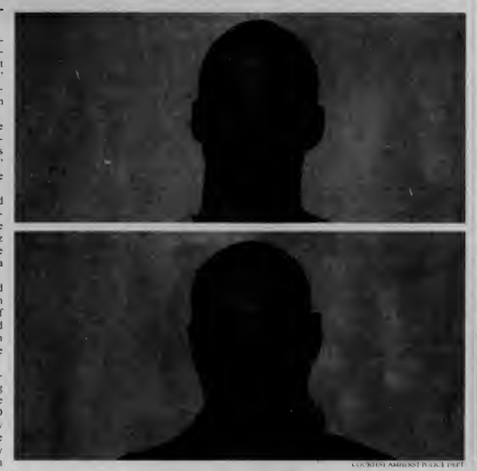
COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 40 LOW: 27 www.DailyCollegian.com THURSDAY, MARCH 4, 2010

Local grave robbers arrested for theft of veterans' plaques

By Nick Bush
Collegian Staff

On the night of Feb. 8, 2010, the caretakers of North Amherst Cemetery on East Pleasant St. found dozens of brass veterans' plaques stolen from burial sites at the cemetery site, which lies less than a mile from the University of Massachusetts campus.



Investigators from the Amherst Police Department soon determined that a number of area community police departments had received similar reports from veterans' affairs officers, according to a press release from the Amherst Police Tuesday.

Amherst Police investigators determined that two suspects were involved, and arrested brothers Mark E. Kuklewicz of Lake Pleasant, Mass. and Stanley P. Kuklewicz of Millers Falls, Mass. Both brothers were charged with two counts, Larceny from a Grave and Larceny over $250.

The Kuklewicz brothers were arrested on the morning of March 2 in the town of Montague, Mass., with the help of the Massachusetts State Police, Greenfield Police and the Montague Police. Both men were arraigned in Eastern Hampshire District Court on Tuesday afternoon.

During the investigation, police recovered 74 of the veterans' plaques. According to the Amherst Police Department, the investigation continues, with the APD coordinating with various surrounding law enforcement agencies in an effort to locate additional veterans' plaques, and identify the rightful place for the recovered stolen property.

Nick Bush can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu

COURTESY AMHERST POLICE DEPT.

Brothers Mark and Stanley Kuklewicz were arrested Tuesday March 2 in connection to the alleged theft of at least 74 veterans' plaques from local grave sites, including North Amherst Cemetery.

UM administrators answer rape queries

By Matt Rocheleau
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts will hold a meeting open to all campus community members Thursday from 5 to 6 p.m. "to discuss the sexual assault that has recently been reported in the media," according to e-mails sent this morning from the office of Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life Jean Kim.

Collegian reporters and several Student Government Association (SGA) officials were invited to the meeting in an e-mail sent Tuesday, but campus officials today opened the meeting to the entire community and have relocated it from a smaller conference room to Campus Center Room 101 "to accommodate as many students as possible," said an e-mail.

Both Kim and Dean of Students Jo-Anne T. Vinin "will be available to answer questions and to address any concerns you may have on this issue," said an e-mail.

A University of Massachusetts student confessed to raping a friend and former student in the fall and was mistakenly given a deferred suspension, according an article by the New England Center for Investigative Reporting (NECIR) at Boston University published late last week. University officials allowed him to stay on campus, a move that now has administrators reexamining UMass' sanctioning policies and procedures, as reported in Friday's Collegian.

Repeated requests for further information regarding how the case was mishandled have been thwarted thus far by multiple campus officials. On Tuesday, the assistant dean who reportedly handed down the wrong sanction to a student that allegedly confessed to rape said she wanted to speak to the press, but is being prevented from doing so by administrators.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrochele@dailycollegian.com.

NICK BUSH/COLLEGIAN

UM administrators will hold an open meeting for the campus community Thursday regarding the alleged rape that occurred in North Apartments.

Life After College

To avoid post-college purgatory: plan ahead

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

These UMass graduate students avoided the competitive job market by opting to continue their higher education, but grad school is only one of the nearly infinite options available to graduating students.

By Chris Shores, Cameron Ford and Tim Jones
Collegian Staff

Undergraduate commencement is just over two months away, and the big question remains: do you know what you are doing after college?

Some students will tell you they know exactly what they want to do.

Kamellia Keo, a pre-med major, recently applied to Teach for America, an organization which looks to fill the void of quality teaching in urban areas.

"My general idea is to work for a year or two so I can save up money and go to grad school," said Keo. "If I were to get the position, I would be trained over the summer to get my certificate and begin teaching in September [for] a two-year program. Not only is it a paying position and I would get a teacher's salary, but… they also offer an opportunity to get a master's in education."

Keo said that she ultimately wants to go to medical school, but doesn't currently have the funds to apply. Teach for America would provide both a salary and a different kind of experience.

"I've always loved teaching and working with students, but I think it's just a way for me to kind of see if that's the route that I want to take," she said. "If it's just something that I really enjoy, I would love to pursue it."

Other students may not be so sure about their future aspirations.

UMass Career Services gives students the opportunity to begin setting up their future career, before they are out in the real world. Through a variety of workshops and resources, students can learn about future internships that may apply to them, ways to get involved around the campus in something relating to their major, and how to build a good resume.

Ginger Goldsbury, associate director at Career Services, said that early action is key when it comes to planning, and that students who don't get involved on campus have a more difficult time finding a job when they graduate.

See AFTERWARD on page 2

'March 4' education

In support of U of California, students protest at Whitmore

By Alyssa Creamer and Hannah McGoldrick
Collegian Staff

Today, Thursday March 4, has been declared a "Day to Defend Education" across the nation. Students from numerous organizations at the University of Massachusetts are rallying, marching, calling Massachusetts' political officials and, according to several of the protesters at UMass, "standing in solidarity" with the students of the University of California.

The group spearheading the majority of the activities today calls itself the UMass Coalition for the March 4th Day of Action to Defend Higher Education.

The UMass Coalition will be holding a public demonstration rally in front of the UMass Student Union at noon. The group will also be marching to the Whitmore Administration Building after several speeches, many of which the group expects to be students voicing their opinions about the current state of higher education.

"We are trying to gain momentum for a march to Whitmore. We have a list of demands that we are going to be making of the university to be completed by March 31," said UMass Coalition Public Relations Officer Evan Serio, "at which point, the administration will need to be able to supply us with the steps with which they will be tackling these issues."

"This is a mobilizing effort," said Serio. "We have a list of our demands, and we have stated that we will not stop organizing or demanding until our demands are met."

According to Serio, the Coalition's concerns surround such issues as stopping the rising cost of attending UMass and preventing fee proposals such as the Commonwealth College fee and the flagship fee from being placed on the student body.

The Commonwealth College fee would be a mandatory fee placed on all student members of Commonwealth College, but has not yet been officially instated.

According to SGA Senator Andrew Prowten, interim Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life Jean Kim said in a Student Leader Advisory Council meeting at 5:30 p.m. yesterday that the administration is not going to discuss implementing the flagship fee until after federal and state money for the school's budget have been determined.

"We're not asking, we're demanding because we're students, and we pay the salaries of the administration," said Serio.

In an e-mail sent to Don Lippincott, one of the organizers of the event, interim Kim stated, "I understand that you are among the leaders planning to participate in the National Day of Action to Defend Higher Education on March 4th with a demonstration here on the Amherst Campus. As you know, I offered to meet with you to discuss several of the issues of concern to you and oth-

See MARCH on page 2

SGA announces spring election candidates

SGA President:

Patrick Kenney
Brandon Tower

Student Trustee:

Mike Fox
Benjamin Gregson Chase
D'Alessandra Acosta
Andy Dawson

Area Government:

Orchard Hill (Area 1)
Garrett HOwen as Area Governor
Brian Rucki as Lt. Governor
Jessica He as Lt. Governor
Will Fan as Secretary

Orchard Hill (continued)
Kawinthi Fernando as Secretary
Kevin Troung as Treasurer

Southwest (Area 2)
Alexandra Booth as Area Governor
Eric DiGiovanni as Lt. Governor
Secretary (write-in)
Treasurer (write-in)

Commuter (Area 3)
Maria Burden as Area Governor
Evan Waghelstein as Lt Area Governor
Secretary (write-in)
Treasurer (write-in)

Central (Area 4)
Area Governor (write-in)
Lt. Governor (write-in)
Secretary (write-in)

Central (continued)
Treasurer (write-in)

Sylvan (Area 5)
Area Governor (write-in)
Lt. Governor (write-in)
Secretary (write-in)
Treasurer (write-in)

North (Area 6)
Area Governor (write-in)
Lt. Governor (write-in)
Secretary (write-in)
Treasurer (write-in)

Northeast (Area 6)
Area Governor (write-in)
Lt. Governor (write-in)
Secretary (write-in)
Treasurer (write-in)

ARTS & LIVING

Darlingside turning Japanese

Williams College–educated band Darlingside is on a tour de force of the Pioneer Valley, eager to play shows (from house parties and Pearl Street to Japan).

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

UMass falls to La Salle

The Minutemen's chances of making the Atlantic 10 Tournament are dwindling, after losing to the Explorers, 89–78.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Matthew Robare is trying his best to care about SGA elections … and he is failing miserably.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Log on to dailycollegian.com for a rockin' new feature, the Local Music Project, profiling area bands and sponsored by WMUA's Sweet Baby Lou and the Reverends of Funk.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 29

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Wire Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Scannell
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolniert
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Prowot
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Ellie Rulon-Miller
Assistant Comics Domonic Mei
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jay Auser
Assistant Sports David Beinich
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Senior Producer Sara Cody
Senior Producer Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sam Butterfield

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Whitton

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Students seeking gainful employment

AFTERWARD from page 1

"Here, we like students in their first or second semester to get involved in career planning," said Goldsbury. "In today's world, you need experience to get the job you want," she added.

Part of that career planning involves internships, something that B.J. Roche, a journalism professor, stresses in her Journalism Launchpad class.

"Everything people think they know about job hunting is wrong. Simply putting your resume out there isn't going to be enough," said Roche. "You have to do an internship, establish connections and cultivate relationships."

Her Journalism Launchpad class, in its second year, puts students to work through a variety of exercises. These exercises include telling ten different people about prior work experience, learning about 401(k) and retirement plans, creating multiple drafts of a resume and working with credit reports and salary negotiation.

Roche prefers students who gain experience throughout college, helping them stand out even more when they graduate.

"People procrastinate, and they need to realize the sooner you deal with the work and plan, the better," she said. "The other good thing about internships is that they may show you what exactly you don't want to do," she added.

She also added that simply being an intern isn't enough, and that students must work for what they want.

"The usual feedback I get is that kids don't put themselves out there," she said. "People aren't just looking for work, they also want ideas."

Some students will be involved in careers outside typical jobs.

For instance, the students who are enlisted with the UMass Reserve Officers' Training Corps (ROTC), have their paths already set to an extent, said Lieutenant Colonel Andre L. Hinson, professor of military leadership of the UMass ROTC.

Combining basic training and physical fitness with their academics, cadets will graduate from the program after four years with several options they may choose from, he said.

They may go into active duty, which is a full-time job for six to eight years, remain on active guard in Massachusetts or go into the Army Reserve. Cadets also receive full tuition to any school they attend, said Hinson.

Students who graduate enter the army as a Second Lieutenant, should they choose to go into active duty. The UMass ROTC is also one of the largest contributors to the National Guard.

Hinson said cadets are well prepared to secure a job when they graduate. The ROTC has partnerships with certain employers that can get cadets guaranteed interviews and possible employment.

"The possibility of getting employment with these companies is very high, because they look for the experience that the cadets have," said Hinson.

Others will go to graduate school or some other form of post-undergraduate education.

Pearline Ngauv, a microbiology major, is enrolling in an accelerated master's program in the Microbiology Department.

"[In] fifteen months, I will have my master's degree," said Ngauv.

While the prospect of remaining a full-time student may look appealing, Goldsbury warned against it.

"I'm worried about the students that come out of school with so much debt. Grad school only adds on to that," said Goldsbury. "Delaying a job for school isn't always the best option."

Caroline Duffy, a senior biochemistry major, is excited to go to graduate school and has no problem with becoming a "professional student."

"I want a Ph.D because Ph.D's are more typically funded. All the programs I applied to have some sort of cash stipend and insurance package," said Duffy. "[The college] expects you're going to be there for six years. They want you doing what you're doing every single day and not having a job to worry about," she said.

Duffy said that not all graduate programs offer these financial packages, but programs in the life sciences are able to provide funding because grants are awarded by organizations such as National Institute of Health and National Science Foundation. She said the current economic situation is just another reason to stay in school now.

Other students may go to graduate school long after their graduation, such as Sarah Menesale, who graduated from Boston University in 2003.

"I want to go to grad school to change my career path," she said. "I spent more than five years in journalism and now want to become a school librarian. The only way to work in a school is to get your master's."

Menesale said she is excited for graduate school as it will make better opportunities available for her.

"It will change my future in that, once I graduate and hopefully find a job, I will be in a career with a steady salary," she said. "Having a built-in pay raise every year will be great. I did not experience that in the field of journalism."

"I can't wait to be financially stable, especially at this point in my life," she added.

Chris Shores can be reached at cshores@dailycollegian.com.

Cameron Ford can be reached at cjford@student.umass.edu. Tim Jones can be reached at timothyj@student.umass.edu.

AMANDA JOHNSON/COLLEGIAN

UMass graduates who enlisted in Reserve Officers' Training Corps (ROTC) leave UMass with many career options, including enlisting in active duty as a Second Lieutenant or continuing school with free tuition.

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

UMass Career Services and the Alumni Association helped connect students with employment earlier this year on the Student Union lawn. The organizations work together to aid students in finding jobs.

We're making history... you can too

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS SCHOOL OF LAW · DARTMOUTH

The University of Massachusetts School of Law–Dartmouth is accepting applications for its inaugural entering class. In Fall 2010 the first class of students will enter Massachusetts' only public law program. Our program is dedicated to providing a high quality and rigorous education to law students at a cost that makes legal education accessible to all.

Our new curriculum is designed to provide students with a strong foundation of legal knowledge and a breadth of real life legal experience through legal internship programs and courses designed to simulate the daily practices of professional lawyers.

We are committed to preparing future lawyers for all legal careers and to providing specialized training in public interest law. Community based legal work is a required part of our curriculum and special Public Interest Law Fellowships are available to make legal education even more affordable for students who are committed to work in the public interest.

Please join us in making Massachusetts' history and helping to build a great new law school dedicated to training lawyers who will contribute to the public good.

WWW.UMASSD.EDU/LAW

- JD Juris Doctor
- Flexible full-time or part-time programs
- Day or evening classes
- Scholarships and fellowships available
- Affordable tuition
- Located in Southeastern Massachusetts
- 1/2 hour to Providence or Cape Cod
- 1 hour to Boston

Questions?

www.umassd.edu/law
umdlaw@umassd.edu

1.800.213.0060 • 508.998.9400

Students plan march today into Whitmore for education

MARCH from page 1

ers. The invitation still stands."

"I personally attempted to see Jean Kim, but unfortunately the days I have gone to see her she has been in larger administrational meetings," said Serio. "The coalition has never purposefully avoided talking to her, but I think it was difficult coordinating when people were available. [Kim] has only been available to speak during her popcorn hours."

Serio said he attended one of Kim's popcorn hour meetings, held daily at 4 p.m., and he was unable to speak with her about the matter because she was in what he believed "was a department meeting."

"We are mobilizing on the UMass campus because that is where we are, that is where the education hits home and that is where the budget cuts and the fee hikes hit home," said Serio. "I personally know my children will be going to get a public education, and regardless, if I were going to a private institution or not, I would still be mobilizing for this cause."

"We have undergraduates and graduates, faculty, staff and community members working with us," Serio continued. "This is an issue that is plaguing the K-12 schools and any public institutions and the private institutions are feeling trickle-down effects because it has to do with state funding."

"I think it is going to go well," said UMass Coalition member and senior Katie Roussos. "I think it is going to be a really great launching point for further action on behalf of the students and promote student participation in budgetary issues."

"We want to hear as many speeches as possible, and we want to hear as many peoples' stories as possible," said Serio when asked if the group's speakers were already pre-determined. He stated that all students are invited to speak in what is an essentially "open mic" forum outside both the Student Union and then Whitmore.

"Everyone here has a stake in what is happening and the changes being made," said Serio. "We have a stake, but we don't have a choice, and we're starting to take that choice back."

Members of the UMass Student Government Association are planning a "call-in" day to contact Senator Scott Brown and gain his support for the Student Aid and Fiscal Responsibility Act (SAFRA).

"We have contacted Senators [John] Kerry and [Paul] Kirk," said SGA Senator Melissa Urban. "They both have told us they support SAFRA."

Several attempts to contact Senator Brown were unsuccessful.

Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu.

Hannah McGoldrick can be reached at hmcgoldr@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY STUDENT & TYDAY.NET

With more than 100 protests scheduled in 32 states, the March 4 Day of Action to Defend Education will have an impact on the UMass campus, with protesters scheduled to march into Whitmore.

DINE & WIN!

ENTER TO WIN A TRIP FOR TWO WITH $500 SPENDING MONEY

UMass Dining and Coca-Cola want to fly you and a guest to any destination during Spring Break in North America including 48 states and Canada!

UMASS DINING UMassAmherst Coca-Cola

Enter between Monday, February 15 and Thursday, March 4, 2010 at any UMass Dining Commons or retail location.

Drawing will be held Friday, March 5 at 6 pm in Berkshire Dining Commons!

*OFFICIAL RULES
No purchase necessary
Must be 18 years old or older
Open to UMass Dining customers
FOR MORE DETAILS:
Visit umassdining.com
Or see entry boxes

YOUR CAMPUS MEAL PLAN
THE BEST VALUE ON CAMPUS RESIDENTIAL MEAL PLAN
RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS Ivy Awards

THE BRYANT GRADUATE PROGRAMS

The Bryant University Graduate School of Business prepares students for success in their chosen professions. As a graduate, you will join an impressive alumni community that includes industry leaders across the country and around the world.

THE BRYANT MBA ONE-YEAR PROGRAM
Full-time, day program for all majors
- No professional experience necessary
- Distinguish yourself in a competitive job market
- Gain hands-on experience with the Business Practicum

THE BRYANT MBA TWO-YEAR PROGRAM
Part-time, evening program for professionals from any field
- Develop high-level business skills for long-term career success
- Enter and progress through the program with a supportive team
- Build your network while enhancing your resume

THE BRYANT MASTER OF PROFESSIONAL ACCOUNTANCY (MPAC)
Full-time, day program for accounting majors
- Meets the 150 hour requirement for CPA licensure
- Complete in Summer/Fall, Summer/Summer, Fall/Spring, or Spring/Summer
- More than 40 top global, national and regional accounting firms recruit at Bryant

THE BRYANT MASTER OF SCIENCE IN TAXATION (MST)
Part-time, evening program for tax professionals
- Build an expertise in all areas of taxation
- Network with tax executives and industry professionals
- Flexible scheduling options

LEARN MORE ABOUT WHAT BRYANT UNIVERSITY GRADUATE SCHOOL HAS TO OFFER

www.bryant.edu/gradschool • 401-232-6230

Bryant UNIVERSITY
GRADUATE SCHOOL OF BUSINESS
1150 Douglas Pike
Smithfield, Rhode Island

AACSB ACCREDITED

SENIORS...LIFE'S NEXT CHAPTER IS ALMOST HERE

What's different about graduate study at the University of Hartford?

According to our students, it's the personal attention they receive—during the application process, when being advised, and in the classroom.

See for yourself how to get a competitively priced graduate education with a personal touch.

Graduate degrees in:

ARCHITECTURE
ART
Illustration, Photography
BUSINESS
MBA, Accelerated MBA, Accounting
COMMUNICATION
EDUCATION
Early, Elementary, and Deaf Ed.
Ed. Leadership, Ed. Technology ENGINEERING
MUSIC
NEUROSCIENCE
NURSING
PHYSICAL THERAPY
PSYCHOLOGY

Valuable Career Counseling and Resources for a Lifetime

Matriculated students gain access to our comprehensive career-advising network. We will help you find a job, evaluate a career change, or discover new interests—all free of charge, even after you graduate.

Great News
New England's first and only master's program in prosthetics and orthotics is coming soon.

Call today
800.945.0712
e-mail gradstudy@hartford.edu
visit www.hartford.edu/study

UNIVERSITY OF HARTFORD

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, MARCH 4, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

An election, you say?

Matthew M. Robare

Student Government Association elections are next week. I know, I had no idea either. I was pretty sure there was a coup d'état and we were now being "governed" by a military junta composed of ROTC students. I might be confusing the SGA with Honduras, though.

As an assistant editor, columnist and occasional news writer here at the Daily Collegian, I naturally didn't hear about the elections until I received an e-mail from interim Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Jean Kim about all the fun upcoming events.

Normally I wouldn't consider SGA elections to be any fun. The first time I voted, I proudly told the election worker at Worcester Dining Commons that "I've always wanted to be an uninformed voter," and my enthusiasm for them has gone downhill ever since. Partially it's been because I've never had the time to run for election myself, but mostly it's because, for my entire time here, there has never been anyone worth voting for when I do bother to become informed.

Where are the SGA candidates who want to subsidize beer and coffee with that $1 million they have?

I did get excited last year, though. I don't remember for whom I voted, but I do remember that they promised to change the laundry situation. It was a platform that all of us in sopping wet clothing could get behind and did.

I think they won.

Regardless of whether they did, the laundry situation didn't really change – the company which had given us all so much trouble for so long had its contract renewed, though new machines were installed. I don't know if they work because I moved off campus. If anyone does, please post a comment on the online version. Some entrepreneurs also started a dry cleaning business called Five College Laundry – a good example of the market making up for government failures.

But this year, the SGA elections have the chance to be really interesting and exciting. Well, probably not, but I can dream a little bit.

None of the presidential candidates support anything we peons support. The SGA is the tricycle with training wheels of "governments," but that doesn't stop their elections from being as divorced from what we care about as students as national elections are divorced from what the American people care about. At least national elections have the excuse of occurring on such a large scale where a constituency that 100 percent agreed on every issue would be really creepy.

Where are the SGA candidates who want to subsidize beer and coffee with that $1 million they have, or more importantly, want bus shelters that don't have most of their panels broken, a new parking garage instead of a new police station and classrooms that are warm in the winter and cool in the summer?

They're nowhere to be found, caught up in the resume padding and suit-wearing world of pretend politics with real money. It might get them an internship for the summer, or a job after they graduate, but it doesn't win them or the SGA any favors from the people. As an example of this, I point to the always declining number of students who vote. Of the students who vote, how many are just cajoled friends and how many truly care about the result? Whatever it is, it still isn't very many people.

I'm not saying the people of the SGA do not care. On the contrary, they care a great deal about their cover letters and $200 suits, but not enough about UMass.

As far as I'm concerned, the SGA has continually thrown away chance after chance to make a real difference in the lives of us students. Instead of finding out the real issues that are important to us, all they have done is interpret a turnout of a few percent of the student population as a mandate.

In short, the SGA sucks, but it isn't bothering them enough to get the message. But I have a remedy for that: bring turnout down to zero. That will break their spirit democracy.

Apathy can explain a low turnout away on a job application, but no turnout? They'll be laughed out of the Junior Legislator's Club.

It is important to remember that even a meaningless public office is a public trust.

Matthew M. Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

A farmers' market at UMass

Nick Milano

A few weeks ago, a couple of my columns looked at different ways that the University of Massachusetts could work towards a more close-knit campus. Reactions differed among students. Some criticized the ideas as impossible, while more attacked my claim our campus is divided. One person in particular who agreed with my position that more needs to be done is Ruben Carrizosa, who actually wrote a paper on this very issue for a class last semester. As a columnist, it is flattering to hear that people read your writing, but it is even more exciting when they take a stand either with or against its argument.

In his proposal for a UMass farmers' market, Ruben mentions that with such a large university, there are a variety of events which cater to its students, from arts to sports, but he argues that "these events cater to limited audiences only." Immediately after reading my first column on the subject, Ruhen got in touch with me to pass on his idea that a UMass farmers' market should be introduced. I could not have agreed more.

There are plenty of reasons that a farmers' market would work at UMass. First, the only way for students who live on campus to get fresh produce on a routine basis is to steal it from the Dining Commons or hop on a bus to the local grocery store. The hassle of getting to and from the store is often not worth it, and one can only get away with stealing so much fruit. So on the first issue, a farmers' market would enable a steady supply of healthy, local produce.

Second, as Ruben argues in his proposal, the food industry today is dominated by large corporations and factory farms. My favorite part about UMass is that it is located in the middle of nowhere. There are farms everywhere around us. It is fun to just hop in a car and drive around the Connecticut River Valley, checking out the farms, the tobacco fields and barns and the landscape in general. One benefit is that fresh produce is right around the corner if people have the means of getting to the source. The large local supermarkets in the area, including Whole Foods, function through a regionalized warehouse system. This means that much of their products come from one central location. This puts a limit on individual stores' ability to buy from local farmers. Sure some products, might be locally grown, but more often one has to travel to the actual farm or to places like Atkins Market to get genuine local produce.

A farmers' market, if marketed correctly and held once a month, like Ruben suggests, on a central location like Haigis Mall or the area in front of the library, would generate campus wide interest.

A farmers' market at UMass would highlight the quality of locally grown produce and help boost the local economy, especially at a time when all economies could use a strong infusion of capital. There is nothing better than browsing the stands at Haymarket in Boston – UMass could bring a similar atmosphere and help local farmers all at the same time.

This would also give farmers a chance to convince students of the superiority of locally grown produce. This might lead to a healthier future for students who might be more conscious of the difference between regular, organic and local food crops.

Thirdly and most importantly, a farmers' market, if held once a month, like Ruben suggests, on a central location like Haigis Mall or the area in front of the library, would generate campus-wide interest. Ruben mentions how similar ideas at several large universities like University of South Carolina, Wisconsin and Texas A&M have all been incredibly successful. And their success is not just derived from their ability to generate income for the local economy, but also in bringing a festive, exciting event to campus.

Like all big events, the logistics of such a gathering would be tough to overcome, but not impossible. One obvious weakness of a farmers' market is its seasonality. Weather affects the availability of certain crops, but markets held during each month of the fall semester would be bountiful. Students would return to school just as the summer crops were maturing. Corn would be a staple at first, but very quickly, apples would replace them. As Halloween and Thanksgiving approach, apples would begin to give way to gourds like squash, zucchini and pumpkins, as well as the potato and onion crop. A farmers' market may not be feasible during spring semester, but fall would more than make up for it.

Ruben and I both graduate in May, so we will not see this idea come to fruition, yet, this does not inhibit our desire to see it happen. The University boasts an incredible collection of diverse students. There seems to be an activity for everyone on this campus.

This should be applauded; yet, at the same time it causes the campus to be less compact than it might naturally be. Certain parts of campus are for certain types of kids and certain activities for particular groups of people. SOM is a cult whose high school atmosphere and appearance is sickening. The engineers seem sequestered in one corner of campus. Orchard Hill is for nerds – and I am a former resident. A large farmers' market at UMass is just another idea, albeit a better one than my previous ideas, to help bring the entire UMass community together.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu

Fed/Up? Ed/Op.
editorial@dailycollegian.com

The Olympics, its vitues, and how they boost national pride

Pride and unity: Two morals which are vital to the success of a country. However, they are two things often forgotten by people because of the daily grind of life.

Matt Kushi

We are sometimes overburdened and oversaturated by the hard realities of life and can lose sight of who we are and what our country is about.

That is why it is good that our attention, for the past few weeks, has been diverted by the Olympics. The Olympics are more than merely a series of athletic competitions featuring the world's greatest athletes. It's more than an event where we can listen to the eloquence of legendary sports broadcasters such as Bob Costas and Al Michaels. It is a worldwide happening that is based on those two words – pride and unity.

Think about it. When else do so many countries come together in one location without a thought of maliciousness in their hearts? Though we have a summer or winter Olympics staged every two years, it is refreshing to see some form of world unity. It is nice to see so many inhabitants of this world competing against each other in a forum where pride is at stake and not human lives.

Though the fans of the many nations in the Olympics may periodically become radical, in the end we know that the fate of the fight at hand will end in numbers concerning speed, strength, and points, instead of body counts and depleted ammunition boxes.

The Olympics are not only a healthy ritual for the world as a whole, but a healthy exercise for each and every country involved. Let us look at ourselves.

The Olympics raises national pride. People all over the world, whether they are participants or the general population of a particular country, feel the pride of their country shining upon them.

Back in 1980, when Team USA beat the Soviet Union in ice hockey, it wasn't only the players who felt the pride of being an American. It was the whole country that rallied around the victory. It wasn't the U.S. hockey team which beat the Soviet Union, it was the United States, as a whole.

The fact that we get a reminder of what national pride feels like is important. Not the national pride that is based on arrogance and oppression.

Not the national pride that is based on arrogance and oppression. The national pride kind that makes your heart swell with pride when you see your country's flag.

The national pride that makes your heart swell when you see your country's flag.

Many of us here in the states are indeed very proud to be Americans. You just wouldn't know it from reading the news. In a day and age where the American public is divided on numerous issues, it would seem we have forgotten that we are all Americans.

The fact that some people want their own President to fail appalls me. The fact that some people don't support their own military is yet another issue. We may not agree with the wars our country is waging, but we should support the soldiers who have placed duty to their country ahead of their individual lives.

However, no matter our differences, national pride at the Olympics is always present.

Whether it be footage of the 1980 "miracle on ice," when goalie Jim Craig wrapped himself in the American flag, or listening to fans chant "USA!," the amount of American pride flows strong enough that it could power our country itself.

We must not let that pride die now that the Olympic flame for 2010 has been extinguished.

No matter what divisions separate our country byways of opinions, we are still all Americans.

Even at our relatively young age as college students, this reminder is not premature.

A walk past the Army ROTC building and you'll realize there are already men and women our age fighting overseas.

We are constantly reminded by the locations listed on Memorial Hall of where our path of pride and unity has led us.

Whether we realize it or not, what we learn in the classroom each and every day shows us where we can take this country in the future.

So let us remember that this idea of unity needs to continue past the time of the Olympics that we have just completed.

Let us remember that we should all be proud to be Americans. Let us make that pride more of our reality, for this idea of pride and unity is the key to the future of the Unites States.

Matt Kushi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mkushi@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, MARCH 4, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Darlingside hungry for some sushi

By Leigh Greaney
Collegian Staff

On their Pacific tsunami ride to glory, Darlingside stopped by the University of Massachusetts and Sweet Baby Lou and the Reverends of Funk's office at WMUA to spread their sound into the ears of campus Feb. 3.

With their indie/folk/rock beats and catchy harmonic rhythms, the guys of Darlingside showed UMass the fruits of their labor, planted in their Williams College base. Make no mistake, this small town college band has been growing tall around the Northampton area.

After first hearing the band's cascading strumming, humming and drumming, the appearance of insta-fans was not so surprising. Their sound is very accessible – and goes down easy. During the two-hour show, they played five songs, including a cover of Damien Rice's "Volcano" and Muse's "Knights of Cydonia." The band's five-piece power packed a hard punch for the Muse cover, while keeping Rice's cover sweetly mystifying.

Their unique sound is born out of Don Mitchell's vocals and guitar, Auyon Mukharji's vocals, violin, mandolin and saz (a Turkish string instrument), David Senft's lead vocals, guitar, bass, and keys, Sam Kapala's drums and pennywhistle, and Harris Paseltiner's vocals, guitar and cello. Combined with the cello, the violin soars into an intermingled harmony accented by the more traditional instruments of their artistry. Carefully woven together, they are sure to pull on the heartstrings of fans.

If their music isn't a love tap on your heart's left ventricle, then the guys themselves will surely win over the fickle. Their passion to play is genuine, even though they set the lofty goal of touring Japan. Their aim is to be memorable, much like their band name.

Born at Williams College during a winter term songwriting class, the guys adopted Darlingside as their laminate. They liked that when they Googled it, the only result was some road in Ontario – which may find its street sign missing someday.

Their songwriting teacher Bernice Lewis taught them to "kill their darlings" to make their songs uniform and cohesive. Taking her advice, the guys decided to go off on a lyrical homicide mission, calling themselves Darlingcide. After some heat from their critics and some fear of a mixed message, the band opted for what they consider "a dandier 's'."

This dandy-ness carries its weight within the band members and within the songs they write. In the making of their EP, they noticed how excited they were.

"Our songs have adopted so many different qualities. There have been lots of unexpected turns from song to song and within each song," Don said, while the rest of the band nodded in agreement. "You'll find yourself in a new place all of a sudden," added Auyoh. Everyone else seemed to agree, as a contented smile swept over their faces.

They all seemed so mellow like one agreeable unit. Something didn't seem right. A band that gets along – AND – lives together in Hadley? This is no "Real World," no "Jersey Shore," no P. Diddy making of a band kind of living situation. There's no fighting, only collaboration, hanging out, trying out harmonies and good home cooking.

The band found it unquestionably important to stress that, among the other things they do well, they dine impeccably. "We eat well," Sam stated. "We don't do microwave dinners. We rotate cooking and we have a rule: if you come to visit when we're rehearsing then you cook. It's obviously not convenient for us to be cooking while we're rehearsing, so we pay for it and all you have to do is cook and we will feed you."

"It's symbiotic," Don piped in, "Like a song."

However, their stomachs full of avocado, pear, blackberry salad and candied walnut brownies, still hadn't quenched their lust for Japanese sushi. After playing out of as many stadiums as the U.S. has to offer, the band has big plans for Japan. Why? According to Auyon it's because "Japan is far away enough and exotic enough that once you make it there, you've made it."

Being a unit since this September, Darlingside is confident this goal isn't just dinner conversation. They've been steadily booking shows and radio gigs.

Solo artist Caitlin Canty has been playing with the band and adding her sultry female vocals to tracks, such as "Volcano." The two acts swap connections, share harmonies and even hang out. "She's actually asleep at our house right now, I think," Sam added. Although she prefers to do her own thing, her additions to Darlingside's tracks and their additions to hers make a musically enlightened friendship and work environment.

The two acts play shows together, including a recent benefit for Haiti which was held in Rutland, Vt., in the Paramount Theatre. The next upcoming show, however, will be without Canty's harmonies.

After coming in near the top of a preliminary round of a battle of the bands held at the Elevens in Northampton, they were invited back to play the final round on Feb. 21. Although the steps to the final round were somewhat of an emotional rollercoaster, due to what the band calls an "Al Gore style election mishap," they're excited to battle it out.

Until then, Darlingside is hard at work on their EP. They've released their first single, "Surround," for free on MySpace. However, the version they sent out to the public is nothing they are overly satisfied with. Their goal was to inspire some interest to get people to go to their shows, but they're not happy with the quality quite yet. "We wanted to throw it at people for free," Auyon explained, "but in a couple months it will be better and worth paying for."

Getting close to the mixing stage, the band is thrilled about getting their EP out. Thinking hard and long about what makes a good song, they decided the ideal song's composition is like "Cool Runnings."

"It's like a team between music and lyrics. They have to support each other – like being on a bobsled. It's a synthesis, one cohesive expression," Sam explained, while the others were still smiling about the "Cool Runnings" reference.

While traveling around from gig to gig, the band likes to caravan and listen to inspirational music, such as Ray LaMontagne, Radiohead, Muse and Taylor Swift. Defending Taylor Swift, Sam said, "A good song is a good song," although he isn't a fan of all her tracks. Nonetheless, their wide range of influences adds to their vamp and their motive of taking a listener somewhere else.

As for Darlingside, they're happy where they are for now. They're stunned by the girth of UMass – maybe because the undergrad population is roughly 17 times the size of the town that Sam grew up in.

"[Thousands] of students with grad students," Sam thought out loud, "... that's the size of New Hampshire's capital. And you guys have a stadium here?" Just hearing that, the band smiled as daydreams of the Mullins Center must have danced in their heads.

"We'll play anywhere. If there's a party around here, we'd love to play it. Whether it be the lawn of Baker or Japan, we'll do it," Don said. On the road to fame, they're down for anything.

The good news is that fame's double edged sword doesn't seem to threaten Darlingside. When asked who in the band would go solo first, they answered: "Darlingside." They're all set on their road to sushi glory together. For now, they're willing to play wherever is asked until the sound of "Konichiwa" rings in their ears.

Leigh Greaney can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu.

Darlingside stopped by the Sweet Baby Lou and the Reverends of Funk's radio show on WMUA 91.1 FM for a performance on Feb. 3. The band is rapidly rising in popularity and hopes to tour in Japan some day.

Check out the newest page on our website, www.DailyCollegian.com/sweetbabylou. Each week we will feature a new local band profile with video, sound bytes and pictures.

Think before you sip

BPA levels in plastics pose serious health risks

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

What would you do if a harmful chemical was all around you, a chemical scientists have linked to breast cancer, diabetes and reproductive issues? According to many researchers, chemical presense is the norm in the United States, thanks to the nation's dependence on plastics.

The chemical in question is Bisphenol A, commonly referred to as BPA. It's an organic compound used in the production of many plastics and additives. It has been compared to estrogen in its effects and composition.

Until recently, it was used often in many common household objects. BPA was used to produce plastic packaging, microwavable plastics, canned foods, baby bottles and water bottles. An article in the Boston Herald published within the last year cites particular concern to college students because of its former use in the production of a college staple - durable water bottles, particularly Nalgenes.

In the spring of 2008, after multiple companies stopped carrying the brand, Nalgene began a process of phasing out BPA as an additive, though old bottles and even other makers are potentially dangerous.

This all became a concern a few years ago when reports started coming out about the harmful effects of BPA. The scientific studies led to Connecticut and Minnesota passing laws to ban the chemical. Retailers such as Babies 'R' Us have also stopped carrying products containing BPA. Many bottle and plastic food container producers have stopped using it in their products as well.

Canada became the first nation to completely ban BPA products, classifying it as a hazardous substance in 2008. It has since been placed on the list of toxic substances, though they note that it is much more harmful to babies than the general population. Tests are still in effect.

Within the last week, Massachusetts Governor Deval Patrick ordered the Department of Public Health to begin the process of banning BPA in baby bottles, as well as in other food and drink containers.

Scientists believe that when the product carrying BPA is heated - whether in the microwave, naturally or by a food or liquid it holds - the chemical is "leached" into food or liquids, which can then be consumed. Now, though, reports have surfaced that BPA can be absorbed into food or drink even when not heated.

So far, research has been generally foreboding. The University of Cincinnati saw a direct correlation between BPA and a high risk of heart disease in women. Other U.S. studies have linked the chemical to breast cancer and early puberty, and noted the harmful effects it can have on babies. Many other journal articles cite its role in obesity, cancer and learning and behavioral disorders.

So how do consumers know if they're at risk for BPA contamination? Most plastics are labeled with a recycling number. Initial advice from scientists advises people to stay away from plastics with labeled with the numbers seven and three. Some products with these numbers may be alright, but sometimes it's better to be safe than sorry.

They also maintain that people should limit their use of canned foods and aluminum bottles as well. In general, plastics which are soft and cloudy are alright. In a Boston Globe article, "Massachusetts warns parents of young children to avoid bisphenol A," Mia Davis, an employee of Clean Water Action, says that if the bottle can be squeezed, it's probably safe. So basically, in a mixed message, bottled water is fairly safe, even if it is bad for the environment.

Peoples' safest bet for now is to drink out of stainless steel water bottles, such as those supplied for free by UMass dining services. It looks like UMass Amherst is ahead of the curve, and the rest of the state and nation needs to catch up.

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kaitlynm@student.umass.edu.

Newsom's latest 'One' to be reckoned with

By Mark Schiffer
Collegian Staff

Four years ago, in a duet with Smog's Bill Callahan, Joanna Newsom sang "I love you truly, or I love no one." Curious, how in a career seemingly ridden with fantasy allusions and eccentricity, the conclusion to one of her greatest songs was something as relatable and emotional as that.

With her latest release, "Have One on Me," Joanna Newsom has gone one step farther. She has eliminated such allusions almost entirely from her songwriting. She has assumed an almost entirely personal style. A style which, while sometimes pulling from recognizable sources, never feels like anything other than Joanna Newsom fully-actualized.

One accusation that has been lobbied against the release is its lengthy content. This is understandable, due to the fact that she pulled no punches for "Have One on Me." The music on this album covers four LPs, and a full listen takes 124 minutes. Only three of the album's 18 songs are under five minutes, and most are over seven. Joanna's frequently meandering - but never dragging - tempos mean the listener truly experiences every moment.

For the most part, we are in lyrically dense territory. As long-time listeners already know, half of Newsom's appeal lies there. But for the first time on a large scale, listeners are almost entirely meant to be emotionally engaged with the lyrics, rather than admiring them from afar. With her new musical variation, Newsom has not explicitly compromised her sound - another accusation which could easily be used against her.

Instead, she has given herself a larger canvas for her expression. There are road songs, Gershwin tributes, even an almost Carole King-ish potential single. She excels at every genre. Her tales of identity confusion, daddy-long legs and lost love are worlds unto themselves.

Consequently, these could be read as grand statements, easily leading one to dismiss these currents in Newsom's new work for several flaws. However wonderful it may be, self-indulgence is self-indulgence. And, on first listen, certain songs feel like filler. The third disc in particular almost seems to blend together. But additional listening eventually comes to reveal certain charms- and sometimes peaks- no matter what the song may be.

The album's expansive quality allows for fascinating musical twists at every point. "Baby Birch" is basically a cowboy ballad performed solo on the harp. Five minutes in, a rather dissonant electric guitar enters the mix. Rather than acting as an imposition, it gives the song an almost disturbing element - it jars slightly, but there's not even a question about it working. The same guitar noise returns on the closer, "Does Not Suffice," where its effect is almost tear-inducing.

Every song contains its own moment to treasure. The gorgeous take in "In California" states at one point that "sometimes I can almost feel the power." The evidence of this power can be heard in Newsom's extended vocal and musical breakdown, during which she imitates a cuckoo clock. And yet, in the context of the song, the technique could not be any other way.

One can hope that others will listen to this album. Joanna Newsom may not have revolutionized music with "Have One on Me," and she probably won't inspire legions of imitators, but she has released an incredible work, which deserves to be listened to for years to come.

Mark Schiffer can be reached at mschiffe@student.umass.edu.

Lack of scoring affecting UM against opponents early on

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

For the third straight game, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team was held to under 10 goals. In all three cases, scoring under 10 goals resulted in a loss.

Despite getting off to an early 5-2 lead in the first 10 minutes of the contest, UMass couldn't play consistently, scoring three more goals the rest of the way.

New Hampshire, meanwhile, took advantage of a stagnant Minutewomen (2-4) offense and scored seven goals in the second half to earn the 11-8 win. The No. 19 Wildcats (3-0) kept the score close through halftime, trailing 6-4 after the intermission. In the second half, the UNH defense suffocated UMass' offense, holding it to two goals.

UMass coach Alexis Venechanos wanted her team to get out to an early lead after failing to reach double-digits in goals the last two games. In those losses to Harvard and No. 11/12 Boston University, the Minutewomen trailed at halftime and fell short of closing the gap. Against the Wildcats, UMass was strong at first, but ended up fading in the second half.

"Teams are recognizing tendencies, and when people recognize tendencies, you have to either do something different, or do your thing very well," Venechanos said after the loss to UNH. "I think the first couple games new faces on the team did their thing, but the better you do, the harder teams are going to come after you. We are getting hunted a little bit more than the past, when we were going after other teams."

Where the Minutewomen hurt themselves the most in the loss was on free position shots. The Wildcats scored on four of their five opportunities while UMass was one for six. Though free position shots were pivotal against UNH, they weren't indicative of the score in the last two losses, where UMass was better than its opponents, something Venechanos finds frustrating.

"We don't have anything going on consistently or anything to bank on," Venechanos said. "If it's not one thing, it's another thing."

Despite the offense struggling, the Minutewomen defense has kept games close, allowing 10 goals twice, and 11 in the last three contests. Goalkeeper Katie Florence has allowed 10.68 goals per game while recording a .426 save percentage this season. During the three-game losing streak, Florence has stopped 25-of-51 total shots on goal.

"Our defense is doing well and they're keeping us in the game," Venechanos said. "We tell Katie to keep us in the game and she's been doing that. We like where our defense is and I'd rather have a solid defense right now than a strong attack. We can always work on the attack, but on defense right now we're doing a lot more reacting and saving the ball."

Venechanos wasn't pleased that her team dropped its third-straight, but would rather get the kinks worked out early in the spring.

"We're trying to get prepared for the A-10 conference," Venechanos said. "We've been able to play in these game and we'll continue to learn from them until hopefully we see everything we need to see."

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

UMass loses 11-8 to Wildcats at McGuirk

Strong second half leads UNH to victory over Minutewomen

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team lost its third straight game to New Hampshire yesterday afternoon, 11-8.

The Minutewomen (2-4) came out firing after the opening whistle, scoring two goals within the first three minutes of play. Midfielder Haley Smith knocked in her sixth goal of the season to give UMass an early lead.

"We had one of the best starts of our season," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "We had about five or six minutes where UNH didn't touch the ball."

UNH	11
UMass	8

The UMass lead was short-lived, as the Wildcats (3-0) came right back with its own pair of goals as midfielders Hayley Rausch and Kate Keagins scored.

UMass took advantage of having the ball again off a dangerous play by UNH. In one minute, five seconds, the Minutewomen offense scored three goals to lead, 5-2, after eight minutes of play.

The first of the three continuous scores came after attacker Jesse O'Donnell cut down the middle of the field. Jackie Lyons found her for the pass, leading to the Chicago native notching her 13th goal of the season.

Within 29 seconds of O'Donnell's goal, Merritt Cosgrove took a shot at the net that bounced off to the left of the field. She retrieved her own rebound and scored.

The final goal of the rally came off a free-position shot from midfielder Danielle Pelletier.

Rausch stunned goalkeeper Katie Florence with a hard shot off a free-position, bringing the deficit down to three goals.

The next eight minutes of play had no additions to the score-line, with both teams failing on their chances at the net. It was attacker Allie Bratton who opened up the game again, notching her first goal of the year to bring the Wildcat deficit to a single goal.

UMass couldn't find the goal after the 22:21 mark until freshman Lauren Terracciano tossed a pass to Pelletier, who scored her second of the game. Pelletier had the two final goals of the first half for the Minutewomen.

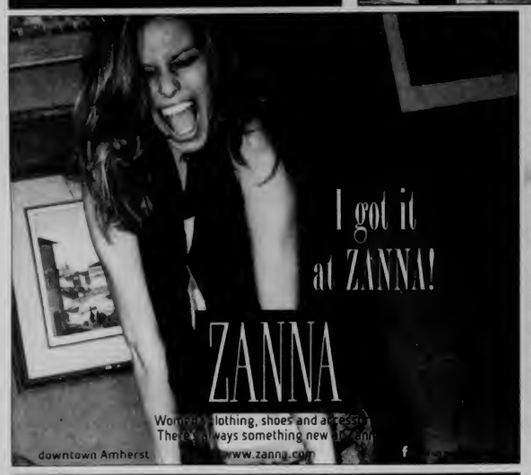
"UNH kept fighting back and fighting back," Venechanos said. "We know that teams are going to foul us; we need to take advantage of that if they're going to keep fouling us. Everything else was pretty much even from there."

The Wildcats took control once again in the second half. With 19 minutes left and the score tied at six, defender Nazy Kerr mauled Keagins, which led to Bratton scoring off the free-position shot to give her team a 7-6 lead.

Midfielder Allie Duclos earned a free position shot after UNH was charged with attempting to run down the clock. Right off the whistle, Duclos whipped a shot into the back of the net to cut the Wildcat lead to 8-6.

Down three goals, Lyons returned to the field after a yellow card and sparked the Minutewomen offense at 4:35 to bring the deficit down to two goals.

Off the restart, with two quick passes through an open UMass defense, Shaunna Kaplan earned her second and third goals of the game.



"We are inexperienced, but we've already been in this situation a couple of times already this season," Venechanos said. "We did fight, but we've got to clean up a few things and really take advantage of the opportunities we have in attack and on the defensive end."

The Minutewomen will take on Yale next Wednesday in its final game of a four-game home stretch at McGuirk Stadium.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu.

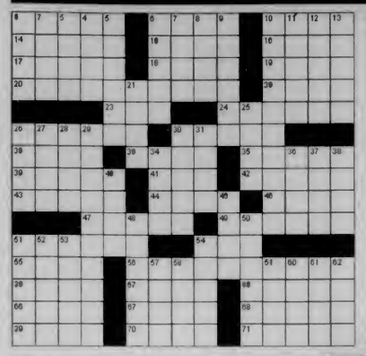
WANNA HOOK-UP?
FREE High Speed Internet and Expanded Cable
1, 2, 3 ...and 4 bedroom apartment homes
RESERVE YOUR APARTMENT TODAY!!!
SUGARLOAF ESTATES APARTMENT HOMES
28 River Road Sunderland
866-301-1445
www.sugarloafestates.com
ASPEN CHASE & ALPINE COMMONS
133 Belchertown Road, Rt. 9 Amherst
866-301-1445
www.aspenchaseapartments.com
www.alpinecommons.com
FREE Heat, Water, Hot Water, Cable, Internet, Electricity in Select Units
FLEXIBLE LEASE TERMS
$$ MENTION THIS AD AND SAVE ON YOUR MOVE IN COSTS $$

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St. • 413-253-7579 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Providing the best off campus living experience
24 hour maintenance
Safe Apartments
Friendly Staff
Two Great locations:
Amherst Center and Hobart Lane
We start showing apartments
Feb. 3rd from 11:30am – 4:30pm M-F

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.puffton village.com

Four Seasons
Wine • Liquor • Cigars
Buy 6 bottles of wine with your reusable four season wine bag and receive 10% off
MORE REASONS TO SHOP FOUR SEASONS!



BEER * All beer prices plus deposit		LIQUOR		WINE All wine 750 ml except where noted
Corona & Corona Light 24 pk btl.	$22.99*	Lagavulin 16yr 750 ml	$59.99	Black Box 3.0 lt All Varieties	$19.99
Coors Light 30 pk can	$20.49*	Patron Anejo 750 ml	$52.99	Bogle Vineyards Phantom Red Blend	$18.99
Bud & Bud Light 18 pk btl	$13.99*	Dewars White Label Scotch 1.0 L	$25.99	Moon Dance Cellars Cabernet Sauvignon	$14.99
Keystone Light 30 pk can	$12.99*	Wild Turkey 101 Proof 750 ml	$20.99	Layer Cake Malbec	$13.99
Busch & Busch Light 20 pk btl	$11.99*	Svedka Vodka 1.75 L	$19.99	The Velvet Devil Merlot	$10.99
Opa Opa Light Lager 12 pk btl	$10.99*	Admiral Nelsons Spiced Rum 1.75 L	$17.99	Blackstone Merlot	$10.99
Pabst Blue Ribbon 18 pk can	$9.99*	Kracken Black Spiced Rum 750 ml	$16.99	Mark West Pinot Noir	$10.99
Honey Brown 12 pk btl	$9.99*	Southern Comfort 750 ml	$16.99	Santi Pinot Grigio	$10.99
Miller High Life 18 pk btl	$9.99*	UV Flavored Vodka 1.75 L	$16.99	Hilbrandt Vineyards Riesling	$10.99
Rolling Rock 18 pk btl	$9.99*	Clan Macgregor 1.0 L	$10.99	Castle Rock Cabernet Sauvignon	$9.99
Narragansett 16 oz. - 6 pk can	2 for $9.98*	Duggans Irish Cream 750 ml	$10.99	Callia Alta Malbec	$8.99
Dogfish Head 6 pk btl	$9.99*	Popov Flavored Vodka 750 ml	$5.99	The Big Red Monster California Red Blend	$8.99

SALE 2/18 - 3/3 333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
584-8174 • Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

Off The Wall Games
$12 Thursday Night Draft!
Look for us at ConBust at Smith College
March 26-28!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays
41 Russell St (Village Barn Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley
Magic the Gathering
Warhammer 40,000

COMICS

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. A high-pitched woodwind instrument
6. Shut a door forcefully
10. Hurt badly
14. Not a winner
15. City in Peru
16. A type of hair style
17. Perpendicular to the keel
18. Portent
19. Objective
20. Tenacious
22. Bit
23. Greatest possible
24. A list of names
26. Motion sickness
30. A very tall fellow
32. Monster
33. Taverns
35. Delete
39. A series of connected rooms
41. Girl
42. A dish of greens and tomatoes
43. Warms
44. Not closed
46. Zingy taste
47. Giggle
49. Electricity, for example
51. Cosmetics
54. Female deer
55. Astringent
56. Renew
63. Prospector's find
64. Auditory
65. Interior decoration
66. Auth. unknown
67. Emanation
68. Swelling under the skin
69. Repose
70. Small brook
71. Measured amounts of medication

DOWN
1. Ado
2. A rounded projection
3. ___-friendly
4. Earl Grey and orange pekoe
5. Shorttail weasel
6. Indolence
7. Tart citrus fruit
8. Ends a prayer
9. Slogan
10. Judge
11. In progress
12. Angered
13. Back tooth
21. Pierce
25. I. I. I. I.
26. Snack
27. Chills and fever
28. Murres
29. Colony
30. Chart
31. Part of an archipelago
34. All excited
36. Winged
37. Caroled
38. Jittery
40. Jacob's brother
45. A gas found in some lights
48. Commotion
50. Required
51. Cheekbone
52. Without company
53. Praise
54. Sticker
57. Decorative case
58. Young woman
59. Start over
60. Cards with just one symbol
61. Hefty volume
62. Historical periods

SNOWZEES
Bar & Guitar
Formerly Seven O's
Tue: Nintendo Wii Night
Wed: Karaoke Night
Thurs: Eric Holmgren Back from Nashville
Fri: Outer Stylie Rockers
Sat: The Reprobates Rock & Blues
Sun: Open Mike Night
Free WiFi
[7 Minutes from UMass]]
1PM - 1AM · 7 Days a week
330 Amherst Rd.
SUNDERLAND, MA. 01237
413-665-8788

UMass... San Diego?
Take online classes anywhere this Summer
Registration begins March 15
Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net
UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal by Zach Weiner

smbc-comics.com

Once I overcame my moral difficulties with adultery, I started addressing more difficult questions. Like, why was the cranberry juice talking again?

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
The world may find a new energy source when you finally get around to doing your laundry.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Utensils are not that hard to come by. Think about that while you slice butter with your credit card.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
When entering a public bathroom stall, you should resist the urge to yell, "release Kraken!"

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
You do realize that people can hear you whisper "lovely lady lumps" whenever you scoop out mashed potatoes, right?

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
When you find a food item that is so delicious, please make an effort to formally introduce it to those around you.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Your deductive reasoning is matched by a small boy in Nicaragua who often enjoys watching "Blue's Clues."

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
On your way to class today you shall find a true national treasure. Maybe it will be JFK's very own little black book.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Some things are bound to their owner forever like Dorothy and the ruby slippers, and Mark McGwire and syringes.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Playing with fire often leads to pain and misery. Try playing with fire extinguishers instead as they grant whipped cream showers.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
I shall call you Squishy and you shall be mine and you shall be my Squishy.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
If Tim Burton can do anything right, he can pretty much give all drug dealers the day off when his movies come out.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
No one likes leaving the DC like they are committing a walk of shame. Grab an ice cream next time, kiddo.

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!

Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

Sweaty Macaroon

				7			1
		3			5
					7	9
	9		6		2		8
		7		9		3
5			7		3		4
2			9			5
				1			2
4	3	8

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.puffton village.com

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub — chainsawsuit.com

Pictures for Sad Children by John Campbell — picturesforsadchildren.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further...CAMP MATAPONI, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (samm crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders and more! Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com

SUMMER ON CAPE COD

The Wychmere Harbor Beach Club is conducting interviews for summer employment on our Cape Cod Property March 25, 26, 27 and April 1, 2, 3. Servers, Lifeguards, Beach Attendants, Culinary Staff and more! On-Site Housing is available. Visit our website at www.wychmereharbor.com and call (508) 432-1000 x129 for details!

FOR RENT

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing. 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug. or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

TUTORING SERVICES

Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats, GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 Jboid42@yahoo.com

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends From $89 Complete. Montreal Express.Net MontrealBlowout.com 781-979-9001

MISCELLANEOUS

Looking for a business opportunity that allows you to not only market services that people use everyday, but the services of the future too? This opportunity provides outstanding earning potential with ongoing training and support. You are in business for yourself, but never by yourself. Stop imagining and start living! ACN Independent Representative William Carey 774-232-8604 wmc7771@gmail.com, http://4incomefromhome.acnrep.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTHURSDAY

THURSDAY, MARCH 4, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen drop fourth-straight to La Salle

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team might now have to try to clinch an Atlantic 10 Tournament birth without one of its best players, and could rely on another team losing just to get by.

The Minutemen (10-19, 4-11 A-10) fell to La Salle Wednesday night, 89-78, at the Tom Gola Arena, and lost forward Terrell Vinson to a left ankle injury early on in the second half.

UMass must now win against Rhode Island Saturday or have Saint Joseph's lose at home to the Explorers.

The Hawks defeated George Washington on Wednesday night, hurting UMass' postseason hopes, as the Minutemen could have clinched with an SJU loss.

"I'm not a big man on excuses, but he's become a guy we rely on," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said of Vinson. "He has been rebounding the ball, and he is one of our tougher players, and anyone who has watched our team knows he is one of our primary options, so I hope his ankle is alright for Saturday."

Vinson finished the night with eight points on 4-of-4 shooting, while grabbing three rebounds in 11 minutes before leaving the game.

"We don't really know too much, I think it was a sprain, so I'm happy it wasn't severe," Kellogg said. "We need him to get better and to establish himself because he is one of the better freshmen in the league, but we made runs without him."

La Salle	89
UMass	78

Senior guard Ricky Harris led the game with 31 points, including hitting a career-high eight 3-pointers, while A-10 leading scorer Rodney Green scored 30 for the Explorers in a match-up featuring the two scoring leaders on the Explorers' Senior Night.

"Ricky's a very emotional guy, and it was a tough loss, and he wants a chance to play in an A-10 tournament his senior year," Kellogg said. "He gave it everything he had, and I gave him the green light, and he deserves it. Nineteen threes are a few to many, but he had a lot of good looks."

Harris went 11-of-26 from the field and 8-of-19 from beyond the arc while finishing with seven rebounds, three steals and five assists.

With Harris' 3-pointers, the Minutemen set a school record of 39 attempts, while shooting 41 percent from the field.

Along with Harris, freshman guard Freddie Riley and Sampson Carter had nine points each, while Sean Carter and Anthony Gurley had seven and eight points respectively.

"I'm frustrated with the way the outcome went, and there were a few plays we didn't come up with the ball or make the right play," Kellogg said. "We pride ourselves on making it to the free throw line and we didn't do that tonight."

The Minutemen went 11-of-19 from the line, while the Explorers were 28-of-38. La Salle also scored 22 points off turnovers and 38 points in the paint, while scoring 14 fast break points.

The Minutemen complete their regular season when they take on Rhode Island at the Mullins Center this Saturday at 4 p.m.

The Rams are coming off an 80-58 win over Charlotte on Wednesday evening as Delroy James paced URI with 13 points, eight rebounds and four steals, while Keith Cothran led the way with 18 points.

UMass fell to the Rams back on Feb. 6, 93-85, as Harris led the way with 32 points. The Minutemen erased a late 24-point deficit, scoring 21 points late in the second half to come within six points, but could not break even.

This will be the 134th meeting between the two teams, with the Minutemen winning 32 of the past 45 meetings, including four of the last six.

Gurley was second on the team with 15, while Carter added 11 in the loss against URI.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Senior Ricky Harris drives to the basket during the Minutemen's loss to Saint Louis. He put up 31 points in the loss to La Salle.

UM to face Richmond

Dacko hopes team can learn from last meeting

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

It is not the same game or the same team from mid-January.

The Massachusetts women's basketball team will play its first game of the A-10 tournament Friday against Richmond. In their only other meeting this year, the Spiders defeated the Minutewomen, 73-62, at the Mullins Center Jan. 16.

UMass head coach Marnie Dacko is confident the upcoming meeting will not play out like the first one.

"We're a much better team now than we were on Jan. 16 as far as defense and rebounding [are concerned]," Dacko said. "We're [also] much more comfortable handling the pressure, and we have to be because they have an assortment of presses."

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Senior Diatiema Hill takes a shot against an opponent earlier this season.

The two halves of the Jan. 16 game were polar opposites for both teams. In the first half, Richmond (18-11, 7-7 A-10) shot a blistering 69 percent from the field, while hitting 7-of-10 3-point attempts. In the second half, it shot 23 percent while hitting three of 13 3-point attempts. UMass' poor first half was balanced out in the second, when it shot 59 percent from the field and hit 4-of-7 3-point attempts. However, the second-half surge was not enough for the Minutewomen (11-18, 5-9 A-10).

"They shot seven of 10 from three [range]," Dacko said. "We played man defense and zone defense and it didn't matter. I watched [a lot] of Richmond's film, and they've never had a better half."

The Minutewomen would prefer to worry about things they can control, like containing junior guard Brittani Shells, who has started all but one game in her collegiate career and currently leads the conference in scoring, with an average of 17 points per game. On Jan. 16, Shells led all scorers with 22 points to go along with four rebounds, two assists and three steals.

"We know what we have to do against Richmond. We have to put a great deal of pressure on Brittani Shells," Dacko said. "She had 22 against us and is one of the top scorers in the league."

Aside from defending Shells, UMass must execute in other aspects if it wants to repeat its second-half performance, when it outscored the Spiders, 33-29.

One area that does not bode well for UMass is turnovers. The Minutewomen have the worst turnover margin in the conference, averaging 5.1 more turnovers than their opponents. Richmond, on the other hand, owns the best turnover margin in the league, averaging 5.2 less turnovers than their opponents. If that trend plays out, UMass would have ten more turnovers than Richmond.

UMass enters the game with the clear advantage inside, and will continue to look to centers Jasmine Watson and Nicole Jones to show up on the stat sheet with points, rebounds and blocks. The duo have been solid defensively, with 75 combined blocks.

"I think our big players really have to step up and take some pressure off the perimeter players. Our bigs are playing really well," Dacko said. "We really have to utilize Nikki and Jaz inside, and then we really have to step it up with ball movement along the perimeter. I think we have a balanced attack now and we're a better team. We're looking for good team basketball."

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

Postseason play begins

Nationally-ranked Musketeers favored in A-10 Tournament

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Staff

The postseason is here as the women's Atlantic 10 tournament starts Friday, with familiar foes and a couple of new features.

The location of the A-10 tournament used to be on a rotating schedule, changing from year-to-year, but the format has changed. From now on, all games in the tournament will be played at The Show Place Arena in Upper Marlboro, Md. The change was made because the league wanted a more neutral site, located near the league offices.

As usual though, the top four seeds of the tournament have a first round bye. Xavier received the No. 1 seed in the tournament for the second year in a row. Dayton got the second seed this year and is receiving its first bye in nine years. Temple notched the third seed of the tournament, while Charlotte – the reigning A-10 champion, rounds out the top four seeds.

No. 5 SJU (16-13, 9-5) vs. No. 12 Fordham (8-21, 2-12)

The first game of the tournament after UMass takes on Richmond is the most lopsided matchup of the first round, as Fordham will try to upset Saint Joseph's.

The Rams are now on a seven-game losing streak to end conference play. Fordham will look to take positives out of its most recent loss, 74-59, to No. 1 seed Xavier.

The Rams snuck into the tourney with a tiebreaker between La Salle and Rhode Island. The three-way tie was broken, but still left the Explorers and Fordham tied for the 12 seed. The Rams received the nod after winning a coin-flip for the postseason.

No. 7 SBU (21-8, 9-5) vs. No. 10 SLU (11-18, 5-9)

Although the Bonnies had an impressive 20-win season, they racked up a 9-5 record in conference play, and were tied with St. Joe's, Duquesne and Charlotte for fourth in the conference.

SBU is now the lowest seed of those four teams, and will face the 10 seed Billikens Friday evening. The Bonnies are on a four-game win streak with victories against George Washington, Richmond, Duquesne and URI. Dana Mitchell leads the Bonnies with 15.3 points per game in conference play.

The Billikens are led by Amanda Kemezys down low. Saint Louis' center was named to the all-conference second team.

No. 6 Duquesne (19-10, 9-5) vs. No. 11 GW (6-21, 3-11)

The Dukes and Colonials face off in the nightcap Friday night. Duquesne can be proud of a 9-5 conference record, but again, because of the tie-breaker, does not have the privilege of a first round bye.

Samantha Pollino, Keri Pryor and Alex Gensler are Duquesne's top three scorers. All three average double-digit points per contest.

Although GW was 3-11 in conference play, the Colonials are closest in relation to the site of the tournament in Upper Marlboro. Brooke Wilson is a spark for her team on defense and the boards, and led all freshmen in rebounds and steals on her way to being named to the A-10 All-Rookie team.

No. 1 Xavier (24-3, 13-0) vs. Richmond (18-11, 7-7)/UMass (11-18, 5-9)

Nationally-ranked Xavier will come in as the clear-cut favorites, no matter who wins the game between Richmond and UMass. The Musketeers cruised to an undefeated conference schedule and have one of the most talented rosters in recent A-10 history.

Xavier forward Amber Harris was named the A-10 Player of the Year, just outshining fellow Musketeer Ta'Shia Phillips for the honor.

No. 4 Charlotte (16-12, 9-5) vs. SJU (16-13, 9-5)/Fordham (8-21, 2-12)

The 49ers are primed and ready for the quarterfinal round on Saturday afternoon, but will have to await the winner of the game between the Hawks and Rams.

If St. Joe's defeats Fordham, the game against Charlotte should be competitive.

No. 2 Dayton (23-6, 11-3) vs. SBU (21-8, 9-5)/SLU (11-18, 5-9)

The Flyers do not have a standout post player, but come into the game with a very balanced team, averaging 42.6 rebounds per game. Dayton has also won eight of its last nine games – the lone loss coming against Xavier in overtime.

No. 3 Temple (22-7, 11-3) vs. Duquesne (19-10, 9-5)/GW (6-21, 3-11)

Temple's aggressive defense led them all season, but it is uncertain how much offensive firepower the team really has. Shaqwedia Wallace and Kristen McCarthy lead the Owls offensively. The pair has over 100 3-point field goals attempted this season.

Neil Carroll can be reached at nacarroll@student.umass.edu.

Minutewomen head to USF for invite

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

No matter how successful the Massachusetts softball team is, it tends to struggle the most at the beginning of the season. At the same time last year, the Minutewomen came out of their second invitational of the season 2-3, but eventually won two straight games against Nebraska and DePaul.

No. 24 UMass (6-4) finds itself in the exact same position as last season and hopes to have the same result this weekend at the Southern Florida Under Armour Invitational. Pitcher Sara Plourde is coming off her best and worst games of the season during the National Fastpitch Coaches Association Leadoff Classic.

The sophomore followed up a 1-0 no-hitter against Illinois State by giving up 10 runs (four earned) against No. 18 Louisiana-Lafayette the next day. The Ragin Cajuns went on to a 14-0 drubbing over the Minutewomen.

UMass coach Elaine Sortino will have to expect her experienced team to get over its worst loss of the season if it expects to do well in Florida. It will be the first invitational of the season where the Minutewomen aren't playing any teams ranked or receiving votes in the USA Today/NFCA Top 25 Poll.

Sortino could not be reached for comment on this weekend's invitational.

The only team with a record above .500 who the Minutewomen will face is Chattanooga, which won four of its last five games at the Frost Classic. Its only losses of the season were to Oklahoma, Michigan and Kentucky.

The Mocs (11-3) are led by Tiffany Baker, who plays all over the field (.410, five home runs, 12 runs batted in), in three categories. They are also deep in pitching, with four pitchers on staff with an earned run average of under 2.21.

Chattanooga's ace is Brooke Loudermilk (0.83 ERA, 7-2), who already has five complete games this season.

The four other teams expected to play UMass have a combined 10-19 record, with no team above .500. The Minutewomen will conclude the invitational on Sunday against Robert Morris, which is opening up its season this weekend and is looking to rebound from a performance last season where it was eliminated the first day of the Northeast Conference Tournament.

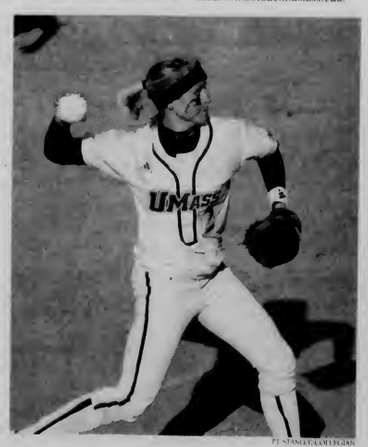
UMass will also play USF, host of this weekend's invitational. The Bulls are coming off a three-game losing streak, including an eight-inning night against Arizona State, who eventually edged them out with an 8-7 victory.

UMass will be the third ranked opponent USF plays this season. The Bulls (5-5) would have played No. 13 Georgia Tech at their home field on Feb. 14, but the game was cancelled.

This weekend will be the second time they have hosted an invitational. USF also opened its season at home and went 2-2 that weekend.

Unlike the Minutewomen, the Bulls don't have a true No. 1 starter on their staff, but have rotated between Kirsten Gordon, Lindsey Richardson and Brittany Bowles. Richardson (3-1, 2.13 ERA) leads the team with 23 innings pitched, and has the most power on the team with 36 strikeouts.

USF is also a better all-around hitting team except for average, where UMass (.281) bats 20 points higher.



The top half of the lineup has been a strong point for the Minutewomen, with six players batting above .300. Outfielder Katie Bettencourt (.458) is the only batter currently hitting above .400.

For now, she has been filling in for Carly Normandin, who has one at-bat on the season and is sitting behind Audrey Boutin. The junior has started eight games as a designated player and is spending time in centerfield, which is Normandin's position.

She is currently batting .238 with two RBIS.

Kyllie Magill, second basemen for UMass, has also been a solid contributer. She currently leads the team with nine runs and is second with six RBIS.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

PJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Shortstop Whitney Williams makes a throw during a game last season. The Minutewomen are 6-4 in 2010.

the daily collegian

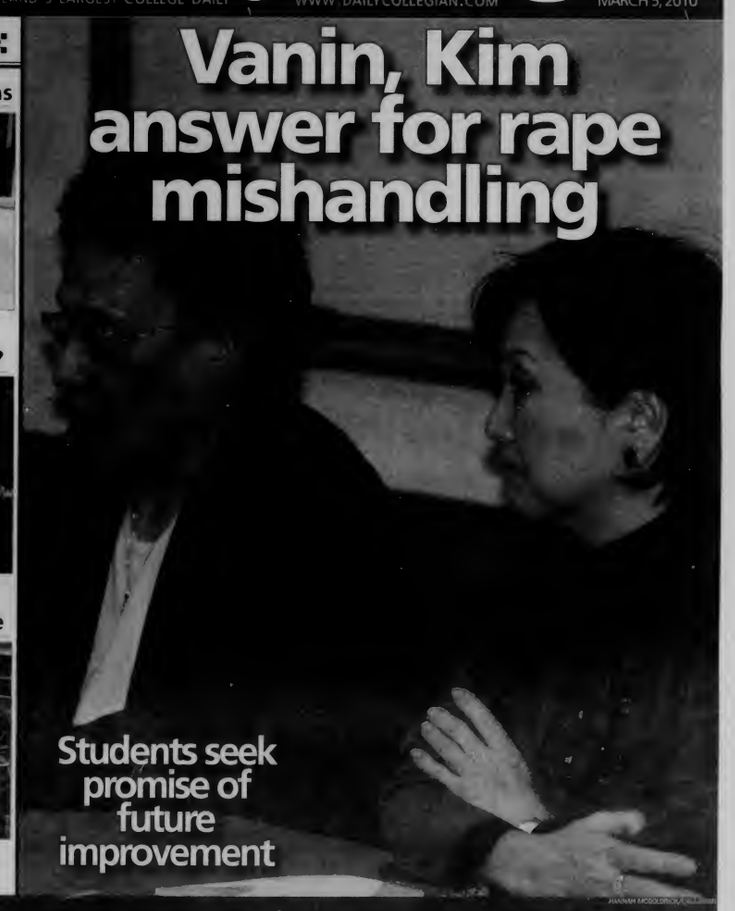
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MARCH 5, 2010

inside this issue:

Playoff push begins

SEE PAGE 13

Are you mad, too?



SEE PAGE 7

Walk on Whitmore

SEE PAGE 2

Vanin, Kim answer for rape mishandling

Students seek promise of future improvement

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXX
ISSUE 30

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S P Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Scannell
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolneirz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Ellie Rulon-Miller
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Pete Rizzo

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE. BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901. THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
NICK BUSH
COPY EDITOR
ELIZABETH TRAN
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHELLE ABBASCIANO

Deans come clean

Kim, Vanin hold forum on assault

By Matt Rocheleau, Alyssa Creamer and Hannah McGoldrick
Collegian Staff

HANNAH MCGOLDRICK/COLLEGIAN

This student spoke to the difficulties for victims of sexual assault in moving forward with legal recourse against their abusers, stating that as a victim, she understands the complications of the legal system.

There is no "magic bullet" to earn back the trust lost from the administration's "unacceptable" mishandling of an alleged rape case, the University of Massachusetts' dean of students told the campus community last night.

At an emotional, one-hour discussion, campus administrators were challenged Thursday with questions on how and why a student who reportedly confessed to raping a UMass alum last fall received "too light" of a punishment.

Though little new information regarding the case was announced, Dean of Students Jo-Anne T. Vanin revealed that the accused student is no longer living on campus, but is still enrolled in classes. She declined to disclose when the student moved off campus and if he did so on his own or if it was the University's decision.

Amanda Molina, a UMass graduate student pursuing a master's in history, was one of three female students who spoke about their own experiences with sexual assault. Two of the students said they felt their respective cases were mishandled after reporting the incidents to the UMass Police Department (UMPD) and the Dean of Students office.

"My junior year I was drugged and raped in a dorm," said Molina. "The case in my opinion was completely mishandled. I don't know about the University disciplinary part of it, but as far as the UMass Police Department, I felt harassed and victimized."

"We not only train our department on how to handle [sexual assault] but also how to be sensitive to [sexual assault cases]. I'm sorry if you had a bad experience," responded UMPD Chief Johnny Whitehead.

Erika Tabur, a kinesiology major said, "I have three friends on this campus that have been victims of sexual assault. Two of them went to both the police and the dean, and nothing came of it. I myself had a sexually abusive boyfriend, who also victimized more women on this campus. I befriended one of the girls and at different times we both went to the police."

"I had a terrible experience with them," she continued. "I was told verbatim by a detective 'the guy's a jerk, and unfortunately being a jerk isn't against the law.' After that, I continued to go and file a dean

See FORUM on page 3

Taking action for education

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Protesters lined up outside the Student Union Thursday at noon as part of the National Day of Action to Defend Education.

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Students and citizens filed into Whitmore Administration Building Thursday to demand continued support for public higher education.

Thursday saw large scale protests as students at the University of Massachusetts participated in the March 4 National Day of Action to Defend Education.

Students met Thursday at 11 a.m. in the Student Union and planned out their demonstration.

The protest kicked off at noon from the Student Union and saw a brigade of students marching to the Whitmore Administration Building. Once at Whitmore, students and community members took to the podium, voicing concerns about the fate of public higher education and espousing their views that public higher education should be free.

Upon the conclusion of the speeches, students poured into Whitmore and up to the second floor, while delegates from the group protesting, the UMass Coalition for the March 4th Day of Action to Defend Higher Education, moved up to the third floor to read a list of their demands to Chancellor Robert Holub.

The Coalition's demands included stopping the rising cost of public higher education, specifically in Massachusetts, preventing fee proposals such as the proposed Commonwealth College and Flagship University fees, and standing in solidarity with students of the University of California system, who have been protesting proposed fee hikes at their universities.

-Collegian News Staff

UM leaders address campus rape case

Officials discuss flaws, future steps to be taken

HANNAH MCGOLDRICK/COLLEGIAN

UMass Police Department Chief Johnny Whitehad talked about the UMPD's protocol for dealing with sexual assault cases.

FORUM from page 2

complaint but I didn't follow through with it, but the other girl did and dealt with the same man I did. She was basically given the same treatment. There was a third girl victimized by the same man who was too afraid to go forward."

Many of the speakers at the event said they were dumbfounded the University could allow what is normally a difficult offense to prosecute to receive such a light punishment, when the accused student had allegedly confessed to the accusations.

"I understand that it was a grey area, and it pretty much was our word against his," said Tabur. "To hear about this incident in which it was confirmed that this man on campus was a rapist and nothing, nothing that really justified it came about from it … I just have to say that I hate that it took The Boston Globe to get a hold of this story to bring it forward and be acknowledged. … People want to come to a safe school, and I just don't want UMass to be one of those schools [that covers up sexual assault cases]."

In the case in question, a UMass student confessed to raping a friend and former student in the fall and was mistakenly given a deferred suspension, according to an article by the New England Center for Investigative Reporting (NECIR) at Boston University published last week. University officials allowed him to stay on campus, a move that now has administrators reexamining UMass' sanctioning policies and procedures.

Further details on the formation of a special commission, which will review the entire Code of Student Conduct (CSC) – something that has not been done since the mid-1990s – were announced by interim Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life Jean Kim. She said the commission will begin reviewing the conduct code shortly after spring break and will make recommendations back to her by November. It is expected to be a 12-person committee which will include five students, Kim said. Any recommended changes to the student conduct code would ultimately have to gain the Board of Trustees' approval before their implementation.

Kim told the Collegian last week that the Dean of Students office has also instituted a written, formal policy to clarify that any cases classified among the most serious offenses, including sexual assault, are to be sent to the Dean of Students for review and a final decision.

There was no one individual to blame for what Kim said last week was too lenient of a punishment and a regrettable situation. She said the blame instead goes to the set up of the administrative process.

"Personally, I do not believe the sanction matched the misconduct," Kim said.

"I can't explain why it happened. I don't know," added Kim referring to the failure to have the case follow proper protocol.

Vanin said the dean who handled the case told the accused student what the sanction would be during a judicial hearing and the student signed a form agreeing to his punishment before Vanin was given the case to review.

"I think it's a very big deal, and I wish, I wish, it was possible to go back and change it," said Vanin of the deferred suspension.

However, the University cannot change or add to the sanctions already handed down through the student judicial system because, as Kim explained last week, there is no appeal process allowed to any person other than the accused.

"It's hard to earn trust. And I know right now, my office has lost a lot of trust, and it is going to take the work that we do going forward and how we handle our cases to earn that trust back," said Vanin. "There is not a magic bullet I can do or my staff can do to regain that."

Following the alleged rape, the University reviewed past cases and said there has been no other case in which proper procedure was not followed, said Kim in.

The University has withheld some details

See FORUM on page 4

Latinos
"Pasea Usea . . . Cocina Caliente"

460 West Street
Northampton, MA 01002
412-461-3551

Open Hours:
Tuesdays and Wednesdays
11:30am-10pm

Thursday and Friday
11:30am-2:00am

Saturday to Monday
4pm-10pm

Come try us out!!

Pay it forward (cannot be combined with other offers)
These funds will be used to create a sit down at Latinos
40% off $100 gift cards
30% off $50 gift cards

Lunch Express (cannot be combine with other offers)
Tuesday-Friday 11:30-3:30:
Any 3 items available during lunch at $6.99

Combo Mondays (cannot be combined with other offers)
Different combo meals please call to find out the combo for the day.

Crazy Tuesdays (cannot be combined with other offers)
All entrees $8

Coupons: (cannot be combined with other offers)

$1 off	$5 off	$10 off
$5 or more purchase	$15 or more purchase	$25 or more purchase

Seeking answers

Community calls for candor on rape

FORUM from page 3

about the case due to federal privacy laws. However, the University has repeatedly refused to confirm NFCIR's reports that the case was handled by Assistant Dean of Students Christina Willenbrock and has also declined to disclose any disciplinary action that might have or could be taken against administrators who mishandled the case.

UMass is not legally required to withhold that information, but rather it is UMass' choice to do so and is consistent with how UMass handles what it considers personnel matters, said Director of News and Media Relations Ed Blaguszewski Tuesday.

Willenbrock reluctantly declined to comment to Collegian reporters who visited her South Hadley home Tuesday.

"The University won't let me speak about it," she said. "I would love to tell you all my opinions and thoughts on the matter, but I really can't."

University officials have thus far declined to comment on Willenbrock's statement.

The victim in the case also reported the incident to UMPD, said Kim last week. She decided against pressing charges at the time, but she may still do so.

Student judicial records can be subpoenaed by the District Attorney's office for criminal prosecution, however, moving such cases forward is often dependent on the victim's desire to do so, as well as whether the victim agrees to testify, said Rebecca Lockwood, associate director of the Everywoman's Center.

HANNAH MCGLOCKLIN/COLLEGIAN

This student said a campaign must be launched to combat what she views as a culture of rape.

The District Attorney's office could not immediately be reached for comment on whether criminal charges will be pursued and whether the office will attempt to acquire the accused student's testimony from his hearing with the University.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrocheleau@dailycollegian.com. Alyssia Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu. Hannah McGoldrick can be reached at hmcgoldr@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?

B.S.O. Ads for $6.70 per column inch

On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10 per week

You could see your ad here!

Best way to get to the campus community!

CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

Move over, Oscar, here come the Dante Awards

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

As the weekend approaches, people can look forward to not only one award show, but two. To honor motion pictures, the Academy Awards will be broadcasted on Sunday, March 7, but on Saturday, March 6, a new award show, "The Dante's," will be held to honor cyberspace videos.

For the first annual "Dante Awards" there are 25 categories for amateur and professional videos. The categories range from Best YouTube Video of the Year, and Best YouTube Video Director to Best YouTube GLBT video and Best YouTube Philosophy Video. With over 300 submissions, the winner of each category will be announced via YouTube March 6, at 9 p.m. Greenwich time, or 4 p.m. Eastern in Massachusetts.

The idea is the brainchild of Jean-Pierre Ady Fenyo. Fenyo is the president and founder of The Rodin Academy of YouTube Video Arts & Sciences, which is presenting the awards. The Rodin Academy of YouTube Video Arts & Sciences, a London-based group, is "a virtual cyber-space Academy for YouTube users, directors, artists, musicians, etc," said Fenyo. The Rodin Academy is not associated directly with Google or YouTube.

An award ceremony for YouTube videos is not unheard of. Since 2006, the YouTube Awards has formally recognized videos for the Best YouTube videos of the year. Videos are nominated by YouTube staff and voted for by users in seven categories. The Dante Awards were created to offer an alternative to the videos advertised on YouTube.

"I see so much junk on YouTube that I decided to promote videos that are inspiring and artistic," said Fenyo.

YouTube members can submit their production in up to three award categories. After submission, a video is rated by the general public and a sub-group of the Academy called V.I.P. Members. To be nominated, a video must be an original creation or not in violation of copyright laws. Another regulation of the awards is that videos must not violate the "non-violent-unity-in-diversity" principle of the Awards, which bans videos that are regarded as hateful or discriminatory.

After nominations, videos are posted to the Academy's website, where the general public and V.I.P. members can vote for their favorite nominees. After the awards are announced, winners receive a Dante Award, to be posted on their homepage as well as a certificate.

David Allum, a sophomore at the University of Massachusetts, sees the awards as an opportunity.

"Many people here at UMass are tired of the crap they see on YouTube," he said. "They go seeking information or entertainment, but that is not what they find."

Though Allum is not currently involved in the Dante's, he said he would like to participate in the future because he believes in the Awards' message.

"We have on our hands a socially conscious, politically savvy and powerfully active grassroots group, right here," said Allum of the Amherst area, adding that he believes the awards are an "opportunity to make a difference."

Another student, freshman Alex Chapman, was intrigued at the prospect of the ceremony.

"I think it's a pretty sweet idea," said Chapman. "It'll create publicity within the YouTube community, definitely, and spark a lot more usage."

Chapman, who prefers to watch funny videos, said he is more likely to watch a video which has won an award.

"If a bunch of people think some video out there I've never heard of is absolutely hilarious, I would definitely want to check it out," he said.

Michelle Williams can be reached at mnwillia@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY THEDANTES.YOLASITE.COM

The first-ever Dante Awards, to be held Saturday, will dish out honors to top YouTube videos in 25 categories.

editorial&opinion

"FREE SPEECH IS THE WHOLE THING, THE WHOLE BALL GAME. FREE SPEECH IS LIFE ITSELF" - SIR SALMAN RUSHDIE EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Students need to stop monkeying around

Ben Sullivan

It's that time of the semester again, when we're confronted and forced to deal with a select group of students running around campus. What you choose to call them is up to you, however their behavior can be seen as annoying to everyone – everyone but themselves.

This select few can be spotted sprinting through the campus center, running into traffic and playing with toy guns. No, this isn't some gang of school boys from Wildwood Elementary. Instead, it's a group of college students equipped with foam darts and red bandanas.

After watching an argument in front of Franklin Dinning Commons about the boundaries of the safe zone, I began to wonder if I have just grown too old to see the fun in a giant game of tag, or if these kids are just weird. I feel like if the University of Massachusetts had lockers and was in an episode of Saved By The Bell, some of these Humans vs. Zombies enthusiasts might find themselves stuffed inside one.

To make fun of these individuals just doesn't seem fair to me. Not only because it is just so easy, but we also have to keep in mind that the "hippie beach" is often used to host Quidditch matches.

Quidditch is another great example. Once again, it's college students who run around with broom sticks pretending they can fly. Other than that, I don't really understand the concept of the game, but then again, I haven't read the Harry Potty books. But regardless of the rules, it is another campus activity that I fail to see as fun for a twenty-year-old college student.

If a giant battle between young adults pretending to be humans and zombies and some others playing a magical sport from a popular children's book series wasn't enough, this campus also houses a group known as bike gang. No there's no Harleys in this pack. Instead, this gang of hell raisers rides their bicycles around town, taking up lanes of traffic so that they can pedal next to one another. It reminds me of the days I used to bike around town pretending I was a badass – before I turned 12.

It wouldn't surprise me in the least bit if someone started a UMass registered student organization for playing with Legos, and I don't think these kids are too far from it.

I hope I'm not alone in thinking this, and I doubt I am. Running around with broom sticks and playing tag were things I did as a child. I thought that by college things like Pokemon cards and Dungeons and Dragons would be considered childish and nerdy. Yet these kids crawled out of their dorm rooms in Northeast and Sylvan and took over campus with their toy guns.

It wouldn't surprise me in the least bit if someone started a UMass registered student organization for playing with Legos, and I don't think these kids are too far from it. The UMass Lego Club would hold its weekly meetings in the basement of the Graduate Research Center.

To any visitor or prospective student on the UMass campus, this makes us look nerdy and immature. But sadly, it wouldn't be the only warning sign on our campus. I'd have to say having signs posted around campus instructing students to pay attention while crossing the street may suggest that students here are not capable of acting their age. I wonder if all these campus games caused the university to form their doubts about us.

I have heard about many people changing or deleting their Facebook profiles when applying for jobs. Some of the things posted may be incriminating or embarrassing, and they don't want potential employers seeing them.

I feel that this Humans vs. Zombie game might have the same effect. As the spring semester rolls around, there have been an increasing number of job fairs being held here on campus.

I'm afraid my future employer might be ambushed by a group of plastic gun toting college students riding their bicycles or their broom sticks, and they might associate me with them because we happen to go to the same school.

It's like revenge of the nerds, only this ends with all of us being unemployed after college.

I'm probably coming off like I think I'm too cool, but let me assure you, I'm not cool. It's just hard for me to understand these games and how, at this age, they are considered fun.

Maybe it's just me who can't see the fun in a bike gang or Quidditch. I might just be getting old and boring, but I do think that at 20 years of age, maybe, just maybe, you should be saving your money for a car or paying your rent. Not buying huge Nerf guns and Legos.

Who knows though. Maybe playing these games in college is totally acceptable, and I'm just a huge bore complaining about it in the newspaper. But I do have to wonder how it makes our University look to everyone else.

Ben Sullivan is a collegian columnist. He can be reached at bjsulliv@student.umass.edu

BIPARTISANSHIP!
GOP
GNAW!
GNAW!
GNAW!

No burka, no problem

France has stepped up to the plate, according to BBC news. An ongoing debate concerning the legal status of the burka – an infamous dress worn most often by the women of Islam – has been settled.

Shane Nickerson

The burka, in all its degenerative glory, endows a full covering of the female flesh, leaving visible only the eyes; the mouth is left covered, drawing a massive suggestion that a woman's voice in society is of no value. Thus far only the headpiece has been banned, being deemed a degrading instrument to downplay the equality of women in society.

For obvious reasons there has been a major push back from Muslims who argue the move is as an intrusion on individual rights to religious expression. What one may be astonished to acknowledge is that nowhere in the Qur'an does it state that women must wear the burka; this is in fact a neoconservative installation to uphold male domination.

The burka is a demeaning garb used to keep women both subservient and silent and should be treated as such. To wear it signifies a position of no authority, no power, no voice; it is victimizing an entire gender. Considerably more important, the burka is dangerous to the health of its host and any offspring she may produce.

Putting aside the mental hazards, babies may have an increased chance of getting Rickets due to vitamin D deficiency induced by the burka's complete shading of the sun.

Many Muslims are outraged at the pervasion of 'civil rights' that would be implicated by a boycott of 'religious tradition.'

Yet there must be a word spoken on behalf of the interest of the majority, when the rights to an individual's 'freedom of religious expression' produces a warrant for the subordination of women and the forceful means of conversion to the Islam faith.

Society cannot and should not attempt to adapt to religious fanatics of any faith that impose beliefs on other people whom are in fact entitled to this same liberty of personal belief.

Any professor here at the University of Massachusetts will tell you that power comes from thinking collectively, not individually.

Well the time has come where we must think collectively for the safety of the population. So long as radical bullying continues to invade upon the safety of the people, it should be thoroughly fought against.

Nothing shows the decision in France to be a step in the right direction more than the recent attempted assassination of a liberal Imam who supported the burka ban in Paris.

Hassen Chalghoumi, a younger and clearly more moderate Muslim, found himself tormented by an outraged, blood seeking mob of 80 Muslim radicals. The mob broke into Chalghoumi's mosque shouting things such as "God is great" and "Liquidation, this Imam of the Jews."

If disgusting actions like this should produce any fortunate outcome, it is in the revelation that a movement towards secularity is in order.

Recently the London Press released an article saying that they too will consider a national ban on the burka.

The article continues to add that more progressive, moderate Muslim groups such as the Muslim Canadian Congress have joined in for the advocacy of the ban. Groups like this deserve, more than anything, gratitude from their fellow religious companions and hopefully there will be no such actions performed as was done to Chalghoumi's mosque in Paris.

It is in these vital decisions, like that of the burka, that our path to ultimate human solidarity can be made or broken.

Shane Nickerson is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at snickers@student.umass.edu.

What one may be astonished to acknowledge is that nowhere in the Qur'an does it state that women must wear the burka; this is in fact a neoconservative installation to uphold male domination.

Climb into someone's skin before you judge

Matt Kushi

"You never really understand a person until you consider things from his point of view ... until you climb into his skin and walk around in it."

There is a lesson to be learned in this quote. This quote is more than a set of words in Harper Lee's American literature classic "To Kill A Mockingbird." This quote is about more than moral righteousness. This quote is about more than perspective.

While this quote may be all of those things, what this quote is truly about is life in general. We walk through life sometimes pretending that we know everything. We sometimes think that we understand everything about everyone. We are wrong.

We don't know everything about everyone because we usually forget one vital ingredient of understanding someone: perspective. This lack of perspective is so common that it sometimes feels natural. Many of the problems concerning inequality – intentional and non-intentional – are rooted from a lack of perspective.

While all people with disabilities may not feel this necessary, and some may even feel that this is just a form of pity, so too are there people out there who only want people to gain perspective and look at life through their eyes. As you read this article, imagine what it would feel like to have a disability of any kind. What would you do? How would you feel? If you really want to educate yourself on this matter, do what has been asked of the legislators and spend a day, or even part of a day, with a family that deals with these issues every day.

While "Walk in Our Shoes" was an event to heighten awareness concerning funds for services for people with disabilities, there is already some hope. The significance and importance of providing proper funding for programs that benefit people with disabilities and those around them has not been lost upon Deval Patrick.

As Sarkissian noted in an e-mail to The Arc of Massachusetts that my mother received, "throughout the recession, Governor Patrick has kept the needs of people with disabilities as a top priority for the Commonwealth. He is the only Chief Executive who has shown the willingness to understand the vulnerabilities of the people we serve and their capacity to serve their community."

If funding to these programs is cut, we are not helping our fellow man stand. Instead, we are crippling him.

Last Thursday, over 100 families and advocates for people with disabilities sought to bring perspective to the eyes of those who are supposed to be blessed with it: politicians.

The event sponsored by the The Arc of Massachusetts, titled "Walk in Our Shoes," took place in response to an ongoing financial situation here in Massachusetts that proposed budget cuts to the programs that are integral in the lives and support of those with disabilities and their loved ones.

My mother, Donna Kushi, works for a family support division that is partnered with The Arc of Massachusetts. In an e-mail that she received concerning "Walk in Our Shoes," the proposed cuts would result in $49 million worth of reduced services in the past year and over $100 million worth of reduced services in the past two years. Clearly, this is an issue that needs to be addressed.

"We want to increase the Legislature's awareness on how serious proposed cuts will be for people of disabilities," said Leo Sarkissian, executive director of The Arc of Massachusetts, according to an article covering the event in the Boston Herald.

"Walk in Our Shoes" encompassed the families and advocates gathering in Room 437 of the State House in Boston sporting worn footwear. After a short presentation, the participants went to visit every senator's and representative's office where they proceeded to present their footwear and leave a certificate in the respective office explaining how they could gain perspective by walking in another's shoes and looking at what life is like for a person with disabilities.

What The Arc of Massachusetts, and all of the loving and compassionate people all over, wish for, is that legislators find the perspective that is necessary to understand another fellow human being. If funding to these programs is cut, we are not helping our fellow man stand. Instead, we are crippling him.

If funding is cut, those that depend on support in order to hold jobs will be forced to lose their jobs. Those that rely on care centers to provide love and happiness to their lives will lose that opportunity. Those families that need help and counsel on how to handle situations that may be unique to them will be forced to shoulder that burden themselves instead of relying upon a support system that should be afforded to every man and woman.

What legislators need to do is find the perspective on this matter and look at the situation from both sides. Is it just a question of economics and finances or is it a question of human morality and humanity? In the final analysis, regardless of what differences may seem to separate us, we all share the same bond whether we are a person with a disability or not. That common bond is that we are all human beings and deserve to be treated with love and respect. We all have the unalienable right to pursuit of happiness.

This is the great lesson that must be remembered in this discussion of perspective. When it is said that people need to find perspective, they need to apply it to all aspects of life. Only then can we truly understand each other for what we are. Only then can we understand how to better ourselves and those around us. Only then can we make this world an even better place.

Matt Kushi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mkushi@student.umass.edu.

arts&living

JASON MYLES GOSS

Goss will play the Iron Horse alongside fellow Massachusetts native folk songstress, Lori McKenna. Tickets are $23 and doors open at 7 p.m.

YOUR WEEKEND GUIDE TO ART, MUSIC, FILM & CULTURE

Burton's Wonderland hitting theaters

By Matthieu Decker
Collegian Correspondent

"Alice in Wonderland," opening in theaters this Friday, certainly isn't set in the Wonderland you remember from the animated Disney classic you likely saw as a kid. Rather, it promises a new take on the story, transporting the viewer into another world in what will doubtless be the next 3-D blockbuster of the year.

It seems like the darker aspects of Lewis Carroll's original novels will lend themselves nicely to director Tim Burton's trademark balance between the darkly comic and visually captivating. Utilizing a technique meshing live-action and animation, Burton hopes to lend a somewhat disturbingly surreal visual atmosphere to the film, without being forced to sacrifice relatable characters for the visual freedom which animation allows. As with most of his projects, "Alice in Wonderland" will use the original story as a template by which Burton will set the stage for the telling of his own story.

Those familiar with his 2005 retelling of "Charlie and the Chocolate Factory" are aware of the artistic liberty he takes in filming his adaptations of time-honored fables. In "Alice," Burton steers away from the dreamlike meandering of the original story, having a somewhat grown-up Alice returning to Wonderland for a new and slightly more plot driven adventure. Expect the comical insanity of the original characters to take on a slightly more psychologically distressing feel; Burton's propensity for a jarring hint of instability in his portrayal of characters is well known.

In "Alice," Burton again teams up with long-time comrade in film Johnny Depp, who, cast as the Mad Hatter will surely grant the film a confusingly interesting performance, if nothing else. Though his recent work with Burton in 2007's "Sweeney Todd: The Demon Barber of Fleet Street" and the previously mentioned "Charlie and the Chocolate Factory" may pale in comparison to their earlier collaborations, such as the brilliant "Edward Scissorhands" and "Ed Wood," one cannot deny that Burton always manages to coax performances from Depp, which at the very least challenge the viewers' imagination. And the very presence of an actor of Depp's caliber makes any movie a more interesting endeavor.

Joining Depp in "Alice" is a laundry list of actors, from romantic comedy staple Anne Hathaway as the White Queen to British multimedia icon Stephen Fry as the Cheshire Cat. Playing the title role of Alice is Australian-born actress Mia Wasikowska, fresh from a 2009 marked by her best supporting actress nomination in the Independent Spirit Awards, for her role in "That Evening Sun." Also joining in are Crispin Glover, missing from live-action since 2007's "Beowulf," and Helena Bonham Carter, recognizable from her role as Bellatrix Lestrange in the "Harry Potter" series. If the cast is any indication, this film is a must-see.

"Alice in Wonderland" promises to be a refreshing new look at an old favorite. With a stellar cast, high-profile director and unique visual style, it has all the ingredients of a good movie. Put on your mercury-treated top-hats, and prepare yourself for sensory overload; Burton's "Alice" will take you as far down the rabbit hole as you could possibly imagine. Mark it on your calendar tomorrow; it will certainly be a very important date. Don't be late; it's about to get a little darker in Disneyland.

Matthieu Decker can be reached at mpdecker@student.umass.edu.

Umphrey's McGee improvise a stellar set last Sunday

Tappan Parker
Collegian Correspondent

Sunday night at 8 p.m. found the Calvin Theatre's stage lit blue from the stage lights, anticipating the arrival of Umphrey's McGee. The band took the stage half an hour later to a brimming, cheering crowd. No opening band, no incredibly long wait for the band to take the stage, just the crowd and Umphrey's McGee.

The concert felt much more casual than most shows. The jamming atmosphere of the show made it feel much more like the band was just rehearsing inside a concert hall. And that was not very far from the truth.

Almost half of the show was completely improvised, which is normal for Umphrey's McGee. The band comes up with new material on the spot, jamming out during-certain songs, melding other songs into one another. But the band is so synced with one another that it becomes hard to tell what is and isn't made up on the spot unless one is a dichard fan. The feeling is completely surreal.

As the band followed the beat, their style constantly shifted, never staying the same for more than a few minutes. The entire show was a journey with, moving from an under the sea look and feel, to something resembling country music, to African beat.

One of the greatest moments during the show was when guitarist Jake Cinninger began playing crazier and crazier solos, so crazy in fact that the lights decided to join in. The lights started going everywhere, frantically changing colors as fast as possible, creating rainbows of beams, lighting up the stage.

The lights as a whole were fantastic throughout the show. They whizzed all over the stage, sometimes at speeds so fast they were dizzying, other times lighting the walls with mesmerizing patterns, but always matching the mood of the music perfectly.

The crowd managed to sing along for almost every song as the band continued to jam through the night with their high-energy sets.

The second set was so high-energy, in fact, that one fan decided to do a little crowd surfing. What was supposed to be one man's fifteen seconds of fun turned into two minutes, with one near fall, as the crowd surfed all around the pit, bumping to the killer swells of the music.

The band was eventually joined on stage during the song "Miss Tinkle's Overture" by bassist Andy Buch, a good friend of the band and a programmer for Harmonix Studios, the creators of Rock Band. Buch jammed on stage with the band for quite a while before taking his leave.

After Buch left the stage, guitarist and vocalist Brendan Bayliss mentioned that Umphrey's McGee is adding a few of their songs to the Rock Band videogame, including "Miss Tinkle's Overture," which Buch programmed into the game. The band then proceeded to exit the stage, but came back after the crowd kept cheering for an encore to play one last song, "Hangover."

Umphrey's McGee has been constantly playing shows since 1998, with rarely more than a half-month break between. With almost 1,500 shows under their belts, the band is dedicated to constantly playing for their fans. Clearly, the band is devoted to its music and jamming for its fans.

For anyone who missed the show or who was there and wants to listen to it again, the entire show has been recorded and is posted online at www.umlive.com. The band records all of their shows and releases them immediately after the concert for their fans' listening pleasure.

The night ended on a positive note as the show ended, leaving the Calvin Theatre aching from the dancing crowd. The show was good, the music was grooving and overall Umphrey's McGee played one hell of a show.

Tappan Parker can be reached at riparker@student.umass.edu.

Oh won't you please take me 'Home'

By Marianne Kim
Collegian Correspondent

"Home" is a two week exhibition in the Student Union Art Gallery displaying artwork from University of Massachusetts and Five College students. According to the website, the exhibition addresses what, where and when home is. An exploration into peoples' different roots, heritage and backgrounds fill the walls of the gallery and welcomes viewers into an artist's interpretation of home.

The gallery strives for community involvement and every theme that is chosen is usually poignant for the time and the society depicted.

Kerry O'Grady, a senior and long-time staff member at the gallery, came up with the theme "Home" because spring is a time of many different celebrations for various cultures and groups such as Chinese New Year, Black History Month, and Women's History Month.

O'Grady said she feels home should be open to experiential interpretation.

"Home invites many interpretations and broadens everyone's experience," She said.

The exhibit's mission is to promote cultural multiplicity and address a diversity of perspectives.

In the back of the Student Union Art Gallery, there are three maps hung up. One is a map of Massachusetts, the next is of the United States, and the third, a map of the world. Tiny orange and pink pins are scattered about these maps. Many are concentrated in Massachusetts, while others go as far as California. There are some that go across the world, from Spain to Korea. These pins mark the places people consider home. Most people automatically assume their home is where they live, and press a pin onto their hometown. Upon entering the gallery, there hangs a blue towel with dainty flowers stitched into the terry cloth, and in front of the second entrance lays a welcome mat. These small touches were added by the Student Union Art Gallery staff, immediately setting the vibe by adding objects almost analogous to the idea of home.

The exhibition itself displays a diverse array of artwork in many different mediums. The pieces are carefully put together and convey each artist's unique approach to the theme. A three-piece set done by Danielle Bryant, an art history major, bursts with bright colors of painted flowers which are pretty enough to be on a breezy spring dress. Every brush stroke adds texture to the delicate petals and leaves of the roses and cone flowers. Bryant's vision was to paint the perfect garden for her future home.

A charcoal sketch titled, "France," on the other hand, consists of no bright pops of color whatsoever. The sketch was made by Irene Ushomirsky, a psychology and art double major, who drew an image of a room with an open door, a window and a large table in the middle. Although the charcoal made the room dark, the light from the window warms up the room. Ushomirsky's skill in shading and shadow drawing gives this room a feeling of familiarity and comfort like a dusty attic.

One piece was not created from the usual paintbrushes or pencils. Cory Gillis created a sculpture made entirely out of items he found on the beach. His work, titled "Peach Beach Tree," consists of wood and twigs wrapped in string and twisted about in wire. Trapped within this wire web are small stones and seashells; fish bait and a little frog figurine peek out from the base of the sculpture. Gillis brings together these unconventional items in a way that channels his own ideas about home.

The work of Gineen Cooper took a literal approach to her identity. In her piece, "Identification Plan," she works with mixed media on blueprint. On a sheet of blueprint, small square pictures surround and fill the paper, allowing the viewer to see a blueprint of Cooper's life.

COURTESY GINEEN.COM

The show features works on the theme of "Home." Gineen Cooper, whose work, "Architect of the Unexcavated" is pictured above, entered a similar piece also drawn on a blueprint.

In conjunction with the exhibition, the Gallery held an open call acoustics and reading session that took place March 3 in the Gallery. Brittni Reilly and Alanna Sennott, staff members at the Gallery, said they aim to hold at least two open mic sessions a month, and that the "Home" exhibition provided a great opportunity to combine artwork and poetry. Students got the chance to share their feelings and thoughts on the idea of "Home." The show consisted of 15 students who performed unique pieces. Most of the readings were poems describing specific moments which reminded them of home.

Danielle Dickey read straight from the journal where she wrote her poems. One poem was about Bambi-themed scenery her mother and aunt painted on her wall when she was seven years old. The words flowed from her mouth and assembled themselves into rhythmic beats that roused the senses. Her words painted a picture of a young girl's mind who sought endless entertainment and evoked a "Mother Goose" cassette player which told children's stories. Her other poem fondly spoke of her father and his influence in shaping her into the individual she is today. She was "Daddy's little girl," who strived to be the best she could because of his support.

Isaac Himmelman was influenced by Def Jam poetry and spoken word. He read two poems with his voice driven by emotion as he became immersed in his words, letting his feelings guide him through the reading. Himmelman, who came to UMass all the way from Santa Monica, Calif., was a bit worried about deciding to attend this University without even visiting. For living so far away, Himmelman suggested that "to feel at home, you have to bring whatever portable pieces home you can carry around with you, like a song, for example." Fortunately, feeling at home came easily for him because he managed to find his niche on campus with a close group of friends who shared common interests with him.

Jimmy Aulenti entertained the audience with an acoustic performance. Aulenti, also known as "J Entity," skillfully and simultaneously played the guitar and harmonica to his song, "Take Me Home." He could not have summed up the night better than by singing, "Take me home, where I belong, I can't feel any closer than the place where I'm from."

As this exhibition explores, "Home" means many different things to people. Yes, home can be that physical structure which places a roof over your head, but with a bit of reflection, it is so much more than that. Home is a feeling for some. They feel at home when love is present and for others it can be the comfort of a song. For many, home is a place. It is a place in their mind of fond memories and happiness. It can also be a place of hardship and pain. Whatever the interpretation, these ideas make us feel like home is never far away.

Marianne Kim can be reached at mariannea@student.umass.edu.

CINEMARK
For advance tickets & showtimes visit
cinemark.com
or call 1-800-FANDANGO + Exp Code 1118#
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
FIRST MATINEE SHOWTIME (7 DAYS A WEEK) $5.25
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.50 • STUDENT $7.25 (WITH ID)

◆ ALICE IN WONDERLAND - REAL D 3D (SZ.75 SURCHARGE) [PG13] 115 400 645 930 1205
◆ ALICE IN WONDERLAND [PG]
210 305 455 550 740 835 1025 1120
◆ BROOKLYN'S FINEST [R] Ⓓ 100 405 710 1010
◆ COP OUT [R] Ⓓ 155 430 715 955
◆ SHUTTER ISLAND [R] Ⓓ
1255 220 400 530 705 1015
◆ THE CRAZIES [R] Ⓓ 120 415 730 1025
AVATAR - 2D [PG13] 110 440 810
DEAR JOHN [PG13] 425 1005
EDGE OF DARKNESS [R] Ⓓ 130 720
PERCY JACKSON & THE OLYMPIANS: THE LIGHTNING THIEF [PG] 115 410 655 940
THE WOLFMAN [R] Ⓓ 935
VALENTINE'S DAY [PG13] 105 420 735 1030
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

Off The Wall Games
$12 Thursday Night Draft!
Look for us at ConBust at Smith College
March 26-28!
MAGIC
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday. 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays
WARHAMMER 40,000
41 Russel St (Village Barn Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

Independent sleeper hit 'The Last Station' delivers

By Nick Coviello
Collegian Correspondent

Each year it seems as though there are one or two independent films which grasp enough of the mainstream that they are nominated for several Oscars. This year, one of those films is "The Last Station," an adaptation from the novel of the same name. "The Last Station" is directed by Michael Hoffman, who doesn't stray far from what he's come to be known for as a director. Hoffman's trademark style contains beautiful visuals of old time Europe, and "The Last Station" is no different in that sense.

Set in Germany and Russia in 1910, Valentin Bulgakov (James McAvoy) is hired as Leo Tolstoy's (Christopher Plummer) secretary by Tolstoy's good friend and fellow Tolstoyan movement leader, Vladimir Chertkov (Paul Giamatti), under the guidelines that he will keep a diary of Tolstoy's wife Sofya's (Helen Mirren) actions. Chertkov explains that Sofya or The Countess as she's referred to, is a danger to Tolstoyanism, which deals with spreading passive resistance and watching out for the common man. As Valentin settles in, he begins to witness the differences between Tolstoy and The Countess, as they seem to disagree about all issues, from politics to religion; however, there is no denying the two love each other.

Valentin finds himself fascinated to be around Tolstoy and claims to be a Tolstoyan, essentially orbiting around love and compassion for all living things. However, while originally in awe and overcome with emotion at the fact that Tolstoy would ask him about his own life, Valentin comes to notice that whenever he speaks with Tolstoy, the topic of conversation is always just that. Whenever Tolstoy and Valentin engage in conversation, Tolstoy always asks Valentin what he thinks. Eventually, Valentin realizes that he cannot fall back on Tolstoyan views in every aspect of his life and instead must be true to himself and think what he feels. Coincidentally, Valentin had met a girl by the name of Masha (Kerry Condon) a few weeks earlier, and upon his newfound revelation, takes an interest in her.

As the story moves forward, the tensions continue to mount between the characters. The Countess believes Tolstoy and Chertkov are going behind her back to change Tolstoy's will, which would give their inheritance to the people, a very Tolstoyan move, instead of his own children. The Countess grows extremely frustrated with her husband's actions, while hating Chertkov more and more, as Tolstoy begins to feel intolerant of his wife's behavior. Meanwhile, Valentin also must face a crossroads, as his fellow Tolstoyans (Chertkov included) begin to disapprove of his relationship with Masha. All the while, Valentin attempts to balance his Tolstoyan beliefs and his feelings for Masha. The battle between personal beliefs and love then takes the viewer through a whirlwind experience of emotion and surely leaves them satisfied.

Simply stated, the main themes of "The Last Station" are to be true to oneself and to love. It doesn't take a rocket scientist to realize that Tolstoy and The Countess disagree on almost all topics of civilized discussion; however, their love remains strong and conquers all.

"The Last Station" features one of the year's best casts, as it received strong performances from all of its leads, including McAvoy, Giamatti and Condon; however, it is Mirren and Plummer who steal the show. The two golden age actors do a wonderful job portraying a loving, yet chaotic relationship, and are able to switch gears at relative ease. The range of acting is truly jaw-dropping, as Mirren and Plummer are able to convey amazing chemistry, such as the scene in which the Countess lures Tolstoy back to the bedroom and they start clucking like chickens at one another, causing an uproar of laughter, and then later are able to make it seem as though they simply cannot tolerate one another's presence. Both Mirren and Plummer were rewarded for their superb performances by receiving Oscar nominations; Mirren for Best Actress and Plummer for Best Supporting Actor.

While "The Last Station" isn't exactly a movie the majority of people would rush out to see on a Friday night, it features a well thought-out narrative, many comical lines of dialogue and action, a beautiful setting, wonderful performances and, most importantly, an excellent story about true love and its ability to overcome anything in its way. In the end, it's 112 minutes that you won't wish you had back and is truly one of the hidden gems of today's independent films. While it may not seem like it would appeal to you at first glance, "The Last Station" is simply a powerful love story and, to take the words of The Countess: "[everyone] loves a romance."

Nick Coviello can be reached at ncoviell@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY AMHERSTCINEMA.COM

Helen Mirren and Christopher Plummer play unlikely lovers in their Oscar nominated roles for Best Actress and Best Supporting Actor respectively in "The Last Station."

SPARE TIME FAMILY FUN CENTER & CITY SPORTS GRILLE
Premier Sports Bar
7 Foot HD Projection TV ~ Over 10 TV's
Pub Style Menu ~ Weekly Drink Specials
Live Entertainment
Every Weekend
Live It Up! Go Bowling
$1.99 per game
Tues & Wed 9pm-Close
All You Can Bowl & FREE Pizza
Thursdays 9pm-Close $13 per person
Unlimited Bowling & Shoe Rental
SPARE TIME & CITY SPORTS GRILLE
www.sparetimenorthampton.net
525 Pleasant St. 584-4830

Domino's
2 or More
2-Topping
Medium Pizzas
$5.99 Each
Order Online!
(413) 256-8911
Route 9, Hadley

CASA celebrates independence

By Rachel Dougherty
Collegian Staff

CASA Dominicana infused a little Caribbean heat into a cold Massachusetts night when they celebrated Dominican Independence Day on Saturday, Feb. 27 in the Fine Arts Center lobby.

University of Massachusetts cultural RSO CASA Dominicana celebrated 166 years of Dominican Independence with a semi-formal dinner which featured presentations by UMass students and professors, a spoken word performance by Dominican slam poet Oveous Maximus, and music by the traditional Dominican ensemble group KumbaCarey.

This year's Independence Day event focused on Afro-Dominican heritage within Dominican culture. It highlighted the need for Dominicans to embrace their African roots and overcome the stereotypes which separate them from their neighbor, Haiti.

In her speech at the beginning of the night, CASA host Gisel Saillant acknowledged the importance of improving relations between the countries, particularly in light of the earthquake which ripped across Hasti on January 12.

"We haven't always had the best relationship with Haiti," Saillant began. "We haven't embraced our Afro-Dominican culture. Tonight we want to celebrate the strength of our African heritage, our history as Dominicans."

The evening began with dinner and dance performances from the Ritmo en Mi, a hip-hop dance group from Peck Middle School in Holyoke, and CASA Dominicana. The theme of Afro-Dominican heritage was explored in a series of skits performed by UMass students throughout the evening. These skits demonstrated the impact of race on relationships, identity, and standards of beauty in the Dominican Republic.

Guest Speaker Augustin Lao-Montes gave a presentation on the history of oppression and independence in the Dominican Republic.

The Dominican Republic achieved its official independence on Feb. 27, 1844, after nearly 400 years of foreign occupation. The island of Hispaniola became a Spanish territory with the arrival of Christopher Columbus in 1492, and was later ceded to France in 1795. The Dominican Republic first declared independence from France in 1821, but was invaded by Haitian forces just nine weeks later. The Haitian occupation lasted for 22 years. Lao-Montes also spoke on the historical significance of race in the formation of a Dominican identity, and how race has had an impact on the country's relationship with Haiti.

"Our culture tends to deny that most citizens are African descended," said Lao-Montes, "there is a stereotype on the island that blacks are the Haitians that Haitians are the real blacks."

Lao-Montes criticized this racial stratification and the perceived conformity to European standards to which Dominicans adhere in the Dominican Republic.

"Everyone is some kind of chocolate or café con leche in the Dominican Republic," Lao-Montes said to the laughter of the audience. "95 percent are of African descent, the highest in the Caribbean. Overcoming these racial stereotypes is especially important when there is such a tragedy in Haiti and we need to strengthen ties between the two countries."

CASA Dominicana has already begun work supporting Haiti in their time of need, working alongside UMass' Haitian American Student Alliance to raise money to send supplies to earthquake victims in Haiti.

According to Saillant, the hostility between the nations is hard to imagine, especially given the close relationship between Haitian and Dominican students on the UMass campus.

"Relations between Dominican and Haitian students are so different at UMass than they are on the island," said Saillant, "Here we're so close. We work together, we support each other. We plan a HASA/CASA event together in the spring. If you look around, you'll see members of the Haitian American Student Alliance here tonight, to support our Independence event."

Dominican ensemble Kumba Carey played traditional music Saturday as students danced in celebration of 166 years of Dominican independence.

Her opinion was supported by co-host and fellow CASA member Modesto Montero, who said the earthquake will likely have an impact on Haitian-Dominican relations.

"I think the earthquake already has had an effect," said Montero, "but we have yet to see whether that effect will be positive or negative. We're already seeing the support from the Dominican government in terms of short-term aid to Haiti. It's in the long-term that we'll see whether the tragedy has any real effect on relations between the countries."

One of the highlights of the night was a spoken word performance by Dominican slam poet Oveous Maximus. Maximus is an internationally recognized spoken word artist who dedicates his performances to the memory of his brother, Carlos "Zinc Blue" Saleeds, who committed suicide in 2003. He has been featured on Showtime at the Apollo in New York and on the HBO series "Def Poets."

Maximus was late to the CASA event but, according to Saillant, performed for UMass free of charge.

"Getting Maximus to come was easy. He really wanted to come to UMass," said Saillant of Maximus. "We're hoping he'll return for the HASA/CASA event in the spring."

The evening ended in dancing, with music provided by the traditional ensemble group KumbaCarey.

Rachel Dougherty can be reached at rkdugher@student.umass.edu.

DO YOU WANT TO LEARN HOW TO RUN A BUSINESS?
COME MEET GARY RICHARD MULLANE OF MULLANE ASSOCIATIES!

FREE and open to all!
114 Stockbridge Hall

MONDAY, March 8th
6:30 - 9 PM

Mullane Associates has received two Excellence in Arboriculture Awards from the National Arborist Association, Inc. (now TCIA). The award is given to companies that display outstanding arboriculture initiative and knowledge.

Sponsored by the Stockbridge Forum and funded by Alpha Tau Gamma, the academic, service, and social fraternity of the Stockbridge School of Agriculture

Ankle and head injuries prevelent

By Michael Rietmulder
The Minnesota Daily

A comprehensive study of injuries among five fall college sports released by the NCAA last week found that concussions were the second most common injuries in football and soccer, behind ankle injuries.

The study, which tracked injuries occurring between the 2004-05 season and the 2008-09 season, revealed that concussions comprised nearly 7 percent of all injuries in college football and 11 percent in women's soccer.

Prior to its public release, the data helped spur a January decision by the NCAA Playing Rules Oversight Panel instructing playing-rules committees to examine their existing policies and consider instituting additional rules to prevent head injuries. In February, the NCAA Football Rules Committee became the first to act when it announced a rule change aimed at promoting player safety.

The rule states that players who leave the game as a result of injury must be examined and cleared by medical staff before returning to the game. The rule is crafted to explicitly cover players who exhibit signs of concussions.

Northwood University Athletics Director and Football Rules Committee member Pat Riepma calls the rule change "an important step forward" in college football.

"Safety is our No. 1 concern, and we're going to do everything we can as a rules committee to make sure our student-athletes are in a safe environment," Riepma said.

Perhaps more than in any other sport, a culture of playing when hurt has been cultivated in football. Riepma said that the old adage of "playing through the pain" is obsolete, especially when it comes to head injuries.

The rule change takes the decision of whether a player should return to the field after an injury away from players and coaches, Riepma said.

"It puts the decision in the hands of the medical people, and that's where it belongs," Riepma said.

Though concussion injuries have received a lot of attention in football, the recent study conducted by the Datalys Center indicates that they are prominent in other sports as well. Between 1988 and 2004, concussion rates among all sports rose by 7 percent each year.

Days after the Football Rules Committee took action, the Men's and Women's Soccer Rules Committee followed suit.

One aspect of the soccer rule change grants referees the authority to stop play if a player is exhibiting signs of concussions.

C. Cliff McGrath, the secretary-editor of the soccer rules committee and former coach at Seattle Pacific University, said the increased awareness of head injuries as well as liability issues factored into the decision.

Combine OUR DISCIPLINES
Design YOUR FUTURE
INFO SESSION
March 11 @ 6 PM
TO REGISTER, VISIT
Northeastern University
Graduate Studies

LOCAL
BURGER & FRIES
Local Meats, Local Produce, Beer Battered onion rings-
Beef Burgers ▪ Home Made Veggie Burgers
Turkey Burgers ▪ Portabella Burgers
Handcut Fries ▪ Fried Pickles & MORE!
Open WK.ENDS 'Till 3AM
16 Main St., Northampton, MA
586-5857
www.LocalBurgerAndFries.com
Sun-Wed 11:30am-10pm; Fri-Sat 11:30am-3AM
BE A LOCAL HERO buy locally grown

MAXWELL SPARR/COLLEGIAN

Junior Stephanie Aguguo competes in a race last year. Aguguo helped lead UMass in point totals last weekend, and will compete this weekend in Boston.

UM competes in ECAC's

Cotto, Aguguo look to impress

By Michael Wood
Collegian Staff

At Boston University's Track and Tennis Center last weekend, the Massachusetts men's and women's track teams competed in the New England Championship and each took sixth place. The event left both teams feeling confident and eager going into competition this Saturday.

This weekend, the teams will travel to Boston and Roxbury, Mass. for the IC4A and Eastern College Athletic Conference Championship meets. Both events mark the culmination of the indoor track season, and a great opportunity for athletes to compete against the best, not only in the region, but across the country. Each meet includes the best individual athletes from over 70 colleges and universities throughout the United States.

The men's team will revisit BU for the second consecutive week, as they send their athletes into competition in the IC4A Championship. Coach Ken O'Brien said that he is confident in his team and that although there are fewer competitors in the IC4A, they are the absolute best in their event, and he expects it to be a challenge. When asked about last weekend's success, O'Brien said it was a morale boost heading into the last event of the season this weekend.

"[NEC's] helped us dramatically," said O'Brien. "We were able to qualify some additional events and the anticipation for the last big event has been building all season."

O'Brien also talked about the upcoming meet itself, saying that there is great anticipation and excitement about the IC4A meet, but that he has stressed to his team that they should not forget that there is still an entire outdoor season remaining.

"The IC4A's are a great tournament, probably the second best in the country at the collegiate level," O'Brien said. "There should be about 75 athletes there, which is great for our guys, and they're excited But what they have to remember is that there is still another season. This isn't it for us."

The Minutemen finished sixth overall in a field of 30 teams at the NECs. They rode the momentum from record-breaking performances by their upperclassmen and qualified several members for this week's IC4A meet.

Tyler Cotto was the headliner for UMass last time, as he broke his own record in the 55-meter hurdles event, missing the NCAA Championship meet by only milliseconds. Cotto was named a UMass Athlete of the Week for his outstanding performance.

Looking to duplicate their success from the NECs, the Minutewomen will visit Roxbury, Mass. for the second time this season, as they will compete in the ECAC Championship meet, also set to begin Saturday.

Last week the Minutewomen were able to vault 11 places in the standings after rebounding from a subpar showing on the first day of the meet. Upperclassmen with experience in such circumstances helped the Minutewomen come back for day two.

Stephanie Aguguo and Lisa Wilson helped lead UMass in point totals with Aguguo winning the triple jump event with a record-breaking mark of 39-08.75 meters, while Wilson improved upon her own record in the shot put.

UMass also saw impressive performances from freshman Nicole Pompei and Courtney Baldwin. Pompei finished sixth in the pole vault event and was the sole scorer for the Minutewomen on day one, as Baldwin set a record in the 1000-meter run.

Both the IC4A and the ECAC Championship meets are set to begin on Saturday at 10 a.m.

Michael Wood can be reached at mcwood@student.umass.edu.

UMass visits Bulldogs after week–long break

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

A week off in the beginning of a season could help a team rest and mentally prepare for the rest of their campaign.

For the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, they hope their time off benefits them when they take on Yale Friday evening at 7 p.m. at Reese Stadium.

"We were fired up to play a game, and obviously they were a little disappointed, so it took us about a day to get over it, and now we're in our prep for Yale, and we're working hard at it," UMass coach Greg Cannella said.

The No. 12 Minutemen (2-0, 0-0 Colonial Athletic Conference) were supposed to play Ohio State last Saturday, but could not travel due to weather conditions, and the game got postponed.

With the week off, the team was able to practice Friday and Saturday, including this week while scouting the Bulldogs, who defeated Holy Cross, 14-7, in their season opener on Saturday.

"Our leadership, with the seniors and our captains has kept our guys focused pretty well."

Senior midfielder and captain Bobby Hayes is first on the team in goals with seven, while the Minutemen are second in the nation in goals per game with 17.5. The team has scored 15 and 20 goals respectively in their first two games, both victories over Sacred Heart and Hartford. The 20 goals performance against the Hawks was the most goals scored by a UMass team since the 2002 season.

Along with Hayes, midfielders Ryan Hantverk (six goals, three assists) and Anthony Biscardi (four goals, four assists) have helped a young offensive attack generate goals so far this season.

The attacking unit has also been impressive with Art Kell (five goals, two assists), Kyle Smith (two goals, three assists), Ryan Liebel (three goals) and Ryan Smith (three goals) continuing to score effectively.

Freshman midfielder Will Manny, who leads the team in assists with five, ranks 11th in the NCAA with a 2.5 assists per game average.

The contest will be UMass' first game under the lights in six seasons, with the last game resulting in a 16-4 win over Manhattan on April 9, 2004 at Garber Field.

This will also be the Minutemen's first road night game since 2002 at Syracuse, which ended in a 18-10 loss for UMass.

The Minutemen hold a 18-6 all-time lead over the Bulldogs, who traveled to Amherst last year and were defeated by then 20th-ranked UMass, 18-6, but have won two of the last three meetings.

Jim Connolly had a career-high seven goals for the Minutemen, while Tim Balise added four, and goalkeeper Doc Schnoder made 14 saves in the victory.

The Bulldogs are led by the attackmen brothers Brendan and Matt Gibson, who scored three goals and four goals and two assists respectively in the victory over Crusaders.

"The Gibson brothers are outstanding players, looking for each other constantly, great finishers, great ball handlers and they're well balanced," Cannella said.

"They have two strong midfield groups; so again, they probably have more experience on the offensive end then the defensive end."

Along with the Gibson brothers, the Bulldogs are led by Brian Douglass, who scored three goals in the victory over HC.

"[They're] very athletic, both sides of the ball, [they're] very aggressive on the defensive side of the ball, and very aggressive in transition," Cannella said. "They push transition coming from their poles and their short stick, D-middies, down to their attack."

Freshman midfielder Colin Fleming, who has played in just one game this season due to a shoulder injury, could return to the Minutemen lineup against the Bulldogs with a week off to rest.

"This allows him to get back into the mix a little bit for us," Cannella said.

"We've only played two games, but we've been going for six weeks, so our legs were getting tired, so you get some time off. But mentally, it's tough to play a bunch of games in a row, which we have coming up so hopefully, that time off will help us prepare mentally as well."

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

BRIAN TEUDER/COLLEGIAN

Senior midfielder Christian Hain looks to score against the Bulldogs last season. Hain and the Minutemen take on Yale Friday evening.

Big weekend for Cahoon and Co.

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

To say the Massachusetts hockey team faces its most significant weekend of the season would be an understatement.

Fighting for a chance to earn a spot in the Hockey East Tournament, UMass heads on the road for a pair of games against Maine, with its playoff fate on the line.

Sitting in ninth in the standings, the Minutemen (16-16-0, 11-14-0 HEA) are a point behind Merrimack for eighth place and two points behind Boston University, Northeastern and Vermont, who are all tied for fifth.

The No. 17-ranked Black Bears (16-13-3, 13-10-2 HEA), meanwhile, are third in Hockey East behind Boston College and conference leader New Hampshire.

Though Maine has already gained a berth in the Hockey East Tournament, UMass coach Don Cahoon knows that the Black Bears still have something to play for.

"They're fighting as hard as we're fighting, they're fighting for home ice and they know that's such a big part of success in the playoff structure," Cahoon said before Wednesday's practice. "There's always the exception to the rule, but that's a big advantage."

The Minutemen have won the last three meetings with Maine, including the 5-3 victory on Oct. 23 earlier this season. All those wins, however, came at the Mullins Center. UMass has dropped seven straight contests at Alfond Arena, with the last win coming in the 2003-04 season.

"The environment is just crazy," Cahoon said. "It's a tough place to play, and you just have to block everything out and compete."

All-time, the Black Bears lead the series with the Minutemen, 39-14-5, dating back to 1978, when Maine won 13 of the first 14 meetings. Since 2005, however, the series has been more even, with UMass holding an 8-7-1 edge.

In their last game, the Minutemen were unable to break their losing streak, dropping their sixth straight in a 2-1 overtime heartbreaker at Conte Forum against BC. UMass received its only goal from senior Brett Watson, who scored his first goal in 82 games. At the two minute, two second mark in the extra frame, Chris Kreider scored the game-winning shot for the Eagles.

Junior goaltender Paul Dainton recorded 31 saves in the loss, while Parker Milner made 34 stops for BC.

"Friday's game was a terrific effort and could have gone either way," Cahoon said. "It was a game that we were in every bit of a position to win as BC, but the bottom line is we didn't get the win. Building off of it, I think it's a quick refresher off of how we need to play to be in the mix."

Maine, meanwhile, split its weekend's road contests against Merrimack in North Andover. On Friday night, the Warriors scored six goals en route to a 6-3 win over the Black Bears. The following night, Maine responded with an offensive outpour of its own to defeat Merrimack, 5-1.

Sophomore Gustav Nyquist scored two goals and added two assists to lead the Black Bears' attack, while freshman goaltender Shawn Sirman made 24 saves and allowed only one goal to pick up his first collegiate win.

Though Maine and UMass have seemingly switched places since the last meeting between the two teams, Cahoon realizes his squad can atone for its recent struggles with wins this weekend.

"We need to just take care of this weekend. About a month ago we were in second place, and now here we are sitting in ninth place," Cahoon said. "I don't go there and don't persuade my guys to go there, they just need to take care of what's right in front of them and go forward."

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Senior Will Ortiz goes after the puck earlier this season. UMass takes on Maine this weekend in hopes of making the HE Tournament.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Martin Nolet and the rest of the Minutemen will need to step up this weekend in order to gain a birth in the Hockey East tournament.

HEA Tournament picture unclear entering weekend

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

At this point, very little is certain when it comes to this year's Hockey East Tournament.

For the eight seeds that can be claimed, none are completely secured, and five are still open. Fighting for those five spots are six of the seven remaining teams in the conference. Providence is the only school to be eliminated from contention.

Currently, the odd-team-out of those six heading into the final weekend of the regular season is the Massachusetts hockey team.

With a weekend set at Maine (16-13-3, 13-10-2 HEA) one of the three teams to clinch a playoff birth, along with New Hampshire and Boston College, who also clinched home ice – it will be a tall order for the Minutemen (16-16-0, 11-14-0, HEA).

"[Maine will] be fighting as hard as we'll be fighting," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "They're fighting for home ice, and they know that is such a big part of success in the playoff structure. Three out of four series usually go to the home ice team. There's always the exception to the rule, but it's a huge advantage."

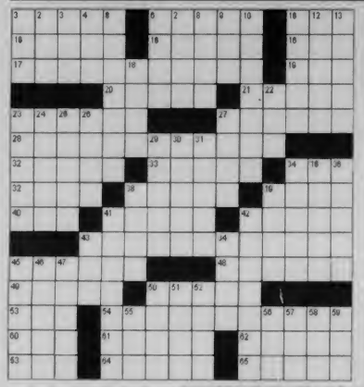
Currently one point behind eighth-place Merrimack, UMass will need at least two points over the weekend and a sweep of the Warriors in a home-and-home with the Friars to move up and clinch a berth in the tournament, which begins next weekend with the quarterfinals.

At the top of the conference stands UNH in first and BC in second, who play a home-and-home set starting on Friday. With three points separating the two schools, there is the possibility of the two swapping places, but neither has to fear falling out of the top two spots, with BC holding a four-point cushion on third-place Maine and the head-to-head tiebreaker.

After the top two seeds, the rest of the conference could pan out much differently after the weekend. Trailing Maine in fourth place and currently in position for the final home-ice seed is UMass Lowell, followed by a three-way tie for fifth place between Boston University, Northeastern and Vermont.

While the Black Bears can only drop as low as fifth place, UML could drop from a home-ice seed to not even making the tournament. BU could drop out of the playoff picture as well, but could also climb as high as third place. The Huskies, Cattamounts and Merrimack are in similar positions, as BU, with the possibility of claiming home ice, could only claim the fourth and final home-ice seed, but still be at risk to not make the tournament at all.

The Warriors may covet the home ice with the nation's best home record (12-3-0), while playing to a 2-13-1 record on the road.



Of the teams still alive, UMass is the only squad without a chance of claiming a top-four seed. But with the standings so close, the Minutemen could jump as high as sixth if it were to sweep the Black Bears over the weekend and get help from other teams.

But Cahoon and the rest of the Minutemen are more concerned with just getting his team prepared for this weekend and getting into the Hockey East Tournament, rather than focusing on how high of a seed they can get.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

comics

CROSSWORD

"Club Nights" at the MONKEY BAR

Thurs. 3/4 JOHNNIE MCKNIGHT
Party Past Midnight Special Guest DJ

Fri. 3/5 DJ VIVEK
A New Flavor for the DJ Underground
Dance, House, Techno Mixture of Int'l Melodies

Sat. 3/6 DJ HOTT SIZZLE & YEAH GUY
TECHNO TUESDAY
INSIDE OUT NIGHT!!

Tues. 3/9 INSIDE OUT NIGHT!!

413-289-1600
63 North Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
www.mymonkeybar.com
21+

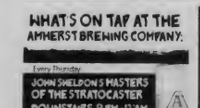
LA PIAZZA
Sundays Open at NOON

Best Deals in Town!!

ALL CALZONES	$4.99
ALL 12" SUBS	$4.99
ALL SALADS	$4.99
ALL ENTREES	$5.99
10" CHEESE PIZZA	$4.99
Each X-Tra topping .75
12" CHEESE PIZZA	$5.99
Each X-Tra Topping $1
16" CHEESE PIZZA	$6.99
Each X-Tra Topping $1.25
16" CHEESE PIZZA + 10 WINGS (BONE)	$11.50
16" CHEESE PIZZA + 1/2lb WINGS (BONELESS)	$11.50

OCMP
Free Delivery
(413) 253-6444
www.lapiazzaristorante.us

WHAT'S ON TAP AT THE AMHERST BREWING COMPANY.



Every Thursday
JOHN SHELDON'S MASTERS OF THE STRATOCASTER
DOWNSTAIRS 9 PM - 12 AM

Every Tuesday
LOST IN HD
UPSTAIRS ON THE BIG SCREEN

Monday, March 8th
JEFF HOLMES BIG BAND
DOWNSTAIRS 8:30 PM - 11 PM

Wednesday, March 17th
ST. PATTY'S DAY DINNER
LOCAL CORNED BEEF & CABBAGE!

Keep updated on ABC events facebook
BOOK YOUR GRADUATION PARTY NOW!
24 NORTH PLEASANT AMHERST
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

Think twice. Borrow once.

Apply once and secure financing for your entire college career! Rest assured your local not-for-profit cooperative will be with you every step of the way.

UMassFIVE COLLEGE FEDERAL CREDIT UNION
800.852.5886
umassfive.org

ACROSS

1. Fools
6. Defeat by deceit
11. Supersonic transport
14. Seize control
15. Big
16. Equality
17. State of extreme poverty
19. French for "Street"
20. 9-9-9-9
21. Matching jackets and trousers
23. Dishes of greens and tomatoes
27. Laments
28. Announcement
32. Give expression to emotion
33. Line up
34. Chief Executive Officer
37. Long periods of time
38. Irritations
39. Bland
40. Not wet
41. Artist's workstand
42. A very light brown
43. Inaccessibly
45. Affixed to letters
48. Steeds
49. What a volcano does
50. Cover with drops
53. Disinfest
54. Incapable of being repudiated
60. Japanese sash
61. Anagram of "Laser"
62. Chieftain
63. Soaked
64. Utter
65. Anagram of "Deign"

DOWN

1. Failure
2. Utilize
3. Young dog
4. Go astray
5. Axis
6. Tribe
7. Despise
8. Anagram of "Sire"
9. In the past
10. Tautness
11. A branchlet
12. Fry quickly in a little fat
13. Braid
18. Passport
22. Vase
23. Velocity
24. A rigid protective covering
25. Deranged
26. Portrays
27. Excavates
29. A large and imposing house
30. Extraterrestrial
31. What a book is called
34. Children's beds
35. US symbol
36. Complies
38. Drains of resources
39. With affection
41. Discharges
42. Fired quickly
43. Elf
44. You (archaic)
45. Short-horned goat antelope of southeast Asia
46. Clan
47. Financial inspection
50. Naked
51. Singer ____ Fitzgerald
52. Something round and flat
55. Short sleep
56. French for "Friend"
57. Any tall hill in Scotland
58. Hindlimb
59. Before

Summer Session Just Got 50% BIGGER!!!

3 Sessions to Choose From:
- Session I: May 17 - June 7
- Session II: June 8 - July 13
- Session III: July 14 - August 17

Registration Begins March 15

Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net

UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

You know what you want to do when you're lonely at night. Go ahead, draw some comics, it won't hurt.

WE WANT YOUR COMICS

COMICS@DAILYCOLLEIAN.COM

SNOWZEES
Bar & Guitar
Formerly Seven O's

Tue: Nintendo Wii Night
Wed: Karaoke Night
Thurs: Eric Holmgren
Back from Nashville
Fri: Outer Stylie
Rockers
Sat: The Reprobates
Rock & Blues
Sun: Open Mike Night

—Free WiFi—

[[7 Minutes from UMass]]
1PM - 1AM · 7 Days a Week
330 Amherst Rd.
SUNDERLAND, MA. 01237
413-665-8788

MONDAY - SATURDAY
Happy Hour -
1/2 Price Appetizers 9:30 - Close

EVERY THURSDAY:
Promo & Trivia Night

EVERYDAY:
$1.00 Drafts and $5 Movie Tickets!*

21ST BIRTHDAY:
Free Entree or Small Pizza with ID*

Hampshire Mall
Across from Cinemark
413-549-0077
FREE Delivery

ARIZONA PIZZA

Wheez the Juice

8
		6			2	4
3						1	2	8
				7
		3	4	6		2	1
		4			1	6	8	9
			8			3
		2		9		7
					3	9

amherst cinema
Fri Mar 5 - Thu Mar 11

THE LAST STATION
2:15 4:45 7:30 10:00 +11:45am Sat & Sun

THE OSCAR NOMINATED SHORT FILMS 2010
LIVE ACTION: 2:00 7:15
ANIMATED: 4:15 9:30 +11:45am Sat & Sun

CRAZY HEART
1:45 4:30 7:00 9:45 +11:15am Sat & Sun

28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst
www.amherstcinema.org
(413) 253-2547

PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri Mar 5 - Thu Mar 11

SHUTTER ISLAND
4:00 6:45 9:45
+1:15 Sat & Sun
+10:00am 1:15 Wed

CRAZY HEART
4:15 7:00 9:30
+1:45 Sat & Sun
+10:30am 1:45 Wed

27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasantstltheater.org
(413) 584-5848

$1 rides within Amherst

SAFE. RELIABLE. TRANSIT.
(413) 306-8298

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE

PUFFTON VILLAGE

EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS

SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses

ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!

ON SITE LAUNDRY,
OFF STREET PARKING.

BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.

OFFICE HOURS: 8AM TO 4PM MONDAY - FRIDAY
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub — chainsawsuit.com

THUMBS

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
If you do not like Justin Bieper then you need to get out of America.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Very few people know this but bathing in a tub of beer is far superior to showering in it.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
You have failed at doing your laundry (again). Suffer the powers of the all mighty Oxi-Clean!

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
No, you are not on "Punk'D," you are actually getting arrested ... But the officer does kind of look like Ashton Kutcher.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Everyone remembers their first dance. Your bedroom mirror always thought your macarena was pretty terrible, though.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Mark Wahlberg can talk to animals, so what is your excuse? You make me sick.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Christmas stockings are absolutely not intended to hold your "holly jollies" in the spring time. Coal for you this year.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
That whole excuse about you pressing cold spoons on your skin because of chem lab is borderline Bernard Madoff-esque.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Very few people have the intelligence of a rhino, and the corresponding twelve-inch bone on their front side.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
This is a time when you should question if your brain wired like you tie your shoes.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
This horoscope is "tick, tick, tick, tick, BOOM, dynamite, BOOM, BOOM dynamite!"

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
A little piece of you should not die simply because the McDonalds down the street is no longer open for late night. Try frying inedible meat on your own.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com. Stop by or Call 549-0600

Hobart Condos 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors, study in basement. Cable & Phone in all bedrooms & study. NOW SHOWING for June & September. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 413-253-7879

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hot-line 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends From $89 Complete. montrealExpress.net MontrealBlowout.com 781-979-9001

TUTORING SERVICES

Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats, GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 Jboid42@yahoo.com

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 53 LOW: 30 www.DailyCollegian.com MONDAY, MARCH 8, 2010

DA's office weighs in on rape case

Victim or law enforcement office must instigate prosecution

Northwestern District Attorney Elizabeth Scheibel's office did not comment on whether it is building a case regarding the recent rape allegations at the University.

By Matt Rocheleau
Collegian Staff

The county's district attorney's office did not comment on a sexual assault case recently mishandled by campus administrators, but an official there said Friday that most instances of sexual assault require the victim's consent and willingness to testify in court for the case to move toward prosecution.

A University of Massachusetts student confessed to raping a friend and former student in the fall and was mistakenly given a deferred suspension, according to an article by the New England Center for Investigative Reporting (NECIR) at Boston University published last week. University officials allowed him to stay on campus, a move that has been called "unacceptable" and now has administrators reexamining UMass' sanctioning policies and procedures.

The victim in the case reported the incident to the UMass Police Department (UMPD), according to University officials. Though the victim decided against pressing charges at the time, she may still do so.

But, because more details about the case remain unknown – including the names of both the accused student and the victim – the district attorney's office was not able to confirm whether or not they have had any involvement in the case, said First Assistant District Attorney Renee Steese of Northwestern District Attorney Elizabeth Scheibel's office, and therefore declined to comment directly on the matter.

Steese confirmed that student judicial records – including testimony given by a student during their judicial hearing – can be subpoenaed by the district attorney's office for criminal prosecution.

"If we're engaged in a prosecution, we would make every effort to obtain that record," she said.

However, in most cases, the district attorney needs to be contacted either by local or state police, a crime lab or the victim in order to press charges, Steese said.

"For us to conduct a prosecution, there needs to be a complainant," she said. "We don't hear about every sexual assault. Typically, we become aware of reports of sexual abuse through the police department, communications from the crime lab regarding DNA analysis, or from the victim directly calling the district attorney's office or the state police detective unit assigned to this office."

Steese also said that moving cases of sexual assault forward is often dependent on the victim's desire to do so, as well as whether the victim agrees to testify.

"In the vast majority of sexual assault cases, the victim will be testifying at trial," she said. "In a criminal prosecution, the victim is going to have to testify."

In order to prove an accused person is guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, "you have to have someone say 'This person did this to me,'" added Steese. "You can't have someone just say 'Yes, I did this.'"

Victims are often reluctant to testify in such situations because of the trauma they've been through and desire to keep the matter private.

When considering whether or not to press charges, "The position of the victim on participating in the criminal process is given great weight by the office because of the nature of the offense," Steese said.

Although the student in this case has not yet sought to press charges, she may still do so. The statute of limitations for rape in Massachusetts is 15 years.

Word leaked last week that the victim, a 2009 UMass graduate, provided information to the dean of students' office, which handles disciplinary matters, last fall, alleging that she had been raped in the North Apartments by a friend. While in most cases students are given more serious punishments for sexual assault offenses, this student was given a deferred suspension, which administrators have called a collective mistake and apologized for in an attempt to regain the faith of the student body.

Because decisions in judicial matters can only be appealed by the accused student, the deferred suspension cannot be modified or reexamined. Several female students have also since come forward and said they have had similar difficulties presenting their cases to administrators. Last Thursday, Interim Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life Jean Kim and Dean of Students Jo-Anne Vasin held a forum in the Campus Center to discuss the assault and its handling, apologizing for the mishandling of the situation. UMPD Chief Johnny Whitehead also spoke, explaining to concerned community members the Department's role in rape situations and the Department's protocol in dealing with victims.

The Collegian will posting information on this story as it becomes available on a special section on dailycollegian.com called "Breaking the Silence."

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrocheleau@dailycollegian.com.

Going postal: UMass student caught breaking into post office

On Friday, Feb. 27, the Amherst Police Department arrested UMass student Daniel Carley, 20, on Kellogg Ave. for breaking into the town's post office.

At approximately 4:20 a.m. on the morning of Feb. 27, 2010, several police officers from the Amherst Police Department (Amherst PD) responded to a report of a building alarm at the United States Post Office located on 141 North Pleasant St.

According to a press release from the Amherst PD, one of the responding officers quickly determined that someone had forcibly gained entry into the building via a rear door of the post office, and officers at the scene soon noticed an individual fleeing the building.

The suspect, Daniel Carley, age 20, was apprehended behind a residence on Kellogg Ave. and was placed under arrest. The ensuing investigation by police showed that Carley was allegedly attempting to steal post office property from the scene, but was scared away by the responding officers.

Carley, a resident of 128 Fisher St. in Walpole, Mass., was charged with breaking and entering at nighttime, a felony, and attempting to commit larceny, a Class B misdemeanor. He is a student at the University of Massachusetts, and was arraigned in Eastern Hampshire District Court in Belchertown last Monday. The breaking and entering at night charge carries a maximum of two and a half years in jail.

Carley's motive for stealing from the Post Office, other than for personal gain, remains unknown.

In 2007, the last year for which statistics were available from the Amherst Police Department's annual crime report, there were 123 breaking and entering reports in Amherst, with 10 arrests for breaking and entering in the day time for a felony, seven for misdemeanor breaking and entering, and 31 felony breaking and entering in the night time charges. There were also 22 arrests for larceny under $250, and 41 for larceny over $250.

—Nick Bush, Collegian Staff

UM upsets URI on senior night

The Minutemen advanced to the Atlantic 10 tournament with a 69-67 upset victory over Rhode Island Saturday on senior night, dashing the Rams' NCAA tournament hopes. See page 8 for more coverage.

ARTS & LIVING

One 'Crazy' flick

"The Crazies" exceeds expectations with ample gore and an edgy soundtrack despite a predictable plotline.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

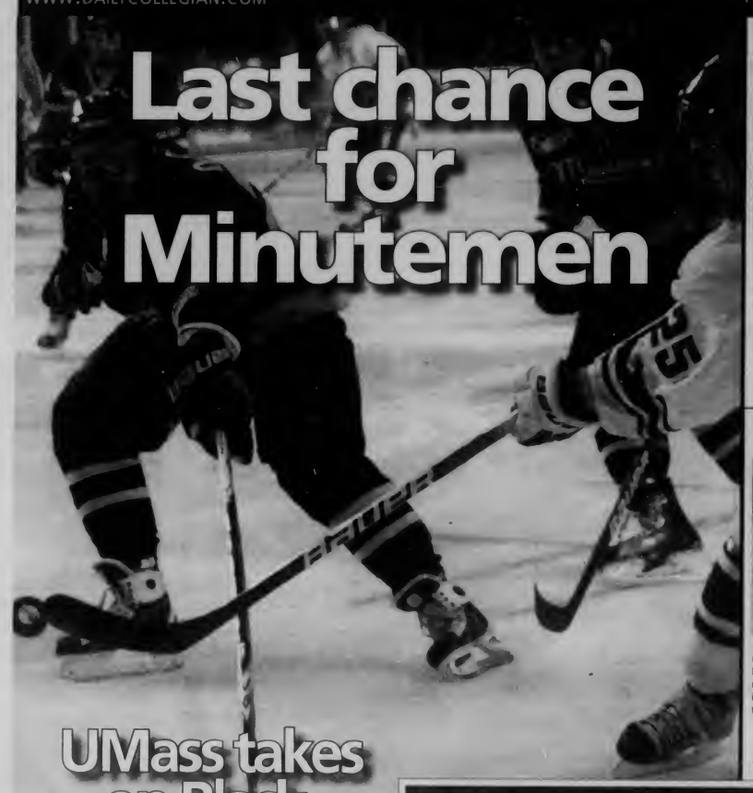
Hoops, hockey make tournaments

The UMass men's basketball and hockey teams secured spots in their respective conference tournaments with wins over the weekend.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Collegian columnist Eli Gottlieb believes University administration should encourage a campus culture free of anxiety over violence.



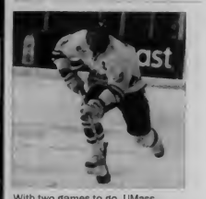
SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Go to DailyCollegian.com to check out continued coverage of the alleged rape case on our new section, "Breaking the Silence."

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, MARCH 5, 2010

Last chance for Minutemen



MEN'S LACROSSE

After not playing last weekend, the Minutemen head to Yale to take on the Bulldogs looking for their third straight victory. UMass defeated Yale last season at Garber Field, and look to improve on their non-conference standings.

SEE PAGE 12

HOCKEY

With two games to go, UMass needs at least two points against Maine this weekend, and might need help from some other teams in order to make the Hockey East tournament.

SEE PAGE 13

UMass takes on Black Bears with playoff birth on the line

DAILY COLLEGIAN
sports
WEEKEND EDITION

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 31
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Wire Editor N.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Johnson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Sunnell
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elise Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Ellie Rukon-Miller
Assistant Comics Domonic Mei
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heebsh
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jay Aser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Senior Producer Sara Cody
Senior Producer Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts' academic semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson
COPY EDITOR
Caitlin Quinn
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Dan Centola

Smart phones: The new notepad?

Students discuss various academic opportunities with new technologies

By Ashley Berger
Collegian Staff

In today's world, consumers are focused on the latest and greatest technologies, and technology-makers are eagerly attempting to capitalize on that market by devising strategies to implement it in classrooms on college campuses nationwide.

Amazon and Apple have created two new "smart pads" – the Kindle, from Amazon, and the iPad, from Apple. Though still new inventions, both the Kindle and the iPad are already gaining in popularity on college campuses because of their effectiveness, their "greenness" and their multi-faceted capabilities. On first impression, the products seem great – an eco-friendly way to hold all your textbooks, like one simple invention so you won't have to lug around five different books for five different classes that you'll likely never actually use.

Through cutting down on paper, the smart pads bill themselves as part of the green revolution. Amazon claims that either one of its two products can hold anywhere from 1,500 to 3,500 books, while the iPad's storage memory ranges from 16 to 64 GB. For most college students, the sheer amount of memory space could save money on the number of textbooks a student would need to buy and could even reduce the amount of printed books worldwide. Both products boast their wireless compatibilities, so users have the ability to download any book at any time, anywhere in the world (For international customers, fees per book are slightly higher).

But is an automated touch-screen textbook really comparable to hand writing notes? Is it easier or more rewarding to simply highlight sentences and phrases by hand? Students surveyed at Princeton University and Darden University complained that, unfortunately, the Kindle was not as user-friendly as they had hoped. Because it is electronic, some PDF files do not allow highlighting, underlining and note-taking in the margins; an inconvenience for college students typically expected to annotate their texts throughout semesters.

Some University of Massachusetts students said that even though they never tested the product, it could make it harder to remember information because of the inability to highlight important texts or underline useful quotes.

Freshman Laura Wojcik said she feels implementing digital technology for note-taking would not be as logical as one might think. "I think it's unnecessary when we already have books pretty much at our disposal," she said.

Another UMass freshman, Hannah Hamilton, said that while she is open to the prospect of using such devices for academics, when it comes to studying, she might just be a traditionalist.

"The idea is cool, but I'm so used to writing in my books and hand-writing things that I don't know if it would be useful to invest in one," she said.

The cost of these products could be a hindrance. The initial cost of a Kindle is $259, while the price of an iPad is $499, and the cost to download each book would be $9.99. One possible drawback to purchasing books in this manner would be the inability to sell a book back, as there would be nowhere to sell it. According to CollegeBoard.com, the average student can spend up to $1,000 on books per year, meaning students would have to buy a sizeable number of e-books before spending the same amount of money as they would on texts.

Even after explaining the cost benefit to investing in a smart pad, Wojcik and Hamilton adamantly agreed that they like their own way of taking notes.

"I like being able to copy from my textbook," said Hamilton. "I like being able to highlight, write definitions next to words, make copies of the pictures. I learn better from having the hard copy in front of me."

Emily Whalen, a freshman psychology and communication disorders double major, said she would be interested in buying her texts this way, as she feels she rarely uses the textbooks she purchases for her classes.

"A lot of the time, professors will put their lectures online. Some professors even tell you that you'll never use the book in class so you don't have to bother buying it. I only bought books for a few of my classes this semester," she said. "If you plan it out the right way, it's easy to split the cost of books among friends in the same classes, but with a smart pad, I don't think it would be easy to share the learning material," Whalen said.

Ashley Berger can be reached at aberger@student.umass.edu.

Smart phones

They let you play music, connect to the Internet, retrieve e-mail, send text messages, take photos – and talk. How the new iPhone stacks up:

Apple iPhone

Blackberry 8800

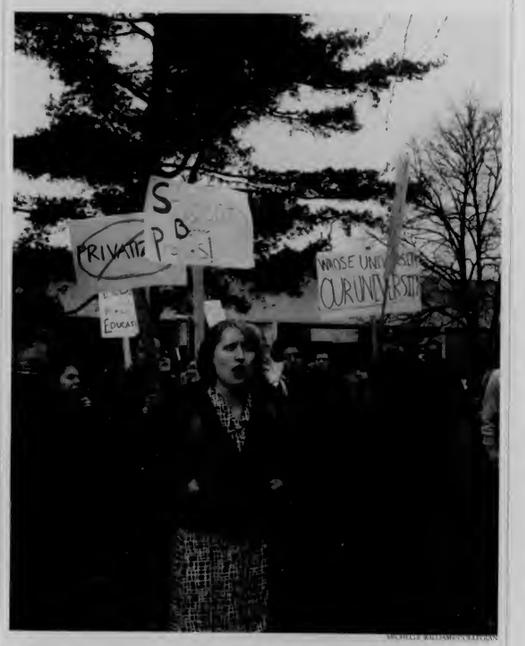
Samsung BlackJack

Palm Treo 700p

	Apple iPhone	Blackberry 8800	Samsung BlackJack	Palm Treo 700p
Suggested retail price	$499 or $599	$500 or $550*	$325*	$500 or 580*
Dimensions	4.5 x 2.4 x 0.46 in. (115 x 61 x 12 mm)	4.5 x 2.6 x 0.55 in. (115 x 66 x 14 mm)	4.4 x 2.3 x 0.5 in. (112 x 58 x 13 mm)	4.4 x 2.3 x 0.9 in. (112 x 58 x 23 mm)
Weight	4.8 oz. (135 g)	4.7 oz. (133 g)	3.5 oz. (99 g)	6.4 oz. (181 g)
Talk time	Up to 8 hours	Up to 5 hours	Up to 5.5 hours	Up to 4.5 hours
Built-in memory	4 or 8 GB	64 MB	128 MB	128 MB
Camera	2.0 megapixels	N/A	1.3 megapixels	1.3 megapixels
Wireless networks	Wi-Fi, EDGE, Bluetooth	EDGE GSM, Bluetooth	HSDPA, Bluetooth	EVDO, Bluetooth
Keyboard	Virtual	QWERTY keypad	QWERTY keypad	QWERTY keypad
Operating system	Mac OS X	Blackberry	Windows Mobile	Palm

(MCT)

ONLINE ELECTIONS



President Trustee Debate
Student Union Ballroom
Today, 7-9

ELECTION DATES
March 9,10,11
VOTE ONLINE VIA CAMPUS PULSE
OR
VOTE AT CAMPUS CENTER BETWEEN 11AM- 5PM

ONLINE ELECTIONS

Marching 4 action

Students marched across campus last Thursday to demand more funding for public higher education as part of a national protest, the National Day of Action to Defend Education.

Amherst readies for spring party season

Police, town officials discuss strategies to curtail underage drinking, partying problems

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

Spring is party season, as the sun comes out and classes start to rank beneath 30 racks on students' collective priority lists, and the Amherst and University of Massachusetts Police Departments know that all too well.

Amherst law enforcement officials are hopeful that a shorter spring schedule this academic year will lead to a reduction in instances of drinking and partying-related incidents.

At last week's town Select Board meeting, Amherst Police Department Chief Scott Livingstone and UMass Police Department Chief Johnny Whitehead discussed strategies they will be employing to stem student-behavior problems.

According to an article in the Daily Hampshire Gazette, Livingstone quipped that "we've shortened our calendar as well," indicating that the department will step up its enforcement efforts over the weeks following spring break, a time notorious for student antics.

In the past, Amherst police have strongly monitored the first two weeks in May, infamous for the "Hobart Hoedown" parties, but this year, they are indicating their efforts will shift to the last two weeks in April.

The Amherst Police Department (Amherst PD) and the University of Massachusetts Police Department (UMPD) will undertake mutual enforcement efforts in that window, tracking motor vehicle-related incidents and initiating collaborative drunken driving enforcement programs, as well as noise and keg patrols. The police will also disperse bicycle officers throughout neighborhoods that have historically been hurt by student partying issues. Livingstone told the Select Board he would request funding and resources from the Massachusetts State Police for the last two weekends of April, when the department expects to see a sizeable uptick in student antics.

He will request assistance from the state's Operating Under the Influence (OUI) Enforcement Team in the form of four to 10 officers, as well as five to 12 officers from the Community Action Team (CAT) squad.

After next week's spring break, the Amherst PD and UMPD will have full staffing for the remainder of the spring semester. Essentially, any officers who are sick or on vacation or for some other reason cannot work will be replaced by officers on overtime. The UMPD does not allow its officers to take leave in the spring months. Livingstone also asked the Select Board to implement several increases to fines for drinking and partying-related bylaws, such as the nuisance house and keg bylaws. He said officers have the individual decision over whether to make arrests or issue citations for drinking and noise bylaw violations.

In 2007, the most recent year for which statistics are available, Amherst police made 429 arrests for minors in possession of alcohol, 127 OUI arrests for liquor, as well as 25 arrests for attempts to use false identification, 16 for incidents where individuals attempted to deliver or sell alcohol to minors and two each for individuals transporting or attempting to procure alcohol illegally. Amherst Police also made 18 arrests for open containers in vehicles, 80 arrests for disorderly conduct and two arrests for public drunkenness.

In 2008, Amherst Police issued a total of 5,686 citations, making 863 arrests and issuing 458 criminal summonses, according to the town's website. The police respond to approximately 900 to 1,100 noise disturbance calls per year, Livingstone told the Select Board last week, with around 200 noise ordinance citations at $100 issued annually, and about 100 people arrested for noise violations.

According to the Gazette article, Livingstone said he feels the community is working well with law enforcement, and added that the department attempts to work with individuals in noise and partying situations to avoid making arrests unless necessary.

"For the most part, when officers respond to noise complaints, they are getting cooperation," he said. "From our perspective, arrest is the last resort."

Livingstone said arrests are logistically difficult, forcing officers to fill out copious amounts of paperwork and taking time away from actual law enforcement efforts.

Though Livingstone said police have not issued a great number of nuisance house violations, he said he believes when they have, it has been an effective deterrent.

Last fall, officers issued 15 such $300 fines to six different houses, and none have reoffended.

"It's not a lot to go on, but I think it's telling," he told the Select Board.

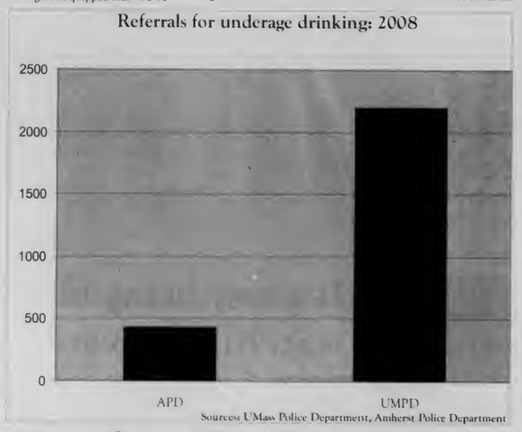
The nuisance bylaw won approval at the spring 2008 town meeting by a vote of 127 to 34. It holds individuals who host large, disruptive gatherings responsible, and can provide for a $300 fine, as well as arrest at the discretion of the officer responding.

The bylaw was introduced by the Campus and Community Coalition to Reduce High-Risk Drinking, a group of community members attempting to end what it sees is a culture facilitating dangerous drinking. Violators can be given verbal or written warnings, issued fines for offenses such as unlicensed keg possession and causing "excessive, unnecessary or unusually loud noise," according to the bylaw's text, or can be arrested for being a disorderly person or for disturbing the peace.

Chief Whitehead of the UMPD said he feels collaborative education has also helped curtail problematic behavior. He stated that police work to curb drunk driving by educating students about not riding with intoxicated drivers.

Amherst Police will also use a new district patrol system in hopes of giving officers a better understanding of the areas where they work.

In 2008, the UMPD made 316 arrests for liquor law violations in addition to 1,878 criminal citations.



Town Manager Lary Shaffer said he believes the Amherst PD and the UMPD will be effective partners in law enforcement this spring.

"I think we can expect nothing but great things from both chiefs and both departments relative to public safety," he said.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com

The Amherst Police Department will patrol neighborhoods adversely affected by student behavior this spring, as part of their plans to help reduce drinking and partying after spring break.

Sources: UMass Police Department, Amherst Police Department

Cooley Dickinson to open clinic in Amherst

By Chelsea Whitton
Collegian Staff

Doctors from the Cooley Dickinson Hospital's (CDH) emergency department announced finalized plans for a walk-in clinic in Amherst are underway.

In June 2010, the CDH in Northampton will open a new walk-in clinic department at 170 University Dr. in Amherst. Cooley Dickinson's planners are hoping the clinic will create quicker medical care and provide urgent attention for Amherst residents, rather than forcing them to wait in the emergency room at CDH.

The clinic has been in planning for the past several years, and is led by Dr. R. F. Conway and Dr. Domenick Sciarrino, emergency department physicians at CDH.

Christina Trinchero of the marketing and communications department at CDH said the hospital had been examining extending their services to Amherst for some time.

"In the late 90s, Cooley Dickinson commissioned a market research study that suggested a possible need for a walk-in urgent care clinic in the Amherst area," she said.

Trinchero explained that the expansion was designed to offer expanded health care services to people who live in the greater-Amherst area. The information to improve service was based on zip code data and towns located northeast of Amherst such as Granby and Sunderland, Mass., which lie relatively far from Northampton.

The clinic services will include urgent care treatment for minor medical emergencies such as the flu and upper respiratory illnesses, explained Trinchero. The clinic will offer expedited services for minor emergencies.

The expansion is being added onto the existing occupational health services offered at the 170 University Drive building, owned by CDH. As for the extent of constructing the facility, Trinchero said the renovations will not be too extensive.

"Cosmetic changes will be made to the space where the expanded clinic will be housed. Those changes include painting and other minor enhancements," she said.

Services offered currently at the 170 University Drive building are MRIs, digital mammography, ultrasound X-rays, blood testing, physical therapy and occupational therapy.

CDH emphasizes that the walk-in clinic will not be for trauma-related occurrences.

"By law, the clinic is unable to accept ambulances, as the clinic is not a licensed emergency department," said Trinchero. "Ambulances from Amherst would continue to go to Cooley Dickinson Hospital or other trauma centers as the severity of a situation might dictate. We are initiating contract discussions with local ambulance companies to ensure that if an ambulance is needed to transport a patient from the clinic to CDH or another emergency department, that those relationships are established."

University of Massachusetts' University Health Services (UHS) Medical Director Dr. Alan Calhoun explained that UHS was not part of the clinic expansion and serves a different focus than the clinic will.

"While UHS has a unique focus on college healthcare, CDH's clinic, which is set to open in June, is designed to serve community residents who might otherwise seek care at the hospital's emergency department," said Calhoun.

The clinic's focus is described in its title, Ambulatory Employee and Industrial Occupational Urgent Health Center. Calhoun notes that similar services are also available at a recently opened clinic in Hampshire County.

Dr. Calhoun explained that UHS will still serve most students and the CDH will reach more greater-Amherst residents.

"UHS provides greater value to students than off-campus clinics," said Calhoun. "For example, costs not covered by primary insurance are absorbed by the student health fee, reducing students' financial burden."

UHS serves as a primary care component to students, where the CDH clinic will not provide primary care services. Calhoun said the services that will be offered by the CDH clinic are already offered at UHS.

Starting in June, the clinic's hours will be from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m. and will be staffed with physicians, nurses, physician assistants, nurse practitioners, medical assistants and administrative personnel.

Trinchero said those hours will not be permanent.

"After opening the clinic with these expanded services, we will assess the time and the volume of patients and then determine if we'll expand or adjust the hours the clinic is open," said Trinchero.

Each of the close-by clinics to the UMass campus serve a different focus.

"We do not expect to compete with University Health Services. The University offers a niche service to their students," said Trinchero.

Chelsea Whitton can be reached at cwhitton@student.umass.edu.

Cooley Dickinson Hospital (CDH) in Northampton will open a new walk-in health clinic at 170 University Dr. in Amherst this June.

AN EPIC BATTLE OF TASTE
8 CHEFS COMPETE

Bar enberg, CEC
Executive Chef
University of Iowa
with Chef/Assistant Manager
Apri Randall

Paul Oesterle
Executive Chef
University of Georgia
with Chef/Assistant Manager
Tracy Buesing

Manfred Werner Edler, CEC
Executive Chef
Villanova University with Executive Chef
Nancy Miller

Nijo Joseph
Executive Chef
Stanford University with Head Cook
Ashok Raput

UMASS DINING PROUDLY PRESENTS
2010 VISITING COLLEGE CHEF SERIES

UNIVERSITY OF IOWA	UNIVERSITY OF GEORGIA	VILLANOVA UNIVERSITY	STANFORD UNIVERSITY
Penne Pasta with Red Onion, Asparagus, Garlic and Pistachios in a White Wine Cream Sauce	Shrimp and Grits	Kennet Square Mushroom and Potato soup	Vegetarian Tikka Masala
Sushi rice cakes top with glazed pork belly	Peach Chicken Divine	Baby Greens & Blue Cheese Salad with Balsamic Vinaigrette	Aloo Gobi
Sweet Soybean Hummus	Braised Kale and Leeks	Braised Boneless Short Ribs	Palak Paneer
Fried Beet Crisps	Pecan Sweet Potatoes	Lobster Orzo Gratin	Dal Tadka
Roasted Corn and Maytag Custard served with Polenta Croutons & Balsamic Syrup		Charred Asparagus	Chana Masala
		Croissant Bread Pudding with Caramel Bourbon Pecan Sauce	Vegetable Pakoda
			Aloo Tikki with Okra Chat
			Mixed Vegetable Curry
			Samosa
			Cumin Basmati Rice
			Vegetable Biryani
			Nan
			Pappad
			Tamarind Chutney
			Cilantro Chutney
			Mango Lassis
			Rice Kheer

ONE NIGHT. ONE VENUE. ONE WINNER.

TUESDAY MARCH 9TH
5:00-9:00PM
BERKSHIRE DINING COMMONS

UMASS DINING UMassAmherst

Come Be The Judge - Your Vote Counts!

ivy

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, MARCH 8, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself." Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The sources of coolness

Coolness is almost impossible to define. When I was little, I thought the things that were cool were also the things that were popular. In elementary school, the cool kids were the popular kids. That seemed to make sense, but changed in high school. Cool went from what everyone else liked to what I personally liked because I considered myself to be really cool.

Eddie Hand

Due to the fact we are all individuals, personal taste is going to vary, but there are a few things that are constant. Things that get a lot of attention ultimately lose their "coolness" as they gain popularity. There is no better recent example of this than rock band, Kings Of Leon.

They released three albums to very limited success before 2008's "Only By Night" came out. "Only By Night" contained two smash hits, "Sex on Fire" and "Use Somebody."

Material will almost always be appreciated if it is genuinely very good. This appreciation will lead to its creators being labeled as "cool."

Both songs still get huge amounts of radio time. I had never even heard of the band until "Use Somebody" hit airwaves, but apparently they were not brand new. I asked a friend of mine about them who knows more about music than anyone I know. What he told me amounted to this: They used to be good; they changed their style, became mainstream and now suck.

This doesn't surprise me. The trend happens all the time in music. In the late 90s, pop starlets like Britney Spears and Christina Aguilera and boy bands like N'Sync and the Backstreet Boys were exceedingly popular. Earlier in the decade, it was New Kids on the Block and the Spice Girls. While these artists were all popular, I don't think anyone over the age of 13 would describe them as "cool."

Also universal is that material will almost always be appreciated if it is genuinely very good. This appreciation will lead to its creators being labeled as "cool."

Freddie Mercury, the lead singer and primary songwriter of the classic rock band Queen, is almost universally considered "cool." Mercury was a flamboyant, open homosexual from Zanzibar, Tanzania with a slender build and later on, a goofy mustache. This is not the exterior model of something that would be thought of as "cool," but Freddie Mercury also wrote and sang classics like "We Will Rock You," "Another One Bites The Dust," "Bohemian Rhapsody" and many, many others that withstood the test of time, getting consistent radio play years after their releases. People of all generations want to hear this music.

The difference between a band like Queen and someone like Britney Spears is that Spears was designed to be commercial, whereas Queen just kind of made music. Queen kept this up until Mercury's untimely death from HIV/AIDS, but not all bands do this. It's like a roller coaster on which you reach the peak of your popularity.

You do this by becoming commercial and "selling out" in the minds of many, and then come crashing down. As history has shown, one of three things happen: First, your public image takes a hit and the masses decide you're a joke of a person, similar to what happened to Spears. Second, there is too much in fighting within the band and they break up, like the Spice Girls. Third, people get bored with your sound and you fade into irrelevance.

Now, the first two are fairly easy to avoid. Don't do anything too stupid that the media could pick up on, and have a good relationship with the people you work with. The third is a bit tougher.

If you get complacent and make the same sound over and over again, people will certainly lose interest, but if you change yourself in the wrong way, it will scare away the established fan base.

Regardless, your coolness factor will go down.

So why is Queen still such a mainstay? I would say that, cynical as this may sound, it has to do with what happened to Freddie Mercury. Death has always been something that makes an artist seem more legitimate. Take Michael Jackson's recent death, for example. He was a punch line to much of the world, but when he died, it was a tragedy. People said "Yeah, he was strange, but he was a musical genius!"

Suddenly, it was cool to like Jackson again. Death makes you appreciate someone's work, as it will never be replicated, and it also adds a certain inexplicable credibility, as if somehow after they've died, their work takes on a new kind of meaning. In fact, that one factor more than anything else, could explain what creates coolness: credibility. We have to believe that the person who is trying to sell us a polo shirt or short skirt knows what they are talking about (or at least looks good in it). We have to believe that the product will improve us in the eyes of others.

Whether or not it really will is completely arbitrary. It doesn't matter. People are always going to want to look good in the eyes of others, and coolness is just a way of describing that.

Eddie Hand is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at ehandia@student.umass.edu.

Oppression through fear

Eli Gottlieb

The University of Massachusetts administration allowed an allegedly confessed rapist to stay in school with nothing more than a deferred suspension.

Upon hearing this, my first instinct was to break out pitchforks and torches and bear down upon the despicable scumbag who perpetrated this and see to it that he meets with an accident, followed quickly by an 11-month term in the flames and tortures of Gehenna, of course working to allow the bastard's soul to be purified of his sin for entrance into Paradise.

Luckily, cooler blood prevailed. At one point I asked myself: As opposed to what I wanted to do to the allegedly confessed rapist out of anger, what does the campus community really need?

It doesn't need a crusading college junior with a self-righteous sense of vengeance. It doesn't need new administrative policies to expel allegedly confessed rapists. I had to find out what the campus community, especially its women, really needed.

Now certainly, we need justice for the victim. I obviously don't know who she is, but she has my sympathies for what I presume is her reasoning behind not pressing criminal charges: wanting to heal and move on with her life rather than repeatedly reliving her rape for the sake of satisfying the legal system. I wish her all the best in her life after UMass.

I still had to find out what our community needed, so I asked UMass sophomore Alexa McKenzie. She explained to me how unsafe many women feel on the UMass campus.

"I've definitely gotten those chain e-mails that say, 'Never park next to a van, always check the back seat when you get into a car,' there are a couple other things you'll get in e-mails.

We don't need angry undergrads or even a new administration. We need Batman.

"I've had friends – girls – who will not walk across campus in broad daylight without holding a cell-phone conversation, so someone can hear their scream, or calling their friends to walk with them, because they believe it's not safe to be alone," she said.

"I try not to buy into that, but I have to admit a certain feeling of nervousness when I'm walking on a street and there's, specifically, a man trailing me, even from a good ways behind, and if they're not distracted by anything else and don't make any turns, I get nervous.

"And that's not fair to me and it's not fair to the guy I'm now nervous of."

Well damn. We don't need angry undergrads or even a new administration. We need Batman.

The very idea that any woman on this campus should have to live in fear, in the black of night or in broad daylight, is fundamentally and absurdly wrong. Yet statistics continually show that women are at risk.

The National Organization for Women (NOW) says, "According to the National Crime Victimization Survey, which includes crimes that were not reported to the police, 232,960 women in the U.S. were raped or sexually assaulted in 2006," and "women age 24 and under suffer from the highest rates of rape."

What this campus needs is a Take Back the Night march. Beginning as "a candlelight procession through the streets of Brussels," the Take Back the Night movement believes in using marches, vigils and protests to showcase society's solidarity not only with women but also with all victims of violence, especially sexual violence.

Smaller events where men take to basketball courts at half time and vow never to rape just don't go far enough. As McKenzie put it, "Personally, I don't take many extra precautions, I do walk alone on campus at night, and I don't know ... basically, I feel like I'm taking a risk, but I'd rather take a risk than live in fear."

From her, I have heard of fears that absolutely appall me: Fear of walking alone, fear of being in crowds of people whom one doesn't personally know, fear of being surrounded by drunken Southwesters on a Friday night, fear of parking next to a van and fear of being alone with strange men.

These fears have sprung a reconstruction, a re-justification, of the very behavioral codes once considered so oppressive to women: Don't go out alone, don't put yourself forward, don't say no, don't talk to strangers, don't befriend, don't flirt and don't dress immodestly.

Enough is enough. Most fundamentally, we need to restore and strengthen our sense of trust in each other as members of a common campus community.

Date rape, in particular, must be brought to a complete end, because as long as someone feels uncomfortable saying "no" and having it mean "no," their partner can never truly know that "yes" means "yes." Subjugation to fear must end just as more literal, violent oppressions did.

Today, I feel ashamed of my campus and enraged at what it allows. However, we must not fear. Fear is the mind-killer, and I don't want it to kill anyone else.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu.

Five Reasons Why the March 4 Higher Ed protests were ineffective

1) You can't drink a Molotov cocktail.

2) Protests don't actually solve record deficits.

3) It was noon—everybody was out to lunch.

4) University motto: Incompetent and overpaid.

5) Administration motto: Pretend nothing is wrong.

It's easy being blue watching 'Avatar'

Alex Perry

The Oscars were last night, and I decided that it was time for me to chip in with my opinion on the movie that many considered to be the best of the year. I am talking, of course, about "Avatar."

The movie grossed $2.555 billion worldwide as of March 5 and passed "Titanic" to become the highest grossing film of all time. It was nominated for nine Oscars. Obviously, people like this movie, and they are paying to see it both here in the United States and abroad.

Knowing this, it makes sense that almost every single person I have talked to about this movie is in love with it. Most of the reviews I have read online boast about the movie as an "epic."

Tom Long of the Detroit News even made the following bold statement in his review – "I have seen the future of movies, and it is Avatar." Seems like you would be hard pressed to find anyone with anything bad to say about the film, but then there is me.

Is this really the framework for a film that took James Cameron years to come up with?

The movie was terrible. It was at best, a bad rip-off of a combination of other similar movies.

If you have seen it, I want you think about the premise for the movie for a moment. The main character spends time with his enemy and eventually finds himself identifying more strongly with his enemy than his own people. Is this really the framework for a film that took James Cameron years to come up with? I liked that movie better the first time when it was called "Dances with Wolves."

It is almost as if Cameron just watched "Dances with Wolves" and decided that movie was pretty good, and should use it as the framework for his movie. If we are talking simply about screenplays, "Avatar" was not the "future of movies." Far from it. It was actually a history of movies, specifically the one that dominated the Oscars in 1990.

Considering the budget was over $230 million, it is also hard to believe how bad the acting was. All the characters were playing stereotypical roles, making the story very tough to believe. The scientists thought the military people didn't understand them. The businessmen was more interested in money than the natives. The military characters didn't take the scientists seriously. That is all very fresh. I definitely have never seen a movie where the scientists are portrayed as weak and caring, the businessmen as selfish and greedy and the military people as heartless and arrogant. What innovative character development.

With those cookie-cutter characters, it is no wonder they couldn't find any one respectable to fill the roles. Who on Earth were the actors in this movie? $230 million and we can't even pull down a single hot actress or an actor who has done anything respectable in a lead role? The main character is played by the guy who wasn't sure he was a Terminator in "Terminator: Salvation." Come on. The weak scientist who is all about his job is best known for portraying a loser in "Dodgeball." Do I even need to mention Sigourney Weaver? David Ortiz thinks she's washed up.

But the problem with this movie is not how bad the writing is or how bad the acting is – it is how bad the movie becomes when the two are combined. These two components cannot be poorly done in a movie that is supposed to be taken seriously, especially when the premise is so hard to believe.

This movie felt a lot more like "Alien vs. Predator" than Oscar material.

Just look at some of the key parts in the story. The setting of the movie is primarily on a planet called Pandora, which, according to Colonel Quaritch, isn't like Kansas. On this planet, large blue creatures with tails and long hair, called the Na'vi, are running around living allegedly at peace with the environment.

The religion of the Na'vi consists of praying to a giant tree. We also have Dragon-like monsters flying around the planet that can apparently be tamed if a blue creature wins a wrestling match with them and is then able to stick its hair into a hole on the dragon-like creature's head.

Are these really elements of a movie that was nominated for nine Oscars? This can't be serious. I am supposed to believe that a human would be willing to turn on his own race after a few weeks because he fell in love with a blue creature? That's the main conflict in the film? It would've taken unreal acting to make me believe something that dumb, but Cameron forgot to get any good actors to sell this unrealistic garbage. This film was not moving. This film was lame.

Yet everyone seems to like it. I feel like Mugatu did in "Zoolander" when he was the only person who realized Derek had only one look.

When other ridiculous movies like "Alien vs. Predator" have bad writing and bad acting, I don't complain because it's is not pretending to be something that it is not. "Avatar" is touted as something new and different, but is really just a rip-off of other movies that also features bad acting.

One would think ripping off a bunch of other famous movies would culminate in one really good movie – but that just didn't happen here. This was a glorified spoof movie. "Avatar" had good special effects and makes for good "Happy Meal" toys, but shouldn't be getting a whiff of the Academy Awards.

Alex Perry is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at amperry@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MARCH 8, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

New horror film 'Crazier' than it appears

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

If the new Breck Eisner movie "The Crazies" has a moral to it, it's that sometimes you have to do whatever it takes to keep yourself and your family safe. That, and don't always trust the government, but that's just another aspect to the horror film.

Eisner and casting director John Papsidera brought together a pretty decent cast for the remake of George A. Romero's 1973 movie of the same name. Timothy Olyphant (of "Deadwood" and "Live Free or Die Hard" fame) stars as David Dutton, the sheriff of some podunk town in Iowa called Ogden Marsh. He's married to the cool and collected Judy (played by Radha Mitchell, known for last year's "Surrogates"), who is the town's only doctor. Accompanied by Deputy Russell Clark (Joe Anderson), the sheriff uncovers a sinister virus spread throughout the tiny town that turns its residents into "The Crazies."

When the residents of Ogden Marsh become infected, they transform not into the undead, as in usual Romero hits, but homicidal maniacs who commit the most disgusting murders against their friends and family, prompting the movie's official tagline, "Fear Thy Neighbor."

When Dutton discovers that this is all due to a military accident, the plot thickens. The military storms the town, seemingly to protect the citizens and fix the mess they made. When David and Judy are forcibly separated, however, it becomes apparent that something more sinister is at play. They must then escape their hometown, now turned into Hell, along with the only other people who aren't infected. When it's four against the whole U.S. military and the 2,000 crazed inhabitants, they have to get creative or get killed.

"The Crazies" turn into killing machines as a result of a virus. The film teaches viewers to "Fear thy neighbor."

When it comes to remakes of Romero's cult classics, it seems like no one can do it as well as the "Grandfather of the Zombie." "The Crazies," however, seems to do a really good job, despite receiving many mixed reviews.

One problem is that the death and destruction begins right in the first scene. There isn't really a buildup; the first maniac makes an appearance within the first five minutes, and the gruesome deaths begin 10 minutes in. Sometimes the plot comes off as a kill-fest, with its non-stop death scenes and somewhat cheap, jumpy moments.

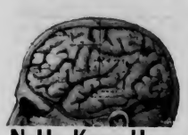
But what makes "The Crazies" easily the scariest movie in theaters right now is the fact that maybe it's not completely far fetched. It's not about conventional zombies – it's about regular people in rural America becoming infected by a man-made virus. They have the mental capacity to commit very disturbing murders against people in their daily lives, including their spouses and young children. The virus turns people everyone considers to be good guys into killing machines.

The cinematography only serves to complement the scary storyline. It is blunt, but without choppy cuts or angles, and fits in well with the plot. Viewers see the situation unfold mostly from an outsider's point of view, but shots from the standpoint of the military help to establish the situation as bleak and frightening.

Additionally, the soundtrack and score adds to "The Crazies." One of the first scenes of the film, showing Ogden Marsh as a hole-in-the-wall town where everyone knows everyone else is accompanied by Johnny Cash's "We'll Meet Again," relating well to the fact that neighbors do meet again in a different setting when they brutally slay each other.

The music is the run-of-the-mill, classic horror-movie score. Usually that can be very redundant, but in the case of "The Crazies," it builds up suspense most of the time. The only problem is that movie-goers know when a scary, jumpy moment is quickly approaching. It succeeds in creating a dreadful experience knowing something bad is about to happen, but not knowing exactly when or what.

Later on in the film, the creepy singing and whistling exhibited by the crazy citizens paired with the music produces a terrifying effect on the psyches of audience members.



With its stellar score, believable cast, not-so-subtle allusions to the Holocaust and a solid storyline, "The Crazies" is an exception to the norm in today's Hollywood. With CGI effects, make-up, recognizable actors and other devices used to produce films, there just isn't much left that genuinely scares Americans today. A testament to Romero's genius and Eisner's adapting skills, "The Crazies" is sure to tap into the psychological fears of its audience.

Kate MacDonald can be contacted at kaitlynm@student.umass.edu

With ample gore and an edge soundtrack, "The Crazies" exceeds expectations despite a predictable plotline where the sole survivors must out-maneuver the infected townspeople.

Fixin' the kitchen on any budget

NoHo Know How

By Shayna Murphy
Collegian Staff

Faces

Don't be surprised if you recognize some of the mugs offered up at Faces, including those by San Francisco-based company Taylor & Ng. Chances are your grandmother might have owned a few of the company's ceramic white mugs back in the late 1970s when they first began to circulate throughout nationwide retail stores. For $5.95, you can start your own collection of these 11 oz. mugs, whimsically crafted by illustrator and co-founder Win Ng. Mugs from the company's Vintage French series are on display at Faces, including their "Le Chien Tigré" and "Le Chat" designs, the latter of which displays a cat playing with a ball of yarn as a mouse peeks out perilously from behind a strand. A greater selection of the Vintage French series can be found at Taylor & Ng's website, including "Le Canard," which depicts two ducks floating along on a sea of tiny currents, and "Le Lapin," wherein a large rabbit is positioned against a backdrop of friskier blue ones. Faces, 175 Main Street, Northampton, 413-584-4081.

SHAYNA MURPHY/COLLEGIAN

The "Le Chat" mug is part of the Vintage French series from Taylor & Ng. The mug is priced at $5.95 and is available at Faces in Northampton.

Acme Surplus

Flatware can be expensive, but at Acme Surplus, it doesn't have to be. Function and efficiency prevail at the heavily trafficked store, tucked away deep in the basement of Thornes Marketplace. Spoons, knives and forks are on display at Faces, including their "Le Chien Tigré" and "Le Chat" designs, the latter of which displays a cat playing with a ball of yarn as a mouse peeks out perilously from behind a strand. A greater selection of the Vintage French series can be found at Taylor & Ng's website, including "Le Canard," which depicts two ducks floating along on a sea of tiny currents, and "Le Lapin," wherein a large rabbit is positioned against a backdrop of friskier blue ones. Faces, 175 Main Street, Northampton, 413-584-4081.

SHAYNA MURPHY/COLLEGIAN

The "Le Chien Tigré" mug is also from the Vintage French series. Both the "Le Chien Tigré" and the "Le Chat" were designed by co-founder Win Ng.

store for a single dollar. Acme Surplus, 150 Main Street, Northampton, 413-586-1122.

Essentials

For times when fancy dishware is required, look no further than Caskata tableware, priced at $16.50 at Essentials. Although the tableware, designed by Shawn Laughlin, comes in several lines, "Sea Life" seems the most startling. Butterfly and swordfish swim across an all-white ocean platter, accented by an elegant 23-carat gold and platinum finish. Although Caskata's ceramic sets may immediately conjure up an image of opulence that seems inappropriate for, say, chicken fingers and macaroni and cheese, the line remains a functional contribution to any dining set. In addition, Essentials features the work of Robert le Heros. Characterized by nature motifs and a festive explosion of bright colors, le Heros' machine-washable tablecloth and tea towel designs are priced at only $21.00 at Essentials, and are a sure way to class up your kitchen. Essentials, 88 Main Street, Northampton, 413-584-2327.

Cooks Shop Here

Looking to infiltrate a world of exotic cuisine and culture? Try the Kokudei Katto Teapot, assembled by long-standing Japanese-based manufacturers Tokoname. At only four inches tall, red clay-colored lines separate the diminutive teapot into a glazed honeycomb design, making it a modern standout. While its price tag is a little steep – a whopping $95.00 at Cooks Shop Here – its unglazed finish and graceful design promises to reward a buyer long into the future. Similarly, Cooks Shop Here features a selection of tagines – cone-shaped slow-cookers made from low-fired clay that are perfect for constructing your own Moroccan-inspired dishes. While some kitchen novices may find the atmosphere daunting, the store offers a myriad selection of food and culinary tools for chefs of all levels. Cooks Shop Here, 65 King Street, Northampton, 413-584-5116.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at skmurphy@dailycollegian.com.

UStyle: Joining the J. Crew

By Kaitlyn Bigica
Collegian Correspondent

Rebecca Babin not only looks stylish as she walks through campus or goes out on the weekends, she also stays trendy as she types away at her computer in her photojournalism class at the W.E.B Du Bois Library.

Her preppy style is shown through her layered white polo and maroon cashmere sweater, giving her a crisp appearance. She makes it a casual, yet classic look by wearing jeans and white converse sneakers with a red and blue stripe circling the shoe. Her red polka-dot headband incorporates the colors layered in her polo and sweater. Silver bracelets add a classic and cute look to any outfit and enhance the preppy style.

Babin finds her inspiration in "the all-American style." She tries to be trendy on the weekends, but when she goes to class she likes the dress preppy. After working at J. Crew, Babin said, "I probably have 50 sweaters from J. Crew. I just like to layer a lot." She can always be seen wearing at least one item from the popular store.

Babin said one benefit of wearing cashmere is its soft, plush feeling. Other stores Babin can be seen shopping at are Banana Republic, Abercrombie & Fitch and Forever 21. Babin's style is perfect for the busy lifestyle of a college student. She said she can wear her outfit to class with her Converse sneakers and simply switch into a cute pair of heals to go out at night.

This preppy style is a perfect way to mix-and-match clothing in your closet. Most students just want to roll out of bed and throw on their sweatshirts or North Face jackets, but instead you can put on a cashmere sweater and feel the same comfort. The preppy style always creates a clean, crisp appearance and shows that you take care of yourself and your clothing.

Banana Republic and J. Crew's styles often take a toll on your wallet, but you can find less expensive, preppy clothes at Forever 21. With a smaller amount on the price tag, you can buy a bundle of sweaters and polos to layer for a new outfit each day. You can also vary your preppy look by picking brightly colored polos and different shades of Converse sneakers with colored shoe laces. The brighter colors will make your outfit look fun and energetic. Whether you are already preppy or want to switch up your style, you can add your own personality to this look and have all eyes on you.

Kaitlyn Bigica can be reached at kbigica@student.umass.edu

Check out Oscar coverage at www.dailycollegian.com/?p=12833

JEFF BERNSTEIN, COLLEGIAN

Freshman Freddie Riley went 3-for-4 from 3-point range for the Minutemen in the playoff-clinching win over Rhode Island. Riley scored 11 points in 20 minutes of play in the starting lineup.

UMass upsets Rams

BASKETBALL from page 8

two-possession game. Harris fought through the paint to grab the offensive rebound and lay it in to tie the game.

The senior finished the night with a game-high 28 points on 10-of-21 shooting and also grabbed seven rebounds.

"I'm ecstatic that the team played the way they did for Ricky and that Ricky was able to play the way he did for the team and for the fans," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said. "I don't think you could ask for a better ending for the way Ricky has been as a player, a person and an ambassador for the program."

The Minutemen were also led by freshman Javorn Farrell who added 12 points in 33 minutes, and Sean Carter who had seven points and seven rebounds of his own.

UMass struck first in the contest with a jumper by Farrell from the free-throw line and led 4-2 a minute later, but the Rams took over quickly. Five minutes into the game they held a six-point lead and extended it to nine just over halfway through the half, but never extended the lead to double digits – always keeping UMass within striking distance.

Marquis Jones led URI's scoring with 15 points and six assists, and Lamonte Ulmer added a double-double (11 points, 10 rebounds) as five Rams players finished in double-figure scoring.

The win gave UMass the No. 11 seed in the upcoming A-10 tournament, and with Dayton's loss to Saint Louis Saturday evening, the Minutemen will face sixth-seeded Charlotte this Tuesday at 7 p.m. in the opening round. The Rams took the No. 5 seed and will host No. 12 St. Joe's.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com

UM get win for Harris

BY DAVID BRINCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Senior guard Ricky Harris admitted to being the most nervous he has ever been before he was honored at the Mullins Center Saturday afternoon.

Those nerves produced a game-high 28 points, seven rebounds and five assists, as Harris led the Massachusetts men's basketball team to a 69-67 victory over Rhode Island, as well as securing a spot in the Atlantic 10 tournament.

"I was jittery because I was going into my last game thinking I had to make every shot," Harris said. "In the second half I started to relax, and you could tell I was nervous because I kept coming up short a lot in the first half. This is just a great feeling, the fans and community did a great job."

Harris hit the game-winning layup with 3.5 seconds left in regulation to win the game for the Minutemen, while scoring his final basket at the Mullins Center in fashion.

"Taking a shot like that on senior night, that's big and I give credit to God and my family," Harris said. "Coach Kellogg put the ball in my hands and he had confidence that I could make it, and I knocked it down."

While the season has been full of ups and downs, Harris remained UMass' most consistent player, leading the team in minutes (31.0 per game), points (19.2) and assists (89).

"It's been tough, obviously I wanted to win more games," Harris said. "I know my teammates are behind me though and that just makes it a lot easier for me. The freshmen are willing to listen and to learn."

Before the victory over the Rams, the Minutemen were in the midst of a four-game losing streak and knew the game was a must-win in order for UMass to continue its season.

Harris took it personally.

"It was win or go home for us," Harris said. "We weren't praying for a Saint Joe's loss. It was just win or go home. I got at least one text [message] from each of my teammates yesterday saying not to worry because we were going to win this game, and it happened."

The Hawks defeated La Salle yesterday, so if the Minutemen fell to URI, their season, as well as Harris' career, would've come to a disappointing end.

Harris passed Lou Roe to move to third in career-scoring for UMass with 1,917 points, while keeping the Minutemen's postseason hopes afloat.

He went 10-of-21 from the field and 2-of-11 from 3-point range, including 6-of-11 from the free-throw line.

Along with the rest of the Minutemen, UMass coach Derek Kellogg attributed the team's success to his best player.

"From the bottom of my heart, I wanted to win this for Ricky," Kellogg said. "I kept telling the guys since our last game, let's put forth a great effort for him. It doesn't mean you are definitely going to win, but it at least gives us a good chance to win. He has meant a lot to this program and he has been a rock in a foundation for me this year with these guys."

The Minutemen now head to Charlotte as the No.-11 seed in the opening round of the A-10 tournament on Tuesday evening.

"I think we can make a run at it because I think we haven't really been blown out by a lot of the top teams other than Dayton," Harris said. "With a win like that against a possible NCAA team, I think that says a lot. We can do a lot more winning if we stay positive and stay on this path."

In order for the Minutemen to advance, they have to rely on Harris to come up with big plays like the one he converted on Saturday.

"I definitely thought about this moment sometime in my 22 years living, yeah," Harris said, regarding the buzzer-beater as time expired. "It's like a dream come true and I'm totally stunned and emotional right now."

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

Dainton strong in goal

HOCKEY from page 8

Other than a last-minute goal, goaltender Paul Dainton stopped several Black Bear opportunities in the final period to preserve the win for the Minutemen. The junior made 35 saves in all, including 13 in the third frame to earn one of his most significant victories.

It was much of the same the previous night when UMass built up an early lead and held on for a 5-2 win. Despite being outshot 27-24 by Maine, it was the Minutemen who had the offensive outpour, receiving multi-point nights from four players.

Sophomore T.J. Syner got the scoring started early with his seventh goal of the season just 52 seconds into the game. The remainder of the opening period, however, was an offensive struggle, as both teams' defenses reduced scoring opportunities.

The Minutemen dominated the second frame, scoring three times to take a commanding 4-0 lead and forcing the Black Bears to replace Sirman with Wilson in goal. Braun netted two goals in the period, while sophomore Matt Irwin scored his seventh goal of the season on a shot atop the faceoff circle.

In an attempt to make a comeback, Maine got on the board towards the end of the frame with a power play goal from Spencer Abbott. Midway through the final period, the Black Bears scored their second goal as Will O'Neil deflected a shot off the post to score his sixth goal of the year.

Maine wouldn't come any closer though, as Dainton and the UMass defense held off the Black Bears' attack to keep the playoff hopes of the Minutemen alive.

With the pair of wins, UMass advances to face Boston College in the Hockey East Quarterfinals next weekend at Chestnut Hill.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN, COLLEGIAN

Goaltender Paul Dainton played well between the pipes in UMass' two wins over Maine. Dainton held the Black Bears to five total goals while recording 35 saves in Saturday's win to get into the playoffs.

A Campus to Career Program
in Memorial Hall
(between Herter Hall and the Old Chapel)

HELLO CITY: NYC
March 9 • 5:30 p.m.
Our panelists will discuss life in New York City — from finding an apartment and identifying what neighborhood is best for you, to searching for a job and leads on networking opportunities in the city.

PANELISTS INCLUDE:
Chanel Dubofsky '01
English and Judaic Studies, Coordinator of Social Justice & Israel Programs at Columbia/Barnard Hillel in New York, NY
Matthew Raycroft '96
Communication, Founder and Project Specialist with Raycroft Project Specialists in New York, NY
Deanna Vasilakis '07
Journalism, Teacher at P.S. 154X Jonathan D. Hyatt School in Bronx, NY

Enter to win a UStore gift card at all Campus to Career events.
Seniors can also enter to win a $1,000 cash prize from Liberty Mutual!
Drawing to be held at Commencement Ball on May 7, 2010

UMass Amherst ALUMNI ASSOCIATION | STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
Sponsored by the Student Alumni Association and the UMass Amherst Alumni Association

Pitching key for Minutewomen in victories at USF Invitational

BY GEENA LOMBARDI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Strong pitching was the theme of the weekend for the Massachusetts softball team as they went 5-0 and served as the only team to go undefeated at the University of South Florida Under Armour Invitational.

"I thought we performed very consistently for the most part and I think that's why the outcome was so positive," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said.

Pitcher Sara Plourde struck out 21 batters to start off day one of the invitational, with two wins over Tennessee-Chattanooga and Loyola Chicago.

Whitney Williams put UMass (11-4) on the board first against UT-Chattanooga (12-7), taking advantage of a walk onto first base along with two illegal pitches from Brooke Loudermilk that sent her home. The Minutewomen scored again in the top of the second off a solo homerun from Meghan Carta to take a 2-0 lead.

Starting pitcher Loudermilk was taken off the mound in the second inning after throwing eight illegal pitches. Kandice Irwin and Nikki Waters replaced Loudermilk and allowed the final two runs of the game.

A throwing error from the Mocs' shortstop also helped the Maroon and White to its third and final run of the game. Carta reached third base on the error, along with pinch runner Jordan Storro scoring from third.

Plourde allowed zero runs on four hits, as well as 13 strikeouts in seven innings pitched, increasing her record to 6-2 and taking the 3-0 shutout.

"I think she's certainly doing what she needs to do to be successful in the game," Sortino said. "She's a young pitcher, she has a lot to learn and I feel like every day she gets a little bit better at it."

Michelle Libby opened up scoring for UMass in the second game Friday afternoon against Loyola Chicago (2-7), hitting a solo home-run in the top of the first inning. Carta hit her second homerun of the weekend directly after Libby, giving the Maroon and White an early 2-0 lead. Carta leads the Minutewomen in homeruns with three this season.

The Ramblers put a run on the board in the top of the second, started by a throwing error that advanced Brooke Andresen to second base. An RBI single to left field drove home Andresen and decreased the lead to a single run.

The bottom of the second produced another run for UMass as Kyllie Magill singled and stole second base to start off the inning, followed by an RBI single from Carly Normandin to bring Magill home. She scored again in the fourth inning off a Katie Bettencourt RBI single.

"She gives a great effort. She's just such a talented athlete and we're very fortunate to have a [player] like that," Sortino said of Normandin.

Loyola Chicago got one more run back when Andresen scored in the sixth inning, but it was not enough for the win.

Plourde struck out eight batters in five innings pitched, but it was Bailey Sanders who was credited with the save. Sanders stranded three batters on base in the sixth inning, followed by three strikeouts in the seventh for the 4-2 victory. Sortino felt that Sanders and Plourde worked well together to provide relief and support to come out with the win.

The Minutewomen's second shutout of the weekend came with a 3-0 win over Virginia Tech on Saturday afternoon.

Neither team's offense had any action in the first four innings. The Maroon and White did not have a single hit in those innings, led back by starting pitcher Kenzie Roark. The Hokies (7-10) also had little offensive action with just three hits allowed by Plourde.

UMass' offense came to life in the bottom of the fifth inning, spurred by back-to-back singles from Jessica Serio and Normandin. Both batters were sent home by a Williams double to right center. Williams went on to score the third and final run for the Minutewomen from a Bettencourt single.

Plourde did not allow another hit from Virginia Tech in the remaining innings, earning her fourth shutout of the season and improving to 8-2.

Day two of play for the Minutewomen was wrapped up with a victory over the host of the invitational, USF.

After a throwing error by the shortstop and a single to left field, the Bulls (6-6) took a 2-0 lead in the bottom of the first inning.

UMass came back in the top of the third inning behind a Sarah Reeves three-run homerun, her third of the season. She drove in Bettencourt and Magill who each had a single to get on base.

USF got a run back in the fourth inning when Cat Olnick hit a triple to left center. Plourde came through for her team as she struck out three consecutive batters to keep the Minutewomen in the lead. However, the Bulls regained a 5-4 lead in the fifth inning when Alison Savarese hit a two-run homer to left center.

After a fielder's choice and error by the left fielder put two on base for UMass, Libby hit a two-run single to take a 6-5 lead and win over USF. Plourde struck out four additional batters – a total of 14 for the game – in the remaining innings to ensure the win.

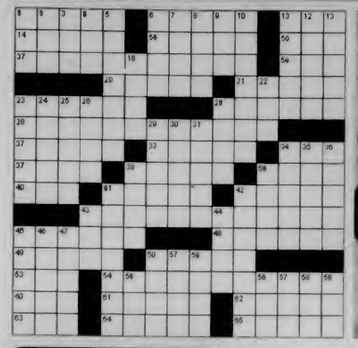
The Minutewomen ended the USF Under Armour Invitational with a 6-1 win over Robert Morris.

Libby doubled to right field in the second inning, bringing home Cyndil Matthew to drive in the first run for the Minutewomen. A throwing error by the catcher allowed Libby to score an unearned run and give UMass a lead it would keep for the remainder of the game.

A third run was tacked on in the bottom of the third, set up by a Magill triple followed by a Bettencourt double to send her home. The Minutewomen's final three runs came in the bottom of the fourth inning, started off by a Magill RBI double. After Magill advanced to third base on a wild pitch, Reeves came through and homered to left field to score two runs.

Katrina Gallagher bunted in the top of the sixth inning to put one run on the board for the Colonials (1-4), but Robert Morris could not spark enough offense to come back from a five-run deficit.

Sanders was credited with her second win for UMass after striking out two and allowing four hits. Plourde came in as relief in the fourth inning, allowing one run on two hits to pick up her first save of the season.



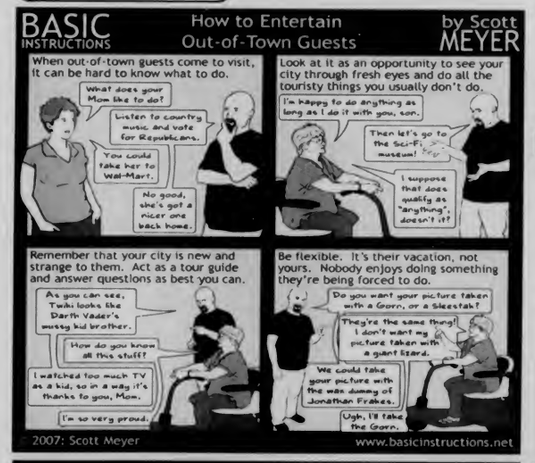
The Minutewomen return to action on March 18 at the San Diego Classic II.

Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombard@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
$6.70 Ads for column inch
On-Campus Local Ads for
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

COMICS

CROSSWORD



UMass... Cape Cod?
Take online classes anywhere this Summer
Registration begins March 15
Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net
UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

ACROSS
1. Poison plant
6. Acclaim
11. Geographic illustration
14. A Muse
15. France's longest river
16. Earned Run Average
17. A person who amuses
19. Lair
20. 1000 kilograms
21. French for "Queen"
23. Pound at the end of a pencil
27. Mischievous one
28. Statistics
32. Avoid
33. Exchange
34. "Eureka!"
37. Catholic church service
38. Push
39. Smile radiantly
40. Wood chopping tool
41. Shakespeare's theater
42. Vitality
43. Demonstration
45. Magazine feature
48. Bug
49. Dadem
50. Heavy pin
53. Chafe
54. Dinosaur with 3 horns
60. Bother
61. Not inner
62. Small Asian goat antelope
63. Encountered
64. Wheezy
65. Manicurist's board

DOWN
1. Behold
2. Ashes holder
3. Welcome ___
4. Consumed food
5. A funeral procession
6. Distinctive flair
7. Metal money
8. Connects two points
9. "___ we having fun yet?"
10. Patio
11. First aid attendant
12. Sporting venue
13. A jury or board
18. A unit of pressure
22. 5
23. Swelling under the skin
24. Unwind
25. Make smile
26. Mats of grass
27. Carnival attraction
29. A Musketeer
30. Investigate
31. Safe place
34. Eagle's nest
35. Mayhem
36. Catkin
38. Sleigh
39. Wagers
41. One who bestows
42. A more favorable position
43. Church bench
44. Level
45. Leave
46. Puritan
47. Android
50. Ritual
51. Chilled
52. Extremely
55. Regret
56. A male cat
57. Refinable rock
58. Average for a hole
59. Clever

BASIC INSTRUCTIONS — How to Entertain Out-of-Town Guests — by Scott MEYER

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20 - FEB. 18
Waking up in a "Ghostbusters" uniform only confirms one thing – you are a god among the human race.

pisces FEB. 19 - MAR. 20
Playing checkers with you is like going up against James Cameron in the Academy Awards.

aries MAR. 21 - APR. 19
I never knew that "unleashing the beast" could result in such a misusage of ketchup and breakfast cereal.

taurus APR. 20 - MAY. 20
Do something surprising like Megan Fox, as she is reprising her role as demon Jennifer in "Jennifer's Often Overlooked Personality."

gemini MAY. 21 - JUN. 21
Do not forget to be affectionate to those who love you the most. This includes your long and slender pillowcase.

cancer JUN. 22 - JUL. 22
You ever stop and wonder if it is the FarmVille game that is harvesting us while we harvest our cyber farm?

leo JUL. 23 - AUG. 22
In order for you to be the coolest person in the world, you need to defeat Bruce Willis in a drag race for cool sunglasses.

virgo AUG. 23 - SEPT. 22
Rules are bound to be broken. This is a property that is also shared among the sweatpants–wearing community.

libra SEPT. 23 - OCT. 22
If you have never heard a Russian man screaming "enemy AC-130 above!" then you are not living your life.

scorpio OCT. 23 - NOV. 21
You should not be stuck between buying a family portrait for your grandmother and buying a male stripper for all those lonely nights.

sagittarius NOV. 22 - DEC. 21
Your most recent test score at least has more continuity than any of the "Alien vs. Predator" films.

capricorn DEC. 22 - JAN. 19
Have more of an active role in your life by bringing your favorite hot sauce along for the ride when you go to Wendy's.

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
PUFFTON VILLAGE
EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS
SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!
ON SITE LAUNDRY, OFF STREET PARKING.
BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.
OFFICE HOURS: 8AM TO 4PM MONDAY - FRIDAY
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

Wet Jet

	3			6		2	5
				5		8		7
		2	9	7
3	7		8				6
8	2					4
				9	6
	6	8
			2			7
		5					3

SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc comics.com

Steve never again asked me to be more vocal during orgasm.

CITY FOOTWEAR
Students and Staff of the five Colleges Eligible for 10% of with ID nike
NEW ERA
Clarks
TIMBERLAND
34 Pleasant Street · Northampton
413.341.5581

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com

Hark! a Vagrant by K. Beaton harkavagrant.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further...CAMP MATAPONI, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (samm crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders and more! Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com

FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St. 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,575/Mo+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

TUTORING SERVICES

Math, Physics, Chemistry. Stats, GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 Jboid42@yahoo.com

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends From $89 Complete. Montreal Express.Net MontrealBlowout.com 781-979-9001

ACTIVITIES

Bartenders needed for FT/PT positions. No experience required. Earn $20-$70 per hour. Call us at 617-849-8074

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MARCH 8, 2010 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Weekend ends postseason doubts

Senior Ricky Harris pulls up for a leaner in traffic against Rhode Island. Harris scored 28 points to lead the Minutemen to a 69-67 win over the Rams, earning the team a spot in the Atlantic 10 tournament.

With a pair of wins against Maine over the weekend, the Minutemen broke their six-game losing streak to gain a berth in the Hockey East tournament. UMass will face BC in the opening round this weekend.

Harris lifts Minutemen to A-10 tournament

By Jeffrey R. Larsard
Collegian Staff

On his night, Ricky Harris hit the shot he's dreamed of his entire life.

With his team tied at 67 with Rhode Island and a berth into the Atlantic 10 tournament on the line, Harris drove into the paint before hitting a tear-drop with three seconds remaining on the clock, sealing the 69-67 victory.

UMass	69
URI	67

"Somewhere in my 22 years of living I definitely dreamt of this, playing in my backyard or playing against my little cousins," Harris said. "Now it's like a dream come true."

While the shot on senior night sent the Massachusetts men's basketball team into the A-10 tournament, it had far more implications than just that. The team it defeated, URI (21-8, 9-7 A-10), also could have knocked them out of the NCAA tournament picture. For La Salle, who beat the Minutemen (11-19, 5-11 A-10) on Wednesday, the shot knocked it out of the A-10 tournament.

While the contest at the Mullins Center wasn't a must-win game for the Minutemen – they could have clinched a spot in the tournament if La Salle beat Saint Joseph's – they certainly entered the game with that mentality.

"This game was do-or-die, we could either win or go home," Harris said.

During the contest, the out-of-town scores were never announced so UMass could focus on the only game they could control that would help them reach the playoffs' its own.

The plan worked, as the Minutemen overcame a nine-point deficit with 11 minutes, 38 seconds left in the game.

Over the next 5:40, it would be all UMass as it would go on a 12-1 run to take its first lead, 52-50, since the second minute of the game.

The Rams would go back on top by three a minute later, but Harris would score 10 of his 17 second-half points in the final five minutes of the game – including the Minutemen's final six points of the game – to give his team the lift it needed.

With UMass trailing 57-55, Harris stood at the line for two free throws. The guard missed them both, but instead of giving the Rams an opportunity to make it a

See BASKETBALL on page 6

Weekend sweep of Maine gives UM playoff matchup with BC

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

Facing a late-season collapse, the Massachusetts hockey team stepped up with a pair of wins over the weekend against Maine to earn a spot in the Hockey East tournament.

Despite losing six-straight games, the Minutemen (18-16-0, 13-14-0 HEA) still had an opportunity to get into the playoffs with a weekend sweep over the No. 17-ranked Black Bears (16-15-3, 13-12-2 HEA) at Alfond Arena.

With its back against the wall, UMass came through with a 5-2 win on Friday, followed by the 4-3 playoff-clinching win the following night at a venue where it had not won since the 2003-04 season.

On Saturday, the Minutemen continued their momentum, scoring three goals in the final 10 minutes of the first period. Sophomore Casey Wellman scored his team-leading 20th goal of the season on a loose puck in front of the Maine net to give UMass a lead that wasn't surmounted.

UMass	5
Maine	2
UMass	4
Maine	3

Just one minute, 44 seconds later, senior Justin Braun added a second score when he skated around a defender and beat freshman goaltender Shawn Sirman for his sixth goal of the year. Following the score, Sirman was replaced by Dave Wilson between the pipes and the Black Bears responded with a goal of their own from Jeff Dimmen to close the gap.

In the final minute of the frame, Braun recorded his second goal of the contest while UMass was on a five-on-three power play to increase the lead back to two.

Maine received a power play opportunity in the first few minutes of the second period and capitalized with Gustav Nyquist's 18th goal of the season. The rest of the frame, however, went in favor of the Minutemen as senior Brett Watson netted UMass' final goal of the contest with his third score in as many games.

See HOCKEY on page 6

Minutewomen have season end at hands of Richmond

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Staff

Although the Massachusetts women's basketball team held Brittani Shells to nine points and eight rebounds in the opening game of the Atlantic 10 tournament, the Richmond defense clamped down on the Minutewomen to knock UMass out of the postseason with a 54-47 victory.

UR	54
UMass	47

"I thought we had a good game plan," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "We came out and pressed a little bit, and in the half court played a 2-3 zone. We struggled putting the ball in the basket, and we got great looks, but in the game of basketball you have to be able to put the ball in the bucket.

Richmond led UMass by three points with 34 seconds left when the Spiders' Rachel Bilney hauled in an offensive rebound that eventually stole the victory for her team.

Bilney grabbed a rebound off of a Crystal Goring miss and Richmond called a timeout. During the next play, Bilney drove to the UMass hoop and was fouled by Jasmine Watson, sending her to the free-throw line and consequently stretching the lead.

"We had an opportunity to win the ball game at the end," Dacko said. "We played some great defense and just could not come away with the right rebound."

UMass led 24-23 at the break, but could not keep the lead due to a lack of offense and allowed Richmond to pull ahead. The Spiders had 20 of their 44 rebounds on offense, while the Minutewomen pulled down 30 rebounds in the contest.

They had some key offensive rebounds and I think that really hurt us at the end of the game," Marnie Dacko said. "I think the other thing that hurt us was that we had an opportunity to open up to about 15 points in the first half, and we had open looks and open layups, but because of the tournament situation our kids played a little tight."

Dsitierra Hill had 10 points, five rebounds, five assists and two steals for UMass. Hill and senior Kim Benton played their best defensive games of the season up top in the 2-3 zone in the first half.

Benton finished the game with six points on 2-of-6 shooting, as well as recording four assists and two steals. In her last game with the Minutewomen it was a bittersweet ending for Benton, who now leads the program in career-games played with 119 in her career.

UMass held Shells – the A-10's leading scorer coming into the game – to single digits, but allowed Abby Oliver – the conference's Sixth Player of the Year – to score 16 points and record five rebounds, three assists and two steals. Oliver picked up the slack left by Shells, going 2-of-4 from beyond the arc and 4-of-4 from the line.

Jasmine Watson, who was named the A-10 Rookie of the Year last week, had nine points and seven rebounds, also going 5-of-5 from the free-throw line. She was in foul trouble, however, towards the end of the game, netting four total.

Sophomore Nicole Jones replaced the freshman forward down low in the first half and had four blocks, four points and four rebounds in the contest. She was also perfect at the charity stripe, hitting two free throws in the game.

Kristina Danella was also stifled by the Richmond defense and amassed only four points, six rebounds and two blocks in the game.

Though the Minutewomen end their season at 11-19 overall, Dacko feels the core of the team will return next season where she hopes to do better.

"We've got everybody back but Kim Benton," Dacko said. "This team is going to work hard and this team is going to make some noise."

Neil Carroll can be reached at nwcarrol@student.umass.edu

The Minutewomen suffered a 54-47 loss to Richmond in the opening round of the Atlantic 10 tournament to end their season.

Sophomore Steve D'Amario recorded his first career goal in a loss for UMass against Yale this weekend.

Last goal gives UMass first loss

Yale gets seven points from Gibson in victory

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The offense was there. The result was not.

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team fell to Yale Friday night, 13-12, in a game characterized by back-and-forth scoring from both teams.

Matt Gibson, who scored five goals and added two assists for the Bulldogs (2-0) for a career-best seven points, netted his most important one with 34 seconds left to hand the Minutemen (2-1) their first loss of the 2010 season.

"It's disappointing, but our guys came back showed a lot of perseverance, facing the adversity that we had, to tie the game up and we actually had the ball at the end of the game," UMass coach Greg Cannella said.

UMass was down 12-9 with five minutes to go in the fourth quarter, but came from behind with back-to-back goals from freshman midfielder Will Manny. After the pair of goals, sophomore attackman Steve D'Amario tied the game with his first career goal off of a pass from Bobby Hayes on a man-up possession, with less than a minute and a half to go in regulation.

Gibson, however, capitalized off of a Minutemen turnover and scored on a fast break to lead the Bulldogs to their second win of the season.

"In those situations, you would hope to be a little bit better, we weren't great there, they got the ball down, there was a scramble for it and they scored, so that's how this game goes," Cannella said.

Along with Manny, UMass was led by senior midfielder Bobby Hayes (two goals), as the Minutemen had seven different players score, including the first eight coming from eight different players.

Redshirt sophomore goalkeeper Tim McCormack made 12 saves in the loss, while Jonathan Falcone stopped seven, including five in the first half.

"If you score 12 goals, you hope you are going to win the game, that's what's disappointing," Cannella said.

Yale	13
UMass	12

With the defeat, UMass' 45-game streak of scoring 11 or more goals and winning came to an end, a stretch that went back to a 13-12 loss to Johns Hopkins in 2002.

The Minutemen scored 15 and 20 goals respectively in their first two games, both victories over Sacred Heart and Hartford.

The Bulldogs were led by Gibson, Brian Douglass (two goals) and Gregory Mahony (two goals), as the team outshot the Minutemen 44-30 in the game, including 23-13 in the second half.

UMass generated its scoring opportunities from tough defensive play from sophomore defenseman Tom Celentani. With a big hit, he made it unable for the Bulldogs to clear, and then saved a possession on the 11th goal on a loose ball at the midfield line. Celentani had two ground balls and caused three turnovers in the loss.

"Tommy's made plays all year, he's been solid, we're very happy with his progress and where he's at," Cannella said.

"He has a good sense of the game, he's very composed out there on the field, and in the clearing game as well. We played good defense at times today, not great overall, and that's something we're going to need to improve on."

The Minutemen led 7-4 early on in the second quarter, but a tight Bulldog defense surrendered just one goal over a 32-minute span after an Art Kell goal five and half minutes into the second frame.

In that time period, the Bulldogs scored seven goals, including two from Gibson. Hayes finally broke through after 22 minutes, cutting the deficit to two. The Minutemen were held scoreless in the third quarter, the first time UMass was shutout in a quarter so far this season.

UMass looks to rebound when it returns to Garber Field to take on Albany on Tuesday.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

MOSTLY SUNNY HIGH: 51 LOW: 29 www.DailyCollegian.com TUESDAY, MARCH 9, 2010

SGA candidates debate, voting begins today

Students can cast votes online for first time in campus history

By Collegian News Staff

Vying for votes in today's election, candidates for president and student trustee of the Student Government Association debated each other in a public forum last night.

Only the candidates running on tickets, Pat Kenney and D'Alessandra Acosta together and Brandon Tower and Mike Fox together, were present at the debate in the Student Union Ballroom at the University of Massachusetts. According to Chancellor of Elections Jitesh Khushalani, student trustee candidates Andrew Dawson and Benjamin Chase had "prior engagements." Candidates were aware of the debate date less than a week ago.

The candidates were questioned by debate moderator and Collegian Editor-in-Chief William McGuiness, UVC-TV correspondent Nicole Sobel, Collegian reporters Alyssa Creamer and Hannah McGoldrick, and several members of the audience. The audience consisted primarily of current SGA members.

The debate began with introductions and questions to the presidential candidates, Kenney and Tower.

Kenney addressed his interest in organizing students to lobby state legislators to make the University more "affordable and accessible" to students.

When asked by Sobel how Kenney planned to make his belief that students should be able to graduate from high-quality institutions without excessive debt a reality for UMass students, Kenney responded with "we'd like to continue the way we have been, and we rallied around the $1,500 fee increase." Kenney stated that he feels it is important for students to rally around issues involving fee increases and to have students be involved in the decision-making process through helping to facilitate conversations with administrators. He also stated that he and Acosta would be working to fight the potential School of Management and flagship fees.

Both presidential candidates and both student trustee candidates expressed their discontent with the pending Commonwealth College, flagship and School of Management fees. However, both tickets explained they would be in support of the proposed "green fee" at the University, which will be a $5, non-waivable fee.

Tower responded to a question about how he plans to promote campus safety by saying that given the recent reports of the University's mishandling of a sexual assault case, he feels as though protecting women's safety is a priority of his potential administration. He said that he plans to develop a ride program that takes victims of sexual assault from the University to Cooley-Dickinson Hospital and have a trained employee from the Everywoman's Center accompany the victim on the way to the hospital. He also suggested developing a social norms campaign comparable to the alcohol campaign about sexual assault. Tower continued to say that he wanted to create an environment that "made women feel safe about coming forward" with their stories about sexual assault.

Both candidates identified concerns regarding "ambiguous" or "unclear" language within the current Code of Student Conduct (CSC).

Tower discussed that charges within the student conduct code are all encompassing and need to be changed because offenses that are not as serious as others can be grouped in the same kind of charge.

Kenney said that there is currently no mention of sanctions for hate crime offenders, and that as president he would work to change that.

"It's not that I am unable to pass any legislation through the senate," said Kenney in response to a question about why Kenney feels qualified to be president when, according to SGA records, he has not sponsored a "single piece of legislation this year" from SGA Senator Derek Khanna.

"As chair of the Administrative Affairs Committee,

See SGA on page 2

Student trustee candidates D'Alessandra Acosta and Mike Fox debate at last night's forum in the Student Union Ballroom.

Students dig in for shared agriculture

Ten UMass students, including senior Lisa Millette, are working on with professors to create an agricultural sharing program on campus.

Program will be UMass-based

By Cameron Ford
Collegian Staff

Students taking a class in the department of Plant, Soil and Insect Sciences are planning to create a Campus Shared Agriculture (CSA) program at the University of Massachusetts Extension Farm in South Deerfield.

Lisa Millette, a senior with an independent concentration, is helping the course and its instructors operate the CSA as her honors capstone thesis.

"The way [a CSA] works is that the risk is shared between the CSA shareholders and the farmers," she said. "Farmers grow an X amount of produce, and they decide how many shares that works into."

"For example, we are going to try and do 30 shares," Millette continued. "Each share is going to total about 200 pounds of food, but that will be spread out between 10 weeks. So a single shareholder will come and pick up an X amount of pounds every week for 10 weeks."

The shares are purchased in the spring so that the farmer will be able to use the money to buy seed, equipment, labor, and other necessities in preparation for the shareholder's crop yield, said Millette.

With that comes a certain risk for the shareholders, Millette said.

"We're trying to guarantee them a certain amount of produce, but there's a chance that it may not always come through," she said. "There's also a chance that they get more produce than what they bought."

The idea of putting together a CSA first came about last semester, when the UMass Farm's crop yield far exceeded orders. Earthfoods Café, which is supplied largely by the farm, did not wish to buy the full surplus, nor did Dining Services, which "could only buy so much." With so much excess, the decision was made to form a CSA, which turned out to be so popular that it is being continued now.

Millette explained that what sets this particular CSA apart from others is the fact that this will only be operated within the UMass network.

"CISA [Community Involved in Sustaining Agriculture, a local-farming advocate organization] is trying to get local areas to support local farmers," she said. "But this is just going to be the UMass farm supported by UMass students, faculty, grad students and staff. So it's very UMass-to-UMass based."

The course itself that the CSA is a part of is listed under the title PLSOILIN 398E - Student Farming Enterprise. It is partially funded by the Massachusetts Society for Promoting Agriculture. The course is limited to 10 students, and takes place both on campus and off campus. An information brochure on the class lists, the main focuses as finding markets for the produce, planning out in advance for the crops, visiting farms in the immediate area, managing greenhouses, using market strategies to achieve desired yields, and learning farming methods. All produce grown is United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) certified organic.

According to Millette, interest in the class is growing rapidly.

"I participated last year; there were five of us. But [this] semester, there's been 10. So interest has already doubled," she said. "But the course won't grow to any more than 10 students, because it is a really tight community and in order for it to work efficiently, there can only be so many members."

See CSA on page 2

Students face record-high debt

By Andy Locke and Michael Stefanelli
Special to the Collegian

Twenty-one thousand six hundred fourteen dollars – that's the amount of debt facing the average University of Massachusetts Amherst graduate of 2008, according to the U.S. Department of Education. It's almost identical to the national average of $20,200. This student loan debt has many students and recent graduates feeling buried alive.

A new plan from the Obama administration could offer relief to student borrowers – including the 66 percent of UMass students who graduated with debt in 2008, the most recent year for which data is available. But this proposal faces stiff opposition from banking lobbies, who are spending millions of dollars to defeat it.

The plan, part of the White House's 2010 budget proposal, has three goals: to lower the required monthly payments for student loans from 15 to 10 percent of discretionary income; to lower the maximum repayment period from 25 to 20 years for most people, and from 25 to 10 years for people entering public service; and to shift billions of dollars away from federally subsidized student loans issued through private lenders and into need-based grants and scholarships like the Pell Grant.

Andy Korenowsky, a loan counselor at Hampshire College, is guardedly optimistic about the administration's plan.

"[It's] they're only proposals at this time," he said, "and undoubtedly [there will] be amendments to these proposals by the time we receive final word."

He points out that the proposed changes could definitely benefit students in the long run.

"Paying what one can afford for a maximum of 20 years is better than paying what one can afford for 25 years," Korenowsky said. "Lower monthly payments may prevent some students from defaulting on their loans… [while] increased federal grant funds will benefit students with the most financial need."

It's important to note that these changes would only apply to federally subsidized student loans. These loans – issued through private lenders and into need-based grants and scholarships – are financially supported by the federal government. Currently, Korenowsky said, federal education loans provide the best loan options for college students and parents.

"Federal loans have fixed rates of interest, several repayment plan options, future payment postponement possibilities, and payment forgiveness programs," he said.

Private student loans are issued through the same lenders but without government backing. Korenowsky says students should borrow private loans as a last resort.

Under Obama's proposal, academic institutions could join the Federal Direct-Lending program.

See STUDENT DEBT on page 3

Internat'l Women's Day honored at UM

By Ashley Berger
Collegian Correspondent

Campus organizations and community members joined together yesterday to celebrate International Women's Day in the Cape Cod Lounge.

The Everywoman's Center, the Women of Color Leadership Network and the GSS Graduate Women's Network hosted the event, which included food, music, appearances by a multitude of Registered Student Organizations (RSO) and poetry readings. The celebration also included free massages and free Henna tattoos.

A moving "Women of Hope" photo collection, biographies and stories of women such as Maya Angelou, Toni Morrison and Julia Alvarez were also shown. While the turnout of the event was a predominantly female audience, there were a few men in attendance.

International Women's Day is recognized by the United Nations and observed with parties, education and political discussions, said event organizers. The event provided education regarding involvement, sexual health and women of different races, explained by UMass RSO students.

Junior Jessica Toussaint, a volunteer for The Women of Color Leadership Network, discussed some of the events that her RSO puts on during the year. The club is responsible for providing "Dorm Dialogues," workshops providing information to women of color in different dormitories about domestic abuse, eating disorders, diseases and body image, among other issues.

The RSO also gives women of color a place to connect with each other, a place to relax and a place to make friends, she said. The network will also be sponsoring an event called "Body Politics" on Apr. 16 and 17 in the Bowker Auditorium. "Body Politics" will include a play, written by members.

The Everywoman's Center is an education advocacy group on campus that puts on workshops to not only the UMass community but also to all of Hampshire County. They are responsible for the "Consent Is Sexy" campaign, an awareness movement about how to consent to sexual activity, pressure, and sexual expectations of both partners. The Everywoman's Center also works with the Rape Crisis and Violence Prevention Programs, which provides free, confidential services to both men and women seeking help. The Center provides court, academic, hospital and police advocacy, as well as emergency support.

A newly reestablished undergraduate RSO, the Student Parent Association was also in attendance at the event. President Jessica Dautruche, a student mother, says that the RSO is a haven for not only student parents, but also students who may potentially become parents at any point in their lives, not just in their careers at UMass.

The RSO provides communication and support, as well as hosting "Dinner On Us" every Monday night which includes supervised children's activities, a family dinner and a roundtable discussion for parents.

"I'm really excited that we brought the organization back," said Dautruche, a student mother of a five year old. "It lets you know that you're not alone, that others are in the same situation as you."

Karen Lederer, the undergraduate advisor of Women, Gender and Sexuality Studies was also on hand to talk about the 35th anniversary of the program. She also discussed the recent change from "Women's Studies" to the new name to incorporate intersexual analysis.

Student RSO VOX, the reproductive rights group, was also there providing free condoms and lubricant, as well as pamphlets discussing the political issues regarding women's rights.

"We bring attention to safe sex issues. We usually have a big turnout at events because we always hand out free condoms and every one loves to get free condoms," said senior volunteer Meghan Lemay.

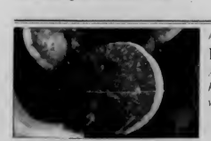
At VOX meetings, the discussion ranges from women possibly losing rights with the new healthcare bill to how there is no abortion clinic in Hampshire County. Lemay said the group brings attention to issues that "until you really need them, you would never realize they weren't there."

Freshmen Mary Lenahan and Rebecca Ellis said that women's awareness is important and that the event provided a wealth of relevant information. They thought that the RSOs provided cool opportunities that they may otherwise not have heard about.

"My friend studied abroad in Europe where the holiday is a big deal," said Lenahan. "She got flowers just for being a woman. I wish the day was like that here, too."

"All the issues brought to light here: abuse, sexuality, violence, are all important," added Ellis. "They should be better promoted and made more aware to more students."

The event concluded with a poetry reading from poets Leslèa Newman, Lenelle Moïse and Karen Johnston.



Newman is the author of "Heather Has Two Mommies," the first published book that portrayed lesbian families in a positive light. She was thrilled to be asked to the event and is glad that International Women's Day is making a comeback.

When asked what message she would like to send to young female poets in honor of the day, Newman said, "Write your heart out. Read as much as possible. Never give up your dreams."

Ashley Berger can be reached at aberger@student.umass.edu

Yesterday marked International Women's Day, which is regconized by the United Nations and observed with parties, education and political discussions.

ARTS & LIVING

Dinner date ideas

An effortless homemade meal for two will be sure to impress your significant other without breaking the bank.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Dacko out as UMass' coach

After eight years at the helm of the Minutewomen, Marnie Dacko will not return in the fall of 2010 after UMass decided not to renew her contract.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Dave Coffey believes that sexism is a terrible thing, but that some jokes, even those that some consider sexist, aren't terrible.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Go to DailyCollegian.com's "Breaking the Silence" section to check our continued coverage of the University's mishandling of an alleged rape case

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 32

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Scannell
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Ellie Ralon-Miller
Assistant Comics Domonic Mei
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Senior Producer Sara Cady
Senior Producer Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Rocheleau

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Whitton

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shaina Jackson

Student works on CSA for capstone

COURTESY LIDA MILLETTE

Creators of Campus Shared Agriculture plan to keep the program within the UMass network. They hope to raise public awareness around the University to ensure CSA's sustaintability.

CSA from page 1

Public awareness is essential to the success of a program of this type, given past scenarios, said Millette.

"In the '60s and '70s there was the first green movement, and unfortunately not enough people picked up on that and were able to get us back to a more sustainable lifestyle," Milette said. "So we're having our second green movement right now ...We have the option to take up this torch or to do what happened in the '60s and '70s, and let things trickle off on their own."

Millette offered one final bit of advice to the community at large.

"Know your farmer," she said. "I think that a CSA is an awesome opportunity for students to know their farmers because you're on the same campus as them. It's a really cool thing, because I'm a vegetarian and a couple months ago I even ate sausage because I knew the farmer that grew the pigs."

For more information, students are encouraged to contact Ruth Hazzard at rhazzard@umext.umass.edu or visit www.umassvegetable.org.

Cameron Ford can be reached at cjford@student.umass.edu.

Candidates debate

SGA from page 1

when you sponsor a piece of legislation, which I have, when it goes through the Administrative Affairs Committee and hits the floor as being sponsored by the administrative affairs committee," Kenney continued.

SGA advisor Lydia Washington asked Kenney and Tower "what are your plans on changing the [SGA] Constitution and bylaws?"

Tower stated that Administrative Affairs Committee Chairperson Jerrad Rose "is the powerhouse on my team" that "knows the bylaws inside and out." Tower said he wanted to have training for new SGA members and some sort of mitigated punishment short of expulsion for SGA members who do not fulfill their roles properly.

Kenney stated that when he was chair of administrative affairs, the committee had discussed that a third party consultant should come in and rework the bylaws so that anyone could understand it.

"If you go through the bylaws there are tons of contradictions in there," said Kenney. He also said that reworking the bylaws would have to be the mainly the responsibility of the Administrative Affairs Committee and not the executive branch of the SGA, but that he would offer his suggestions.

Acosta explained her interest in establishing a Trio program at the University, as well as set up a pipeline program for local high school students.

"It's very near and dear to my heart to work with trio programs because it has helped me get to where I am now and help my brother and sister get to college," said Acosta.

As defined on the U.S. Department of Education's website, "The Federal TRIO Programs (TRIO) are Federal outreach and student services programs designed to identify and provide services for individuals from disadvantaged backgrounds. TRIO includes eight programs targeted to serve and assist low-income individuals, first-generation college students, and individuals with disabilities to progress through the academic pipeline from middle school to postbaccalaureate programs."

Acosta has been working with OPSAS and other student agencies to create a posse program at UMass.

"Founded in 1989, Posse identifies public high school students with extraordinary academic and leadership potential who may be overlooked by traditional college selection processes," as stated on the Posse Foundation website. The program's college partners provide four-year, free tuition scholarships to Posse Scholars.

Fox's mission is to bring students who feel strongly about student issues to the Board of Trustees and foster better communication between students and himself as he represents the students.

"I don't view myself as being the sole representative of the student body," said Fox. "I want to be the conduit, the facilitator. I want to be the person that shows the Trustees the faces of the students that are impacted by their decisions."

Voting begins today. Elections are being held online on the University's Campus Pulse site located at https://umassamherst.collegiatelink.net, and paper ballots are available at certain locations on campus.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
On-Ca
Local
Ads for
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

HPV Fact #13:
About 2 out of 3 people will get genital warts after having any kind of genital contact with someone infected.

HPV Fact #11:
You don't have to actually have sex to get HPV—the virus that causes genital warts.

Why risk it
Visit your campus health center.

MERCK
Copyright © 2010 Merck & Co., Inc
All rights reserved. Printed in USA.
hpv.com
2105000(4(0)-01/10-GRD

UM average debt: $21K

STUDENT DEBT from page 1

UMass has been a part of this program for many years already. This means that if the plan were to pass, it would not affect the way that the school provides services, said UMass spokesman Ed Blaguszewski.

"Making a UMass Amherst education accessible is a fundamental value of the University," Blaguszewski said in an e-mail interview. "The direct-lending program works well for our students and parents."

UMass has worked hard to ensure that its education remains accessible to families of all income levels. According to Blaguszewski, UMass has kept student charges for tuition and fees at or below the rate of inflation since the 2004-2005 school year. Funding for need-based financial aid is now $31.1 million, an increase of $11 million in the last five years.

Blaguszewski commented that the biggest challenge in delivering financial aid to students is the paperwork requirements established by the U.S Department of Education.

"The staff here at UMass works hard to manage and effectively serve the students and their families," he said.

Under the Obama administration's plan, private lenders would be cut out from the loan process entirely. Instead, loans would be issued to students straight from the federal government, theoretically lowering costs and interest rates. It would also shift the focus of student aid from loans to grants. Opponents to the plan cite potential job losses in the student lending industry as a drawback.

Chris Coiro, a UMass alum who graduated in 2005, worries that a lack of competition will hurt students financially.

"Competition among lenders will always benefit the student," he said.

Competition for students' business among private organizations as well as state, local, and federal government lending programs is good for people like him, who are paying off thousands in student loan debt, he added.

Coiro isn't alone in his view that the current system of student lending is more beneficial to students than the proposed budget plan would be. Other opponents view the plan as a federal takeover, similar to the Wall Street bailouts which occurred last year, or the health care bill which is still fighting its way through Congress. They are citing the roughly 35,000 people who are employed by student lending companies, and wondering how many jobs would be lost if the proposal goes through.

Korenowsky is also worried by the possible removal of private companies from the student loan system.

"One of my concerns about this possibility is that the customer service the program would provide to borrowers as well as colleges will become one of lesser quality," he said. "The confusion about repayment plans or forgiveness programs may well continue or increase if the program's staff is not enlarged and well trained."

Some view this bill as a more effective way to monitor and regulate interest rates on student loans. The interest rates on federally subsidized and unsubsidized loans were once adjusted on an annual basis, but have been set at a fixed rate since July 2006.

"For this year, federal subsidized student loans have a fixed rate of 5.6 percent, unsubsidized loans have a fixed rate of 6.8 percent," said Korenowsky. "Parent loans have fixed rates of 7.9 percent or 8.5 percent, depending on the loan program. The fixed interest rates are too high."

This proposal – for which the Obama administration once had high hopes of being passed – is now being threatened by a lack of bipartisan support and an army of lobbyists. The student lending business is a lucrative one, giving out $95 billion in loans during the 2008-2009 school year according to The New York Times.

Of that 95 billion, Sallie Mae, the nation's biggest student lender,originated $22 billion. If the Obama administration's plan goes through, Sallie Mae would be looking at a significant drop in business. The company has spent over $3.5 million lobbying against the plan, according to The Times.

Students who have already acquired mountains of student loan debt— whether federal or private – are still frustrated.

"The worst part is that I don't feel like I have any power over it," says Taliesin Nyala, recent graduate from Hampshire College, about her student loan debt.

She isn't alone.

Across the country, hundreds of thousands of students and graduates are struggling with more debt than ever before. Coupled with high unemployment and rising housing costs, the added weight of debt from student loans and other sources has many recent graduates feeling powerless.

"I felt like it was a lot of paperwork and a lot of red tape, and felt like I didn't have much control over the whole process," said Coiro. Regardless of any frustrations "most students looking for education loans are going to be pretty motivated to take out the money they need with whatever is available."

Emma Lifvergren, a senior at UMass, agreed. Though she took out fewer loans than the average UMass student, her debt was still a major factor in her parents' decision to sell their house sooner rather than later.

"My plans were a large motivating factor in my parent's decision to downsize," Lifvergren said.

In her opinion, a focus on grants rather than loans and the adjustment of interest rates by the federal government could help keep the costs of an education under control.

Even if the Obama administration's proposals are put into action, it will be difficult to measure the long-term costs or benefits of the plan. As an example, consider the Public Service Forgiveness program — instituted by the federal government in 2007 — which Korenowsky says is "similar" to certain elements of the administration's proposal.

"No one will benefit from this forgiveness program until 2017, 10 years after its start in 2007," he said.

For both the Public Service Forgiveness program and the Obama administration's plan, Korenowsky —and many like him will be watching Washington closely, eager "to see how all of this plays out."

Andy Locke can be reached at aglocke@student.umass.edu. Michael Stefanelli can be reached at mstefanel@student.umass.edu

ONLINE ELECTIONS
SGA
President Trustee Debate
Student Union Ballroom
Today, 7-9
ELECTION DATES
March 9,10,11
VOTE ONLINE VIA CAMPUS PULSE
OR
VOTE AT CAMPUS CENTER
BETWEEN 11AM- 5PM
ONLINE ELECTIONS

Renting 101:
How to Rent Your First Apartment
Getting ready to rent an apartment off campus?
* Learn how to "get it right" this important first time.
* Learn how to make good decisions as you take the "next step" in your college life.
* Learn the mistakes you want to avoid making.
* Know your responsibilities. Know your rights!
Come to a crash course in renting!
Tuesday evening, March 9, 2010
7:00 to 8:00pm
Berkshire Dining Hall, Private Dining Room
RENTING 101
Come to a crash course in renting!
* DOOR PRIZES
* HELPFUL CHECKLISTS
* EXPERT ADVICE FROM STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE SENIOR STAFF ATTORNEY BERNADETTE STARK
www.umoch.org
UMassAmherst
Presented by: Student Legal Services Offices in collaboration with Off Campus Housing Referrals and the Housing Assignment Office

AN EPIC BATTLE OF TASTE
8 CHEFS COMPETE
Bar enberg, CEC Executive Chef University of Iowa with Chef/Assistant Manager April Randall
Paul Oesterle Executive Chef University of Georgia with Chef/Assistant Manager Tracy Buesing
Manfred Werner Edler, CEC Executive Chef Villanova University with Executive Chef Nancy Miller
Nijo Joseph Executive Chef Stanford University with Head Cook Ashok Raput
UMASS DINING PROUDLY PRESENTS
2010 VISITING COLLEGE CHEF SERIES

UNIVERSITY OF IOWA	UNIVERSITY OF GEORGIA	VILLANOVA UNIVERSITY	STANFORD UNIVERSITY
Penne Pasta with Red Onion, Asparagus, Garlic and Pistachios in a White Wine Cream Sauce	Shrimp and Grits	Kennet Square Mushroom and Potato soup	Vegetarian Tikka Masala
Sushi rice cakes top with glazed pork belly	Peach Chicken Divine	Baby Greens & Blue Cheese Salad with Balsamic Vinaigrette	Aloo Gobi
Sweet Soybean Hummus	Braised Kale and Leeks	Braised Boneless Short Ribs	Palak Paneer
Fried Beet Crisps	Pecan Sweet Potatoes	Lobster Orzo Gratin	Dal Tadka
Roasted Corn and Maytag Custard served with Polenta Croutons & Balsamic Syrup		Charred Asparagus	Chana Masala
		Croissant Bread Pudding with Caramel Bourbon Pecan Sauce	Vegetable Pakoda
			Aloo Tikki with Okra Chat
			Mixed Vegetable Curry
			Samosa
			Cumin Basmati Rice
			Vegetable Biryani
			Nan
			Pappad
			Tamarind Chutney
			Cilantro Chutney
			Mango Lassis
			Rice Kheer

ONE NIGHT. ONE VENUE. ONE WINNER.
TUESDAY MARCH 9TH
5:00-9:00PM
BERKSHIRE DINING COMMONS
Come Be The Judge - Your Vote Counts!
UMASS DINING UMassAmherst
Ivy

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, MARCH 9, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Time to travel abroad

It's time to start thinking about studying abroad. It might be a little late for next semester, depending on the program you decide to use, but there is plenty of time for next spring or beyond. If you are interested, the first step is to visit the International Programs Office (IPO) in Hills South or online at www.ipo.umass.edu. Hills South has students who have gone abroad available to talk about the places you want to go, as well as full-time staff members who are geographically divided into different regions of the world.

Sara Crossman

There are lots of different ways to study abroad. There are many study programs run through the University of Massachusetts itself; there are some run through other universities, there are independent programs and there is also direct enrollment in which you enroll in a foreign university as a regular student.

Living in an apartment allows you to be significantly more independent. You often have your own room, but you usually have roommates with whom you share a kitchen and bathroom. This option is often found in European countries. Living in a dorm is very much like living in a dorm here; depending on the program you may, or may not have a roommate that you share a room with, but there are rules about living in the dorm.

Most of the students thinking about study abroad are freshmen and sophomores, but are sometimes juniors and seniors. Just because you're graduating does not mean you can't study abroad. Most programs are open to everyone, not just currently enrolled students, so if you're not sure what to do after you graduate, consider taking classes abroad, studying a language, doing an internship abroad, or even teaching English abroad (you are usually not required to have a degree in English or any teaching experience).

Most of the students thinking about study abroad are freshmen and sophomores, but sometimes juniors and seniors. Just because you're graduating does not mean you can't study abroad.

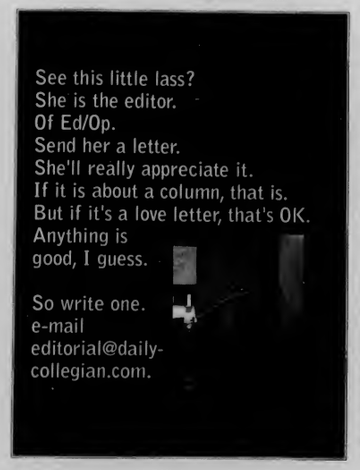
When you look into these programs you'll see that there is a lot of variety. As one is going abroad, communication can be an impediment if you aren't fluent in another language. However, there are many programs in English-speaking countries, some with a combination of classes in English and a foreign language, and then there are language pledge programs where you only speak a foreign language. If you do not know which you want, IPO can help you decide.

For those of you not graduating this year, you should seriously consider studying abroad. Every year over 1,000 UMass students study abroad, and you can, too. There is a myth that study abroad is only for certain majors, but you can talk to IPO and professors in your major about which programs UMass accepts credits from. If you really think you've got too much on your plate to take a semester or a year off, consider doing a summer or winter program.

Another consideration is if you want to be in a major city or in a more rural area. Obviously, the city provides a lot of opportunities and access to modern amenities you might not be able to get in a more rural area. Cities are also often cultural centers that allow foreigners to visit famous museums, monuments and historical sites. And generally, cities house more expatriates, allowing you to find English speakers more easily.

One prohibiting factor, and an important consideration, is the cost. Studying abroad generally costs about the same as one semester at UMass, though there is some fluctuation in costs because of different economies and because of plane tickets that can it more expensive.

Rural areas, on the other hand, allow for a more authentic and common person experience. In the case of language study, there are fewer opportunities to speak English, and thus, very helpful to progress. But in either case you will find that there is the opportunity to travel to other places in your host country, and, depending on where you are, other countries. This means that there is no bad choice for study abroad location.



Financial aid can be used for study abroad, and the Financial Aid Office runs several workshops every semester about what you need to know about using the money you already receive for study abroad.

There are also scholarships available through IPO specified to certain majors, colleges inside UMass and the programs you apply to. Many external scholarships available through the government, organizations or companies you might work for.

There is a lot to think about, but this is a great experience to put on your résumé, and it will help you stand out in this tough job market. Most importantly, it's the experience of a lifetime. I have personally studied abroad twice, and I would recommend it in a heartbeat. Seriously consider this opportunity to enhance your education, learn about a new culture and have a great time.

Another aspect in study abroad programs is whether you would like to do a home stay, live in an apartment, or live in a dorm. Some programs may limit your choice in the matter, but you have the ability to choose which program and maintain a preference. A home stay is when you live with a host family in the country in which you are studying. Many people who have done home stays have said they thought that it was an authentic experience by getting to know local people in a way they couldn't have if they hadn't done a home stay.

Sara Crossman is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at scrossma@student.umass.edu.

Sexist jokes can be harmless

This past week, I ran across a Facebook group entitled, "I'm the boy. You're the girl. Make me a sandwich, or we don't talk today." Save for being slightly amused, I didn't really take much notice to the group. That is, until I realized the group was drawing a large amount of criticism for allegedly being harmful to society because of its sexist attitude towards women.

Dave Coffey

Let me first say that I was relatively hesitant to write about my reaction to this, because not doing so carefully could easily give the impression that I condone any sort of sexist or discriminatory tendencies. This could not be further from the truth. In fact, about a month ago, I wrote a column highlighting my disdain for the institutions of sexism and racism in modern society. So now, I will take a moment to stress the fact that I am indeed not a sexist. Not only would I never condone any sort of truly discriminatory activity, but I in fact despise any such activities, sexism included.

However, given all of this, I cannot say I share some people's outrage at the thought of a man, in good humor, jokingly asking a woman to make him a sandwich.

Now, I stress the term "jokingly" because, in this case, that is exactly what we are dealing with: a joke. Even most who might be offended by this sort of thing would most likely agree that in this case, we are dealing with a facetious and humorous statement.

Without hesitation, I would find it quite despicable to realistically and actually demote an entire gender group to the social role of caretaker to the other sex, whether it is women or men. But – and maybe this is just me - I simply don't find outrage in it being done jokingly and in good humor.

Yet, some people might claim that despite the fact that one is obviously dealing with a joke in these circumstances, it's still an entirely socially harmful and inappropriate statement. For, they argue, most jokes are funny because they are rooted in some sort of social truth. I could not agree more with the latter statement. With some exception, most humor tends to resonate because of the fact that it originates from some social truth, and this case is obviously no exception. Most could agree that it's a fundamental social truth that our society has a history of female oppression. But, even considering this, I cannot agree that these sorts of jokes are terrible.

Laughing at a hypothetical farce of our own values is absolutely not the same as praising the oppression of females that farce describes.

As humans, we laugh at the absurd. Laughter itself is a natural reaction to a noted inconsistency. This particular case is no exception, in my opinion. As a society, we pride ourselves on being an advanced, socially progressive people, and yet we look in the rear-view mirror of our history as a species and see some things that are quite contradictory to these values. The ability for women to express themselves in the political sphere is less than one century old. How insane is it that women's suffrage in America is younger than the invention of the automobile? One would be hard-pressed to find an educated adult that would think it is intelligent, much less socially progressive, to allow or disallow someone to vote based solely on which reproductive organs they happened to be born with.

When I laugh at joke such as the aforementioned uttering of, "make me a sandwich" to a woman, this is the absurdity I am acknowledging. If there were a realistic sentiment of condescension towards females, it wouldn't continue to be a joke, because no one would laugh at it. In fact, one could argue that these jokes are exactly the opposite of detrimental. Laughing at a hypothetical farce of our own values is absolutely not the same as praising the oppression of females that farce describes. Rather, when we note the inconsistencies of what our values are based on and how we have acted as a society, we are informally socially addressing negative aspects of our culture such as sexism and racism.

Once again, the key here is that these sentiments are recognized by all to be a joke. I am by no way arguing that it would be funny for a man to actually hackhand his wife and bark an order at her to prepare him a meal. That would of course be repulsive. It's repulsive because as a people I think we can all agree that this sort of abusive behavior is completely at odds with how things ideally should be, even though anyone will admit that realistically, in both the past and present, these sorts of things do unfortunately occur. Two centuries ago, there were no "sexist" jokes of this variety, there was only rampant sexism and justified abusive behavior towards females. Now, in a culture that realizes this as something very wrong, we have these sorts of jokes, which, in my opinion, is a subconscious way for our society to come to terms with the absurdities of many of our more injurious social institutions.

As an interesting sidenote, the previously mentioned Facebook group was created in response to one entitled, "I'm the girl. You're the boy. You text first or we don't talk today."

The sentiment expressed in the name of the group is just as ridiculous as "women are nature's delicatessens."

It's also an admittedly funny joke, because it's obviously a comment on an absurd expectation regarding the social interaction between males and females in our modern culture. Again, let us note the distinction between a joke and reality. If there were really a situation where a female unquestioningly commanded the line of communication between her and her male friend, I'd find it pretty terrible.

But since it's a joke, I can't really find it outrageous. Admittedly it's not hilarious, but it certainly didn't make me want to write an editorial regarding the unfair practices of the male-female dating scene.

I hope anyone who reads this realizes that of course even jokes should only be uttered in the proper context and with both common sense and tact in mind. Do I think one should run into a League of Women Voters meeting and shout, "Make me a sandwich?" Absolutely not.

But as a harmless joke in an informal and personal forum (such as, in this case, a Facebook group), this sort of statement isn't exactly setting back any civil rights.

As previously stated, I'm all for stamping out terrible things like sexism. That being said, I don't think attacking a harmless joke is the proper and necessary course of action.

Dave Coffey is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached dcoffey@student.umass.edu.

Dressing provocatively is for the birds

CEOs and corporate hoes. Football bros and cheerleading hoes. GI Joes and army hoes. Golf pros and tennis hoes. These are just a few of the typical themed parties at UMass on any given weekend and ones a vast majority of the student body probably has attended at some point in their college career, or at the very least, have heard about.

Ashley Berger

For those of us who have attended one, we know that it is an opportunity for the young lady attendees to dress up provocatively for the male audience, get hammered and then dance sexually for that male audience. For those of us who haven't attended one, we can observe from Facebook pictures the reality that I just described and agree that this is probably exactly what the party was.

When invited to these events, it is not a common thought to ponder what the name of the theme actually means. What we don't realize is the sheer derogatory situation that we are putting ourselves into. Merriam Webster dictionary states that "ho" is simply an alternate form of whore, where whore means prostitute. Urban Dictionary, giving the colloquial definition, defines it as, "A whore. A woman who uses her body, or gives the impression that her mark can be intimate with her, for material gain or to boost her own ego." While I think that the definition includes a combination of the both of the aforementioned, it is safe to assume that a "ho" implies that the girl in question is generally a provocative dresser, someone who gets around, and someone who doesn't care who she sleeps with.

It is common knowledge that a prostitute is someone who is paid to have sex with random strangers and to dress scandalously. No one would want to be accused of being or called a prostitute because that conjures up a whole multitude of stereotypes that aren't too hard to imagine.

Despite any negative connotations, young girls on college campuses everywhere are quick to jump at the idea of being or dressing like a "ho" for a party.

Despite any negative connotations, young girls on college campuses everywhere are quick to jump at the idea of being or dressing like a "ho" for a party. Is the line that unclear between two things where one is only slightly worse than the other?

We have digressed as a society. For the last century, we have fought for women's suffrage, working rights and generally the right to have the same rights that men have. Women all over the world are still being oppressed by men and are still being silenced by men. Many societies in the modern world are still patriarchal communities. When we study these groups throughout history, we see that women are abused, degraded and exploited. Our gender roles are clearly defined: the dominant male breadwinner and the submissive domestic female.

Even with the recent sexual assault issue on campus, the themed parties are still extremely prevalent. These parties do nothing but feed the idea of gender roles where women should be submissive and that it is OK to flaunt yourself in nothing but a bra and a miniskirt or have casual sex for the sole pleasure of the guy.

When we put the issue of gender in a specific context, most would agree that it is not OK that males should dominate over women because women are equals. In class discussion, we are quick to feel sympathy for the women across the world that are beaten or raped on a daily basis. It brings tears to our eyes when we hear stories of sex trafficking and the brutal attacks on women by their male counterparts. But when Friday night comes around, we are quick to put on our party gear and take a few shots in hopes of impressing someone from the male audience and going home with him.

Interestingly, and not surprisingly, the male partygoers are generally required to keep their clothing on. Most of the party titles' implications don't facilitate the need to wear any crazy, skin-bearing outfits or anything that your average 20 something year old wouldn't wear to class or Antonio's. If you research "theme parties" on collegetips.com, most of the party descriptions are clear to point out that girls dress "sexy," but do not mention anything about the men. Maybe this is because men are perceived as the less sexy sex, but with these descriptions, it encourages women to be shown as sexual objects rather than people.

Though unfair and sad, the epidemic of themed parties will never stop as long as there are college campuses. Young women will continue to dress this way, whether it is for the shock value of the outfit or for the hope that they'll attract a fine young stud.

Whatever the reasons and wherever the campus there will always be army, tennis, cheerleading, and corporate hoes, horny young boys to provide the beer and the house, and plenty of awkward morning afters as a result of the drunken night before. It is only up to the girls whether they think dressing this way is worth it or not.

Ashley Berger is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at aberger@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MARCH 9, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Impress a date for under $10

How to whip up a classy meal for two on a college budget

By Justin Gagnon
Collegian Staff

Between books, food, beer and, for some of us, tuition and housing, the costs of living as a college student can add up quickly. Add a girlfriend into the mix and you may find yourself really behind on cash flow. As if it wasn't difficult enough to get by financially before, your expenses are now being distributed into a new category. It's simple to take your significant other out to dinner and have someone else cook for you, but a passable meal at a chain restaurant could cost you upwards of $50 or more.

The truth is, if you really want to impress a girl with class and good food, you only need to spend $8.07. So put down your Xbox controller and surprise her with something sinfully delicious this week.

Stay in and surprise her with some oven-fried crispy chicken, stuffing and rice pilaf. If you're the kind of guy who considers Ramen noodles or mac-n-cheese to be your forté, she'll love all the more that you put in the effort to make her something nice.

And trust me, the effort is minimal. Back in the 1920s, a cookbook such as "Mrs. Peterson's Simplified Cooking" would have you removing feathers and melting fat to prepare a similar meal. However, the following recipe will guise your lack of cooking intuition and make you look like a domesticated top chef.

Here's what you'll need to pick up at the grocery store before you start (prices from Stop & Shop in Hadley): a box of Stove Top chicken stuffing ($2.29), a box of Near East Original Rice Pilaf ($1.79), one pound of Stop & Shop brand chicken thighs ($0.99/lb), and a box Kraft Oven Fry Extra Crispy Chicken breadcrumbs ($3, available locally only at Big Y). With these main ingredients alone, your total is $8.07.

Raw chicken is exceptionally inexpensive. Typically the dark meat – such as the thighs – will be even cheaper, tastier and juicier. It is not crazy to see the thighs priced as low as $0.99/lb, but are typically around $1.99/lb. If you're really hurting to save that extra buck, check the grocery store in the early to middle parts of the week.

In addition to all of the aforementioned ingredients, you will need to have butter or margarine, cooking spray, an egg and some water. If you're lucky, you can find these things in your roommate's food cabinet and shelf in the fridge.

First, preheat the oven to 450 degrees. Spray the cookie sheet with cooking spray or spread two tablespoons of oil evenly. Crack the egg into a bowl, and beat to a thick yellow with a fork. Pour the breadcrumbs onto a plate. With the chicken already defrosted, take each thigh and roll it in the egg. Once it is dripping with egg yolk, put it in the breadcrumbs and cover it completely. Then place each thigh onto the tray with some breathing room between the other pieces.

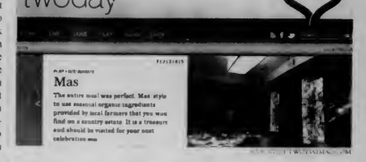
Once they are all breaded, put them in the oven for 10-12 minutes, then turn them over and cook for another 10-12 minutes. Be sure to cut one or two pieces in their thickest places and check for redness before you deem them ready to be eaten. The breading may look a dark brown, but it doesn't necessarily mean your meat is cooked all the way through. Nothing kills a romantic evening quicker than food poisoning.

Once you've put the thighs in the oven, start cooking your sides. The rice pilaf and stuffing can be cooked on the stovetop or in the microwave. If you're pressed for time, use both. You can find the cooking instructions for the stuffing and rice right on the box they came in.

If you're not one that typically cooks, there's no question your gal will be overcome by your new talents. But, it doesn't have to stop there. Spend a few extra dollars, and buy a cheap bottle of white Zinfandel or Pinot Grigio. Most college students aren't wine connoisseurs, and buying a nice bottle of Pinot Noir would be like buying a Gameboy for Grandma. The Zinfandel is a cheap, but tasty, fruity pink wine without that overwhelming, sharp alcohol bite. A decent bottle will cost you between $8 and $12.

If you're really desperate, or want to try going above and beyond, what better way to end the meal than with some hand-made chocolate covered strawberries. All you need is a pound of chocolate chips, two tablespoons of shortening, and a pound of strawberries. Simply mix the chocolate and shortening in a pot on the stove until it's melted. Dip your strawberries, and put them in the fridge to cool.

Between breaded chicken, rice, stuffing, wine that tastes like juice and some sexy chocolate covered strawberries, all cards in play are safe.



Justin Gagnon can be reached at jjgagnon@dailycollegian.com.

Chocolate-covered strawberries are a sure way to any woman's heart, especially when included as a dessert treat in this low-budget feast fit for two.

A next generation of online romance?

twoday

Twodaymag.com, which was re-launched in January, provides tips for how to survive in pairs.

By Lily Hicks
Collegian Correspondent

Match.com eHarmony. Lavalife. A new name has entered the "e-love" stratosphere – this time, though, the focus is not on forging relationships but sustaining them.

Twodaymag.com is an online magazine catered towards men and women, mostly coupled, who are interested in creating lasting relationships and maintaining healthy and environmentally conscious lifestyles. Founded by Natalie Benevenga and Joseph Vinens, the site re-launched on January 18, complete with quizzes, a blog and articles addressing a variety of different dating and political concerns ranging from hooking up to human trafficking.

Benevenga, editor and blogger for the magazine, is a 2006 graduate of the University of Pittsburgh. Having completed college only four years ago, she is no stranger to the higher-ed dating scene. In addition to Internet dating, Benevenga has likely observed today's pervasive "hook up" culture, where young men and women move from partner to partner like some sort of cake walk. Jimmy Stevenson in his twodaymag.com article titled "The Unconventional Dater" writes, "getting inebriated and adding another notch to your ever-expanding belt seems to be the new form of dating. How romantic." The opportunities to connect, so to speak, seem virtually limitless and yet the number of romantically satisfied college students and 20-somethings is small.

Twodaymag.com's goal is to change all of this. According to a press release, the magazine aims to serve as a "modern day guide for couples". There are three sections to the website, "Live", "Love", and "Play", that are each geared towards a certain aspect of young men's and women's relationships both with each other or with the world.

The "Live" section includes articles on lifestyle and world events. While not all articles in this region are related to dating, writer Josh Patton's article, "All is Unfair in Love and War" is a profile piece about two couples. The first is separated by the husband's military service in Iraq, and the second comprised of two soldiers both serving in Iraq, forced to worry constantly about each other's survival.

Another article, unrelated to dating and relationships, is Rachel Muzika's "Does the Media Prevent Free Elections?" in which she posits that "the media coverage of identity politics has taken precedence over the coverage of crucial issues."

The "Love" section includes articles on relationships and sex. From pre-nuptial agreements to non-monogamy, there is an array of unconventional topics from which readers can choose. The piece, "Non-Monogamy: Can it Work?" by Jonas Moffatt, explores the ideas, as presented by those interviewed, of monogamy as a cultural constraint and jealousy existing only because it is a social norm.

The "Play" section covers articles that have to do with dating. Suggestions of venues and activities for future dates are provided in these pieces to help couples connect in ways that may not be possible at the typical dating scenes, such as shopping malls, movie theaters, or sports arenas. There are also restaurant reviews, musician profiles and travel destination ideas for couples to peruse in search of date nights and vacations outside of the mundane.

The final sentence in twodaymag's "About Us" is "Fall in love, twoday!" Admittedly, this is a lofty offer. Reading this magazine won't single-handedly make couples – or singles, for that matter – fall in love. No magazine can do that. But it may help. As a publication intended for both male and female readers, twodaymag.com can assist couples who finally find themselves on the same page, both figuratively, and literally.

Lily Hicks can be reached at lhicks@student.umass.edu.

Alice is in a new wonderland

By Matthieu Decker
Collegian Correspondent

From the opening scenes of Tim Burton's "Alice in Wonderland", one can taste the modern sentiment oozing through an austere Victorian reserve.

Alice, played by Mia Wasikowska, is now a young woman with interests in opposition to what is expected of her by prim-and-proper society; she would rather contemplate her dreams than stifle in a corset, to the great vexation of her mother. She finds herself humbling through the staged events of the aristocracy, preoccupied as she is with the contents of her inner world.

Several minutes into the movie, she discovers that she is to enter into a prearranged engagement with a young lord, and with this decision is forced to give in to the expectations of Victorian society in regards to a woman's role in life, or to the developing independent sense of identity which she appears to be growing into.

Immediately, this decision is interrupted by a familiar spectacled white rabbit, whom she follows down a hole and into a world bearing much more in common to the original Disney film than a characterization of Victorian society. Alice finds herself in a world recognizable immediately to alumni of the original; present are the shrinking potion, the growing cake and all the familiar inhabitants of "Underland", as they prefer to call it nowadays. And again, it begins to diverge from the original movie.

Alice meets with the hookah-smoking caterpillar, who has taken on a more prophetic role in this retelling. He informs her that she is destined to slay the dragon Jabberwocky, and free Wonderland from the tyrannical rule of the Red Queen, played by Helena Bonham Carter. From this point on, "Alice in Wonderland" adopts the conventions of plot which one would associate with the "slay dragon, save kingdom, fulfill destiny" cliché. There is a concerted effort by the Red Queen to eliminate this threat to her dominance, and all the memorable characters of the original appear periodically to help Alice along her journey.

This decision by Burton to imbue "Alice in Wonderland" with a coherent story-arc turns out to be its greatest weakness. Much of the appeal of the original "Alice" consisted in Alice's aimless wandering throughout a surreal dream-world, moving with no external motivation from one bizarre conversation to the next, with no clear unifying purpose to her travels. Here, each of Alice's interactions with the strange and familiar characters she encounters are driven by the urgency of her "quest".

One may be surprised to find that there is an absence of surrealism at play in Burton's telling. He creates a stunningly beautiful world, complete with his trademark spiraling plants, but even his more resonant imagery falls short of capturing the sense that this world is a subconscious brought to life. Instead, the use of fantastical images and unique flavor in "Alice" differentiate it from the plethora of movies following the "chosen one saves kingdom in peril" motif.

For those expecting to interpret the imagery to gain a deeper understanding of the plot, as in the original "Alice," keep in mind that it is sufficient to allow yourself to be mesmerized by the beauty of Burton's world itself; you can leave that analytical part of your brain at home.

Luckily, saving "Alice" from a descent into cliché reinterpretation is the quality of its acting. Wasikowska shines as Alice; even with the altered plot and new thematic elements, she manages to bring to the character a sense of humanity, making her genuinely relatable, a trait without which the film would crumble. Johnny Depp also delivers a wonderful performance, playing the Mad Hatter to great comical effect.

However, the real star of the show is Stephen Fry as the voice of the Cheshire Cat, which he makes to sound more cryptic and playful than the original by virtue of his tone alone. The rest of the star-studded cast likewise do an excellent job of breathing life into what might otherwise be a somewhat lifeless script.

Overall, "Alice in Wonderland" tells a modern story, using the power of imagination as an instrument in describing a young woman's break with Victorian tradition in search of her individuality. Though sacrificing the surrealistic tendencies of the original as a means of accomplishing this goal, this modern take on a time-honored story builds on new themes, and treats them with a good degree of success.

If you are interested in a visually stunning twist on an old favorite, "Alice in Wonderland" certainly won't disappoint.

Matthieu Decker may be reached at mpdecker@student.umass.edu.

Mia Wasikowska plays Alice in the latest version of "Alice in Wonderland," which debuted in theaters on Friday. The acting and imagery held the movie together, as the heart of the story seemed to have escaped.

UMass takes 3 week break before return

Junior Daniel Schwartz and the rest of the distance medley team conibined for a third-place finish in the preliminary event Saturday.

TRACK from page 8

shot put for the Minutewomen. Right behind Wilson was Nalis Albanda, whose distance of 41-04.50 feet left her in 21st place.

The 4x800-meter relay team, consisting on Courtney Baldwin, Karen Roa, Gina Perno and Lauren Stocker, raced to a 12th-place finish and the second best time in school history. Their mark of 9.15.10 put them in the record book, and served as the best time achieved by any 4x800-meter relay team this season at UMass.

The Minutewomen closed out their indoor season on Sunday and finished strongly in three events.

Nicole Pompei proved that she can lead a team, as she did for UMass on the final day of competition, placing sixth in the pole vault. Pompei reached a height of 12-01.50 feet, a mark which leaves her second all-time at UMass in the event.

Junior Stephanie Aguguo, who won the triple jump event at the New England Championship last weekend, placed 10th in this national event on Sunday with her mark of 39-01.75 feet.

The distance medley relay team, comprised of Karen Roa, Courtney Baldwin, Gina Perno and Michelle Jenssen also placed eighth with their time of 11.49.96.

Both the men's and women's track and field teams will take three weeks off from competition as they rest and begin to adjust to New England's weather before heading into their first outdoor action April 3.

Michael Wood can be reached at mcwood@student.umass.edu

WANNA HOOK-UP?
FREE High Speed Internet and Expanded Cable
1, 2, 3, and 4 bedroom apartment homes

RESERVE YOUR APARTMENT TODAY!!!

SUGARLOAF ESTATES APARTMENT HOMES
28 River Road, Sunderland
866-301-1445
www.sugarloafestates.com

ASPEN CHASE & ALPINE COMMONS
133 Belchertown Road Rt 9 Amherst
866-301-1445
www.aspenchaseapartments.com
www.alpinecommons.com

Heat, Water, Hot Water, Cable, Internet, Electricity in select Units

On the bus route to and from campus. Swimming Pool, Fitness Center, Pet Friendly

FLEXIBLE LEASE TERMS

$$ MENTION THIS AD AND SAVE ON YOUR MOVE IN COSTS $$

Minutemen return to Garber

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team looks to bounce back after a tough loss to Yale on Friday night when they return to Garber Field to take on Albany this afternoon.

"They're loaded on the offensive end, they have athletes that can play," UMass coach Greg Cannella said.

"So it's a challenge for us, coming off a loss on Friday, and they're coming off of a loss on Saturday, so both team are going to be clawing a little bit," Cannella said.

The Minutemen (2-1) fell to the Bulldogs Friday night 13-12, in a game characterized by back-and-forth scoring by both teams, along with falling out of the Nike/Inside Lacrosse Media Men's Division 1 Media Poll.

Matt Gibson, who scored five goals and added two assists for the Bulldogs for a career-best seven points, netted his most important one with 34 seconds left to give UMass their first loss of the 2010 season.

For the Minutemen, freshman midfielder Will Manny led the charge with his first career hat trick, while UMass senior midfielder Bobby Hayes (two goals) netted two goals. The Minutemen had seven different players score, including the first eight coming from eight different players.

"At times they played well, and at times they didn't," Cannella said. "We haven't been great in scramble situations; we haven't been great at man-down, and that has to do with both sides of the ball and between the lines."

The Great Danes (0-3) are coming off a 16-9 defeat to No. 14 Delaware, as the Albany defense surrendered eight goals to Curtis Dickson, but almost got their first victory in a 13-12 loss to Siena the week before.

The Great Danes are led by attackmen Joe Resetarits, Brian Caufield and Dave Brock, who have combined for 18 goals and nine points.

Last season, the then-13th ranked Minutemen fell to the Great Danes, 13-9, even though UMass outshot its hosts 48-31, and received a ninth-career hat trick from senior Jim Connolly. The contest was tied six times, and for the first time in six years, was decided by more than one goal.

The Great Danes were led by Resetarits, who scored five goals on seven shots, while Caufield and Brock had three goals and four assists and two goals and two assists, respectively.

The Minutemen, who were in the midst of a three-game winning streak, went on to win four of their next five games in order to gain momentum going into the latter half of their campaign.

The Great Danes went on to finish the 2009 season with a .500 record (7-7), including a 3-2 conference record in America East.

"In the last seven years, we haven't done really well against these guys, so hopefully we can get out there and play a good game," Cannella said.

After their first road game, UMass had just three days in order to prepare for their next opponent. But Cannella knows that even with home-field advantage, playing two games in five days is a tough feat for any team.

"Anytime you play at home, it helps you, especially these midweek games, but Albany has come out here and beat us on the road, so we can't count on that, we just have to focus on playing the best we can," Cannella said.

"It's hard in these short turnover games to do all your focus on yourselves, you do a little bit, but you have to concentrate on your opponent as well and prepare."

All-time, the Great Danes hold a 5-4 advantage over the Minutemen, but UMass pulled out 9-8 victory in 2008 that saw it win after four consecutive one-goal losses.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

NCAA bid on line in tourney

A-10 TOURNAMENT from page 8

No. 5 Rhode Island vs. No. 12 Saint Joseph's

The Rams blasted the Hawks, 101-74, in their only meeting of the year. But URI has shown more of its vulnerability as of late, despite being the highest seed to play in the first round.

The Rams (21-8, 9-7 A-10) are coming off a last-second loss to Massachusetts and are 2-5 in their last seven games. They haven't won back-to-back games since the beginning of January so consistency has been one of the biggest problems.

However, St. Joseph's (11-19, 5-11 A-10) has been facing many of its own struggles despite a two-game winning streak. It recently beat George Washington and La Salle, but lost five straight games before that with losses to both the Musketeers and Charlotte by more than 30 points. The winner will play the Billikens.

No. 7 Dayton vs. No. 10 George Washington

Despite an impressive record during their non-conference schedule, the Flyers have struggled in their last seven games with their only wins coming against Massachusetts and the Explorers.

Dayton (19-11, 8-8 A-10) blew out UMass by 28 points and has been competitive against the best of the A-10, but hasn't found a way to actually win. The Flyers may have caught a break against their first round opponent, the Colonials, who they beat by 15 points on Jan. 20.

But recently, GW (16-13, 6-10 A-10) has been on a bit of a run with a 4-3 record in its last seven games. The biggest win was a 75-70 win against Charlotte on Feb. 27.

Freshman Javorn Farrell drives around a defender on Saturday. The guard has played a pivotal role for UMass since it lost David Gibbs to a broken foot.

It now hopes to pull a similar type of upset over the Flyers in order to face Xavier in the second round.

No. 6 Charlotte vs. No. 11 Massachusetts

The 49ers are currently on a three-game losing streak and haven't found a way to pick themselves back up after losing to Dayton, 75-47.

Charlotte (19-11, 9-7 A-10) now has to face the Minutemen, who are hoping to build off a season-saving win over URI. The last time these two teams met, guard Derrio Green scored a career-high 34 points at the Mullins Center while the 49ers went on a 15-3 run to ultimately take control of the game.

UMass (11-19, 5-1 A-10) shot 4-for-28 from 3-point range and 34.3 percent from the field as the 49ers won 72-58. If Charlotte pulls off a win, it will face the Spiders, who it currently has a series split with over two games.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com

GE is looking for more top talent

GE is a proud member of the Invest in America Alliance a coalition of American businesses dedicated to investing in the future of our country. In support of this initiative, GE is committed to doubling its U.S. university hires in 2010.

If you're just starting your career, now is a great time to join GE. Whether your interests lie in engineering, finance, manufacturing, marketing and sales, human resources or information technology, we have an opportunity for you in leadership programs and entry-level positions. If you are graduating in May 2010 and have unrestricted authorization to work in the U.S., submit your résumé to the Career Center by Wednesday, March 17.

The American Renewal is happening.

Right now.

Innovation Today for America's Tomorrow imagination at work ge.com/careers

Harris leads way for young UMass squad

BASKETBALL from page 8

teams other than Dayton. With a win like that against [Rhode Island], a possible NCAA team, I think that says a lot," Harris said following Saturday's win.

A common theme of many of UMass' losses this season has been falling behind early against opponents, mounting a comeback and then not having enough left in the tank to finish the comeback.

Saturday's win over Rhode Island was a step in the right direction for UMass according to Kellogg and may not have come at a better time. For one of the first times this season, the Minutemen kept the game within striking distance, allowing them to have the energy to finish out the game.

In addition, with a young core of players who are still learning what it takes to compete at the college level, the win over the Rams gives them that experience and confidence needed to make a run in a conference tournament.

"We can do a lot more winning if we stay positive and stay on this path," Harris said.

But even more important to making a run in the A-10 Tournament than strong play from the younger Minutemen, is the play of Harris. The senior scored a game-high 28 points in the victory over URI and has averaged 23.7 points per game over the final 11 games of the season to help lift UMass into the A-10 Tournament.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

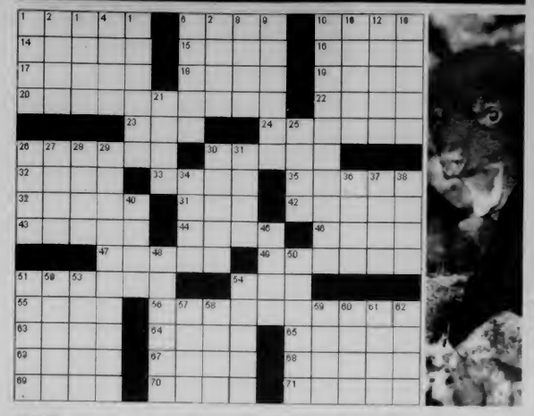
33 student-athletes honored for 4.0 GPA

HONORS from page 8

Club recognizes any student-athlete who earned a 4.0 GPA in the fall or spring semesters of last year, and the national athletic academic fraternity Chi Alpha Sigma honors upperclassmen with at least a 3.4 GPA. The same conditions as the A-10 Commissioner's Honor Roll apply to both of these lists.

Both groups were honored two weeks ago during halftime of a men's basketball game in front of the entire Mullins Center crowd. The Athletic Director's 4.0 Club named 21 athletes from last year's spring semester and 12 from the fall to this honor roll for a total of 33 student-athletes with perfect GPAs. Likewise, 60 UMass athletes were names to the Chi Alpha Sigma fraternity honor roll for athletes with above a 3.4 GPA.

Hopkins added that those athletes who were honored during halftime, exhibit the necessary qualities for success in balancing athletics and academics, and that the University hopes to increase the number of students named to this honor roll each year.



"These student-athletes demonstrate the drive and commitment needed to succeed both on the field and in the classroom," Hopkins said. "UMass is proud of each and every one of them, and that is why they are recognized for their efforts."

Michael Wood can be reached at mcwood@student.umass.edu.

WANT TO WRITE FOR SPORTS?
Contact Jeffrey R. Larnard at
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

COMICS

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Young eel
6. Decreases
10. Left in a hurry
14. Vassal
15. Burrowing mammal
16. Seventy-one in Roman numerals
17. The quality of being deserving
18. Not warm
19. Angle between a stalk and branches
20. Sink or cave in
22. Breathing apparatus of a fish
23. Organ of sight
24. State of anxiety
26. Charge
30. Classical music theatre
32. Tribe
33. Fool
35. An ancient Germanic people who conquered England
39. Not guests
41. Constantly remind
42. Bend over
43. Moral principle
44. As well
46. Used to tie a shoe
47. Latin for "Home"
49. A long-handled curved blade
51. An island in French Polynesia
54. Sick
55. Knowing a secret
56. Deter
63. Be gloomy
64. Small biting fly
65. Carried with difficulty
66. Lyric poems
67. Beige
68. A living duplicate
69. Cincinnati's baseball team
70. Not that
71. Virile males

DOWN
1. Trees of the genus Ulmus
2. Place
3. Action word
4. Breastplate
5. Fastens again
6. Master of ceremonies
7. Blessing
8. An alliance of countries
9. Goddess of the moon (Greek mythology)
10. In a glaring or reprehensible manner
11. Seventy-four in Roman numerals
12. Deportation
13. Herbs having aromatic foliage
21. Colored cloth
25. Historical periods
26. Dull pain
27. Coagulate
28. Country singer Johnny ____
29. Messiness
30. Gemstones
31. Wooden pins
34. Tree sloth
36. A kid, nanny, or billy
37. Scottish for "Lake"
38. Sword
40. Inhabitant of northern Britain
45. City in Norway
48. Dwarf
50. Grab
51. Mountainous Indonesian island
52. Positive electrode
53. Was optimistic
54. Seizure
57. 1/12th of a foot
58. Indian dress
59. Part portrayed
60. Smallest particle
61. Part of a chromosome
62. Biblical garden

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

Once the chickens became zombies, the war was lost.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
For all of the things that you are good at, you are at least terrible at one thing, getting scurvy!

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
What is that over there? Go touch it. Don't be scared, go on, touch it.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Pride is usually most noticeable before a fall. Luckily you have nothing to be proud of.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Do not for one second think that you are in a well enough financial climate to NOT pick up that penny.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Some may say that it looks like a skin problem. I say that it is a venereal gift from the gods!

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
The object that will plague your day is the banana hammock. No matter where you go it will follow.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
You do realize that it is going to come back thicker, darker and unrated right?

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
I would totally dump him. Did you see how he looked at that spotted bitch with the white at the end of her tail.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
When in doubt, trust No One. He is a twelve year old Spec Ops veteran who lives in West Hadley. Do not stare at his eye patch!

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Did you know that buffalo wings do not actually contain any buffalo meat? Weird.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Good fortune eventually comes to those who eat their spare change.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Duct tape is a useful tool when want to seal some leaks. It also helps mend relationships that are on the rocks.

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

Lustful Butter

2					4			9
	7	6	2
	8		9		6
			1
		1			7	9	3
5					3	2		4
			5	6				8
		5			9	6		3

Hark! a Vagrant by K. Beaton harkavagrant.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Operators needed now! Lots of Steady Work Available. Fuel Card w/ discounts, Plate Program, Weekly Settlements. CDL-A, 1 Yr exp req'd. RoadLink Solutions that Connect. 877-775-7375

TUTORING SERVICES

Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats, GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 Jboid42@yahoo.com

ACTIVITIES

Bartenders needed for FT/PT positions. No experience required. Earn $20-$70 per hour. Call us at 617-849-8074

FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St. 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,575/Mo+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing. 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends From $89 Complete. Montreal Express.Net MontrealBlowout.com 781-979-9001

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

MISCELLANEOUS

Looking for a business opportunity that allows you to not only market services that people use everyday, but the services of the future too? This opportunity provides outstanding earning potential with ongoing training and support. You are in business for yourself, but never by yourself. Stop imagining and start living! ACN Independent Representative William Carey 774-232-8604 wmc7771@gmail.com, http://4incomefromhome.acnrep.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTUESDAY

TUESDAY, MARCH 9, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Dacko's time done at UMass

Decision by Athletic Director unpopular

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

After eight seasons at the helm of the Massachusetts women's basketball team, coach Marnie Dacko will not return to the team next season surprising news to both Dacko and her players.

UMass Athletic Director John McCutcheon announced yesterday afternoon that her contract would not be extended after its expiration on April 10 and that a committee would be formed to begin the search for her replacement.

"We want to thank Marnie for all of her contributions to the program and the University of Massachusetts," McCutcheon said through an official press release. "We feel there has not been the competitive progress that we have been looking for and that a change was necessary. We will be initiating a national search immediately. The announcement of the members of the consultative committee will be released shortly."

Amongst the Minutewomen, as well as to Dacko, the decision came as a shock according to sophomore Nicole Jones. Jones, along with seniors Kim Benton and Diatiema Hill, spent time with Dacko at her house yesterday after hearing the news.

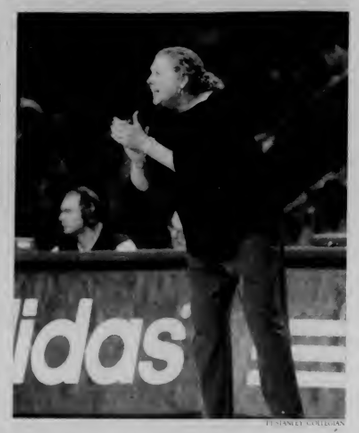
"She's just really shocked by it, she just told us how rude [McCutcheon] was about it," Hill said of Dacko's response "It was like he didn't have a heart about it, he just cold-hearted fired her

"We all just can't believe it, and we're just so disappointed and mad and upset because she was fired. We just really can't believe it," said Hill.

After spending a couple of hours with Dacko, Jones and the rest of the Minutewomen met with McCutcheon so he could tell them of his decision, but at that time the players had all ready heard the news.

"We had a meeting with [McCutcheon] for him to formally tell us that Marnie got fired," Jones said of the meeting. "He basically just told us she was fired even though we all ready knew because it was on the website. The way we found out was just so wrong; he wouldn't even let her come tell us herself. It was just wrong."

With the decision being an unpopular one amongst the players, many of them plan to use next week's spring break to help ease the pain and then move on from there.



"Everyone is just going to use their spring breaks to take our minds off of it and try to think about what really happened and after that we just pretty much have to really stick together and stay a team," Jones said.

Dacko was hired in 2002 to be the head coach for the Minutewomen and has since posted a 98-135 (.421) record. In 2009-10, Dacko led UMass to an 11-19 over mark and a 5-9 record in the Atlantic 10, good for ninth place in the conference standings.

The Minutewomen reached the A-10 Tournament for the eighth time under Dacko, but for the fifth straight season and seventh time under Dacko, UMass fell in its first game of the tournament. The only victory by the Minutewomen in the A-10 Tournament under Dacko came in 2005 over Duquesne, before they fell in their second game to Xavier.

In the eight seasons with Dacko at the helm, UMass never posted an overall winning record nor did it in conference play. In 2002-03 (14-14) and 2006-07 (17-17), the Minutewomen played to a .500 record, but could not build off the success in the following year.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Marnie Dacko coaches at the Mullins Center in a game last season. UMass has decided not to renew Dacko's contract when it expires in April.

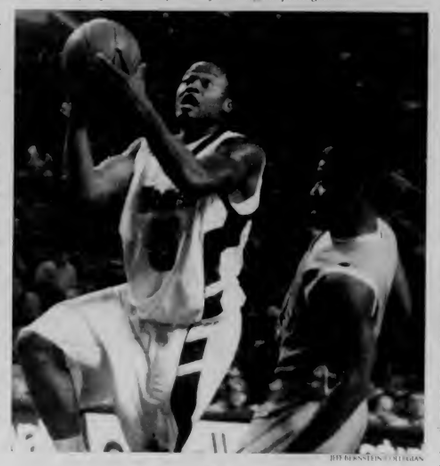
A-10 tourney gets underway

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

The Atlantic 10 tournament starts today with a new format where all first round games are played at the home court of the higher seed, while the remainder of the tournament will be played in Atlantic City, N.J. The regular season was one of the most competitive the conference has seen in years.

Temple and Xavier shared the regular season championship, but both teams will have to put their success behind them with a pool of teams looking to receive an at-large bid to the NCAA tournament.

Richmond and Saint Louis join the regular season champs with automatic first round byes and will play on March 12. Here is a look at the first round matchups going on today.



No. 8 St. Bonaventure vs. No. 9 Duquesne

The Dukes have been a team that has become notorious for bursting the bubbles of teams looking to make the NCAA tournament. Now it has to beat perhaps the hottest team in the first round, which won four of its last five games.

The Bonnies (14-15, 7-9 A-10) played the Dukes (16-14, 7-9 A-10) twice and split the series. SBU lost the first game by a point on Jan. 23, but then took a commanding 92-80 win on March 3. Duquesne had trouble defending Chris Matthews and Andrew Nicholson, who finished with 21 points each on a combined 13-for-20 shooting night

The winner will play Temple at noon on Friday.

See A-10 TOURNAMENT on page 6

Ricky Harris drive to the basket in UMass' victory over Rhode Island on Saturday. The senior will try to lead the Minutemen to their first A-10 tournament win of his career.

Minutemen to face Charlotte

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

It may have just snuck into the Atlantic 10 Tournament, but that is no discouragement for the Massachusetts men's basketball team.

Despite holding the No. 11-seed the second to last seed in the tournament based on their regular season conference record, the Minutemen (11-19, 5-11 A-10) are looking at tonight's 7 p.m. opening round matchup at Charlotte as a new beginning.

"We put the struggles behind us and Coach [Derek Kellogg] told us this is a new season now," Javorn Farrell said after Saturday's victory over Rhode Island. "I think anything is possible now."

The 49ers (19-11, 9-7 A-10), who hold the No. 6-seed in the conference tournament, took the earlier game of the year at UMass, 72-58, back on Jan. 30. The win was the fifth win of a seven-game winning streak for Charlotte, but after the streak it struggled as it dropped six of its final seven games of the regular season.

The winner of the contest will advance to Atlantic City, where the A-10 Tournament will resume on Friday, and face No. 3 Richmond at 9 p.m.

For UMass, not only will it be trying to overcome the past in terms of this season, but also its past struggles in past A-10 Tournaments. Not since 2002 have the Minutemen won a game in the tournament, a streak of seven-straight losses.

Even with the odds against them, Ricky Harris and the Minutemen have confidence in themselves heading into the tournament, in large part to Saturday's victory.

"I think we can make a run at it because I think we haven't really been blown out by a lot of the top

See BASKETBALL on page 6

103 athletes named to A-10 honor roll

By Michael Wood
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts student-athletes are apparently well-equipped to balance the rigors of academics and the challenge of varsity athletics.

The Atlantic 10 Conference recently released its biannual student athlete Commissioner's Honor Roll for the fall semester of 2009. In order to qualify for this exclusive list, a student-athlete is required to earn a grade point average of 3.5 or better. On Feb. 25, A-10 Commissioner Bernadette McGlade formally named almost 2,000 athletes to the list, 103 of which were UMass students.

The list is published twice each year, once at the end of every semester. At the completion of the semester the A-10 asks each of its member schools to provide a list of all student athletes who achieved a GPA of at least 3.5 and remained eligible all season long. The athletes are then compiled and the Honor Roll is created. Each student-athlete receives a paper certificate from the A-10 marking their outstanding achievement, and some are honored at their university. Any other compensation such as scholarships would be illegal according to NCAA regulations.

At UMass, female athletes largely dominated those nominated to the honor roll. The women's rowing team recorded 20 nominations, the most of any sport at UMass, with women's and men's track and field each naming 17 and 16 athletes respectively. The women's lacrosse and swimming teams also had a strong showing with nine apiece

UMass Associate Athletic Director, Joan Hopkins, said that the numbers were not anything out of the ordinary, and that she was not concerned about the lower number of male athletes present on the list.

"Women's GPAs across colleges in the US are higher than men's," Hopkins said. "There are plenty of studies to support this, and it is no reflection of the student body as a whole. Some suggest genetics, others say women in college are at a higher level of intellectual maturity and therefore are more focused on grades [than their male counterparts]."

In today's society, low graduation rates, high athletic salaries and the domination of Division I sports have many questioning whether or not a "student-athlete" truly exists anymore. According to the A-10 Commissioner's Honor Roll, it does exist, and these individuals remain as much students as they are athletes.

Hopkins later added that UMass is proud of its student athletes, and sees no reason to believe the number of individuals named to the Commissioner's Honor Roll will diminish anytime soon.

"Being named to the A-10 Honor Roll is a well-deserved honor for all our student athletes," Hopkins said. "Being a student-athlete requires balancing time commitments to their sport and their school work. Our students at UMass have always been able to have success without one dominating the other, and I agree with the A-10, they should be honored for this."

Athletes Honored for 4.0

In addition to the A-10 Commissioner's Honor Roll, the UMass athletic department hands out two academic honor roll lists of its own.

The Athletic Director's 4.0

See HONORS on page 6

UM finishes indoor season

By Michael Wood
Collegian Staff

In their final event of the indoor season, the Massachusetts track and field teams came away with respectable performances heading into the halfway point of their season.

While neither of the two teams dominated the field in any single event, each athlete fared well in his or her specialty.

The Minutemen visited Boston University for the second consecutive week and third time this season as they competed in the two-day ICAA Championship. They were not able to tally any points after the first day of competition, but had several performances to be proud of.

Sean Busch, UMass' best pole vaulter and a school record holder, helped get the meet off to a good start. He vaulted to a height of 15-09.00 feet, which ties him for first place in UMass indoor pole vault history with Ken Schneider who hit that height in 2002.

Additionally, the Minutemen saw encouraging showings from its distance medley relay team and senior hurdler Tyler Cotto. Scott VanderMolen, Daniel Schwartz, Ryan DiOrio and Josh Boone combined for a third-place finish in the preliminary event Saturday with their time of nine minutes, 55.80 seconds and left themselves in good position for the finals. Cotto turned in a solid performance in his signature event, the 55-meter hurdles, for the second straight week as he finished in 7.53 seconds and also sat in fourth place going into day two.

Rounding out day one's events were 3,000-meter runners Jonathon Pierce and Daniel Barry, who finished 16th and 20th respectively, long jumper Zachary Koncki who's leap of 21-10.25 feet left him in 19th place, and the 4x400-meter relay team who finished in 26th place

After a good showing in the preliminary events and several athletes in contention, the Minutemen were not able to capitalize and only placed in one event in the finals.

The squad's distance medley relay team turned in a time of 10:00.73, which was good enough for seventh place. Cotto, who sat in fourth place overall in the 55-meter hurdles Saturday, qualified for the finals and raced, but did not finish. No other members of the team finished in Sunday's finals.

The Minutewomen traveled to Roxbury, Mass. for the Eastern College Athletic Conference Championship, and were able to best their male counterparts in competition.

In an impressive showing on day one of the championship, UMass saw more of what it has relied on all year. A healthy mix of veteran leadership and underclassmen standouts helped the team into 23rd place heading into day two of the meet.

The shot put event saw two Minutewomen in contention. Lisa Wilson set a distance of 45-05.75 feet with her throw, bettering her own personal best of 45-03.50 feet. She finished the preliminary event in seventh place, and still holds the school record for the

See TRACK & FIELD on page 6

Minutewomen look to end 30-year drought

By Ben Lambert
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Tennis team will travel to Providence, R.I. tomorrow to take on No. 56-ranked Brown.

The Minutewomen have lost 15 straight matches to Brown, and have not been closer than 5-2 since 2003. The losing streak dates back to 1980, the year of the inaugural matchup between the two teams.

The most recent defeat for the Minutewomen was a 7-0 loss last season to the Bears. In that match, Bianca Aboubakare defeated Magdalena Ploch 7-5, 6-4 in singles competition, then joined forces with her sister Carissa Aboubakare to defeat the team of Ploch and Tanisha Hodgson 8-4. The only UMass victory on the day was a strong effort at No. 2 doubles by the team of Laura Dania and Maude Lecluyse, who beat Kathrin Sorokko and Emily Ellis 8-3.

The current edition of the Bears is 9-3 on the season, with significant victories over William and Mary and Nevada. Both of these teams were ranked when Brown defeated them. They are led by doubles competitors Bianca Aboubakare and Cassandra Herzberg, who are currently ranked 25th in the country as a duo. Herzberg also competes at No. 1 singles for the Bears, while Bianca Aboubakare plays the No. 2 singles.

Bianca Aboubakare was the 2008 Ivy League Rookie of the Year, as well as the 2008 ITA East Regional Rookie of the year. She compiled a 28-6 record that season, including a 16-3 mark in dual matches. She competed exclusively at No. 1 singles throughout the season. Her 28 victories was good for the second all-time mark for wins in a season at Brown. She also went 20-12 on the season in doubles play. Her 48 combined wins rank fourth all time in single-season play for Brown.

Other notable players include Misia Krasowski, who is the No. 3 singles competitor and a member of the No. 2 doubles team, and Julie Flanzer, who teams with Krasowski and plays No. 4 singles.

Coach Paul Wardlaw has played a big part in the winning streak for the Bears. Since coming from Iowa in 2004, Wardlaw has led the Bears to four straight victories over the Minutewomen. Prior to becoming the Brown head coach, Wardlaw led the Hawkeyes to the National Tournament four times in seven seasons. His most successful team in 1999 earned a trip to the round of 16. That team finished the season No.19 in the country.

Wardlaw was also named the ITA Division III Coach of the Decade and the 1993 Division III Coach of the Year for his work at Kenyon College in the 1990s.

UMass is coming off a 7-0 defeat at the hands of the No. 37 Dartmouth, dropping its record to 7-3. The loss is the second straight for the Minutewomen.

After the match against Brown, the Minutewomen will travel to Charleston, S.C. for matches against Charleston Southern, the College of Charleston and Presbyterian on successive days. These matches are part of a six-game road trip for the Minutewomen.

Ben Lambert can be reached at wlamberta@student.umass.edu.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 56 LOW: 33

www.DailyCollegian.com

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 10, 2010

Student arrested on drug charges

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

Last week there were two arrests for drug sales on the University of Massachusetts campus.

On Tuesday, March 2, Amherst resident Darius Coleman was arrested for selling cocaine to an undercover police officer. From working closely with an unidentified informant, the University of Massachusetts Police Department investigated Coleman for weeks prior to his arrest.

Using marked bills, the UMPD bought an undisclosed amount of cocaine from Coleman. After placing Coleman under arrest, the arresting officer found cocaine packaged into small plastic bags for distribution on Coleman's person while being booked at the UMPD station.

The next day, Michael Kayserman, a sophomore at UMass, was arrested as the result of a drug investigation involving numerous drug charges.

Marijuna, hundreds of dollars and drug paraphernalia were taken as evidence from Kayserman's dorm room in Washington Tower and will be used against him in the Eastern Hampshire District Court.

During the afternoon of Wednesday, March 3, UMPD served Kayserman a search warrant to search his dorm room in Washington Tower. In his room, the UMPD found and seized over a pound of marijuana, including different strains of marijuana such as hashish, a strain known for its potency. The officers also found large amounts of cash, amphetamines and drug paraphernalia, including, but not limited to, glass pipes and small clear bags commonly used for distribution.

Prior to searching Kayserman's residence, officers conducted an investigation after receiving information about drug dealing activity on campus. An undercover officer bought $60 of marijuana from Kayserman with marked bills that were matched to three of the bills found in his dorm room.

Lt. Tom O'Donnell of the UMPD said a search warrant of the student's dorm room was obtained in the same manner a search warrant would be for a private residence.

O'Donnell said the police need an informant in order to obtain a search warrant. The informant needs to describe the drug distribution activity, a description of the room and prior drug-related contact involving the suspect, which was in this case the use of marked bills to purchase cocaine from Kayserman.

Kayserman is currently enrolled at the University. Jo-Anne Vanin, the associate vice chancellor and dean of students said, "We [the administration] take drug crimes, especially the sale of drugs, very seriously."

Vanin declined to answer if Kayserman was still living on campus or allowed to attend classes.

Unable to speak specifically of Kayserman's case, Vanin said that students charged with felonies will follow the policies stated in the Student Code of Conduct, which states that "Violators of university drug policies are subject to severe sanctions including, but not limited to, removal from residence halls, suspension or expulsion."

The drug policy forbids the sale of drugs, drug paraphernalia that is used with controlled substances and the possession of controlled substances. After a student is believed to have violated the Student Code of Conduct, a hearing is scheduled with a jury of the student's peers and faculty members.

Kayserman confirmed that he was arrested, though he declined to comment in regards to his current academic status and living situation.

According to a press release from the UMPD, Kayserman was arrested on the charges of possession of a class D substance (marijuana) with intent to distribute, possession of a class D substance (marijuana) and possession of a class B drug (ecstasy). Coleman was arrested on the charges of distribution of a class B substance (cocaine), possession with intent to distribute a class B substance and possession of a class B substance.

For the charges of distribution Kayserman and Coleman could face imprisonment of up to 10 years, or a fine up to $10,000, or both, if found guilty. If found guilty on the charges of possession, they could be sentenced to imprisonment for up to five years or a fine of not more than $5,000, or both.

In the past month, the UMPD has arrested 11 individuals for drug related offenses. Nine of the arrests were the weekend of the Furthur concert, an event the UMPD heightened drug enforcement teams for.

When asked about the recent arrests, Vanin said, "It's very awkward for everyone concerned."

Michelle Williams can be reached at mrwillia@student.umass.edu.

'Debt Diva' deciphers student credit debacle

By Naychelle Lucas
Collegian Correspondent

Laundry for the month: $20. Ink for your printer: $60.99. Gas to get home for the weekend: $30. The single teardrop that glides down your cheek when you go to the ATM: priceless.

SOAPnet's new show "Bank of Mom and Dad" highlights young women whose weakness for designer shoes, gourmet lattes and expensive jewelry have caused their credit card bills to reach six figures. While most students don't spiral out of control that badly, it can still be hard to stay out of debt

According to The College Board, nationally, the average student at a four-year public college like the University of Massachusetts Amherst will spend $4,175 on living essentials for the 2009-2010 school year. Combined with $20,008 in UMass tuition, fees, room and board students will have to shell out $24,183 a year.

This doesn't leave a lot of money for much else, especially paying off student loans. Sixty-one percent of financial aid at UMass is given in the form of loans and jobs. All of these numbers add up to one thing: graduating students are $17,700 in debt.

Clarky Davis, who is known to many who enlist help from CareOne Credit Counseling as the "Debt Diva," said that after racking up debt as a young person, she was forced to learn how to better manage her money. Her personal money management gained her a certification in credit counseling.

Davis said that college is the best time for young people to become financially literate.

"In the real world…it's sink or swim with your finances," she said.

UMass student Robin Baudreau tracked her spending for a week. Every time she spent money, cash or charge, Baudreau wrote down the exact amount and a description of what she bought in a money diary. At the end of the week, she delivered the diaries to Davis to gain insight into what purchases of hers were unnecessary and could potentially contribute to future debt.

Davis indentified the top three money mistakes made by college students as getting a credit card without the finances to support it, having unreasonable expectations about what they can afford, and not educating themselves on money management early.

Although many students think they need to get a credit card to establish credit, Davis says, "if you do not have a job you do not need a credit card." For working students, Davis recommends applying for a store credit card which, despite their high interest rates, Davis says she recommends them because "they're easier to obtain and good for people in their 20's who need entry into the game."

Davis also wants students to anticipate high interest rates when applying.

"You are going to be paying at a much higher rate than what you will be [once] the better credit habits have been established," Davis said. "So, know going into it you're not going to get a great low interest rate…because you're brand new to the game."

According to Davis, when looking for credit cards, students should seek out the lowest interest rate, no annual fees and an available balance that they can make comfortably. However, Davis also suggested that students should only have one or two credit cards and only use them for emergencies.

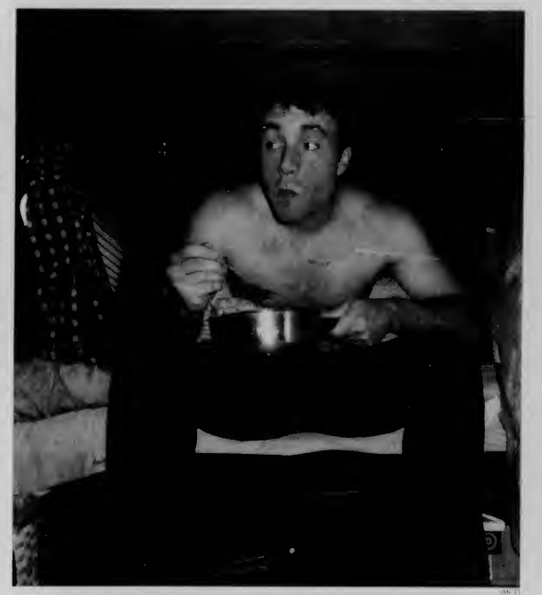
Davis also said that getting a secure credit card, renting property, being stable with payments and making reliable payments on student loans would all help to establish good credit.

Baudreau used her credit card to pay off her oil bill, but also used it to pay for gas and groceries. At the end of the week her credit card bill for the month was $631.91. Davis says that was too high. She explained that because Baudreau is using her credit card to pay for simple living expenses, her bill is higher.

With such a high bill Baudreau is forced to spend a large amount of money paying it off, which doesn't leave her much left over to pay for living expenses. In turn, she has to use her credit card to pay for them, which results in another high bill.

Davis says Baudreau can avoid this cycle that many young people are in by making a credit card budget where she is putting money on her credit card but not using it for anything else. This will drop the payments down to a more reasonable amount.

Students are in the "perfect storm of marketing," Davis said about how marketing companies attempt to target young adults to consume certain products. According to Davis, to save money, students have to make decisions about what is necessary to purchase and what products are simply excessive, and that students need to have reasonable expectations about their finances. For example, Baudreau recorded spending $41 on alcohol in her spending diary. Davis suggests going out with friends to places that are more "consumer friendly," and have deals for drinks.



Davis also said that "better planning for seasonal spending…so that you can cut your expenses. So that way you are still able to get an awesome Valentine's Day Gift and an awesome card but if you plan in advance you can spend less."

According to Davis, students should be aware of their credit score.

"A credit score is basically a photograph in time of how you are doing at managing your money," Davis said. Credit scores tell lenders that a student is paying his or her bills on time.

Davis's website can be found at http://www.careonecredit.com/community/aboutdebtdiva.aspx.

Naychelle Lucas can be reached at nllucas@student.umass.edu.

Duke graduate student Ken Ilgunas is avoiding debt by living in his van. Ilgunas, 26, is shacking up in a 1994 Ford Econoline as a means of getting through his liberal studies graduate program without debt.

UM set to evaluate and improve emergency notification system

The campus will be conducting a test of the UMass Amherst Alerts emergency notification system today between the hours of 5 p.m. and 7 p.m. The test is part of the University's efforts to evaluate and improve its ability to provide effective emergency notifications and warnings during a campus emergency, according to press release from University of Massachusetts Emergency Manager Brian Olsen.

The test will include the UMass Amherst Alerts emergency text messaging, broadcast e-mail and outdoor warning sirens. Text messaging is one of the primary methods the University will use to notify the campus community of an ongoing or imminent threat, and to register for these emergency texts at www.umass.edu alerts and click on the "Text Messaging" tab onscreen. Students are also encouraged to download a copy of the University's Emergency Procedures and Protective Action Guide, which can be found by clicking on the "Home" tab

— Collegian News Staff

ARTS & LIVING

Academy Awards full of surprises

"The Hurt Locker" cleaned up this year at the Oscars winning more awards than any other film, including "Best Picture."

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

UMass pulls upset over Charlotte

The Massachusetts men's basketball team won its first Atlantic 10 tournament game since 2002 with a win over the 49ers.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Columnist Shane Cronin identifies the lack of representation of the working class within U.S. Congress.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Go to DailyCollegian.com to check out the baseball season preview and roster breakdown.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 33

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Mari Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Jounson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Cal Scannell
COMICS EDITOR Andrew Witts
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Parent
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ellie Rulon-Miller
ASSISTANT COMICS Domonic Mei
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Asser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cody
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semesters. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1996. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:00 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jeffrey R. Larnard

COPY EDITOR
Hannah McGoldrick

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Community Clips

Meals at the Mariott Center
Reserve your spot now for a multi-course meal at the Marriott Center prepared by the HT-MGT 355 class.
Tue Mar. 9 to Thu Mar. 11.
Campus Center - Marriott Center

RefWorks Worskshop
Learn to use RefWorks, a program that manages citations and creates quick bibliographies
Tue Mar. 9, 2:30 p.m. Library, W.E.B. Du Bois Calipari room

Lecture: Professor Rick Valelly, Mellon Mutual Mentoring Speaker
Professor Rick Valelly speaks on "Why The Reed Rules: The Post-Reconstruction South, Republican Party-Building, and Congressional Development."
Tue Mar. 9, 3:30 p.m. Campus Center 903

Lecture: "Divine Wind: The History and Science of Hurricanes"
Dr. Kerry Emanuel, Professor of Geosciences at MIT, presents a lecture as part of the TLI Environmental Lecture Series.
Tue Mar. 9, 3:30 p.m. Goodell Bernie Dallas Room

Lecture: William Black
William Black presents a lecture entitled "Why Neoclassical Economics and Modern Finance Create Perfect Environments for Perfect Crimes, Bubbles, and Crises."
Tue Mar. 9, 4:00 p.m. Gordon Hall Third Floor Conference Room

UMass Amherst Alumni Association Event: Hello City: NYC
Our panelists will discuss life in New York City, from finding an apartment and identifying what neighborhood is best for you, to searching for a job and leads on networking opportunities in the city.
Tue Mar. 9, 5:30 p.m. Memorial Hall

Catalan Film Festival
Catalan Film Festival presents "Elegy," a film by Isabel Coixet.
Tue Mar. 9, 6:30 p.m. Herter 212

Renting 101: Your First Apartment
An interactive, information packed, workshop for students intending to leave the residence halls to rent off campus for the fall 2010.
Tue Mar. 9, 7:00 p.m. Berkshire Dining Commons Private Dining Room

Black Grace Dance Company
Predominantly Pacific Islanders and Maori, this company is renowned for its unique ability to combine traditional and contemporary dance forms.
Tue Mar. 9, 7:30 p.m. Fine Arts Center Concert Hall

Tuesdays in Bezanson: The New Classicism
Featuring works by Rachmaninoff, Hindemith, and Poulenc.
Tue Mar. 9, 8:00 p.m. Bezanson Recital Hall

Renaissance Wednesday
Enjoy this play entitled "The Harrowing of Hell" with Gary Aho.
Wed Mar. 10, 4:00 p.m.
Renaissance Center Reading Room

Alumni Association Member Night at the Fine Arts Center
Enjoy a night of traditional Irish cuisine and music!
Wed Mar 10, 5:00 p.m.
University Club and Fine Arts Center

Political Science Career Networking Night
The Political Science Undergraduate Board (PSUB), the Department of Political Science and the UMass Amherst Alumni Association invite you to meet and network with successful political science alumni currently working in a variety of fields.
Wed Mar. 10, 5:30 p.m.
Memorial Hall

Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival: Los Angeles Plays Itself/Bunker Hill
A film screening as part of the 17th annual Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival: "Cinematic Cities."
Wed Mar. 10, 7:30 p.m. Isenberg School of Management 137

Paddy Moloney with The Chieftains
Six-time Grammy Award winners, The Chieftains are recognized for bringing traditional Irish music to the world's attention. After all these years of making some of the most beautiful music in the world, their music remains as fresh and relevant as when they first began.
Wed Mar. 10, 7:30 p.m. Fine Arts Center Concert Hall

Not Ready for Bedtime Players
The Not Ready for Bedtime Players, UMass Amherst's award-winning peer education theater troupe, is performing.
Wed Mar. 10, 8:00 p.m. Brown

Retired Faculty Meeting
A meeting of retired faculty colleagues.
Wed Mar. 10, 10:00 p.m.
Campus Center 803

Maple Madness
Celebrate Maple Madness in all of the Dining Commons. Sample maple pecan scones, local maple syrup, maple chicken wings, and more.
Thu Mar. 11, 7:00 a.m. All Dining Commons

Panel: Designing for Sustainability at UMass Amherst – Monitoring for Sustainability
The sustainable design series kicks off a campus-wide dialogue about new campus projects and a vision for the future. In this discussion: "Monitoring for Sustainability: Data Acquisition in the Built Environment."
Thu Mar. 11, 3:30 p.m. Student Union Cape Cod Lounge

University Without Walls Information Session
The UMass Amherst University Without Walls is a bachelor's degree completion program in which students design their own degree using background and interests that reflect their creative and interdisciplinary connections.
Thu Mar. 11, 5:30 p.m. Mass Venture Center 229A

Sixth Annual Anne Halley Poetry Prize Reading
The editors of the Massachusetts Review are proud to announce that the winner of this year's Anne Halley Poetry Prize is Donald Morrill, for his poem "Enemy Infant," published in the journal's Fall 2009 issue (5003).
Thu Mar. 11, 8:00 p.m. Amherst Books

Sustainable Homes in the Pioneer Valley: Old, New and Available to All Regional architects and experts from UMass come together in the University Gallery to discuss sustainability in the Pioneer Valley.
Thu Mar. 11, Fine Arts Center - University Gallery

Renaissance Game Night
Test your mettle against the fierce competition in games from the period such as Shipmate's Dice Game, Alquerque, Nyout, Fox and Geese and Nine Man Morris.
Fri Mar 12, 2010, 7:30 p.m.
Renaissance Center

Exhibit: "Writing the Landscape: Books from the Library of American Landscape History"
The exhibit features several books developed by the Library of American Landscape History (LALH) and photographs by noted landscape photographer Carol Betsch.
Mon Feb. 1 to Thu May 20.
Library, W.E.B. Du Bois Lower Level, Learning Commons

Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Program
Free income tax assistance to qualified taxpayers will be available by the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Program at the Isenberg School of Management.
Tue Feb. 9 to Tue Apr. 13.
Isenberg School of Management 27

Exhibit: "Sailing the Barbarous Coast"
In this two person exhibition, Curator Jesse Connor pairs Anthony Smith Jr.'s gestural sequential painting with Colin Matthes' flat, brusque, obsessive drawing-based work to form an exhibition that reflects a sense of uncertainty in the midst of economic calamity, social unrest, and global disruption.
Thu Feb. 11 to Thu Mar. 11.
Central Gallery

Exhibit: I'am a dream: A (Collective) Dialogue with a Collection
Three local artists' work exhibited side by side with selections from the Gallery's permanent collection.
Thu Feb. 11 to Sun May 9. Fine Arts Center - University Gallery

Greening the Valley: Sustainable Architecture in the Pioneer Valley
A landmark exhibition on sustainable, contemporary architecture and environmentally-sensitive building practices in the Pioneer Valley.
Thu Feb. 11 to Sun May 9. Fine Arts Center - University Gallery

Exhibit: Robert Mallary/ Sculptural Practices Curated by Klaus Postler
Robert Mallary's artwork spans the pivotal decades of the American hegemony in visual arts in the twentieth century. His work reflected and presaged many of the artistic practices of our time and augured a future of art that as yet is unrealized.
Tue Mar. 2 to Sun Mar. 28.
Hampden Gallery

Crowd comes for comical night

Students listen to the routine of several student comedians at the University Programming Council's UMass' Last Comic Standing event held last Thursday.

Congressional leaders doubt ability to pass health care bill

By Margaret Talev and David Lightman
McClatchy Newspapers

WASHINGTON
Thousands of liberal public-option backers and conservative tea partiers launched last-chance campaigns Tuesday in the nation's capital to persuade Congress to pass or reject sweeping health care legislation.

Democratic congressional leaders conceded that they may not have the votes for final passage of the overhaul by March 26, when Congress is to break for spring recess. They're trying to persuade party moderates and abortion foes to go along. President Barack Obama wants final votes even earlier, before his March 18 departure on an overseas trip. That appears unlikely.

Republicans launched an all-out effort to derail the bill, urging congressional candidates to hold town hall meetings, organize voters over the Internet and denounce any special deals that may be cut to grease Democrats' votes. "A vote for this bill opens an entirely new line of attack on House Democrats," wrote Johnny DeStefano, deputy director of the National Republican Congressional Committee, in a memo to candidates.

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce said it will spend as much as $10 million on a television ad claiming that Obama's plan will only worsen the bad economy and job market. And Obama senior adviser David Axelrod, on a conference call Tuesday, told advocates of the legislation, "What happens in the next 10 days will be critical."

Despite their divergent goals, what these camps share is an acute understanding of what happened last year after Democrats failed to pass the health care overhaul before the month-long congressional August recess. In the boisterous town hall meetings and small-government tea party protests that followed, all sides learned that delaying a big vote until after a recess buys the opposition time, and that public demonstrations can have an impact on the political process.

"Our intent and our hope is to have no vote take place before recess," said Mark Skoda, founder of the Memphis Tea Party and a spokesman for

See HEALTH CARE on page 3

Crime Log for March 2–8

Tuesday March 2

Peter Thompson Johnston of Orleans, Mass. was arrested at 12:08 a.m. for an active warrant in his name. Johnston was arrested in his residence of Dickinson Hall by University of Massachusetts officers and transported to Hampshire Superior Court.

Darius D. Coleman of Amherst, Mass. was arrested at 8:12 p.m. for drug law charges. Coleman was arrested in the Southwest residential area, after he sold an undercover police officer an unspecified amount of cocaine. Resulting from a tip received by the UMPD, the detectives investigated the report. After finding suspicious activity, the UMPD planned an operation that involved Coleman selling the controlled substance to an officer. Coleman was arrested on the charges of distribution of a class B drug, possession to distribute a class B, and possession of a class B drug.

Wednesday March 3

Torey R. Moughan of Amesbury, Mass. was arrested at 1:09 a.m. for driving under the influence. Moughan was arrested on Eastman Lane after an officer on patrol noticed a grey Audi driving erratically and going over the posted speed limit of 25. The arresting officer noted Moughan appearing disoriented, and smelled of alcohol. The officer asked Moughan to perform five sobriety tests, all of which he failed. At the police station he refused to take a breathalyzer test. Moughan was arrested on the charges of negligent operation of a motor vehicle, driving at a greater than reasonable and proper speed, and a liquor OUI.

Michael S. Kayserman of Stoughton, Mass. was arrested at 1:19 a.m. for drug dealing charges. Michael was presented with a search warrant to allow the UMPD to search his dorm room in Washington Hall. The officers found over a pound of marijuana, hashish, amphetamines, and small, plastic bags for drug distribution. The investigation involving Kayserman began due to an informant working with the UMPD. During the investigation, detectives bought $60 dollars worth of cocaine from Kayserman with marked bills that were matched to bills in his dorm room. Kayserman was arrested on the charges of possession to distribute a class D drug, possession of a class D drug, and possession of a class B drug.

Friday March 5

Christopher R. Burnham of Southwick, Mass. was arrested at 8:12 p.m. for liquor law violations. While on University Drive, an officer suspected suspicious behavior. Burnham was charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Evan Serella of Southwick, Mass. was arrested at 8:12 p.m. for liquor law violations. While on University Drive, an officer suspected suspicious behavior. Serella was charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Saturday March 6

Kevin Charles Sughrue, Robert Kelm and Christopher Bryan Gange of Methuen, Mass. were arrested at 12:59 a.m. for assault and battery charges. According to an unidentified male student who witnessed the event, he and another male met the two men while leaving a party on Hobart Lane. While sharing a taxi back to campus with them, Kelm and Sughrue were arguing with the other male in the taxi and according to police record said to each other to wait until they exited the taxi. While the witness was paying the driver, Kelm, Sughrue got out of the car and punched the victim, and Gange joined in. While lying on the ground, Kelm, Sughrue and Gange kicked the victim. UMPD officers were called to the scene and identified the men by a description of their appearance and clothing. Gange, Kelm and Sughrue were each arrested on the charges of assault and battery, and assault and battery with a dangerous weapon.

Lucas L. Bracken of Mansfield, Mass. was arrested for liquor law violations. While in Lot 22, an officer on patrol suspected a green Toyota of unlawful activity. Bracken was charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Brett John Campbell and Matthew Martin Hayes of Chelmsford, Mass. were arrested for liquor law violations. An officer on patrol suspected a black Jeep of unlawful activity in Lot 33. Campbell and Hayers were charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Sunday March 7

Garrett O'Brien of Athol, Mass. was arrested for disorderly conduct. While on patrol in Lot 32, an officer noticed O'Brien damaging a grey Honda parked in the lot. O'Brien arrested on the charges of disorderly conduct and malicious destruction of property worth over $250.

Katelyn Marie Gallant of Wilmington, Mass. was arrested for assault and battery charges. The UMPD responded to a disturbance call in Patterson Hall. Gallant was identified as the assailant by the victim and was charged with domestic assault and battery.

Devin W. Pio of South Hadley, Mass. was arrested as the result of a traffic stop. An officer on patrol observed a black Honda speeding on North Pleasant Street. While following the vehicle, the officer saw the vehicle not stop for pedestrians attempting to cross at a marked crosswalk. When pulled over Pio appeared disoriented and had bloodshot eyes. Pio failed to pass the arresting officer's field sobriety tests. Pio was charged with failure to stop at a marked crosswalk, violation of marked traffic lanes, speeding and a third offense liquor OUI.

Kyle Wiggins of Dracut, Mass. was arrested for disorderly conduct. The UMPD were called to the John Quincy Adams dorm for a disturbance call. Wiggins was arrested for assault and battery, assault and battery with a dangerous weapon and disorderly conduct.

Alex Benjamin Trietsch of Longmeadow, Mass. was arrested as the result of a traffic stop. An officer observed a blue mini cooper speeding on Sylvan Drive. While checking Trietsch's license on the police database, it showed that his license was suspended and he had an active warrant for his arrest. Trietsch was arrested on the charges of speeding, operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license and having a warrant in his name.

Monday March 8

Kenneth Wei Tan of Chicopee, Mass. was arrested as the result of a traffic stop. While driving along East Pleasant Street, an officer noticed a grey Infiniti crossing over the marked yellow lines. Tan had bloodshot eyes and appeared under the influence. Tan failed the arresting officer's sobriety field tests. Prior to the vehicle being towed, the officer took an inventory of items in the vehicle, and found an open container of alcohol. Tan was arrested on the charges of violating marked traffic lanes, possession of an open container of alcohol in a motor vehicle and a liquor OUI.

—By Collegian News Staff

Students protest rise in tuition costs and fees

Across the nation, particularly in California, college students rally against cost of education

By Megha Satyanarayana and Jennifer Squires
Santa Cruz Sentinel

SANTA CRUZ, Calif. — The student-led strike and campus shutdown at the University of California, Santa Cruz, continued Thursday with a rally at the main campus entrance in which students with signs, drums and bullhorns marched down the street, carrying with them a giant paper puppet of the school's mascot, the banana slug, covered in slogans decrying privatization of the University of California system. Cars drove by, honking in support.

Speakers from university unions, faculty and grass-roots organizations congratulated the roughly 200 students, staff and faculty for their role in shutting down campus.

On the edge of campus, police set up barricades and closed roads near the entrance to UCSC, angering some area residents who are used to traveling through the area.

"It really is inconvenient for neighbors up here on the mountain to have to use alternative routes," said Gary Domingo, a local resident trying to get to Santa Cruz. He said his wife had problems making it to work this morning because of the demonstration.

"Today is easy," said one speaker, a student named Leo. "We have ... attention. But what are we going to do tomorrow? They're taking our teachers, our hours and we're paying more."

Student fees, which are essentially tuition, were raised 32 percent last year. The university is bracing for further cuts, based on the California state budget, and are planning for losses of both 5.5 percent and 11 percent.

The group at the rally was diverse — in age, gender and ethnicity, chanting in English, Spanish and at one point, Italian — as an Italian lecturer spoke against universities as businesses. Police from UCSC and the city of Santa Cruz gathered a few hundred feet away.

One group of students made food. Another made coffee and cocoa and set up a table for people to make signs, decrying administrative raises, privatization of education and giving support for university workers.

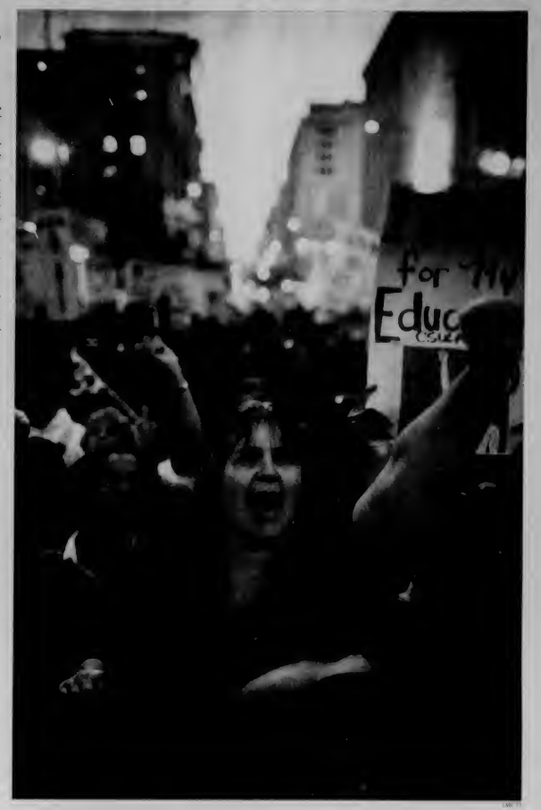
"We're not talking about a bunch of silent victims," said history Professor Dana Frank to the crowd. Frank graduated from UCSC in 1978.

Circulating through the crowd was Jeremy Wolff, 21, gathering signatures on a petition that would create a ballot measure to change the way the state budget is ratified, from a two-thirds vote to a majority vote.

"The Legislature would love to follow through on funding a master plan for education, but a minute minority can hold everything up," he said.

Pookie Bell, 22, from Oakland, Calif., and Rahsheka Keith, 21, from San Francisco, came to the rally. Both women are graduating this year, and said the fee increases will make it harder for others in their communities to go to University of California schools, including Santa Cruz.

"We're hearing from second and third years saying, 'I don't think I can afford this.'" said Keith. Both said police presence was mild, noting that if a student group of color had hosted the protest, it would have been more intense. Keith said they came down to the rally both to protest fee increases, but also in solidarity with students fighting racial tensions at other UC campuses. The diverse crowd was a good sign.



"It should be that way. Today is a day where we obliterate our differences," said Bell.

Santa Cruz City Councilman and UCSC Professor Mike Rotkin was in the crowd with students.

"It's a good demonstration and it's totally peaceful," Rotkin said.

Resident and Santa Cruz Neighbors leader Debbie Elston said, other than a news helicopter waking her up Thursday morning, the demonstration hadn't affected her. She praised the university for giving area residents plenty of warning about the events and trying to be a good neighbor.

"We've had this experience before and fortunately, the campus does a nice job now of notifying us way ahead of time," Elston said.

Demonstrator Michelle Crocker makes her voice heard in a march in downtown Los Angeles during a "Day of Action" in response to the cuts in education around the nation.

Legislation to impose new insurer restrictions

HEALTH CARE from page 2

the "Take the Town Halls to Washington" campaign that began Tuesday.

The group's Web site asked volunteers to travel to Washington before the two-week spring recess to lean on 66 Democratic lawmakers in the House of Representatives that they consider to be wavering on Obama's plan: "We want to let them know there is only one vote their constituents will support: No on Obamacare." Organizers plan to videotape the meetings and release them to constituents.

The first meeting was to be Wednesday with Rep. Jason Altmire, D-Pa.

"We recognize that come Easter, during recess, people will be able to meet with their congressmen once again," Skoda said. "We recognize this is not going away right now and we can't go away, either."

In the pro-legislation camp, thousands of supporters of Obama's plan many organized by unions and some dressed in hospital gowns with tubes taped to their faces protested outside a Washington hotel where a meeting was being held by America's Health Insurance Plans, the trade group of health insurers.

Ten protesters crossed a police line saying they were there to make citizens' arrests of insurance officials. Police hauled the 10 away.

At an earlier rally nearby, Howard Dean, the physician, former Vermont governor and 2004 Democratic presidential candidate, declared that Republicans are in the bag for insurance companies. He said the question for wavering Democrats is: "Are you for the insurance companies or the American people?"

The legislation that Obama is asking Congress to pass aims to cover 31 million more Americans and impose tighter restrictions on insurers. But some business leaders fear it will allow health care costs to keep climbing and force them to pay for it. Many liberals don't think the legislation goes far enough but have concluded they would rather get something than nothing.

Under one leading scenario, the House would vote on legislation that the Senate passed on Dec. 24. The House would then take up a separate measure that would make changes to it. If approved, the Senate also would have to pass that measure. Since it would be brought up under "reconciliation" rules designed to speed fiscal legislation, only 51 votes would be needed for passage, and only 20 hours of debate would be permitted. Filibusters, which can be shut off only with 60 votes, aren't permitted against reconciliation bills. Democrats control 59 Senate votes.

Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., a supporter of the overhaul, said demonstrations do sway congressional votes. "The more people rally, the more it shows people here they care," she said. "It adds to the excitement. It tells you people are engaged."

But Sen. Ben Nelson, D-Neb., a moderate, added that "you have to remember that there are those who are quiet who merit consideration."

Republicans remain united against the legislation.

Sen. John Thune, R-S.D., said lawmakers who support Obama's plan will be casting a vote for "higher taxes, Medicare cuts and higher premiums for most Americans. Those core elements and core features of that bill have not changed."

House Democrats need 216 votes to pass the Senate bill. They control 254 of 435 House seats, with four vacancies. When the House last voted on health care legislation in November, 39 Democrats voted no. Should that number hold, the bill would lose.

The biggest hurdles are the "Blue Dog" Democrats, a coalition of 54 moderate House members, as well as about a dozen abortion opponents concerned that the legislation would expand abortion coverage.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
On-Ca
Local B
Ads for
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

PURE MAPLE SYRUP
MAPLE
Madness
Thursday, March 11
7 am–9 pm · All DCs
SAMPLE:
• Maple Pecan Scones
• Local Maple Syrup
• Maple Chicken Wings
• Maple Glazed Salmon
& more...
ENTER TO WIN: A Basket of Local New England Maple Treats
HERO buy locally grown
RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTION Ivy
UMASS DINING UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 10, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

SGA accomplishment met with apathy

Ben Moriarty

It has been said that the Student Government Association doesn't care the slightest about the students, but instead, only about its resumes.

This has been said, likely and by most accounts, since the inception of "Student Government Associations," whatever those are, really.

There are a few reasons for this. For the most part, students don't really care that much about the issues the SGA talks about amongst themselves.

They don't care about the pats on the back that senators and treasurers and presidents and vice presidents give each other.

They care about laundry, they care about not having to give money to the school so they can buy food and beer, they care about narrow minded things.

The laundry problem hasn't been fixed. The SGA, no matter how much they talk about fee increases and decreases, won't change a thing.

The SGA is, to make an accurate comparison, worth as much as a child playing house by themselves in a plastic kitchen with plastic food and plastic utensils.

The SGA is, to make an accurate comparison, worth as much as a child playing house by themselves in a plastic kitchen with plastic food and plastic utensils.

But for the first time, they actually did something the students wanted. After how many years, I have no idea besides far too many, they finally passed online voting. And they deserve, for that, a big "hip, hip hooray!"

Hip hip, hooray!

To celebrate this, as I'm sure many other students did, I went out and didn't vote. And by that, I mean I didn't go online and click a button.

It could be apathy. It could be laziness. It could be absolutely nothing. I don't even care why I didn't, why most of the people I know didn't, and why I predict the voting turnout won't be much higher than years previous which went without online voting.

Kurt Vonnegut, in his book "A Man Without a Country," shares an insight which seems too true to be funny. "There is a tragic flaw in our precious Constitution, and I don't know what can be done to fix it. This is it: only nut cases want to be President."

That doesn't implicate only those who want to be President of the United States, but those who wish to be in positions of power – no matter how pseudo-powerful they are – in government, whether local or at a university.

Now, that wouldn't be entirely bad if that were the only thing. After all, there is always a little charm or genius in the mad and the crazy. But unfortunately, we are not dealing with pictures, art or words. If I was able to see a pretty crayon painting, or a small little prose piece, that would be fine.

But I'm not. What I'm seeing is a bunch of people who talk about grown up matters and deal with them in childish ways. They try to craft our university when they couldn't craft a pot if they were in pottery class.

Even though they finally passed online voting, doing so only after the tiring years of trying to keep the people they knew in, they are still useless.

The online voting just makes it so a few more people can contribute to the useless institution of student government. Instead of only a couple percent of people caring, they might get a few percent.

The problems we are facing as students, whether it is fee increases, dealing new contracts with the companies that control the laundry machines or the recent sexual abuse scandals and what should be done about them, are all at a level that is solvable only through administration.

For other things, like the dealing of funds to Registered Student Organizations, we have seen the fraud and pocketing into friends that has happened.

It seems, then, only sensical that these issues be put to the people who can do them effectively, with grace, and with experience: the administration.

There is no check and balance by having a SGA and an administration. There is only students, playing games with themselves, gaining recognition on their resume, all for doing nothing but wasting their time.

And that, I would say, is a waste of time for all of us. If some young adults want to play house, they can find a kid to babysit.

Ben Moriarty is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bmoriart@student.umass.edu.

Blue-collar workers absent from Congress

Shane Cronin

What comes to mind when we here, in the People's Republic of Amherst, think of the Democratic Party? The working class, the champions of immigrants, gay rights, minorities, the freedom to have an abortion and universal healthcare: the dream of Massachusetts' late and beloved "Liberal Lion," Ted Kennedy. They're a bunch of down-to-earth, regular Joes – not like those filthy rich Republicans, who give tax breaks to their friends on Wall Street.

We tend not to think of the Democratic Party (and equally the Republican Party), however, as a business with an enormous amount of market share in the United States. And despite the recent setbacks the left-of-center corporation has suffered, its top executives are faring well.

Massachusetts' very own John Kerry, for example, is one of the six richest U.S. senators (all Democrats, in case you were wondering) in the chamber. In 2008, his personal worth was estimated at $150-$250 million. Teddy was no pauper either.

Hillary Clinton, the company's head of international relations sits upon a handsome sum as does its CEO, Barack Obama.

There was a time in this country when our legislators and local elected officials were blue collar Americans. They were barbers, farmers, tradesmen and small business owners ... Now, there's virtually no working or middle class representation.

Here's the bottom line: about half of the current 100 members of the U.S. Senate are millionaires, and the average net worth is $8.9 million. The House of Representatives hasn't taken a vow of poverty either. Granted, not all of them are Democrats. The Republican Party INC is weathering the Great Recession also, anticipating major gains in the fourth fiscal quarter 2010.

Former Alaska Governor Sarah Palin (R) was hammered in the press for wearing tens of thousands of dollars worth of clothing while on the campaign trail in 2008. Do you recall any fanfare regarding Hillary Clinton's (D) wardrobe? I dare say her pants suits weren't bought at the Good Will. Or what about Democrat Senator Chris Dodd who received discounted home mortgage rates from subprime giant Countrywide Financial Co. in exchange for hundreds of millions in government bailout loans? Countrywide, by the way, has a history of disproportionately selling very expensive (subprime) loans to blacks and Latinos. Due to negative impact on the company's image, Democrat Party LLC will not be renewing Mr. Dodd's contract when it expires early next year.

I could fill up an entire issue of the Collegian with anecdotes of travesties and hypocrisy committed by Democrats and Republicans alike. Each time a Republican steps on a caterpillar a Democrat steps on a Ladybug. And that's my point. But we get excited about Democrats here in Mass. because they pay lip service to gays, abortion rights and the fake "green" movement (more on that in another column).

I realize the Bay State has a history of Republican governors. Arguably, they were all lame ducks pitted against the overwhelming Democrat majorities in both the house and senate. And as for Scott Brown, well, his opponent pronounced "police" as "bo-leeze." Brown is also proving to be more of a moderate Republican than a polarizing conservative. But I'm getting off topic.

There was a time in this country when our legislators and local elected officials were blue collar Americans. They were barbers, farmers, tradesmen and small business owners. Admittedly, there was virtually no female or minority representation. Now, there's virtually no working or middle class representation.

So what is so appealing about this not-so-blue-collar breed?

Why do we keep sending the same old apathetic faces back to Washington literally decade after decade? John Kerry, Barney Frank and Bill Delahunt the latter of whom has been collecting a pension of nearly $5,000 per month since he "retired" from his position as Norfolk County District Attorney in 1997. This is, of course, in addition to the $175,000 annual salary he currently makes as a U.S. congressman. What a man of the people! I can't say I was crestfallen when he announced last week he is not seeking reelection. I won't even mention all the cash his family members, excuse me, I mean consultants, have received via his campaign fund.

Forgive me if it appears I'm picking on Bill.

He's in both plentiful and shameful company in Mass. We often don't hear or read about these shady elements of politics, focusing instead, on social issues.

Well it's time to dig a little deeper, as the saying goes. I challenge all of you die-hard democrats out there to do some research. Read columnist and talk radio host Howie Carr of the Boston Herald. Every week he and his colleagues at the newspaper expose Mass. politicians and bureaucrats (more often than not democrats) of swindling millions from taxpayers through lucrative salaries and robust pensions. But we give them free passes because they vote "yes" to installing solar panels and erecting wind farms.

As the electorate, we've got to act as the human resources department for the Republican and Democrat parties: two large businesses that have monopolized this country. It's our job to vet resumés, check references, and not be disillusioned by pretty cover letters.

Shane Cronin is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at scronin@student.umass.edu.

Sacrifices are necessary evils to land ideal internship

Amanda Joinson

Spring break is around the corner. So now students may be wondering what they are going to do for the summer, and with the economy still in a less than favorable condition, the outlook for those killer internships cannot be good.

The options for internships may be slim, especially if you have moral standards, which I expect everyone to own up to. You are the only one who can decide what you believe in and those morals determine who you are and how people respond to you.

Do you apply and go on interviews for jobs with companies that you do not necessarily agree with ethically?

For example, if you are a devoted consumer of Apple products and do not agree with the practices of Microsoft, would you take the internship with Microsoft if it was 10 minutes from wherever you choose to call home this summer and pays, possibly even more than minimum wage?

It is a very legitimate question, and it all comes down to ethics.

Of course going against your morals for an internship seems preposterous; it would be like a vegan drinking a cold glass of chocolate milk or an atheist attending a religious ceremony, but take a second look at the options. You could always go back home to your faithful pizza delivery job or back to CVS stocking shelves.

The truth is those jobs are probably not going to get you far after college. Employers are going to be looking for some solid experience, and in order for a person to acquire a noteworthy internship, sacrifices must be made.

Finding an internship that has a minimum amount of commuting would be prime. Think about it, gas prices are on the rise again, and most internships aren't paid internships.

Students want the perfect internship. They want an internship that doesn't require coffee runs or photocopies all day, but realistically, students have to know that something has got to give.

Do you really want to drive an hour in traffic going to and from work? I would assume not, especially if your temporary office would most likely not pay for your gasoline intake.

It would be great if all companies were required to pay. Wouldn't that just be a dream come true? Not only would the competiveness die down because all internships would be paid, but companies might actually value you more and want you to actually do something because they are throwing money out the window otherwise. Credits are being offered along with experience, but how far is that going to take you when you're trying to pay for weekend adventures?

Students want the perfect internship.

They want an internship that doesn't require coffee runs or photocopies all day, but realistically, students have to know that something has got to give. And in the world of internships, nothing is perfect. As students entering the job market in a tough economy, again, sacrifices must be made.

Maybe that paid internship is a few miles away. Or maybe it is unpaid and requires extensive travel time, but without taking a chance on an internship you might be risking your future. We all know about the challenges that last year's graduating class had to overcome or have heard nightmare stories of students who have had to move back in with their parents because they have yet to find a job a year later.

The problem is doubly worrisome when you consider that not only does a lack of a career mean a lack of income, but also, a lack of means to pay off the $80,000 debt that some graduates have accrued over their four years at UMass.

Say you don't see eye-to-eye with the company completely. Going against your ideals might seem crazy, but that company might prepare you for a career in your selected industry better than any of its competitors.

Chances are you do not agree with all of its practices.

However, you will get a better understanding of the company's views working there, and the good news is, flexibility is an important quality to have in a student seeking employment.

We have to enter the real world eventually, and we must come to terms with the fact that we can't all get what we want.

Applying to an internship in your academic field is better than wasting another summer waiting for your more successful friends to get out of work after you get off your part-time shift. Despite what it entails, putting any chances of a future advancement on the back-burner at this moment in time is the last thing you want to do.

Get started because the good internships are going to go fast.

Amanda Joinson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at ajoinson@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 10, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Key moments make the 2010 Academy Awards memorable

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

With every new year comes the same line-up of award shows honoring the best talent in Hollywood. The same categories are filled and someone is declared Best Supporting Actress, Best Director and so on. It gets sort of monotonous; it's been the same since 1929.

This year, however, there were changes to the way the Academy Awards have been held every year. The 82nd Academy Awards will be remembered for its structural changes, funny speeches, great talent of the nominated actors and crew members and even some mild controversies.

To the delight of many viewers, controversies seemed to take center stage this past Sunday night at Hollywood's Kodak Theater. Perhaps the most notable problem with the awards show is the fact that Farrah Fawcett and Bea Arthur were emitted from the "In Memoriam" segment of the show. Controversially, Michael Jackson, primarily a musician, however, was included. Both were known best for television roles, but both also starred in movies, with Fawcett even receiving a Golden Globe nomination for Best Actress in 1986's "Extremities." Stars including Nicky Hilton, Roger Ebert and Star Jones all took to Twitter to announce the travesty.

Kathryn Bigelow became the first female director to win an Academy Award for Best Director edging out her ex-husband James Cameron.

According to contactmusic.com, Sasha Baron Cohen ("Borat") was uninvited to the Oscars, because producers thought a skit between him and Ben Stiller would insult "Avatar" director James Cameron. They decided against it, though Cameron said he would be fine with the jabs. Stiller and Cohen ended up performing it himself. Another Cameron controversy was played up in the media – both he and ex-wife Kathryn Bigelow were in the running for Best Director. The media overplayed the competition.

Funny moments, however, mostly overcame whatever obstacles the Academy Awards faced. For the first time ever, the Oscars featured two hosts, Steve Martin and Alec Baldwin, recent costars in "It's Complicated." They had great banter onstage and were mostly spot on with their jokes. They teased another "It's Complicated" costar Meryl Streep, stressing the fake feud between her and fellow Best Actress nominee Sandra Bullock, as well as young stars including Taylor Lautner. Stiller's jabs to "Avatar" also prompted many laughs, as he dressed up as blue avatar Na'vi, and looked absolutely ridiculous doing so.

An equally laughable moment occurred when "Twilight" sequel "New Moon" appeared in a montage of classic horror movies. "Silence of the Lambs" and "The Shining," yes, but "New Moon?" Not unless you're afraid of the leering and longing looks of Kristen Stewart.

These Oscars also showcased their ability to evolve with the times. Since 2009 was considered such a great year for movies, the Academy decided to expand the Best Movie nominees from five films to 10. This also resulted in cutting the performances of each movie's theme song by the artist who performed it or the film. A first-time performance piece set to many movie theme songs performed extremely well by America's Best Dance Crew seemed to be the replacement.

Obviously, the awards will be remembered for the raw talent that graced the stage and picked up their own golden men statues. Sandra Bullock won Best Actress for her work in "The Blind Side," honoring her late mother in a very heartfelt speech. "The Hurt Locker," a film about soldiers in the War or Terror, swept many categories, including Best Movie and Best Director. Jeff Bridges won for "Crazy Heart," over favorites Morgan Freeman and Jeremy Renner. Another standout moment occurred when Mo'Nique, of "Precious," accepted the award for Best Supporting Actress. She cited "Gone with the Wind" supporting actress Hattie McDaniel for paving her way, defended her right to be onstage despite her vicious character and defended her own unconventional, open marriage.

Honestly, these 82nd Academy Awards and its events will be mostly forgotten by the next time Oscar season rolls around. For the next few weeks, however, Hollywood will be abuzz with the goings on of Sunday night. After all, as Gabourey Sidibe put it, "It's like prom night for Hollywood."

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kaitlynm@student.umass.edu.

Oscar gold

2010 Academy Award winners in major categories:

Best picture	Hurt Locker
Best director	Kathryn Bigelow Hurt Locker
Best actor	Jeff Bridges Crazy Heart
Best actress	Sandra Bullock The Blind Side
Best supporting actor	Christoph Waltz Inglourious Basterds
Best supporting actress	Mo'Nique Precious
Best foreign language film	El Secreto de Sus Ojos Argentina
Best animated feature film	Up

Source: Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences

© 2010 MCT

Chieftains to light up Irish eyes at the FAC

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

Legendary Irish band The Chieftains, headed by Paddy Moloney, are coming to the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall this evening. They will be performing songs from their newest album, "San Patricio," released just yesterday, as well as old, traditional favorites.

The Chieftains were founded in 1962 by Paddy Moloney, as an Irish traditional group. Over the years, however, they have not limited themselves to purely Irish instrumentals. They've collaborated with many popular artists, such as Van Morrison, Mick Jagger, The Corrs and Ziggy Marley, to name a few. Their musical styles have drifted from traditional to rock and roll, even over to the country genre.

They began their current tour for "San Patricio" on Feb. 17 in Calif. and will wrap things up on St. Patrick's Day in New York City, not long after their three Mass. shows. Their tour will include Nashville bluegrass fiddlers, a Scottish singer and a harpist, showcasing their different musical talents.

Since their inception, The Chieftains have been nominated for 18 Grammys, winning six, as well as an Emmy. Though they have received the most acclaim in their native Ireland, the group saw American success twice, once in 1995 with "Have I Told You Lately," performed with Van Morrison, and again when their collaboration with The Corrs, "I Know My Love," in 2002.

"San Patricio," recorded with Ry Cooder is their newest album, their first since 2006's "The Essential Chieftains." According to the FAC press release, it's a blend of Irish and Mexican music, a tribute to the San Patricio Battalion, which was made up of Irish-Americans and famine immigrants who fought on the Mexican side of the Mexican-American War due to reported mistreatment by the U.S. army and the orders to shoot fellow (Mexican) Catholics. San Patricio is Spanish for "Saint Patrick."

According to the official web site of The Chieftains, "San Patricio" was recently named one of the most "eagerly awaited new albums of 2010." Steve Morse, of The Boston Globe, hailed it as, "a vital reminder of a history long forgotten."

The album also features collaborations with Linda Ronstadt and actor Liam Neeson.

"It'll be a big show," Moloney told The Columbus Dispatch of this tour. At the ends of the concerts, he said, the group plans on inviting the audience to come to the stage and dance. They like to incorporate the viewers into their shows, getting the audience involved.

The concert is sure to be great for anyone interested in connecting with their Irish roots. Since the 1980s, The Chieftains have featured traditional Irish step dancers in various parts of their set.

Additionally, the group is comprised of four Irishmen, all of whom play various Celtic instruments, including the bodhran, an Irish drum (played by Kevin Conefl), the uilleann pipes and easily identifiable tin whistle (both featured by Paddy Moloney himself), and the fiddle and flute (played by Sean Keane and Matt Molloy, respectively). Together for years, they've been noted to have great chemistry and rhythm onstage, really captivating their audience.

In Mass., a state with such great and numerous ties to Ireland, Paddy Moloney is just the thing we need to get the audience in the mood for next week's St. Patrick's Day festivities!

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kaitlynm@student.umass.edu.

With St. Patrick's Day on the horizon, the traditional Irish group, The Chieftains, led by Paddy Moloney, performs at the Fine Arts Center tonight at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $15 for Five College students.

New TV show 'Human Target' writers completely miss mark

By Maureen Ryan
Chicago Tribune

Maybe part of the reason that "Human Target," which returns Wednesday on Fox, doesn't appeal to me is that Christopher Chance has chosen a path "Burn Notice"s": Michael Westen rejected – being smart muscle for hire.

Or maybe the show is a disappointment because it's possible to see almost every "twist" coming a mile away.

It's not even just the plots that are predictable; it's the entire feel of the series. Every single scene, every action beat, every cheesy line of dialogue is recycled from some other action movie or adventure franchise. In Wednesday's episode, Chance (Mark Valley) heads for a remote bar owned by an old flame. I predicted that she would be really hot and that at some point, she'd slap him. Guess what? She was really hot, and at one point she slapped him.

What is it with TV writers today? I get the feeling, not just from "Human Target," that there is a large subset of writers for whom throwing out pop-culture references represents the bulk of their creative achievement. And that they expect congratulations and praise for that.

I get that for many TV writers (and executives), having seen every big-budget studio movie since "Star Wars," having read a lot of comic books and having obsessed over iconic TV shows represent important parts of their aesthetic education. But is that all you've got?

Even if some of the iconic TV shows and movies of the past few decades were themselves recycling age-old storytelling elements – "Star Wars" is Joseph Campbell with Wookiees and robots – those TV shows and movies had their own variation on the story to tell, and they used memorable characters to do it.

"Fringe" (which returns April 1) sometimes feels like a pastiche of sci-fi and horror movie tropes in search of a coherent mythology (or what you could call "something to say"). But the show sometimes rises above its inconsistencies – once in a while, it rises well above them and achieves something almost poetic.

Besides, whenever John Noble (as Dr. Walter Bishop) opens his mouth, it's easy to forget that the show at times can seem like an overheated mishmash of "The X-Files" and Michael Crichton's oeuvre.

It's not just one-hour shows that serve up leftovers and pretend they're gourmet cuisine. "Community" doesn't quite work for me because the show proudly and loudly celebrates every single pop-culture reference that it throws at the audience.

Yes, "Community." I saw and loved "The Breakfast Club" too. And yes, it can be funny that Abed (Danny Pudi) sees every moment in his life through the prism of movies and TV shows. But still, there isn't much more to "Community" than that.

That isn't the case with "Chuck," in which the constant pop-culture references are a fun side dish, not necessarily the main course, or with "Parks and Recreation," which also returned Thursday.

Even if Thursday's episode was a pretty standard outing, this unmissable NBC comedy is slowly building the characters' relationships with care and satisfying subtlety. At this point, "Parks and Recreation" can put almost any combination of characters together and get pleasing results, though the pairings of Leslie and Ron or Andy and April produce the most consistently funny results.

"Human Target," on the other hand, so under employs its cast that it nearly amounts to a crime against filmed entertainment. Too often, Chi McBride and Jackie Earle Haley are shunted to the side; uttering lines that would make a beginning screenwriter blush (or should).

It's not that I demand that "Human Target" have the complexity of "Burn Notice" at its best. But "Human Target" doesn't even appear to be trying all that hard to be mediocre. When all you're really expecting is a moderately fun, moderately exciting slice of escapism and the whole enterprise still falls flatter than the lamest big-budget movie sequel, you could call that missing the target.

Venechanos trying to boost team's morale

LACROSSE from page 8

in the second goal of the game. UMass had resilience, with goals by sophomore Colleen Mulligan, freshmen Hopkins and senior Meghan Reddy coming in.

The goals by the trio of returning players was not enough to get the Minutewomen the victory, as Yale goalkeeper Whitney Quackenbush made a trio of saves in the final six minutes. Quackenbush, who also returns for today's match up, had 14 total saves in last year's game.

"Our goalie plays a big role into their success," Venechanos said.

A key match-up in this afternoon's affair comes from the sophomore goalkeepers Quackenbush and Katie Florence. Both Florence and Quackenbush started for their respective squads as freshman, and both are returning to stand behind the net. This season, Florence has out-saved Quackenbush 46-36.

"[Florence] is obviously our captain for us and a leader for us," Venechanos said. "Both teams are going to be rallying around their goalies, but I think that's very standard in our game versus another game."

Despite the loss last season, the Minutewomen defense was the best of the year, as it kept its opponent to seven goals, which was the season low for the Maroon and White.

Coincidentally, the Minutewomen had a 2-4 record after its game against the Bulldogs. UMass went on to capture the Atlantic 10 regular season title.

The series between Yale and UMass dates back to 1979, where the Minutewomen escaped with the victory. Yale now leads the series, 12-8, with the last UMass victory coming back in 1998.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BLOOMER/COLLEGIAN

Junior Hayley Smith looks to receive a pass during the Minutewomen's last home game against New Hampshire. UMass hopes to turn around its luck at home after going on a three-game losing streak.

Minutewomen hope practice changes help on the offensive attack from various players this spring, scoring has been inconsistent. UMass has scored the same amount of goals that it's allowed (63), but in its losing streak, is having trouble generating offense.

OFFENSE from page 8

Venechanos made some changes in practice, hoping to clear her team's heads.

"We made things a lot simpler," Venechanos said. "After six games, you know what people's strengths are, who needs to be shooting the ball from certain spots, so we simplified things for our girls. We're looking forward to seeing the results and the girls are excited to put in action what we've been practicing."

UMass' offensive stats are nearly equal to that of its opponents across the board, except for two areas: ground balls and turnovers.

Opponents have recorded 77 ground balls while UMass has 64 this season. Failure to pick balls off the turf has also led to an increase in turnovers. The Minutewomen have failed to maintain possession at times in their losses, suffering 92 total turnovers.

"It's difficult with a young team because you don't know who's going to show up every game, so we try to tweak stuff when we're playing, which is a little bit harder," Venechanos said. "Hopefully what we did this past week in practice will make things a lot easier for the [players]."

With a looming six-game road trip awaiting UMass after Yale, the Minutewomen will look to end their losing streak before leaving Amherst.

"It's really important to get momentum, but in order to get momentum you have to start with one," Venechanos said. "That's our main focus right now is to get that first one."

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

PJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Junior Jackie Lyons juggles the ball past a defender during a game last season. The Minutewomen play their fourth home game today against Yale and will rely on experienced players like Lyon's to turn their play around.

SLU overcomes wild pitching, defeats MSU

BY KARA DEYERMENJIAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Saint Louis softball team defeated Missouri State, 2-1, in eight innings on Sunday at the Missouri Breast Cancer Awareness tournament.

The Bears (1-9) got off to a solid start in the first inning after Jenna Schwark led off with a double to leftfield. SLU starter Hannah Huebbe then hit Christa Gammon with a pitch and allowed a wild pitch to advance her into scoring position. A fielder's choice allowed Gammon to score from third, giving MSU a quick 1-0 advantage.

A-10 Softball

The Billikens (9-6) didn't make any progress until the bottom of the sixth when Kristin Nicoletti sparked a rally with a single and stolen base. Jessica Buschjost then delivered a sacrifice bunt, moving Nicoletti over to third base. Nicki Jost finished the job with a sacrifice fly to tie the game at one.

The game went into extra innings after a scoreless seventh. The win looked to be out of SLU's reach in the top of the eighth after Huebbe loaded the bases with just one out. She escaped the jam by striking out the following two batters and kept its hopes alive.

The Billikens obtained the winning run when Natalie Rose plunked SLU's Kelly Flanagan with the bases loaded and two outs.

Saint Louis finished 3-2 in the tournament and improves to 7-6 with its third straight win.

Next up, the Billikens head to Kissimmee, Fla., this week for six contests at the Rebel Spring Games.

49ERS LOSE FINALE

Charlotte lost 3-2 to San Jose State to wrap up the Hornet Round Robin tournament on Sunday.

The 49ers (14-3) went 3-2 for the weekend, including a three-game sweep of host-squad Sacramento State and two losses to the Spartans (16-5).

Scoring was relatively even throughout both games against San Jose, and although Charlotte got within one run each time, they couldn't pull ahead.

Charlotte's Katy Hackett and Emily Jeffery both pitched in Sunday's finale. After Hackett allowed two singles to start the fifth inning, she was replaced by Jeffrey, who managed to get out of a bases-loaded jam to maintain the tie game.

Hackett left the game allowing one earned run in 4.1 innings to put her season earned run average at 2.26 in seven appearances on the year.

The relief pitcher went on to strike out five batters but couldn't pitch the 49ers out of trouble in the bottom of the seventh as San Jose's Natasha Hawkins singled to left and scored Kayla Hayes to lock in the victory.

Jeffery dropped to 9-2, while her ERA remained at 0.90.

The 49ers have two doubleheaders planned for this week. They will take on Winthrop on the road today and Appalachian State tomorrow at home.

GW SPLITS WEEKEND

George Washington (2-6) split four games over the weekend in the 2010 Colonial Classic.

GW started off Saturday against Army (1-3) with freshman pinch-hitter Autumn Taylor hitting her first collegiate home run over the leftfield wall to secure the 1-0 win in the bottom of the seventh inning.

Army's pitcher Jessi Muckelroy retired six straight batters prior to Taylor's game-winning hit, and previously allowed the Colonials to get into scoring position twice over the first six frames.

The next time Muckelroy and the Black Knights took on the Colonials was in the tournament finale Sunday afternoon. Army came away with a 5-0 shutout, ending a four-game series losing streak and clinching its first win over the Colonials since 2005.

GW's Heidi Penna pitched six innings, allowing all five runs with three strikeouts.

The Colonials took on Binghamton in its second outing of the afternoon and came away with a 4-2 victory. The Colonials had a four-run scoring rally in the second inning thanks to freshman Sandi Moynihan, who had two big hits.

Penna got the win in 2.75 innings of work, allowing two runs on seven hits. She struck out four batters and walked two.

GW will be on the road tomorrow to take on the UMBC Retrievers at 1 p.m.

Kara Deyermenjian can be reached at kdeyerme@student.umass.edu.

Merrimack receives 6th seed in playoffs

BY ERIC MANSFIELD
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Hockey East

For the first time in the last six seasons, Merrimack will compete in the Hockey East tournament. After tying Providence 1-1 at home game Saturday, Merrimack secured the sixth seed in the eight-team tournament and will be traveling to Boston University next week to play a best of three quarterfinal which begins on Friday.

In the game against Providence, Merrimack fell behind early when Providence's sophomore Matt Bergland scored a power-play goal at the one minute, nine second mark of the first period. This was Bergland's 12th goal of the season. Merrimack was able to tie the game at the 4:25 mark in the first period on a one-timer by junior defenseman Adam Ross.

Merrimack outshot the Friars 16-9 from the second period on. Though the teams ended with a tie, Merrimack outshout the Friars 38-23. Providence sophomore goaltender Alex Beaudry made 37 saves while the Warriors' senior goaltender Andrew Braithwaite made 22 saves in his last start in front of the home crowd.

In a ceremony before the game Merrimack honored their six-member class of 2010. The players included Braithwaite, defenseman and captain Pat Bowen, defenseman Brandon Sadlowski and forwards Justin Bonitatibus, Pat Kimball and J.C. Robitaille.

Merrimack finishes the regular season with an overall record of 15-17-2 and a 12-13-2 record in the conference. Their 12 conference wins mark the most in school history, and the six seed they hold in the conference tournament is the second highest ever seed they have ever earned.

UVM MAKES POSTSEASON

Vermont played UMass Lowell to a 1-1 tie Saturday night at the Tsongas Arena at UMass Lowell. The tie clinches the final and eighth seed in next week's HEA Tournament for the Catamounts.

The game started out on a positive note for Vermont as UMass Lowell was given a five-minute game misconduct penalty 5:23 into the game. The Catamounts were unable to take advantage of the early penalty but were able to score the game's first goal before the end of the first period. Freshman forward Sebastian Stalberg shot it past the River Hawks' senior goaltender Carter Hutton with just over a minute left in the first period. It was Stalberg's sixth goal of the season.

The River Hawk's Scott Campbell scored the game-tying goal at 7:27 into the second period on a pass from senior defenseman Jeremy Dehner. It was Campbell's 15th goal of the season. UML would outshoot Vermont 16-6 in the second period.

For the rest of regulation and in overtime, both team's goalies kept the puck out of the net. Hutton would finish the game with 17 saves for the River Hawks and Rob Madore would total 35 for the Catamounts. Hutton's record would improve to 12-10-2 and Madore's to 11-10-7.

The River Hawks doubled up on the Catamounts in shots 36-18, but did not take advantage of any of their four power-play attempts. The Catamounts could not cash in on their lone man advantage.

On Friday, Vermont will visit top seeded New Hampshire and the River Hawks will travel to Maine to play the Black Bears.

MAXWELL SPARR/COLLEGIAN

Boston University's Colby Cohen tries to stop Casey Wellman from scoring during UMass' first home game of the season. The Terriers grabbed the No. 3 seed in the Hockey East tournament with a 4-3 win over Northeastern.

BU GRABS NO. 3 SEED

With a 4-3 win over Northeastern Saturday, Boston University was able to solidify their position as the No. 3 seed in next week's Hockey East Tournament. Northeastern's chances of competing in the tournament were dashed with the loss.

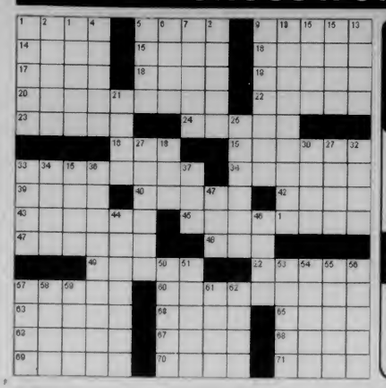
Kyle Kraemer, senior forward for Northeastern, led the team in his final home game with a pair of goals.

In a back-and-forth contest, Kevin Gilroy, a sophomore forward, put the game away for good for BU with his first goal of the season at the 13:32 mark of the final period.

The Terriers outshot the Huskies 42-24. Their biggest advantage came in the second period when they outshot the Huskies 16-3.

The Huskies end their season with an overall record of 16-16-2 and a conference record of 11-14-2.

With the win BU will move on to the tournament and will host Merrimack in the quarterfinals.



Eric Mansfield can be reached at eamansfi@student.umass.edu.

Off The Wall Games
$12 Thursday Night Draft!
Look for us at ConBust at Smith College
March 26-28!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday; 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays
WARHAMMER 40,000
141 Russel St (Village Barn Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-8451
MAGIC THE GATHERING

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Anagram of "Sail"
5. Exchange
9. Gorge
14. Agitated state
15. Duo
16. Eagle's nest
17. Head
18. Cancel
19. Sometimes it's "pennies from heaven"
20. Embolden
22. Garbage
23. Requires
24. Storehouse
26. Tease
29. Ladened
33. Helped
38. A call for more
39. Not fat
40. Faint
42. Sharpen
43. In great numbers
45. Worn to shreds
47. Stellar
48. Deli loaf
49. Presents
52. First Greek letter
57. A woman of refinement
60. Morally justified
63. Without company
64. A Central American sloth
65. A friendly nation
66. Street urchin
67. Phone
68. Rice beer
69. Construct
70. Slay
71. At one time (archaic)

DOWN
1. Colorado resort
2. Silly
3. Willowy
4. Horse
5. Egg on
6. Desire
7. Helped
8. Lying facedown
9. Animation
10. Intense sorrow
11. Operatic solo
12. Transgressions
13. Net 21. Inquires
25. A full supply
27. Anagram of "Stifle"
28. Morning moisture
30. A swinging barrier to a room
31. Sea eagle
32. Accomplishment
33. Seaweed
34. The Caribbean and Adriatic, for example
35. Sodium chloride
36. Mineral-based
37. A very small circular shape
41. Paddle
44. Attire
46. Nipple
50. In England, it's a lorry
51. A peninsula in northeastern Egypt
53. Rent
54. A type of bear
55. Abandoned ships
56. Heretofore (2 words)
57. Magician
58. Winged
59. A hemispherical roof
61. Effrontery
62. Body of a ship

UMass... San Diego?
Take online classes anywhere this Summer
Registration begins March 15
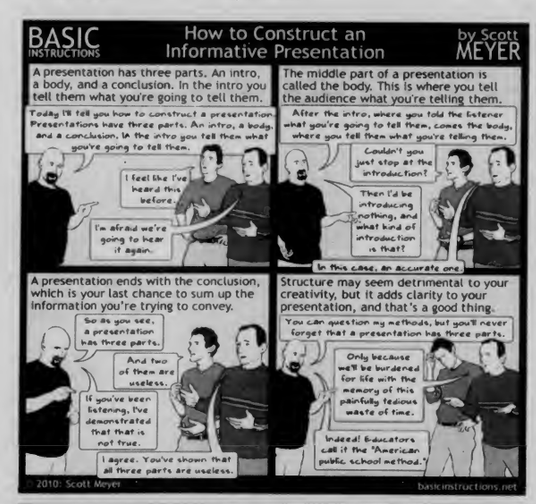
Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net
UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

Musty Putters

		2		8		1
	9				6		5
		1		9
	6		7
7				3
		5			6	8	3
				4	3	9
			2			6	8
	4	6				5	1



PUFFTON VILLAGE
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS
SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!
ON SITE LAUNDRY, OFF STREET PARKING.
BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.
OFFICE HOURS: 8AM TO 4PM MONDAY - FRIDAY
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

I could immediately sense he'd done office work before.

BASIC INSTRUCTIONS How to Construct an Informative Presentation by Scott MEYER

Rather Be Working by David Waksman Infinitymaze.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20 - FEB. 18
Interrupting certain people while they are in the middle of a crowning achievement is the best way to get noticed.

pisces FEB. 19 - MAR. 20
Tomorrow you will wake up with pointed ears. This is what you get when you share a bed with a sci-fi makeup artist.

aries MAR. 21 - APR. 19
I bet you did not know that hamburgers have foresight. You have now learned something today.

taurus APR. 20 - MAY. 20
One can never have too many friends. Make some more buy putting a sign on your door that says "free cocktails".

gemini MAY. 21 - JUN. 21
Read less about sexual stimuli for men above the age of 75. Less is more.

cancer JUN. 22 - JUL. 22
If someone offers you a look at a t-bone steak live and in action, please consult your local butcher before you commit to anything.

leo JUL. 23 - AUG. 22
If you were born a century ago, Betty White would have totally had a crush on you. Maybe it isn't too late?

virgo AUG. 23 - SEPT. 22
Now is the time to decide whether or not Jessica Simpson is a real person. There has been much debate, the choice is yours.

libra SEPT. 23 - OCT. 22
Boost your resume a little bit and hire your very own paparazzi. They also cure epilepsy, which is also a blatant lie.

scorpio OCT. 23 - NOV. 21
Facebook cares about you very deeply. In fact, it loves you so much that it hides the log out button so you won't run away.

sagittarius NOV. 22 - DEC. 21
Myspace is still wondering if you are ever going to call.

capricorn DEC. 22 - JAN. 19
Time is only wasted when it is spent on reading poems by opium lovers like Samuel Taylor Coleridge!

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT
Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

TUTORING SERVICES
Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats, GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 Jboid42@yahoo.com

ACTIVITIES
Bartenders needed for FT/PT positions. No experience required. Earn $20-$70 per hour. Call us at 617-849-8074

FOR RENT
Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

Hobart Condos 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors, study in basement. Cable & Phone in all bedrooms & study. NOW SHOWING for June & September. NO FEES www. amherstlincolnrealty.com 413-253-7879

ANNOUNCEMENTS
Montreal Party Weekends From $89 Complete. Montreal Express.Net MontrealBlowout.com 781-979-9001

SERVICES
Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 10, 2010 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Winning against all odds

Harris lifts UMass to first A-10 tournament win since 2002

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The drought is now over.

For the first time in eight seasons, the Massachusetts men's basketball team defeated an opponent in the Atlantic 10 tournament, as the Minutemen (12-19, 5-11 A-10) upset Charlotte on Tuesday night, 59-56, at Halton Arena.

Eleventh-seeded UMass will now head to Atlantic City to take on No. 3 Richmond on Friday night at 9 p.m.

UMass	59
Charlotte	56

"It was a hard fought game by our players," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said. "It's about the team and players, it's about Ricky [Harris] playing the way he has down the stretch."

Harris led all scorers with 24 points, including hitting his first four shots of the game, going 5-of-13 from the field and 11-of-12 from the free-throw line.

"It's a great feeling right now," Harris said. "It's a great win in a hostile environment against a great team that is well coached, and the win on the road is big for us. Now, we have to take it to Atlantic City, and hopefully carry it over."

While Harris led the game in scoring, the Minutemen won on the defensive side of the floor, as they caused the sixth-seeded 49ers (19-12, 9-7 A-10) into shooting 35 percent in the second half and 37 percent for the game, while causing five turnovers.

"That's the thing I've been preaching all year, and I didn't think we played well on the offensive end, but we grinded it out," Kellogg said of his team's defensive performance. "It's been a long time coming, but we toughed it out for a win and made some plays down the stretch."

UMass shot 32 percent from the field and went 7-of-32 from 3-point range, but converted from the free-throw line with 18-of-22 shots.

With the loss, the 49ers will be hard pressed to make the NCAA tournament, losing seven of their last eight games.

The Minutemen were up one when freshman Javorn Farrell blocked a shot from Derrio Green against the backboard, causing a jump ball in the possession of UMass with just under a minute and a half left in regulation.

Freshman forward Terrell Vinson then hit a jumper to give the Minutemen a 54-51 lead with 50 seconds left.

The 49ers called a timeout and went on to the court with six players, resulting in a technical foul, with Harris making both free throws to put the Minutemen up five.

A quick 3 by Gokhan Sirin cut the 49er deficit to two with 46 seconds to play, but Harris again hit two more free throws to put UMass up 58-54.

After a quick Charlotte basket, Vinson hit one of two free throws, and Hashim Bailey grabbed the rebound to seal the victory after a one-and-one miss from DiJuan Harris.

Along with Harris, Sean Carter added seven points and seven rebounds, while Terrell Vinson and Bailey both added six points in the victory.

Freshman Freddie Riley added a 3-pointer, while Farrell added five points and four assists.

"It's unbelievable, and it's a pleasure to watch them," Harris said of his young teammates. "I wish I had another year, because next year they will be a good team with well-rounded individuals."

The 49ers were led by An'Juan Wilderness (11 pts) and Ian Andersen (10 pts), while Shamari Spears and Phil Jones each had eight.

UMass fell to the 49ers 72-58 back on Jan. 30, and lost to the Spiders 70-63 in an overtime contest on Jan. 13.

In 2008, the third-seeded Minutemen fell to the sixth-seeded 49ers, 69-65, in the the A-10 quarterfinals, after earning a first round bye.

"We have good kids, and when things aren't going well, they work hard and persevere, they have tremendous attitudes and have stayed up beat," Kellogg said.

That optimism has brought UMass back to Atlantic City for the second time this season, not for the Legends Classic it played earlier this year, but a shot at the A-10 title.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Center Sean Carter draws contact against Rhode Island in Saturday's win. After pulling an upset against the Rams, the Minutemen beat sixth-seeded Charlotte in the A-10 tournament.

UM hopes for change vs. Yale

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

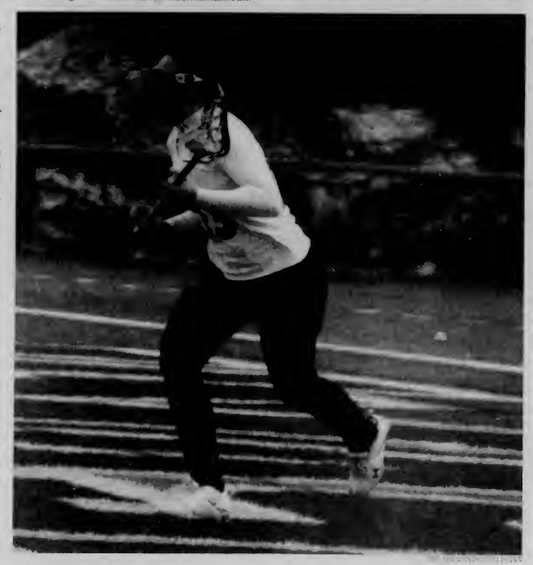
Following three straight losses on its home turf, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team looks to finish off its five-game home stretch with a positive result against Yale today.

"We're looking to restart our season tomorrow," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said.

After an 11-8 loss to No. 19 New Hampshire, the Mintewomen (2-4) had five days to reshape their squad and get in line before a long break on the road.

"We're excited to have the week to prepare for this," Venechanos said. "Last time we had a week to prepare was between our first and second games, so we're definitely taking advantage of that. We tweaked a couple of things on attack, and changed some things on defense that will play more into our strengths."

The last time the Minutewomen competed against the Bulldogs (1-2) was one day short of a year ago today, where UMass fell 7-4 in New Haven.



"It was tough. I mean we couldn't score," Venechanos said. "Yale is known to have a tough defense, and they have a tough goalie. We know that in order to be in this game we'll have to put some goals away. Our attack knows that they have to step up."

After the Bulldogs started the first 11 minutes of game time with a 3-0 lead, the Minutewomen struck back with a goal of their own, which was the only goal by UMass in the first half of play.

Senior Holly Drown got things moving for the Minutewomen with a score with nearly nine minutes left to play. Under five minutes later, junior Logan Greer struck a goal right back to give the Bulldogs a 4-1 lead going into the break.

Yale went on a three-goal run as Greer finished

See LACROSSE on page 6

Freshman Lauren Terracciano looks to make a play during the Minutewomen's loss to New Hampshire. After a rough start, UMass coach Alexis Venechanos hopes keeping things simple will bring results.

Offense seeing inconsistency

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

In its current three-game losing streak, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team suffered defeats by three nearly identical scores.

The common factor in those contests is a lack of offense. The Minutewomen dropped games to Boston University, Harvard and New Hampshire by scores of 10-8, 10-8 and 11-8, respectively and their offense has been stagnant in reaching double figures.

"Those last three games, I feel we did well, but we didn't get better in anything from the game before," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said after Tuesday's practice. "So that's our goal this upcoming game against Yale is to get better and hopefully get better results."

In its only other loss this season to five-time defending national champion Northwestern, UMass (2-4) scored only six goals. In their two wins against Holy Cross and Connecticut, however, the Minutewomen scored 15 and 18 goals, respectively.

"The first couple of games, teams don't really know your tendencies," Venechanos said. "We had different people on attack and they did their thing, but now teams know what they like to do. We're getting better at what we do and we're also changing up a little bit."

The defense, meanwhile, has played well for the Minutewomen and has given them opportunities to win games. On clears, UMass holds a .742 conversion percentage while holding opponents to 28 goals in the second half, compared to 35 in the first half this season. Sophomore goalkeeper Katie Florence has also been strong in the second half where she's made 26 saves.

Though the Minutewomen received contributions

See OFFENSE on page 6

Minutemen rally to defeat Great Danes

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

After falling behind 4-1 early to Albany, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team used a 10-2 run to end the game, and came away with an 11-6 win Tuesday afternoon at Garber Field.

The Minutemen's (3-1) defense rebounded after giving up 13 goals in Saturday's loss to Yale by stepping up in the second half and allowing two Great Dane goals to pull away.

"The defense took it personally and they stepped up and played," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "Two goals in a half is pretty good in Division I lacrosse. I don't care who you play against, and Albany has a ton of fire power."

Despite giving up a hat trick in the first 17 minutes of the game to Albany's (0-4) Joe Resetarits, the Minutemen held the Great Dane's two other offensive threats, Dave Brock and preseason All-American Brian Caufield, scoreless in the contest.

"Our guys are pretty proud and they have a lot of pride, they work hard, I'm not surprised," Cannella said. "We have certain expectations, they have expectations for themselves, so I'm just happy they were able to put together a good performance."

While Albany's offense was nearly shut down from two minutes into the second quarter until the end of regulation, the Minutemen's attack got into a rhythm. After Resetarits notched his third goal of the game one minute, 55 seconds into the second period to go up 4-1, the Minutemen scored five unanswered goals, part of a 10-2 run to end the game.

UMass	11
Albany	6

Sophomore Art Kell (two goals, three assists) and senior Bobby Hayes (two goals, two assists) led the offensive attack with all-around play. With 4:01 remaining in the third quarter and the game tied at four, Kell converted on Hayes's pass twice in less than a two-minute period to give UMass a lead it never surrendered again.

Ryan Liebel and Ryan Hantverk also added two goals apiece while Will Manny (one goal, one assist) and Anthony Biscardi (one goal, two assists) rounded out the Minutemen with multiple points in the game.

After Derek Kreuzer's goal cut the deficit back to one with a minute left in the third quarter, Manny tallied his sixth goal of the game on the man-advantage and Liebel extended the lead to three at the beginning of the fourth quarter. Albany's Joe Pompo added his fifth goal of the season shortly after, but three unanswered goals by the Minutemen in the final 8:22 of the game sealed the victory.

"I thought our guys played with a lot of intensity from the first whistle to the last whistle," Cannella said. "It was kind of good to see our guys come back and rebound after a loss."

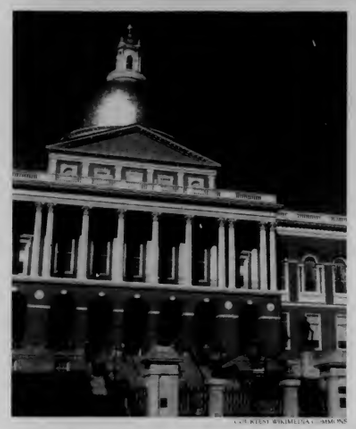
Despite dominating in shots (26-7) and face-offs (9-1) in the first half, the Minutemen found themselves trailing by three goals two minutes into the second period.

The Great Danes took an early 1-0 lead when Resetarits scored an extra-man goal off a rebound. UMass' Christian Hain responded with his fourth goal of the season, as he took a low shot from the point to beat Albany goaltender John Carroll (19 saves).

Kreuzer took the lead back on an unassisted goal with 4:57 left in the first quarter, the first of three unanswered goals scored by the Great Danes. Resetarits scored the next two goals of the game to give Albany the 4-1 lead early in the second quarter.

UMass responded with three unanswered goals of its own to end the half with a 4-4 tie.

"Albany owned us early, we took some shots, and [Carroll] had 14 saves in the first half," Cannella said. "Our guys got frustrated but fortunately in the second quarter we scored three goals in that zone and they came out of it in the second half for the most part so again fortunately for us we put it in the back of the net."



The win keeps UMass perfect at home this season where they play twice in the next week. First the Minutemen will see Harvard 1 p.m. on Saturday, followed by Providence on March 16 at 3 p.m.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 56 LOW: 37 www.DailyCollegian.com THURSDAY, MARCH 11, 2010

The Mass. state legislature's Joint Committee on the Judiciary heard testimony last week regarding a bill to legalize and tax marijuana.

Marijuana legalization bill sees debate on Beacon Hill

Legislation proposes taxation, has roots in the Pioneer Valley

By Rachel Tumin
Collegian Staff

On March 2, the Massachusetts state legislature's Joint Committee on the Judiciary heard testimony on Senate bill no. 1801, "An Act to Regulate and Tax the Cannabis Industry." This was the second time in less than six months the legislature heard testimony on the subject, with the Joint Committee on Revenue having held a hearing on an identical House bill in early October 2009. The bill was written and brought forth by Richard M. Evans, of Northampton, Mass.

When asked about the likelihood of the bill passing into it with a ten foot pole."

He explained that his primary goal in petitioning this bill was to facilitate discourse on the prospect of legalizing.

He said he wants to "stimulate discussion on how to [decriminalize and regulate marijuana], not whether-or-not it should happen."

He went on to note that the current bill only represents a "prototype," just a suggested outline for how the process could happen.

Steven Epstein, treasurer of MassCann the Massachusetts chapter of the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML) helped explain the goals of the legislation itself.

Regulation and taxation of the cannabis industry would have several effects. Licensing and regulations would enact safeguards for all those involved from production through consumption.

Evans calculates that taxing the cannabis industry could garner at least half a billion dollars in revenue annually in the state of Massachusetts alone.

Epstein added that passing such legislation would also allow for the reallocation of funds currently used for investigating, prosecuting and incarcerating individuals for marijuana offenses.

Decriminalization would end what supporters consider an "unconstitutional restriction," that, as Epstein said, "creates crime where there is no moral culpability."

During the March 2 hearing, the Joint Committee on the Judiciary heard testimony from a diverse group of advocates.

Bill Downing of Reading, Mass., a self-described small-business owner and elected town meeting member, argued that marijuana prohibition is an obvious failure, given its continued presence and use in our culture.

Downing also said that in criminalizing what he sees as a matter of "privacy and personal liberty," the government "weakens the moral impact of the term 'illegal.'"

Following Downing, the committee heard testimony from Jack Cole, the Executive Director of Law Enforcement Against Prohibition (LEAP).

Cole retired as a detective lieutenant from the New Jersey State Police after 26 years of service, including 14 years of undercover narcotics work. In his testimony, Cole cited that of the 39 million nonviolent arrests in the War on Drugs since the Reagan administration, nearly half have been for marijuana-related charges. He believes this "misappropriation of resources" is a leading factor in police departments' inability to "solve significant crimes" such as rape and murder.

The legislature also heard testimony from a grandmother seeking custody of her own grandson. She described herself as a college-educated computer technician with no criminal record, who has raised four children, the oldest of whom recently graduated from college with honors and is now a teacher in Boston Public Schools. Although she no longer uses marijuana, she says she has been denied guardianship of the child based on earlier admitted recreational use.

Student leaders from Suffolk University and Emerson College also gave testimony, with one student asking the committee, "When before have the people come to you practically begging to be taxed?"

Testimony was also offered by Scott Matalon, owner of Sting Ray Body Art in Boston and a community leader in the city. Matalon cited the 2002

See LEGALIZATION on page 2

New study suggests sororities can effect girls' body image

COURTESY WWW.FLICKR.COM/PHOTOS/KATHANNSANDIEGO

A new study from Northwestern University found that sororities can have a negative impact on the body image of those who rush them. Above: sorority girls from San Diego State University last Halloween.

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

As fall begins, classes officially start and the daily grind of college life kicks in, a migration is happening.

Legions of hopeful girls are making the trek from Greek house to Greek house with one aspiration: rushing a sorority.

A new study, however, finds this tradition may be more than just a rite of passage for many college women; it holds that rushing sororities may have profoundly negative effects on body image and self esteem, as optimistic pledges are often evaluated predominantly on their outward appearance, putting a great deal of pressure on them to look hot to find a spot.

The study, "Here's looking at you: self-objectification, body image disturbance, and sorority rush," was published in the Feb. 2010 issue of the research journal "Sex Roles" by Northwestern University graduate Ashley Marie Rolnik, with support from researcher Steven A. Miller in the psychology department at Argosy University in Chicago.

The study followed 127 girls at a mid-size private Midwestern university between the ages of 17 and 20-years-old, 68 of whom were rushing sororities and 59 of whom were not. 67 percent of the participants were white, 16 percent were East Asian, six percent were Hispanic, two percent were African-American, four percent biracial, and five percent other.

The study attempted to determine whether or not sorority participants were more likely to practice self-objectification, defined as accepting a self-image based on an outsider's perspective, as well as whether women rushing sororities were more likely to show signs of eating disorders.

Participants were initially asked a series of demographic and personal questions, including their age, height and weight, whether they planned to rush a sorority, and whether they participated in other extracurricular activities. The study's respondents were entirely first-year students, who were sent e-mail surveys at four intervals, one pre-screening asking if they would be participating in rush, an initial study asking about body image and demography five days before rush, one four days into rush week, one on the seventh day of rush, the day on which students typically receive bids to commit to a sorority, and a final set of questions one month after rush. At the final interview, participants were asked their opinion of the rush process and if they had accepted a bid to be in a sorority.

The study finds that the mean score on the Eating Attitudes Test (EAT), which measures eating habits and opinions, for both rushees and non-rushees, was "well below the proposed cut-off score that indicates a clinical level of eating disturbance."

Only women who accepted bids to sororities were included in the rush group, and only those who did not participate in rush at all were include in the non-rush group.

The study further finds that "women who participated in sorority rush had higher levels of self-objectification," adding that there was a negative correlation between body mass index (BMI) and finishing rushing a sorority.

The survey, however, did not find that body consciousness increased for rush participants during the rush period, nor did it find that participants' attitudes about eating and eating habits changed over time throughout the survey, which it had predicted. The rush group, did, though, score "significantly higher on the bulimia and food preoccupation subscale at each time point."

Further, in terms of self-objectification, the process of defining oneself according to the physical standards of others, the rush group scored significantly higher.

"There was a significant main effect of membership, such that new sorority members showed higher levels of self-objectification compared to those who did not rush," it finds.

On another metric, body-shame, which Rolnik measured according to feelings of guilt and shame in terms of appearance, time and sorority interaction were significant variables, as rush participants increased growing feelings of shame about their bodies over time and as they interacted more with fellow members.

See BODY IMAGE on page 2

Minutewomen drop Yale at home, 9-5

As the official looks on, junior Jackie Lyons looks to score against the Bulldogs Wednesday afternoon. Lyons scored two goals as the Minutewomen went on to win, 9-5.

ARTS & LIVING

Go crazy for 'Crazy Heart'

Get an in-depth look at the movie which earned actor Jeff Bridges an Academy Award for best actor on Sunday.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Minutemen set for 2010 opener

Amid rumors that their program was going to be cut, the UMass baseball team returns to the field this spring in hopes of improving on last season.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Stephen Colbert is our answer. That's right the answer to our problems is Stephen Colbert.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Go to DailyCollegian.com to check out the baseball season preview and roster breakdown.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 34

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Joinson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Cal Scannell
COMICS EDITOR Andrew Witts
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alissa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolniert
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elise Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ellie Rulon-Miller
ASSISTANT COMICS Domonic Mei
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Auser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cody
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sam Butterfield

COPY EDITOR
Hannah McGoldrick

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Guarino

Study of sororities looks at body image

BODY IMAGE from page 1

Appearance, or perceived attractiveness, certainly had an effect on those who went through with rush.

At the study's outset, those who said they would rush and those who planned not to had nearly identical BMIs. Among rushees, however, BMI was negatively related to satisfaction with the rush process. A sizeable number of women who began the rush process, 31 percent, did not complete it, and those who dropped out of rush had mean BMIs of 23.5, compared to those who accepted bids, where the mean was 21.07.

"For every one point increase in BMI, a rushee was 44 percent more likely to drop out of rush," noted the study.

While the study finds no reason to criticized sororities for being bastions of breeding self-resentment, it does raise some interesting questions about who chooses to rush sororities, what they are looking for, and what issues they experience in joining a sorority.

"The most consistent finding was that women who chose to rush scored higher on self-objectification and eating disordered behavior and attitudes (particularly attitudes and behaviors associated with bulimia) compared to women who chose not to rush," holds Rolnik. "Furthermore, the group differences in these variables were stable throughout rush and at the one-month post-test."

Although those who rushed had different standards in terms of body image initially, these perceptions seemed to hold throughout. In other words, rushees did not necessarily develop these traits over the course of the rush process.

"The body shame finding suggests that while rushees may begin the rush process with higher levels of body image disturbance compared to those who choose not to rush, becoming a member of a sorority has the potential to exacerbate these variables further," Rolnik writes.

Rolnik is hardly alone in studying the effect of sorority recruitment on body image. A 2007 New York Times article describes how one sorority at DePauw University in Indiana dealt with what it saw as an image problem: bloating its overweight members.

"Worried that a negative stereotype of the sorority was contributing to a decline in membership that had left its Greek-columned house here half empty, Delta Zeta's national officers interviewed 35 DePauw members in November, quizzing them about their dedication to recruitment. They judged 23 of the women insufficiently committed and later told them to vacate the sorority house," the article reads.

The 23 women evicted were all of the sorority's overweight women, and of the 12 members allowed to stay, six quit the sorority in indignation.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at shutterfield@dailycollegian.com.

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St. • 413-253-7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
PROVIDING THE BEST OFF CAMPUS LIVING EXPERIENCE
24 HOUR MAINTENANCE
SAFE APARTMENTS
FRIENDLY STAFF
TWO GREAT LOCATIONS:
AMHERST CENTER AND HOBART LANE
WE START SHOWING APARTMENTS
FEB. 3RD FROM 11:30AM – 4:30PM M-F

Britney's Spear gets low

MATTHEW HARRINGTON/COLLEGIAN

Tom Hamill, guitarist for Worcester-band Britney's Spear, got down and dirty in front of the audience during the group's set in Earthfoods Cafe Tuesday night.

Marijuana legalization bill in debate has local Valley roots

LEGALIZATION from page 1

National Survey on Drug Use and Health and the U.S. Department of Health Reports in arguing that growing marijuana in the U.S. alone in a $24 billion larger industry than corn — which, according to Business Week, is the largest crop in the United States, valued at $48.6 billion in 2009.

In addition to noted cannabis activist Epstein, the legislators heard testimony from the bill's author, Evans.

Evans began by contending that marijuana use is "inextricably embedded in our culture. It is ubiquitous," he said. He continued to point out that in the past eight years, all 45 pro-cannabis reform policy questions presented to Massachusetts voters "have passed by substantial margins."

Even without a solid chance of becoming law, Evans reiterated the importance of opening a dialogue on how the state of Massachusetts could move to decriminalize, tax, and regulate the cannabis industry.

Video of testimony from the March 2 hearing can be found on the MassCann website, and more information on cannabis taxation and regulation can be found on Evans' website http://www.cantaxreg.com.

Rachel Tumin can be reached at rtumin@student.umass.edu

Summer Arts at UVM

Study in beautiful Vermont this summer. With UVM's intensive training courses in Musical Theatre, West African Drumming, Argentine Tango, Latin Jazz, Photography and Sculpture, you can immerse yourself in the arts, while living a short walk from downtown Burlington's cultural attractions! Learn from renowned faculty, including Circle in the Square's Bill Reed, respected percussionist Jeremy Cohen, acclaimed artist Corin Hewitt, celebrated composer Arturo O'Farrill and professional dancer Elizabeth Seyler. Undergrads, grads, and post bacs welcome!

Register today and take advantage of the 15% Summer '10 Tuition Savings at uvm.edu/summer/umass.

Reasons for you to Think Summer U
- Online classes
- Transferable credits
- Four summer sessions
- Housing available
- Special interest programs
- Graduate on time
- Smaller class sizes

Catch up. Get ahead. Save 15%. The University of Vermont Summer University

Plenty of free time?
Work for the Collegian.
Stop by the Collegian Office, located in the UMass Campus Ctr. basement.
news @ dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $6.70 per column inch
On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

State budget deficit hits transportation

THE UNIVERSITY DAILY KANSAN COLLEGE NEWSPAPER NETWORK

In addressing a $106 million deficit in the state budget, Gov. Mark Parkinson maintained his pledge to prevent further cuts to education, but has called for a $28 million cut to the Kansas Department of Transportation.

The governor proposed further cuts in a speech Friday after seeing a $71 million revenue shortfall in February. The cuts to transportation will result in the cancellation of nearly all highway maintenance projects for the remainder of the 2010 fiscal year, which ends June 30.

Eric Foss, president of College Republicans, said he supported the governor's proposal to cut transportation, effectively avoiding further education cuts.

"I think that at this point investment in education is probably more important than investment in infrastructure," said Foss, a senior from Overland Park. "You can always go back and repave roads a couple years from now, but those years are pretty critical in education terms."

Kathy Damron, the University's director of state government relations, said she was pleased that this round of cuts didn't include higher education, but said the governor was running out of options to fill the budget gap.

"There are just so few options to look at when there has already had been a series of six budget reductions over the last year and a half," Damron said.

The governor also called for the Legislature to pass a primary seat belt law, which would is expected to bring in $10 million to the state from federal funding. The primary seat belt law has already passed in the state senate, but not in the House.

State Sen. Marci Francisco (D-Lawrence) said the governor's speech was "an appropriate way to raise the issue again for House members to consider it."

Although this new round of cuts will help the state balance its budget for the 2010 fiscal year, Francisco said more problems could be in store for the 2011 fiscal year.

"These are a good list of suggestions to get through balancing out budget for the current year," she said. "But I think we are going to need to generate additional revenue for the coming year."

Damron said the state will experience more pressure to find additional revenue for the 2011 fiscal year, which is why students should pay attention to the state legislature.

"For students who are concerned about the quality of education they are getting and the ability to enroll in the classes that they need to graduate," she said. "It is really important that they check in with their elected officials."

Georgia Tech students and faculty react to budget cuts

GEORGIA TECH TECHNIQUE
COLLEGE NEWS NETWORK

On Saturday, Feb. 27, the Institute submitted its proposal to the University System of Georgia (USG) to help close a $385 million budget shortfall for the following fiscal year.

As a result, Tech will be forced to reconcile approximately $38 million worth of reductions.

Among the proposed plans to achieve this goal include workforce reductions, operational cuts for the library, and travel budget cuts.

"This plan was meant to be [a] worst case scenario -- should there be no tax increases and no tuition increases next year and a $38 million cut to Tech's budget. Seeing as how tuition has increased every year for a long time, I do not see how this year would be different," said Alina Staskevicius, the undergraduate SGA president.

According to the proposal, nearly $35 million of the cuts would come from workforce reductions.

A total of 331 full time positions would have to be eliminated, including 52 faculty positions. A total of 120 part-time positions would also be eliminated, including 40 instructional positions.

The proposed cuts could result in a reduction of course offerings by 540 sections, increasing the student to faculty ratio to its highest level in history at 24 to 1.

The report states that the proposed changes will result in a longer time to degree for students, adversely affecting four, five and six year graduation rates.

The report also suggested that the Institute could reduce admissions by 20 percent to meet the budget shortfall. However, this was confirmed not to be the case.

"We officially got word yesterday that they weren't going to do that. The freshman class will be the same as the last four years. They put it on the table, and once they realized what kind of financial impact that would have, especially on housing, they decided not to," said Rick Clark, the director for undergraduate admissions.

In addition to reductions for academics and instruction, the report estimates a $60-100 million decline in research expenditures due to the increased course load on faculty.

Furthermore, a 10 percent decrease in non-sponsored funding for graduate students would reduce the number of teaching assistants by 120 per semester. The report also details how cuts to Tech's budget would affect Georgia's economy.

For example, a 10 percent reduction in the services of the Procurement Assistance Center would impact the state by $66 million.

The plan also calls for the reduction of the library budget by $700,000, potentially leading to the reduction in library hours by 42 percent, including late night and weekend hours. It would also result in the reduction of student and permanent staff.

Students are planning to host a state-wide student rally against the scale of USG reductions at the Capitol on March 15. As well, USG students have organized an online petition against budget cuts, which as of Wednesday had received 25,626 signatures.

"Really, we [SGA] are planning it to be an organized day of lobbying, and we have contacted multiple Senators and Representatives at this point and have meetings scheduled with them for the 15th," Staskevicius said.

Got a news tip for the Daily Collegian?

Email news @ dailycollegian.com...

Student wins $800,000 in bullying case

BY PEGGY WALSH-SARNECKI
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

DETROIT – In what experts say could be a landmark decision, a Michigan school district was ordered last week to pay $800,000 to a student who claimed the school did not do enough to protect him from years of bullying, some sexually tinged.

Last week's jury verdict against Hudson Area Schools puts districts on notice that it's not enough to stop a student from bullying another. There needs to be a concerted effort to stop systemic bullying, too.

Essentially, the federal court ruling says schools can be held responsible for what students do, if there is a pattern of harassment or if they don't do enough to provide a safe environment.

"This is going to have implications across the nation," said Glenn Stutzky, a Michigan State University instructor and an expert on bullying.

The district's attorney, however, says the verdict puts schools in the tricky position of being held liable for student behavior. The district plans to appeal.

"You're never going to completely stop kids from being mean to kids," said Timothy Mullins of Giamarco, Mullins and Horton of Troy, Mich.

It started with name-calling in middle school and escalated as Dane Patterson entered high school. Some of the harassment was bullying, such as being shoved into lockers.

Other harassment was decidedly sexual in nature. He was called sexual insults, his locker and notebook were defaced with similar names, and worse. He and his parents say they reported the abuse, and yet it continued. Finally, in 10th grade, he was taunted in a locker room by a naked student rubbing against him.

That was the last straw for the Patterson family. In 2005, they sued Hudson Area Schools under Title IX, the Equal Opportunity in Education Act, using the sexually tinged bullying as the basis for a sexual harassment lawsuit.

Last week a jury in U.S. District Court told the school district to pay $800,000 in damages to Patterson, now 19. Anti-bullying proponents say the case will send a message to all school districts that they are responsible for sexual harassment and, by extension, bullying.

For the Pattersons, however, the verdict is much simpler. It's vindication.

"I can't even put into words the pain and suffering that I went through for years," Dane Patterson said. "It's something that I would not want anyone else to go through."

While Patterson said he feels vindicated and is trying to move forward, his mother can't help but look back on their ordeal.

"I don't know how you get back eight years," Dena Patterson said. She said her son is so emotionally damaged by his experiences, he can't even go away to college and live in a dorm with other students. "We said it was worth standing up. We don't want another student, another parent to endure what we have seen."

Hudson schools, like most school districts, has an anti-bullying policy, and it took action against individual students when the bully could be identified. What the district failed to do is stop the pattern of abuse, said Terry Heiss, attorney for Patterson. For example, the school could have done more anti-bullying education, instituted more monitors or other measures to stop the pattern.

But this case makes it clear that having a policy, or even punishing individual bullies is not enough to stop a school from being liable, said Stutzky.

School officials will now have to show they were not indifferent, and that they made sure there wasn't a broader pattern of harassment beyond the individual case that went unchecked.

"If you only deal with things on an isolated case, that doesn't meet the standard for an effective response," Stutzky said.

But Mullins said the verdict leaves schools in a difficult situation.

"It sounds simple, but when you've got 500 kids and you're supposed to predict what any two or three or one are going to do in advance, well good luck," Mullins said. "If somebody writes dirty names on a boy's locker and you can't identify who it is, you can't punish the whole school."

The Patterson case initially was dismissed by the lower court in Detroit. But in October, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit reversed that decision, saying the family had demonstrated that there was enough of a question of whether the district's response was adequate to go forward with the trial.

Patterson was called pig or sexual insults and pushed into lockers, among other types of harassment, "on a daily basis" in sixth grade. When they complained, the family was sometimes told, "Kids will be kids; it's middle school," according to the court papers.

The harassment escalated in seventh grade, according to the lawsuit. Dane Patterson wanted to quit school, and his grades slipped.

Eighth grade was better. He began going to a resource room, a kind of study hall, to be counseled, and the lawsuit says the resource room teacher was helping him cope with the problems.

But ninth grade meant a change to high school. The Pattersons wanted their child to continue working with the resource room teacher, who had been successful the previous year. But the school district said no. The bullying continued in 10th grade, culminating in the locker room incident.

"It's a terrible thing, and I'm hoping with this verdict that schools will have to enforce stricter sexual harassment and bullying policies," Patterson said.

WANNA HOOK-UP?
FREE High Speed Internet and Expanded Cable
1, 2, 3, and 4 bedroom apartment homes
RESERVE YOUR APARTMENT TODAY!!!
SUGARLOAF ESTATES APARTMENT HOMES
28 River Road Sunderland
866-301-1445
www.sugarloafestates.com
ASPEN CHASE & ALPINE COMMONS APARTMENT HOMES
133 Belchertown Road, Rt. 9 Amherst
866-301-1445
www.aspenchaseapartments.com
www.alpinecommons.com
Hurry! While Supplies Last!
FREE Flat Screen TV
On the Bus Route • 24 Hour Swimming Pool • Fitness Center • Pet Friendly
FLEXIBLE LEASE TERMS
$$ MENTION THIS AD AND SAVE ON YOUR MOVE IN COSTS $$

PURE MAPLE SYRUP
MAPLE Madness
Thursday, March 11
7 am–9 pm • All DCs
SAMPLE:
- Maple Pecan Scones
- Local Maple Syrup
- Maple Chicken Wings
- Maple Glazed Salmon & more...

ENTER TO WIN: A Basket of Local New England Maple Treats

Be a Local Hero
Restaurants & Institutions Ivy
UMass Dining
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
PUFFTON VILLAGE
EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS
SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!
ON SITE LAUNDRY, OFF STREET PARKING.
BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.
OFFICE HOURS: 8AM TO 4PM MONDAY - FRIDAY
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, MARCH 11, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself." – Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Stephen Colbert is our answer

Matthew M. Robare

Normally when I get an e-mail from the University administration that's not informing me that I have a check waiting for me at the Bursar's Office, I have to gulp down an extra cup of coffee just to remain comatose.

Last week, however, I got an e-mail that opened up epic possibilities for my imagination – yes, I'm talking about the e-mail calling for honorary degree nominations. Now, an honorary degree is nowhere near as bizarre or interesting as the dinosaur tracks in South Hadley or coming across directions for smoking bananas (more on that after Spring Break), but that's part of the appeal. Sometimes the greatest things have mundane roots.

You ask yourself: "What if?"

What if the University of Massachusetts awarded an honorary degree to – drum roll, please – Stephen Colbert.

What if the University of Massachusetts awarded an honorary degree to – drum roll, please – Stephen Colbert.

To find out if such a thing is even in the realm of possibility, I went to Whitmore to ask some questions.

Specifically, I went to the office of Gloria Fox, Director of Commencements and Charitable Giving, who works for External Relations and University Events, part of University Relations. Her main responsibilities include "Planning, implementation of major events, logistics and interactions," she told me.

She said that every year around the same time they put out a call for nominations "campus-wide, from alumni and we can receive – and rarely do – but we can receive them from the greater community." Fox added that they accept nominations throughout the year, but don't begin going through them until after the call for nominations has gone out.

"We have a committee made up of faculty, graduate students, undergrads and a chancellor appointee," she said. "I'm a non-voting member of the committee."

After receiving the nominations, the committee meets two or three times to research the nominees and vet them. The chancellor lets the committee know what sort of criteria he wants in a nominee. "The committee puts forward a group of names and the chancellor reviews them and recommends them to the president and trustees. The chancellor can add or subtract names," Fox said.

The chancellor makes his recommendations to the president of the UMass system, who can also add or subtract names. A committee of the Board of Trustees is in charge of the final review and recommendations then the whole Board votes "to invite an individual to accept a degree from the University," Fox said.

There are a lot of obstacles to having Stephen Colbert speak at my graduation, but I think they can be overcome by having as many students as possible nominate him.

Sheer numbers showing that he is the choice of the students could carry him through to the final round. Even if the Board of Trustees does invite him, he still has to accept it.

Fox told me that the deliberations of the nomination process are kept confidential because "we don't want to announce someone as a nominee and then have them not get it – it would be embarrassing."

That's why this column is only a wish for Colbert to be nominated. It would be especially stupid to remove him from consideration just by voicing my view that he be nominated. Because of these strictures, I will not write a nomination for him.

Still, if he were nominated and was invited by the Trustees and accepted, in other words, if the dream came true, what would he get as a recipient of an honorary degree from UMass? Officially, I mean, besides an overload of his inbox with invitations to every party being thrown on graduation weekend.

For starters, he would be there at Commencement in May or June and may be asked to speak. He would receive an honorary doctorate.

"An honorary degree is always a doctorate," Fox said. "One of the things to keep in mind is that this is the highest degree awarded by the University."

This is something of a snag, I think. Colbert already has an honorary doctorate – he was made a Doctor of Fine Arts by Knox College in 2006. The diploma can even be seen on The Colbert Report sometimes, although Wilford Brimley may have eaten it last summer because it was disguised as a breakfast pastry. So another D.F.A. will not be enough. The University could always award him a Doctorate of Humane Letters, but I think this has to be an absolutely rock-solid deal. The University will have to invent a new degree: Doctor Maximus.

"One of the purposes of the honorary degrees," Fox said, "especially an alum, is an example of someone with the same foundations who went on to become an important contributor … You want people to know these are people who bring fame to the University."

In the interests of fairness, there are alumni out there, along with non-alumni, who still have more important connections to Massachusetts, than Colbert. I couldn't say who, but they know who they are and someone who is going to nominate them knows who they are.

All I have is a dream. A dream of a graduation ceremony with interesting speakers so that it's actually tolerable to attend.

I've had to live through six graduations in my life and only two of them did not involve me wanting to gnaw my arms off at some point. The two best were when my sister Katye graduated from high school, because Jim Jeffords could tell a story; the other was when my cousin Caitlin graduated from high school – one of their alums had gone to Chicago to do comedy. The worst was when Katye graduated from Hofstra – I got sunburned and we had to wait for three hours before her group got to the podium.

Please help the Class of 2011 have an interesting graduation. It could be the greatest gift we ever get, because as far as I'm concerned the choice is between Colbert and living Hell.

Matthew M. Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

My declaration to the SGA

Charlie Felder

When in the course of academic events it beeomes necessary for one student body to strengthen the political bands which have connected them with each other and to reassume the power of the Wellman Document, the equal station to which the Laws of the University of Massachusetts and the UMass Administration entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of that student body requires that they should understand the causes which impel them to vote.

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all students are enrolled equally, that they are endowed by their payment of tuition with certain inalienable rights, that among these are dorm life, dining and the pursuit of competitive textbook prices. That to secure these rights, governments shall be instituted among students, deriving their just powers from the consent of their classmates. That whenever any form of government becomes idle or destructive of these ends, it is the right of the students to alter and change it, to institute new leadership, laying its foundations on such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to seem likely to affect their safety and happiness.

We hold these truths to be self–evident, that all students are enrolled equally, that they are endowed by their payment of tuition with certain inalienable rights that among these are dorm life, dining, and the pursuit of competitive textbook prices.

Chancellor Holub, indeed, would agree that student governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly, all experience seems to indicate that students are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by altering the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and fee increases, pursuing invariably the same object, evinces a design to reduce them under absolute incompetence, it is their right, it is their duty, to recalibrate such governments, and to provide new guards for their future security.

Such has been the patient suffering of this student body; and such is now the necessity which constrains them to alter their former systems of government. The history of the present Student Government Association (SGA) administration is one of repeated injuries and incompetence, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute domination over this student body.

In every stage of this incompetence, we have petitioned for redress in the most humble terms: Our repeated petitions have been answered only by repeated injury. An SGA administration, whose character is thus marked by every act which may define such incompetence, is unfit to further preside over a hampered student body.

Nor have we been wanting in attentions to our classmates in the SGA. We have warned them from time to time of attempts by their executive to ignore wholly justified and understandable action by various legislative bodies and RSOs here at UMass. We have reminded them of our enrollment and our settlement here. We have appealed to their basic sense of justice and reason, and we have implored them by the ties of our common academic status to disavow these abuses and this incompetence, which would inevitably interrupt our connections and correspondence. They have been deaf to the voice of justice and reason. We must, therefore, acquiesce in the necessity, which denounces their replacement, and hold them, as we hold the rest of the student body, accountable in their actions, but friends and classmates nonetheless.

We, therefore, the students of UMass, in general congress, assembled, casting our ballots for the rectitude of our intentions, do, in name, and by the authority vested in us by the Wellman Document (a constitution and set of bylaws which encapsulates in law all of those rights we should and must enjoy and defend as students of this institution), declare that we are a student body void of shackles to any one set of interests, and that we must solemnly vote for and declare for ourselves a new set of principled, competent and virtuous leaders, who should and must be accountable to all students, that they swear off the incompetency of administrations past and present (on both word and action), and that our bonds with the previous administrations ought to be and are totally dissolved; and that as our new, duly elected leaders, our new SGA administration will carry with it the full might and trust of the student body, defend all of the rights which have been guaranteed, pursue an agenda beneficial to all members of the student body, and respect all aspects of the Wellman Document and various SGA bylaws for their substantive impact on the day-to-day lives of all undergraduates at this most esteemed academic institution.

And to lend credibility to this vote, you should probably all check your e-mails for the message you have received from the school, explaining exactly how to properly go about casting your ballot online. If you are more comfortable casting your ballot on paper, you may visit the SGA elections table in the Campus Center and fill out a paper ballot.

For the support of this vote, with a firm reliance on the protection of Administrative Providence, we mutually cast our ballots together.

Basically, all I am saying is that you should vote, and that when you do, you should vote for the candidates who represent a departure from the laughable incompetence which has plagued the SGA executive for years. In case you are wondering, in no way have I lifted any of this writing from another source.

I'm insulted that you would even suggest such a thing. On an entirely unrelated note, if you have some spare time, read our Declaration of Independence. It's exciting stuff.

SIC SEMPER TYRANIS.

Charlie Felder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at cfelder@student.umass.edu.

This isn't what I voted for: The disappointment of an Obama fan

Nick Milano

As a Barack Obama supporter from the day I saw him light up a town hall in New Hampshire, his presidency has been hard to take. At times, he has shown glimpses of the promise that helped sweep him into office, but more often than not, his policies have been incredibly disappointing, especially for the young electorate which came out to support his campaign. He has obviously mishandled health care reform, and by ceding power over it to Congress, it is doubtful that it will even pass. He has mishandled the economy and Wall Street.

In our bathroom at our house we have an issue of Mother Jones from the time of his election whose headline reads: "Why the mess Obama inherits may be his greatest opportunity." Well, there has been no economic regulation – how about that for squandering opportunities? Over the last week or so, two more missteps by his administration should further alienate his supporters, especially college students.

First, the House Foreign Affairs Committee voted by a one-vote margin to pass a bill that declares the murder of millions of Armenians during World War I a genocide. Now, strictly relying upon Obama's campaign speeches and campaign promises, one would expect the administration to be strongly backing the resolution. Time and time again on the campaign trail, Obama said that he would characterize the incident as genocide. Genocide is an issue which motivates younger voters, and Obama's outspokenness on Sudan and on Turkey were surely two of the reasons he attracted young voters.

But like so many times before, Obama has chosen to ignore the voters and side with what many consider the smart international relations choice. As Turkey is an important ally whose air bases are used to move soldiers and supplies into Iraq, upsetting the Turks would not be a great idea. Thus, the administration as well as the State Department under Hillary Clinton immediately moved to block the vote from reaching the House floor. Another promise broken.

But like so many times before, Obama has chosen to ignore the voters and side with what many consider the smart international relations choice.

His second misstep over the last week cannot be directly tied to his administration, but a State Department spokesperson was curiously forced to retract attacks it made against Libyan leader Muammar al-Qaddafi. After Qaddafi's son's arrest in Switzerland for assault, Qaddafi made several mystifying and scary declarations, according to Foreign Policy magazine. First, he expelled Swiss diplomats from Libya, then he proposed to the UN General Assembly that Switzerland be abolished as a country, and third called any Muslim who worked with Switzerland an apostate, de facto declaring a jihad against the Swiss.

While it may be smart not to engage dictators who seem to have gone off the deep end, a spokesman for the State Department obviously criticized Qaddafi for his actions and statements. But the next day, he apologized and took his statements back in the name of thawing Libyan and American relations. The appeasement inclinations of this president have started to get a little too common. In a sense, Obama is keeping his campaign promises of starting a new conversation with the Muslim world, but these are times where such decisions have to be fully thought out. Dictators should not be allowed to make such disgusting statements, no matter how crazy they seem to be. The Obama administration is choosing kind words even at the hands of absolute madness.

The foreign policy decisions that go into deciding whether to attack a senseless dictator or whether to call a genocide by its real name surely have more to do than simply answering to an electorate. Regarding Turkey, there are still thousands and thousands of soldiers in Iraq, so it might not be the best time to alienate a crucial ally. President Bush is guilty of the same decision-making. He said while campaigning that he would declare the Armenian killings genocide, but did nothing.

In order for genocides to be recognized and prevented in the future, even today in Sudan, the world must acknowledge when they have happened in the past. Turkey's mass murder of Armenians should not go unpunished. In regards to Qaddafi, sometimes it is best not to engage silly declarations like the ones he is guilty of making, but that does not mean criticism of him should be retracted. According to Foreign Policy, a new major poll shows Obama is losing ground among voters on national security.

On the one hand, the president seems dedicated to adhering to his campaign promise of engaging the Muslim world – let us not get started on Iran, but on the other hand, he has abandoned the young voters who flocked to his campaign because of his willingness to clamp down on genocide. In both situations, Obama continues to disappoint.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, MARCH 11, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Crazy Heart' deserving of acclaim

By Matthieu Decker
Collegian Staff

"Crazy Heart," now playing at Amherst Cinema, seems at first to be just another average character study of a country musician down on his luck. But give it a little time to simmer and the subtlety of its unique flavor begins to seep through, lending to it a sophistication and depth often absent from this sort of story. Even for the many who find country music deterrent, "Crazy Heart" is undeniably a window into a very specific American world.

Jeff Bridges is a brilliant though routinely underrated actor. In his role as Bad Blake, a washed-up alcoholic of a seminal country singer, he showcases the dedication to believability which makes him great. As such, it comes as no surprise to see him finally claim the Best Actor Oscar award, which had eluded him for years, for his sobering portrayal of a man on the bottom. Let's not mince words; Bridges' performance transcended the role he was given and the film it was a part of, catapulting "Crazy Heart" from genre-film to critical acclaim.

Bridges' genius is in the detail of his physical acting, with which he creates a character that no amount of emotionally charged dialogue could show. It is the little things, like how he picks up the chain of the lock on his hotel room door only to drop it again, or how he grasps the bottle of tequila before waking up, which convince us Bad Blake isn't just a character, but a real person. Sure, Blake might be the quintessential drunk, but it is moments like these that an antisocial, distracted man emerges from the whiskey mist to give us a reason for the drinking. It is how he interacts with the set and not the script which makes his character truly human, giving us a reason to pity him and hope for a turnaround.

Joining Bridges in the film is Maggie Gyllenhaal, who plays Jean Craddock, a single mother and journalist who begins a torrid romance with Bad Blake over the course of interviewing him for a journalism piece. She plays the role in a fashion deserving of her Best Supporting Actress nomination by providing a perfect contrast to the reprehensible Blake, with her balanced and compassionate character.

Also showing his face is Colin Farrell, as the much more successful protégé of Blake, who, having acquired fame, requires Blake's superior songwriting to maintain his career. Farrell plays a surprisingly good country musician, for once taking on a role in which he isn't completely unlikable. It is quite possibly a sign that Farrell is maturing as an actor, seeking out roles that will challenge his abilities and diversify his image.

The acting isn't the only thing done well in "Crazy Heart," as its Oscar for Best Original Song will attest to. Though not for those without a taste for country music, "The Weary Kind" is a song which will at least have you wishing Toby Keith and his ilk could produce songs which sound like this; it would certainly alleviate the pain of hitting the country station while scanning the radio. But musical taste aside, it is the directing of Scott Cooper which manages to tie together the slew of great performances into a cohesive story. The bleakness which he gives the film's visual style serves to accentuate the subtle physical acting of Bridges, resulting in a series of movements throughout the film which are the very breath of depression.

"Crazy Heart," though a melancholy tale sung through sad songs, is definitely worth watching, even if the country music theme is of no interest to you. This film is bigger than its plot alone; as with any good character study, its major strength is in the quality of its acting. And all the acting here is damn good. If you want to see an Oscar winner that isn't just the drivel promoted by the Academy, "Crazy Heart," with its wild acting, will teach you a thing or two about the craft.

Matthieu Decker can be reached at mpdecker@student.umass.edu.

Jeff Bridges gives a powerful performance in the Oscar-award winning film "Crazy Heart," co-starring Maggie Gyllenhaal. The movie won the Oscar for Best Original Song and features country music that even the most avid country hater will enjoy.

That 1 Guy to bring magical funk to NoHo

That 1 Guy, otherwise known as Mike Silverman, performs at the Iron Horse in Northampton tonight with his magic pipe, pictured above, and a slew of other homemade instruments.

By Tappan Parker
Collegian Staff

Mike Silverman, better known as That 1 Guy, is somewhat of a mad scientist-turned musician. But instead of inventing crazy doomsday devices, he invents crazy doomsday instruments.

That 1 Guy will be performing at the Iron Horse tonight at 10 p.m.

That 1 Guy's music combines jazz, funk, and rock with looping and sampling effects, creating some of the most unique music in this day and age. Besides just playing the "magic pipe," Silverman includes various forms of percussion in his sound while also singing. His lyrics are just as eccentric as his instruments, with songs about weasel potpies, mustaches, and the moon being made out of cheese.

Mike Silverman is a classically trained double bass player who began adding percussive elements to his playing by slapping his bass between plucks of the strings. But for Silverman, the double bass became too limiting, so he went out and invented something a little more musically liberating. After a few trips to the hardware store and some engineering in his basement, That 1 Guy and the Magic Pipe were born.

Standing roughly seven feet tall, the Magic Pipe is two steel pipes connected with an adjustable set of joints with a double bass string on the front pipe and a cello string on the back pipe. With electronic rigging and 13 trigger points that can be mapped to various effects and samples, the pipe is capable of making a large variety of sounds.

The Pipe is something one would except to see in a Dr. Seuss story. Silverman plays his homemade instrument with slaps, plucks, a violin bow, a drumstick, and even the occasional credit card. He hits various buttons on the Pipe between notes to create other sampled sounds, as well.

But the Pipe is not the only thing he has invented. There are also Saw and the Magic Boot, two other instruments straight out of Silverman's imagination. The Saw is just that, a saw. Except it has been electronically wired to sound similar to a theremin. The Magic Boot is a cowboy boot which has been similarly wired, and is played with various slaps and hits of the sole of the boot.

Somehow That 1 Guy has managed to stay out of the mainstream focus, but he has managed to play alongside Buckethead, who wears a bucket and mask wherever he goes.

With three albums to date, including "Songs in the Key of Beotch" and his newest album, "Packs a Wallop!" That 1 Guy has developed a devoted fan-base which has fallen in love with his oddball antics and crazy instruments. His shows combine humor and magic to create a must-see-it-to-believe-it experience. That 1 Guy has a heavy touring schedule, consisting of around 150-200 shows a year to support his albums.

That 1 Guy will be joined by Matt Lorenz, another one-man-band which goes by the moniker The Suitcase Junket, at the Iron Horse tonight. Lorenz plays a suitcase bass drum with an under-foot washboard, hi-hat, and a junker guitar. His street performer setup fits well with That 1 Guy's musical circus.

The concert is the day before spring break starts, and it promises to be an experience to tell your friends back home about. Grab a ticket and check out one of the coolest and most interesting shows taking place this year.

That 1 Guy will be playing tonight at the Iron Horse in Northampton. The show starts at 10 p.m., and tickets are $10 when purchased online and $13 when purchased at the door. Tickets are still available on the Iron Horse Entertainment Group's website, iheg.com.

Tappan Parker can be reached at tparker@student.umass.edu.

'Second Chants' a dreamy album

By Ashley Berger
Collegian Correspondent

Sore Eros just released their brand new album "Second Chants." Full of quirky, deep melodies, their sound mimics the Postal Service meets Minus the Bear. "Second Chants" is just that; a mixture of dream-like ballads and flowing words streamed together with light guitars, barely-there drum beats, a clearly audible synthesizer, and effortlessly cool vocals by singer Robert Robinson. A simple string of melodies and choruses, hooks and rhymes, the songs string together to form one continuous piece, rather than breaking, to really introduce the idea of a new song. Any listeners who enjoy a slight blend of emo-indie music will be sure to enjoy the sleepy, trance-like quality "Second Chants" provides.

In particular, the song "The Dream Self" is a harmony of the synth and the guitar, combined with Robinson's simple humming. The song, lyricless and tired, would be the perfect song to listen to while falling asleep or meditating. In contrast, the next track, "Below It Begins," is a weird jumble of beats from the same synth and a steady, yet strange drumbeat.

Different than the sleepy trance of "The Dream Self" is one that makes the listener question the band's intentions, "Over and Over," a strictly acoustic, slow tune, reminds listeners of early bootleg Bob Dylan songs; the only things the audience picks up on is Robinson's haunting voice mixed with Adam Langellotti's performance on the guitar.

During the first listen, the album sounds like a simple hip-pie, slightly more updated version of a 70s album, kind of dull. On second and preferred listen, the complexity of Robinson's voice merging with the backbeats is actually pretty good. Though the listener gets an eerie, dreamlike feel when hearing the album's various sounds, it is full of mystery and hidden eccentricities. While sometimes inaudible or misunderstood, the lyrics are overlooked as minimal, but during a close listen they are very deep. The song titles don't give any indication of what the song is about, but provide for even more mystery than the album already comes with.

Overall, "Second Chants" is a deep, dreamy, different album; a sound not like that of the mass-produced, but a sound that listeners are sure to enjoy.

Ashley Berger can be reached at aberger@student.umass.edu.

Northampton band Sore Eros' recently released album may sound boring the first time around, but listen again and you will fall prey to their dreamlike music.

MAYETTE STARK/COLLEGIAN

Senior right-handed pitcher Jared Freni delievers in a game last season. Freni was named a captain for the Minutemen in the 2010 season.

Freni, Bonet to lead

FRENI from page 8

Another player who's been durable for the Minutemen is Tom Conley, who became the full-time starting catcher as a freshman in 2009, playing in 49 games and starting 46 of them. He also contributed on the offensive side of the diamond, leading the team with a .424 on-base percentage.

"It had a good season last year, made the all [Atlantic 10] rookie team," Stone said. "We had a pretty good idea that [Conley] had the temperament to play. He's not intimidated. He's got a lot of potential to be a solid catcher. We're looking for an improved year."

Yet, perhaps no player exhibited as much all-around versatility in 2009 as current senior Mike Gedman, who led the Minutemen with a .345 batting average and stole a team-high nine bases, while playing in 37 games. He also put up solid pitching numbers, boasting a 2.42 ERA and a .191 batting average against.

Out of the group of incoming freshmen, Ryan Cusick will have an opportunity to fill the vacant second baseman position and play alongside junior shortstop Cameron McMullen. Rich Graef and Anthony Senno are also possible candidates to see significant playing time in the outfield. Right-handed pitchers Aaron Zaleznik and Ron Wallace will try to earn themselves a number of appearances out of the bullpen.

For now, Stone is comfortable with how his pitching staff is shaping up.

"We feel pretty good about our top six guys and we need to see how the bottom six or seven people progress," Stone said. "We need to stay injury free and have everyone competing and doing well. We strive for everybody to click on all cylinders."

Pete Vasquez can be reached at pvasquez@student.umass.edu

Nine-game opening road trip for UMass

DEPTH from page 8

four-game set at Oklahoma State, followed with two games at No. 15 Oklahoma on March 16-17 and finishing with a three-game series at William & Mary March 19-21.

The nine-game opening road trip is the longest for UMass this season. Stone believes the road trip will be an indicator of how competitive this team can be.

"It's a very challenging spring trip, there's no question about that," Stone said. "We'll find out what kind of talent we have, what kind of toughness we have and what kind of character we have as soon as the season starts."

Eight times this season the Minutemen will play one-game matches against state rivals Harvard, Boston College and Northeastern, who were featured in Spring Training games against the Boston Red Sox on March 3.

The Minutemen will play their first home game against Hartford on March 24 before they go back on the road for three games at Saint Joseph's, their first conference series of the season. Their first home series will be against Richmond on April 9-11 following a home-and-home series against Connecticut on April 6-7.

UMass went 16-11 last season in the Atlantic 10, beating Fordham and Charlotte while losing to regular season champion Dayton and eventual tournament champion Xavier. The Minutemen finished out the regular season schedule on a high-note, with a six-game win streak.

"It's a good league, a strong league, and we hope to be right in the thick of things," Stone said. "It's hard to make predictions, but we're just going to go out there every day, put out a good effort and see what happens."

The Minutemen will throw their first pitch on Friday at Allie P. Reynolds Stadium in Stillwater, Okla., against the Cowboys.

Stone said he is anxious to field his team after a long offseason.

"We've practiced since December. We're in our seventh week of practice now, so we're ready to start playing some games," Stone said.

Dan Gigliotti can be reached at dgigliot@student.umass.edu.

Sophomore Tom Conley looks to improve on last year's season, when he made the Atlantic 10 All-Rookie Team in 2009. Conley hit .312 with 33 runs scored, seven doubles and 15 RBI's, and stole safely in five attempts.

Tempesta, Clegg, Eilenberg all gone, but roster still intact

Baudinet and Donato look to team up for strong 2010 season in outfield for UM

BY STEVE LEVINE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Losing seniors is a part of the game.

It happens every year. Players graduate, younger players have shoes to fill. It's not necessarily a bad thing, though. While Massachusetts baseball coach Mike Stone understands big losses, he sees it as an opportunity.

"[We lost] our second basemen, Adam Tempesta," Stone said. "He was a captain for two years and a starter for four. [Pitchers] Mitchell Clegg and Mitchell Eilenberg; those guys were key losses as well. That was a long time ago, though, we need to move on and other players need to step forward."

Tempesta, a fixture in the Minuteman lineup for four straight years, currently holds the UMass records for most games played (147), most at bats (747) and most doubles (54). He holds second place in hits (239) and sixth in runs batted in (124).

Clegg's loss will be felt as well, as his record last year (7-1) led the Minuteman staff. He recorded a team-high 91 innings pitched and 81 strikeouts in 2009.

Eilenberg, a workhorse out of the bullpen for the past three seasons, holds the school record in career appearances (67) and saves (10).

The loss of quality, veteran players is obvious to Stone. However, much of the UMass roster remains intact. One player Stone looks to be a constant this year is Brian Baudinet, the senior center fielder.

"Baudinet really dedicated himself to having a good year this year – his preparation has been outstanding," Stone said. "I think him being the fifth-year guy and being a captain and starting center fielder for us the past three years is really going to pay off."

Baudinet started all 53 games last year and found himself among the leaders on the team in nearly every offensive category. He ranked fourth with a .541 slugging percentage, third with a .420 on base percentage, first in runs scored and fourth in runs batted in.

Teamed up with fellow senior and captain Mike Donato in leftfield, the duo is expected to be part of one of the most potent outfields in the Atlantic 10.

UMass' .309 batting average is ranked fifth in the A-10 and its 5.10 ERA ranked third in the conference. However, its .954 fielding percentage ranked 12th. Like most successful teams, Stone believes that balance is the key to success.

"We'd like to have a good balance, you know, with pitching and defense," Stone said. "It's like how [everyone says] before Red Sox seasons that pitching and defense will win ballgames. The season is not very predictable, though."

UMass ranked 12th in the league last year in stolen base attempts, something that might change this year.

"Putting pressure on the other team and making them play the short game by stealing bases and keeping them on their toes is kind of an ideal way to approach [the game]," Stone said.

UMass' 27-26 overall record and 16-11 conference record was one of the best it's had in years. The Minutemen are expected to deliver a similar performance this season.

"[Last year], we got through a tough phase in the beginning of the season when we couldn't finish ballgames well," Stone said. "We matured, though, hung in there and battled and played the end of the season like we thought we could."

Stone does not concern himself with preseason predictions.

"It's not really where you start but it's where you finish that makes a difference," Stone said. "I don't spend a lot of time looking at those things. We need to take it game by game."

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

How do we fit over 600 courses in more than 60 subjects, 6 international programs on 3 continents, 4 summer institutes, 3 field study programs, and 6 courses on Nantucket into just 13 weeks?

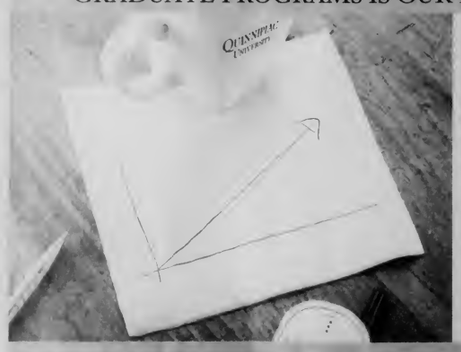
There's only one way to find out.



Summer 2010 at UMass Boston

SMALL CLASSES. BRILLIANT FACULTY. DEDICATED STUDENTS. MAJOR RESEARCH.

SUMMER.UMB.EDU | 617.287.6000

UMASS BOSTON

THE ONLY THING GROWING FASTER THAN OUR GRADUATE PROGRAMS IS OUR REPUTATION.

Biomedical Sciences
Cardiovascular Perfusion
Computer Information Systems
Education – Elementary Education – Secondary
Educational Leadership
Interactive Communications
Journalism
Law
MBA-CFA® Track (Chartered Financial Analyst)
MBA/HCM (Health Care Management)
MBA/SCM (Supply Chain Management)
MBA/JD (Joint degree in business and law)
Molecular & Cell Biology
Nurse Practitioner
Pathologists' Assistant
Physician Assistant
Public Relations
Radiologist Assistant

Graduate Online Programs
Interactive Communications
MBA
Occupational Therapy (post-professional)
Organizational Leadership

Learn more: www.quinnipiac.edu/gradstudies

Graduate Programs: graduate@quinnipiac.edu
Graduate Online Programs: quonlineadmissions@quinnipiac.edu
Law School: lalm@quinnipiac.edu

QUINNIPIAC UNIVERSITY
1-800-462-1944 | Hamden, Connecticut

Tigers, Bears fall to ranked opponents

PRIDE from page 8

in a strong 15-12 performance on Saturday afternoon.

The Pride (1-1) brought a dynamic offensive performance that saw contributions from several players. Hofstra's 39-shot effort against the Bears was capitalized by Stephen Bentz, who scored three goals. Brad Loizeaux, Mike DeNapoli, Adrian Sorichetti, and Steve DeNapoli all contributed with two goals each.

The Bears (0-1) had 30 shots resulting in 12 goals, and were led by Thomas Muldoon. Muldoon notched four goals for Brown, with Reade Seligmann and David Hawley each netting three.

Though Brown came out with a 1-0 lead at the end of the first quarter, they were unable to maintain it with a six-goal second period that came hot off the heels of the Pride offense.

The Pride will return to the field on Saturday, March 13, when they will play against No.5 John's Hopkins.

TIGERS FALL SHORT AGAINST STONY BROOK

Towson was unable to stage a comeback against No. 17 Stony Brook on Saturday, falling 14-11.

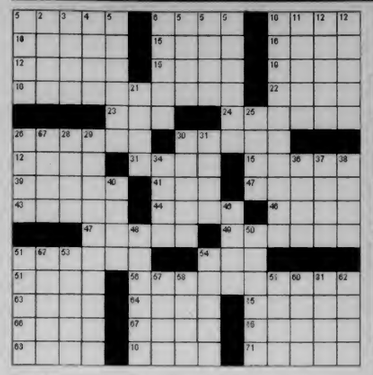
The Seawolves (2-1) jumped out to a 9-4 lead at the beginning of the second half and never looked back. Jordan McBride scored six goals to help lead the Seawolves to a solid win on their home turf. Kevin Crowley also contributed to the scoring frenzy with three goals.

The Tigers (0-2) did their best offensively, but were unable to resist the Seawolves' scoring output. Will Harrington scored five goals for the Tigers, while Stephen Norris also scored three goals.

The Seawolves had a 17-11 faceoff win advantage and a 43-31 shot advantage, though the Tigers did pull off a 10-8 save advantage to go along with a strong extra-man unit that went 5-of-7 for the day.

David Martin can be reached dmmartin@student.umass.edu.

Off The Wall Games



$12 Thursday Night Draft!
Look for us at ConBust at Smith College
March 26-28!
Hours: T8-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays
41 Russell St (Village Barn Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

MAGIC The Gathering
WARHAMMER 40,000

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Residues from fires
6. Stepped
10. Female chickens
14. Traction aid
15. Possess
16. Radiate
17. Trunk
18. 1 1 1 1
19. Solitary
20. An alkaloid plant toxin
22. Detail
23. Cask
24. A short break
26. Extremity
30. Parisian subway
32. Chills and fever
33. Turn over earth
35. Chose
39. Electrical pioneer Nikola
41. Half of two
42. Inscribed pillar
43. Colorado resort
44. A Roman emperor
46. Lack of difficulty
47. Damp
49. Laborer
51. Mischievous one
54. Dry, as wine
55. Reflected sound
56. Help
63. Crummy
64. Location
65. Prize
66. An indefinite period
67. Dross
68. Wanderer
69. Lyric poems
70. Bygone time
71. Mournful poem

DOWN
1. Parts of a play
2. Coin opening
3. German for "Mister"
4. Gentle
5. Heavyset
6. Underpants resembling a G-string
7. Hindu princess
8. Roasting appliance
9. Abandon
10. Whirlybird
11. Overact
12. 9 9 9 9
13. Stalks
21. "S.O.S.!"
25. God of love
26. Information
27. Matures
28. Astrological transition point
29. Used to look at the stars
30. Cash
31. Pitcher
34. Not short
36. Furniture wood
37. Ultimatum ender
38. Bambi was one
40. Dwarf buffalo
45. Is indebted to
48. Smooth
50. A hydrocarbon found in petroleum
51. Odd-numbered page
52. Pungent
53. Dishonor
54. Military blockade
57. Fodder holder
58. The Sun
59. Absent without leave
60. What you're called
61. Rugged rock
62. Swirl

WHAT'S ON TAP AT THE AMHERST BREWING COMPANY

Every Thursday:
JOHN SHELDON'S MASTERS OF THE STRATOCASTER
DOWNSTAIRS 9 PM - 12 AM

Every Tuesday:
LOST IN HD
UPSTAIRS ON THE BIG SCREEN

Monday March 15th:
AMHERST JAZZ ORCHESTRA
DOWNSTAIRS 8:30 PM - 11 PM

Wednesday March 17th:
ST. PATTY'S DAY DINNER
LOCAL CORNED BEEF & CABBAGE!

Facebook
BOOK YOUR GRADUATION PARTY NOW!
24 N. PLEASANT AMHERST MA
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

$1 rides within Amherst
(413) 306-8298

Sir Dinklage

	4				8	6
		2					5
	7			9
	1
3	2		6			8
4	8		1	3		2
					3
		1	6			4
			5	4	1		2

amherst cinema
Fri Mar 12 - Thu Mar 18
THE WHITE RIBBON
2:30 6:45 9:30 +11:30am Sat & Sun
THE LAST STATION
2:15 (1:45 Thu) 4:45 (4:15 Thu) 7:30 10:00 +11:45am Sat & Sun NO 7:30 Thu
CRAZY HEART
2:00 4:30 7:15 9:45 +11:15am Sat & Sun
28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst
www.amherstcinema.org (413) 253-2547

PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri Mar 12 - Thu Mar 18
SHUTTER ISLAND 4:00 7:00 10:00 +1:00 Sat & Sun +10:00am 1:00 Wed
CRAZY HEART 4:15 7:15 9:45 +1:15 Sat Sun & Wed NO 4:15 Mon NO 7:15 Wed
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasanttheater.org (413) 584-5848

ENTER TO WIN 2 CARRIE UNDERWOOD TICKETS
Drawing on March 25
MONDAY - SATURDAY
Happy Hour - 1/2 Price Appetizers 9:30 - Close
EVERY THURSDAY:
Promo & Trivia Night
EVERYDAY:
$1.00 Drafts and $5 Movie Tickets!*
21ST BIRTHDAY:
Free Entree or Small Pizza with ID*
Hampshire Mall
Across from Cinemark
413-549-0077
FREE Delivery
ARIZONA PIZZA

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

On the underestanding of transcendental numbers and the fabric of the Cosmos.

Abstract:
If you turn the 21,115th through 21,120th digits upside-down in a calculator, it spells "boobs."

Hark! a Vagrant by K. Beaton harkavagrant.com

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20 - FEB. 18
You may be cool in your own right but do not for one second think you are cooler than Boba Fett. No one touches the Fett man!

pisces FEB. 19 - MAR. 20
If someone asks what your problem is, just act as if they are the one who stole the final piece to your lite-brite set.

aries MAR. 21 - APR. 19
Try the new aries horoscope, now with seasoned crust and sprinkled with fresh, grated romano cheese!

taurus APR. 20 - MAY. 20
The world needs some new talents to watch on YouTube. Try identifying various Lego pieces with just the tip of your tongue.

gemini MAY. 21 - JUN. 21
Test the waters with your friends and family. May I suggest you avoid ones that are shark infested.

cancer JUN. 22 - JUL. 22
When you close your eyes, David Hasselhoff will serve you double cheeseburgers and caress you with colorful loofah sponges.

leo JUL. 23 - AUG. 22
Abe Lincoln was one sexy beast. I would say he is up there with the unicorn and those cute little leprechauns.

virgo AUG. 23 - SEPT. 22
Humans age like fine wine, unlike French cheese and boy bands.

libra SEPT. 23 - OCT. 22
In the middle of eating lunch you will experience a repressed memory. Hopefully it will not be the one with spoons and a peculiar aunt.

scorpio OCT. 23 - NOV. 21
Choosing a fountain drink is just like voting in a presidential election. They are all bad for your health and cause acute abdominal pain.

sagittarius NOV. 22 - DEC. 21
The last time I saw such a confident strut must have been Dick Cheney's first trip to the ATM.

capricorn DEC. 22 - JAN. 19
That powdery substance that you find on your roommate's nose in the morning is the left over fairy dust from visiting Neverland.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

TUTORING SERVICES

Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats, GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 Jboid42@yahoo.com

ACTIVITIES

Bartenders needed for FT/PT positions. No experience required. Earn $20-$70 per hour. Call us at 617-849-8074

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

28 Stockbridge St: 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,575/Mo+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends From $89 Complete. Montreal Express.Net MontrealBlowout.com 781-979-9001

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www birthright.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTHURSDAY

THURSDAY, MARCH 11, 2010 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass on the road to start

Minutemen head to Oklahoma

By Daniel Gigliotti
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team will look to build upon its best season in six years as it will compete in its first regular season action later this week.

The Minutemen dealt with rumors about a cut in funding that would leave the longstanding program extinct, but finished above .500 in 2009 for the first time since 2003 and registered its highest win total since 2001.

UMass coach Mike Stone acknowledged that his team played with some added incentive last season, but believes the questions about the baseball program are in the past.

"When there are rumors like that going around," Stone said, "as a competitor, that puts an extra chip on your shoulder as far as competing and making sure that doesn't happen again. [But] we haven't mentioned it this year at all."

Stone will field a very similar team to last year's with his entire outfield and pitching staff, with the exception of ace Mitchell Clegg, intact. The middle infield presents some issues with the departure of Adam Tempesta, however, Stone believes his team could be even better by position.

"We could have more [depth] than last year," Stone said. "Some people gain some experience and could be better than last year."

The Minutemen will be tested from the start of the regular season when they go on the road for their first 16-of-18 games. Their opening trip begins this Friday with a

See DEPTH on page 6

Outfielder Brian Baudinet looks to help captain the Minutemen to a successful start to the 2010 season.

Seasoned team for 2010 slate

Seven seniors headline class

By Pete Vasquez
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team will start its 2010 season with a mix of experience, consisting of eight freshmen, eight sophomores, nine juniors and seven seniors.

UMass coach Mike Stone feels fortunate for how his roster happened to work out this year, and hopes this mix of youth and experience will translate to a successful team on the field.

The Minutemen are coming off their first winning season since 2003. However, in order to keep the streak going, they will have to overcome the losses of last year's seniors, including Mitchell Clegg, Mitchell Eilenberg, Jim MacDonald and Adam Tempesta. Clegg led the team in wins, going 7-1 with a 4.15 earned run average in 91 innings as a starting pitcher, Eilenberg led the staff with 21 appearances, and MacDonald batted .343 last season and led the team with 53 runs batted in while sharing the team lead in home runs (nine), with Kyle Multner. Tempesta was reliable as the everyday second baseman, compiling 72 hits for a .341 average, and leading the team with 19 doubles.

"You can't dwell on it," Stone said. "We have to move on and hopefully other people will step forward and take leadership positions."

Stone will rely on Brian Baudinet, who is entering his second year as team captain, as well as fellow seniors Mike Donato and Jared Freni, who make up the rest of the captains.

Both Baudinet and Donato set a program record by starting all 53 games last year, while Freni led the pitching staff in starts with 15.

See FRENI on page 6

Three-game losing streak ends for UM

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

With a six-game road stint ahead on the schedule, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team couldn't afford to head into spring break with out snapping its losing streak.

UMass did just that by defeating Yale 9-5 at McGuirk Stadium on a sunny Wednesday afternoon. The loss for the Bulldogs drops them to 1-3, while the Minutewomen move to 3-4 on the season. The win for UMass also ends a three-game losing streak it suffered against New Hampshire, Harvard and Boston University during its four-game home stand.

"Going into this game, we practiced really hard this week," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "We really focused on ball possession, and I'm really proud, this was a very solid win against a very solid team."

UMass	9
Yale	5

The Minutewomen opened the game controlling the possession for nearly four minutes in an attempt to break their recent scoring inconsistencies. Both of UMass' shots, however, would be deflected, as the Bulldogs went on the attack.

The Yale offense was quick with its possession and drew first blood, as Jessica Sturgill made it 1-0 at the 25 minute, 33 second mark. Not wanting to get into a hole, the Minutewomen responded with three goals over the next five minutes.

Sophomore Nina Sarcona evened the game and gave UMass the 2-1 lead with a pair of scores for her 4th and 5th goals of the season. Sophomore Jesse O'Donnell then tacked on a third goal for the Minutewomen for her team-leading 15th goal of the year.

Scoring subsided for most of the remainder of the half, as both team defenses slowed down scoring opportunities. With less than two minutes left though, Yale closed the deficit to one, as Sturgill circled around the UMass net before putting in her second goal of the game.

In a last-gasp effort before the end of the half, O'Donnell answered with her second goal of the game to put the Minutewomen back up by two heading into intermission.

The first half marked the lowest combined scoring half for UMass this season, while matching the six combined goals for the Bulldogs in their games against James Madison and Holy Cross.

In the start of the second half, the Minutewomen once again patiently held possession, but were kept from extending their lead, as the Yale defense held strong. The Bulldogs' attack then struck swiftly, as Kaitlyn Hatles scored her third goal of the spring at the 26:41 mark to make it a 4-3 game.

With less than 20 minutes remaining in the game, Sturgill and O'Donnell exchanged goals to give both players a hat trick. Sturgill first scored to tie the score at four, before O'Donnell regained the lead for UMass.

Yale tied the game again at the 10:15 mark on a free-position goal by Devon Rhodes, only to see the Minutewomen go back ahead on a Jackie Lyons score 39 seconds later. The goal for Lyons was the junior's 11th of the season, placing her second on the team behind O'Donnell.

Not finished for the contest, O'Donnell put in her fourth goal to extend UMass' lead to 7-5, before Lyons added an insurance goal four minutes later to put the Minutewomen up by three with 3:31 left to play.

UMass scored for the ninth and final time with 29 seconds remaining, as Sarcona put in her third goal to join O'Donnell with a hat trick.

"It feels really good and we worked really hard," O'Donnell said afterwards. "It's wasn't just my goals, it was a team effort."

The Minutewomen next head on the road for six games, beginning this weekend when they travel to face Stony Brook.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu

Junior Hayley Smith brings the ball upfield against the Bulldogs Wednesday afternoon. The Minutewomen went on to win, 9-5 and take on Stony Brook this weekend.

Junior Jackie Lyons looks to make a cut against the Bulldogs. The junior scored two goals for UMass, and now leads the team with 11 so far on the season.

Ball possession key

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

It was a different Massachusetts women's lacrosse team that took the field Wednesday afternoon to compete against Yale.

The Minutewomen defeated the Bulldogs 9-5 at McGuirk Stadium, ending a three-game losing streak.

"We talked about a lot of our ball possession in attack," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "I thought that proved to be the difference. There weren't many shots in the game, but when we had the opportunity to put them away [we did]. We took the shots we wanted to take."

The game against the Bulldogs featured a UMass squad that worked on both sides of the pitch. Offensively, UMass jumped out early with a three-goal run within the first ten minutes of play.

The offense was working, as was the defense. Despite letting up a goal four minutes, 27 seconds into the game, the Minutewomen defense kept the score at 3-1 for just under nineteen minutes.

With each Yale possession, a pack of Minutewomen chased after the Bulldogs, wrestling the ball away and maintaining possession.

When Yale broke through the defense, scoring off a thirty-second run, the Minutewomen's offense turned up the heat, notching a goal with seven seconds to go in the half.

"We kept the ball, we had possession for a long time in the game, and that was our number one game plan: [to have] possession for this game," said attacker Jesse O'Donnell.

Even with seven seconds remaining, UMass pushed for an advantage, gaining the ball off the draw. The 4-2 score at the break was the lowest halftime score of the spring for UMass.

In the first half, the Minutewomen squad was perfect on its six clears.

"We did a really good job of seeing what they gave to us," Venechanos said. "The defenders did a good job of bringing the ball in when needed, and then when to distribute. Behind the ball, the attackers did a great job of giving the defenders space to run the ball up and distribute."

Even the fouling situation was different in the game against the Bulldogs. In the first period, the Minutewomen committed seven fouls. The last time UMass committed seven fouls in the first half was against Holy Cross, which ended in a 15-6 win for the Minutewomen.

"We're told not to foul, so we followed our game plan," O'Donnell said.

In three of its four losses thus far, UMass was in double digits for fouling going into the break.

"I think we played a lot safer, and the style of the game didn't lend itself to that many fouls for us," Venechanos said.

The second half was more of the same, at least early on. Yale scored two goals in the first two minutes, with the Minutewomen defense left baffled on sloppy play.

UMass took a timeout, returning to its first half form after coming back to play. The offensive tempo was heightened with an O'Donnell score, and the energy was back with the Minutewomen.

Contrary to the recent losses by UMass, the Minutewomen did not allow its opponents to gain a lead. After the Bulldogs scored a goal to knot the game at five apiece, the offensive side of the UMass squad pushed forward and scored three more goals to secure the victory.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu.

OSU gets past PSU

By David Martin
Collegian Staff

Logan Schuss assumed the role of hero in the Ohio State Buckeyes' overtime win against Penn State's Nittany Lions Saturday afternoon, scoring the game-winning goal against PSU to give the Buckeyes an 11-10 in overtime.

The Buckeyes (3-1) were led on the offensive effort by Mario Ventiquattro with four goals throughout the course of the game, including a man-up goal in the beginning of the fourth quarter. Jeff Tundo and James Green also added to the Buckeyes' goal total, with two goals each, respectively. Ohio State was perfect on the extra-man opportunity, going 2-for-2 on the day.

CAA Lacrosse

The Nittany Lions (0-4) had 55 shots on goal, with 22 of them on net. Matthew Mackrides led the Lion offense with five goals, and had his second five-goal game of the season. Billy Gribbin and Nick Dolik each contributed with two goals.

Mackrides had scored with just 1:49 left in the fourth quarter to tie the game, sending PSU to overtime.

Though the Lions were able to win the ensuing faceoff, Buckeye Joe Bonanni forced a turnover, leading to Schuss' game-winning goal with 2:50 left in overtime.

OSU fell to Robert Morris 12-7 on Tuesday, while PSU is still winless after falling to to Villanova, 11-7.

Hofstra Beats Bears by Three

No. 11 Hofstra held off the No. 19 Brown Bears

See PRIDE on page 6

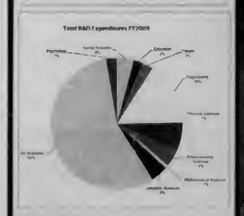
Tim Balise looks to make a move against a Hofstra defender in a game last season. The No. 11 Pride defeated No. 19 Brown, 15-12 last Saturday.

the daily collegian

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MARCH 12, 2010

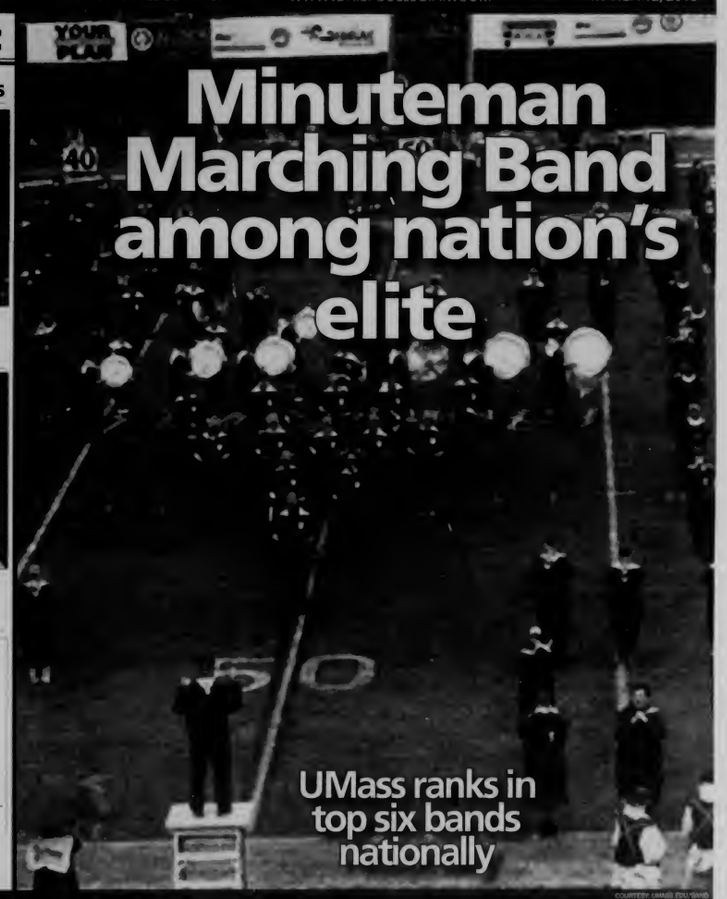
inside this issue:

Sinking the Spiders



SEE PAGE 13

Hit the road



SEE PAGE 7

Research record

SEE PAGE 3

Minuteman Marching Band among nation's elite

UMass ranks in top six bands nationally

COURTESY UMASS (DU) BAND

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXX
ISSUE 35

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S P Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Shayna Murphy
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolneirz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Pete Rizzo

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED. OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
NICK BUSH

COPY EDITOR
ELIZABETH TRAN

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHELLE ABBASCIANO

Marching band among best

Recognized as one of top six

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Minutemen may not have finished near the top in football this year, but at least their band did.

Sports news web site bleacherreport.com's Geoffrey Tanner named the Minuteman Marching Band among the six best college athletics bands in the nation.

Tanner lauded band director George N. Parks for his commitment to enriching students' drumming aptitudes in founding the George N. Parks Drum Major Academy, while going so far as to call percussion instructor and Drum Corps International Hall of Famer Thomas Hannum "legendary."

"Their band director is well known for teaching thousands of high school drum majors how to lead," wrote Tanner. "Their percussion instructor is legendary. They perform one show a year (they do play a few other shows each year, but concentrate on the main one) and perfect it to musical perfection. Every high school band looks up to them."

The Minuteman Marching Band was ranked alongside some fairly steep competition.

The other five schools included on Tanner's list were Ohio State University, the University of Michigan, Purdue University, the University of Texas, the University of California and West Carolina University.

COURTESY UMASS EDU BAND

Members of the trombone section warm up before a performance last year. The Minuteman Marching Band was ranked in the top six college marching bands by the web site bleacherreport.com.

COURTESY UMASS EDU

George N. Parks has served as director of the Minuteman Marching Band since 1977.

The band, which is informally called "Power and Class," performs at home football games throughout the fall, in addition to a weekly postgame set.

The band is composed of over 350 members and has performed at such prestigious events as presidential inaugurations in 1981, 1985 and 2001, in addition to performing at the Bands of America Grand Nationals, the premier marching band event in the nation, in 1993, 2001 and 2004. The Minuteman band also won college marching bands' most prestigious award, the Louis C. Sudler Trophy, awarded to the band which has exhibited "the highest of musical standards and innovative marching routines and ideas, and which has made important contributions to the advancement of the performance standards of college marching bands over a period of several years," according to the band's website.

The band has a legacy of excellence. It was organized in 1935 by Mr. Charles Farnum, though it was not actually the first band at UMass. The first band, according to the Minuteman Band's site, was the Mass Aggie Band, organized by First Lieutenant Charles Morris in the late 19 century, when UMass was Massachusetts Agricultural College and students were all male and all enlisted in the military.

From there, the band evolved into something more like its current form, as by the 1930s the band contained broader instrumentation and incorporated coed drum majors.

George N. Parks has been the band's director since 1977, leading it to numerous accolades and even helping the band become the subject of a documentary, "Building Power and Class," a 1994 film by documentarian Tony Mussari.

The band contains 11 sections; flutes and piccolos, clarinets, tenor saxophones, alto saxophones, trumpets, mellophones, euphoniums, trombones, tubas, percussion and colorguard.

Flute and piccolo had 27 performers listed on its website, while there were 34 players in the clarinet section, 21 members of the tenor saxophone group, the alto saxophone site did not list a roster, there were nine trumpeters, calling themselves the "hogline," the mellophone section did not list a roster, nor did the euphoniums, there were 24 trombonists, 20 tuba players, and the percussion section, comprised of snare drums, tenor drums, bass drums, cymbals and a front ensemble, had 35 members, among the largest groupings.

While it may not rival some of its marching band competition on the gridiron, the band certainly finds itself in some good company. Ohio State's band performs throughout the year and encompasses some 20 sections, while Michigan's incorporates 14, playing a new song at every halftime show, Purdue's band has the world's largest bass drum, and Western Carolina infuses a "soul train" section into their band, livening up the conventional format of the marching band.

Last October 17, ground was broken for a new 15,000 square foot $5.7 million Minuteman Marching Band Building, which will permanently house the band, replacing their temporary home in Grinnell Arena.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com.

UM research spending up $54 million

$489.1 million in FY2009 a system record, Amherst spends $160.7

By Matt Rocheleau
Collegian Staff

After a record $54 million rise from 2008, research spending hit an all-time high of $489.1 million at the University of Massachusetts last year, according to an announcement from UMass yesterday.

Of the nearly $500 million spent on research in FY2009, $160.7 million was spent by the Amherst campus, second in the University system only to the Worcester campus, which spent $204 million, according to a UMass press release.

The flagship campus spent around $4 million more a year ago than it did in FY2008, and leads the five-campus system in "in key technology areas, such as lower-atmosphere weather radar, materials for solar energy and nanomanufacturing," Thursday's release said.

"The University of Massachusetts is being recognized as a major force in the world of research, as evidenced by the millions of dollars in research funding that is pouring into all five of our campuses," said University President Jack M. Wilson in the release. "Our faculty is being recognized for pioneering work that improves and saves lives."

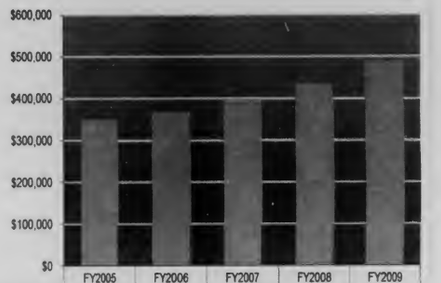
Around 58 percent of the total University research funding came from the federal government in 2009, 25 percent from UMass, 3 percent from state and local government, 6 percent from industry and 8 percent from other sources, like private foundations.

The growth of University's total research expenditures has significantly outpaced the national average in recent years. A new University report shows UMass' research spending rose by 9.5 percent in FY2008 compared to the national university growth rate of 5.2 percent. And, research spending climbed 34 percent at UMass from FY2003 to FY2008, while the countrywide average increased by 23 percent over the same time period.

UMass ranks third statewide – behind the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) and Harvard University – and fourth in New England – trailing MIT, Harvard and Yale University – in higher educational research activity.

"In Massachusetts, our greatest natural resource is our brainpower, and the University of Massachusetts is committed to making sure that knowledge, innovation and discovery are always driving the state forward and leading us to new opportunities and new prosperity," Wilson said.

Nearly 96 percent of last year's research funding at UMass fell under the category of science and engineering, with 56 percent of that occurring in the life sciences.

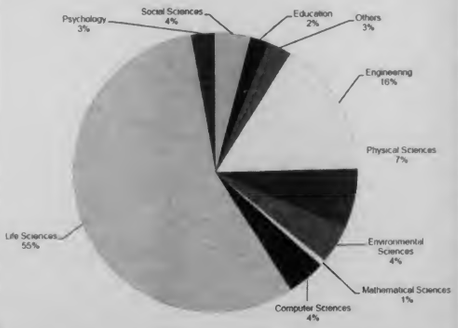


The Lowell campus spent $56.7 million on research last year, partnering with other local universities and industry on a nanomanufacturing research center as well as the expansion of biomanufacturing research and industry services program, said the release.

UMass Boston's expenditures were $47 million in 2009 and focused on life sciences research and health care collaborations with major Boston institutions, including Children's Hospital and Dana-Farber/Harvard Cancer Center. Meanwhile, a new initiative in marine renewable energy, including a regional university-industry research consor-

See RESEARCH on page 4

UMASS System



Total R&D Expenditures FY2005 - FY2009

	FY2005	FY2006	FY2007	FY2008	FY2009
Total R&D ($000s)	$349,660	$368,755	$397,470	$435,247	$489,060
Annual Growth	6.6%	5.5%	7.8%	9.5%	12.4%

SOURCE MASSACHUSETTS.EDU/IR/IRANNUALPUBLICATIONS.HTML

Total R&D Expenditures FY2009

SOURCE MASSACHUSETTS.EDU/IR/IRANNUALPUBLICATIONS.HTML

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
Ads for $6.70 per column inch
On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10 per column inch
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

UMass earns honors for service learning program

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

If you go to the University of Massachusetts and have done community service at any point in the last four years, give yourself a pat on the back. You made the honor roll!

Each year since the program's inception in 2006, UMass has earned a spot on the President's Higher Education Community Service Honor Roll.

According to the initiative's website, the honor roll "annually recognizes institutions of higher education for their commitment to and achievement in community service."

The initiative falls under President Barack Obama's Learn and Serve America program, which gives students from kindergarten through college opportunities to engage in service learning. The program provides funding through grants for joint school and community service projects, provides training for teachers, administrators, parents and community groups, and distributes models and data on effective methods of service learning.

The Honor Roll is determined by the Corporation for National and Community Service, a government-run organization which works to organize and coordinate local volunteering networks throughout the country. The Corporation also works with the Department of Education, the Department of Housing and Urban Development, Campus Compact and the American Council on Education in announcing the honor roll.

This year, more than 700 colleges and universities were recognized for "exemplary, innovative, and effective community service programs," according to the Honor Roll site. "Honorees are chosen based on a series of selection factors including scope and innovation of service projects, percentage of student participation in service activities, incentives for service, and the extent to which the school offers academic service-learning courses," the site states.

This year's Presidential Awardees included Lee University in Tennessee, the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, Raritan Valley Community College in New Jersey, Ohio Wesleyan University, Emory & Henry College in Virginia and Willamette University in Oregon.

Locally, Bay State College, Holy Cross, Emmanuel College and Simmons College won honor roll with distinction, as did Bates and Bowdoin Colleges in Maine, Antioch University and Keene State College in New Hampshire and Castleton State College in Vermont.

UMass made the Honor Roll, along with fellow local schools Assumption College, Babson College, Bentley University, Boston Architectural College, Boston College, Bristol Community College, Bunker Hill Community College, Clark University, Emerson College, Endicott College, Lasell College, Lesley University, Massachusetts College of Art and Design, Massachusetts College of Liberal Arts, Massachusetts College of Pharmacy and Health Science, Middlesex Community College, Mount Wachusett Community College, North Shore Community College, Northeastern University, Springfield College, Stonehill College, Suffolk University, the Boston Conservatory, Tufts University, UMass Boston, UMass Dartmouth, UMass Lowell and Worcester State College.

In 2009, the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching named UMass a Community-Engaged University based on a curriculum rich in municipal involvement, according to a press release from the Office of News and Information.

In the release, Director of Community Service Learning Carol Soules said the University has long striven to emphasize service learning in the school's curriculum.

"This is an important recognition of the exemplary efforts of Community Service Learning faculty and students across our campus in conjunction with our community partners," said Soules. "On the national level, many eyes are on service learning. UMass Amherst's experience and expertise in this field positions us well to provide leadership for service-learning initiatives both locally and nationally."

Since 1994, more than 12 departments have received unit fellowships to integrate community service learning into their curriculum.

Until recently the Office of Community Service Learning (OCSL) had fallen under the management of the Commonwealth Honors College, but this year, the University opened a new Community Service Learning Center on the 10 floor of the W.E.B. DuBois Library to help make service learning more central to the University's functions.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com

Celebrating International Women's Day

Monday saw a celebration of International Women's Day in the Cape Cod Lounge. Visitors gathered to hear poetry readings, see art displays, and participate in other activities.

UMass system spends record amount on research in '09

RESEARCH from page 3

tium and proposed technology demonstration site in Muskegat Channel, was the focus at the Dartmouth campus, which spent $20.7 million a year ago.

The Worcester campus' major initiative was translating research to improve clinical outcomes, with an emphasis on gene therapy, stem cell therapy and RNAi therapeutics, the release said.

"Research is an important component for any major university," Wilson added. "Research expands the boundaries of human knowledge and also fuels economic growth, while at the same time paying dividends in the classroom by exposing students to faculty members who are the leading thinkers in their fields."

Wilson, who called research "rocket fuel for the state's innovation economy," created the President's Science and Technology Fund, which seeds promising research projects on all five campuses. That fund has provided about $1 million in project funding since its inception in 2004 and has been responsible for 43 projects to date, which have gone on to attract over $100 million in additional funding from external sources, said the release.

Research strengthens existing Bay State companies and helps to create companies and jobs by leading to scientific breakthroughs and new products, the release added.

Examples of research strengthening existing companies include UMass Amherst's radar systems work with Raytheon, while research spinoffs include Konarka, a solar energy company which evolved from faculty research at the Lowell campus.

Growth in research spending and funding has been coupled with an increase in the income the University derives from faculty discoveries and products. UMass ranks in the top 15 nationally in generating licensing and royalty income from faculty innovations and discoveries taken from the lab to the marketplace, according to the release. Annual intellectual property income has risen from $20 million in FY 2003 to $73 million last year.

The University's FY 2009 expenditure report can be found at: http://www.massachusetts.edu/ir/annualpublications.html

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrocheleau@dailycollegian.com

editorial&opinion

"FREE SPEECH IS THE WHOLE THING, THE WHOLE BALL GAME. FREE SPEECH IS LIFE ITSELF." - SIR SALMAN RUSHDIE

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

If this is a joke, there sure isn't much laughter

Got money?

That's the inside joke going on over at Whitmore as UMass tries to figure out ways to bring in revenue at our expense. When administrators come to campus to work they don't see students, they see dollar signs. UMass is planning on increasing its student size while laying off professors and putting off community building projects. What this means is larger class sizes, fewer classes and poorer education.

Roy Ribitzky

Mandatory meal plans for all campus residents, marketing more towards out-of-state students, opting to not extend teacher contracts, small state funds … what is going on?

Public education in Massachusetts is taking the privatized route. Executives at UMass are worrying more about their wallets and positions, especially interim Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life Jean Kim. With the recent debacle in the sexual harassment case, Kim is trying to do anything she can to keep her job. That does not mean pleasing us; it means she has to please the Board of Trustees.

Last year the Boston Globe reported that UMass will begin trying to recruit more and more out-of-state students, who bring the school more revenue.

There is also speculation that the sizes of incoming freshmen classes will be increased by 300 students over the next decade and new residential areas will begin to be built.

Go figure that Massachusetts spends one of the least amounts of money on public education: about 3.9 percent compared to the state average of 6.5 percent, according to PHENOM. Alabama's beating us.

Some recession. Not to worry about temporary housing, the school has an answer: they believe that all sophomores, juniors, and seniors lean towards off-campus housing. In other words, they're banking on us moving off campus.

How so? Mandatory meal plans. Force all residents to buy into an overpriced meal plan and that will push some students off campus.

UMass is focusing on bringing more outsiders to school because they bring in more money. Go figure that Massachusetts spends one of the least amounts of money on public education: about 3.9 percent compared to the state average of 6.5 percent, according to PHENOM. Alabama's beating us.

My classes are already big enough. I don't need to stand an hour and fifteen minutes watching a replacement instructor read off their notes that they post on SPARK. I don't need to force myself to eat at the dining commons if I don't want to regardless of where I choose to live. The members of the Board of Trustees only care about themselves. If they cared about us, they wouldn't think about revenue. They would ask: how can we keep women safe on this campus? How can we encourage responsible drinking? How can we diversify our campus (there are 14,000 white undergrads and less than 900 African American identified students)? But more importantly: how can we better education? The chancellor makes over $300,000 annually. Where's my share?

Revenue does not breed success. Can executives in the establishment for once put aside their wallets and do something for us? I'm not asking to lower the school price, God forbid I sound socialist. There isn't even enough housing on campus to fit two grades, but they want to add more out-of-state students to make a profit?

It is so frustrating that the school thinks of us as an assembly line: just roll them in and get us out of here. What happened to intellectual property? What happened to ethics and morals? We are here now, and we should be the focus of their attention. We put bread on their tables and in return they give us massive student debt. The administration does not care about us, no matter how much they say they do to the press. I guess we're all just a part of some big joke.

Roy Ribitzky is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at rribitzk@student.umass.edu.

Tips for having a fun Spring Break

1) Tape everything so you won't have to remember it.

2) Pick a reasonable alias.

3) Don't wear socks with sandals.

4) Avoid mankinis.

5) Apologize to your liver every day.

6) Resist the urge to expose a part of your body on TV.

7) Don't mix Red Bull and vodka.

8) There are alternatives to peeing on jellyfish.

HELP PREVENT THE EVIL MACHINES FROM TAKING OVER: WRITE FOR ED/OP.

Good for the soul

Harrison Searles

Finally, it is the last Friday before the beginning of Spring Break and I am sure that the campus of our beloved university is already a ghost town, as a good fraction of students are already off to whichever destination they chose for their vacations. The fortunate among us will be journeying to sunny, beach-front locations like Florida, or other destinations that will bring joy to the mind and senses. Nevertheless, the point of a vacation cannot be simply to try to escape the world.

Those who are getting away to distant locations in order to find peace of mind will be sorely disappointed for it is not possible to find peace of mind in such a place when one drags oneself with one's worries. A story is told of a man complaining to Socrates about how he was unsatisfied with the travel that he had done throughout his life and received in reply a simple answer: "What else can you expect having since you always take yourself along with you when you go abroad."

Wherever we go, no matter how beautiful the destination, we will always be carrying ourselves around and will be weighed down with our grievances against the world – just shuffling around will not be enough to melt them away. After all, what difference does it make whether we are in either Mexico or Hawaii if we are still looking through the same eyes with the biases and neuroses; surely the two may be beautiful, but it is our attitude which determines whether we are in bliss or perdition. Even a beautiful ocean sunset can be tainted by one's personal quibbles. Seneca once said: "To escape the things that torment you, what you need is not to be at a different location, but to be somebody else."

Of course, there are some looking for the excuse to be another person when on vacation, but there is no need to go to a far away place simply to change one's person – that is something that is far too important a task to only be done when abroad. Those who want to go on vacation not to permanently improve their character, but to take on a new personality as if it is a mask that can be changed are utterly deluded. Our character is who we are, not our beliefs and thoughts, but also our biases, habits and mannerisms.

It is not only what we are born, but also what we make ourselves. Free will is ours and therefore we have not only the right, but also the duty to choose our own paths in life and to do so purposefully. There is no difference between a bridled mule doomed to follow wherever it is lead and an individual who lives solely by the direction of the exterior world. Therefore, contemplation is a necessary feature in every life that is worthy of being called: "human," a life without contemplation is no different than that of an animal, for without free will a human is just another animal doomed to live by the dictates of its environment and instincts.

Epictetus' Encheiridion (The Manual for Living) begins by noting that there are some things in life that are in our power to control and those are our own acts, while there are other things in life that are not in our power to control. To live freely and well, it is necessary for each individual to recognize those things and to work via his own free will to improve those things that can be controlled while not letting those things that control is not possible over vex us too much.

This brings me to my final point: it is not an external object that brings us annoyance; rather it is the individual person who annoys himself. Whenever each person says: "That annoys me," all that we are doing is allowing it to effect them, and saying it is even worse because the person is letting whatever vexes him to become the focus of his attention, hence giving it more power over him. Sartre was wrong when he said "hell is the other person." On the contrary, hell is the self and our own actions, because hell is a door locked from the inside, a state of mind that each individual allows himself to be trapped in.

Surely, there are certain things that we cannot control, the room next door may be blaring music that has no artistic quality whatsoever and it may have the power to vex us. But, what we still have is the power of how we react to it, will we let it annoy us to the point of being reading to flay the individual responsible or will we, with the power of free will, find a far more appropriate response?

Hence, any vacation that is spent simply trying to escape our surroundings is simply travel in vain because it is not our surroundings that are the source of our troubles, but how we let ourselves be affected by them. Without contemplation is our lives it is impossible to successfully use our free will in a manner that will make us capable of overcoming the briers and obstacles that we will find in front of us as we journey through life.

A vacation is as much a state of mind as it is the possibility of viewing exotic places so even if we may not be able to be in Florida, it is possible for us to live through proper contemplation in the same state of bliss as the person reclining in a sun-drenched beach, but with one extra bonus: the contemplative vacation need never end.

Harrison Searles is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at hsearles@student.umass.edu.

(MCT)

This vacation keep your friendships and your sanity intact by following these simple rules of the road for spring getaways. For starters, avoid fast food fish, change drivers often and try to be respectful of your fellow travellers and their musical selections.

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

It's that time of the year again, when college students everywhere are done with midterms and aching to get out of their sleepy hometowns and off to warm beaches rife with scantily clad beachgoers. On a poor college kid's budget, how are they supposed to afford this trip? Here's an idea - pile a bunch of friends together in a car and head out!

Seems perfect, but even the best-laid plans can hit obstacles. Here are just a few tips to achieve the best and most memorable road trip, without all of the hassles.

Talk to your fellow travelers about specifics before you even get in the car. How are you splitting up the costs of gas? And don't forget about tolls, they add up very quickly. Keep change in the car for those lovely little stops. And, please, do not lose the toll tickets.

Don't eat crazy, exotic and sketchy foods at stops along the way. Fish from a fast food place might sound like a good idea, but a bad stomach ache plus motion (and the inevitable stop and go of rush hour traffic) makes a horrible, horrible combination. It's best to avoid food poisoning at all costs. You'll hate your life, and your friends won't be too thrilled either.

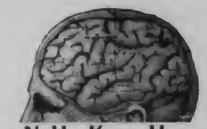
Try to be lenient with the music selection. Making CDs and iPod playlists beforehand is a good idea, but realize that everyone has different tastes. So go easy on your friends when they're listening to music that makes your ears bleed, chances are they'll experience the same thing once or twice with your selection.

Pay attention to the small stuff; it is the unexpected things that make the trip fun and memorable. An exit that leads to the world's biggest ball of twine? Stop and take a look. It can make for a funny story and even funnier Facebook pictures.

Keep the car clean; don't just stick the responsibility on the car owner. In fact, bring a few plastic bags along for the ride for trash, and throw them out when you stop for gas. The car owner will appreciate it, and you will appreciate not breathing in the noxious fumes of that days-old milkshake that's buried under mounds of wrappers.

Be open to detours; they're pretty much inevitable. Consider bringing a GPS along, rather than just a map or printed directions, they adapt to road changes and will direct you back to the correct road and onwards to your destination.

Go with people you're comfortable with. This seems like a given, but things tend to change when you're essentially in a 4-by-6 box with the same people for more than 10 hours.



Take turns driving, especially if you're on a long trip. It's better to be safe than sorry; just stop when you're tired, your friends will understand. Getting up and changing seats, stretching your legs, is a good idea, and will even help the trip to move along a little faster.

Pack sunscreen, no matter where you're going. Of course, this is especially important if you're going to a warm-weather destination. It won't be cute if, when talking to the hottest guy or gal on the beach, only half of your body is burnt to a crisp because you hung your arm out of the window.

The most important tip is simply to just have fun. Most college kids only get four spring breaks, four weeks total, to go out and just be young with your friends and others your own age. After this comes the real world, which for most doesn't include a few yearly vacations. So just try to enjoy your time, have great times with friends and make some lasting memories!

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kaitlynm@student.umass.edu.

Great eats and tasty treats just over the bridge

NoHo Know How

COURTESY SPOLETORESTAURANTS.COM

Spoleto in downtown Northampton specializes in Italian cuisine and pasta dishes. It's a great date spot to take your sweetheart and offers a $20 three course meal special including appetizer, dinner and dessert.

BRENDAN MURPHY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On a whirlwind tour of downtown Northampton eateries, there are five places right on Main Street that simply can't be missed: Local Burger, Amanouz Café, Spoleto, Fitzwilly's and Ben and Bill's Chocolate Emporium. Each offers a unique flavor that can't be found anywhere else. This week the Daily Collegian got a chance to sample these fine places to chow down. In a college town, it's essential to know where the best places are to take a date out, grab a bite or maybe just hang out and relax. The best may not necessarily be in Amherst but you can fine haute-cuisine a hop skip and a jump away over the Calvin Coolidge Bridge. Here's a rundown of five NoHo flavors worth trying out.

BEST BURGER: LOCAL BURGER

Finding a place that will cook a legit rare burger is about as hard as finding a blue diamond in a coal mine - it doesn't happen often at all, but it does happen. Local Burger is that blue diamond. They're not afraid to serve their hand-pressed flame-grilled burgers rare (or well-done) to their customers.

Additionally, they serve local meat from a family farm in Easthampton on their menu. Couple this with hand cut fries, fresh and crisp veggies on the patties, and maybe a side of their famous fried pickle slices, and that's a winning formula for the best burger joint in NoHo. The environment is easygoing, relaxed and comfortable. Best of all, it's BYOB and open until 3 a.m. on Fridays.

BEST LUNCH SPOT: AMANOUZ CAFE

Amanouz is another laid back eatery that's affordable and delicious. It offers outdoor dining which creates a perfect Northampton experience, especially in spring and summer. Nothing on the menu, including their dinner specials, is over $10. Their spinach and feta pie on the appetizer menu is crazy good. Fresh spinach and feta cheese baked in flaky phyllo dough only runs $3.25 and will have patrons coming back for more. Their stuffed grape leaves known as Dolma are some of the best one can find in the valley. Moreover, Amanouz Café is the perfect place to grab lunch. Enjoy a cup of their soup du jour and a sandwich at a table on the outdoor patio without breaking the bank. Their shawarma is chock full of marinated lamb and beef slices, broiled tomatoes, parsley, onions and lettuce with tahini sauce in a baguette or pita. Nothing says springtime in NoHo better than a cup of split pea soup and shawarma on a Saturday afternoon at Amanouz.

COURTESY AMANOUZ.COM

Amanouz features mediterrenean fare with a Moroccan theme. Their menu boasts exotic and flavorful dishes from shawarma to couscous, dolma and crepes, all under $10.

BEST DATE SPOT: SPOLETO

Spoleto is one of the more upscale eateries of NoHo which takes both reservations and walk-ins. Almost everything on the menu is top-notch, and the food quality is excellent. The atmosphere is perfect to bring a significant other out for a night on the town. They offer a $20 nightly special that includes any appetizer, entrée and dessert. Spoleto's specialty is Italian food, and their pasta dishes are to die for. Most of the time they offer a stuffed artichoke dinner special that can't be passed up. Top off dinner with one of their famous margaritas that runs around 8 bucks and includes fresh squeezed lime juice and top-shelf tequila. Spoleto is a fantastic place to take a date out.

BEST PUB FOOD: FITZWILLY'S

Fitzwilly's is a great place to grab a drink and some classic American pub food. Their fare includes burgers, sliders, chicken sandwiches or burritos and fajitas. Sandwiches are served with choice of French fries, cole slaw or potato salad and the price range is around 7-8 bucks. Their "South of the Border" selection includes tacos, enchiladas or burritos, and the blackened chicken burrito is a must try. Ask for the chipotle Tabasco, which compliments the meal perfectly. Fitzwilly's wouldn't be complete without the quintessential Irish pub dish, shepherd's pie. Seasoned ground beef with mashed potatoes and corn is a comfort food that leaves feelings of well-being upon consumption. Other pub favorites include spinach and artichoke dip, nachos, beer can chicken, jambalaya or meat loaf. After dinner, the Toasted Owl is right next door if the mood strikes for a cold glass of beer. Fitzwilly's is great for American pub food and hard to miss. Look for the huge sign on the right after going under the bridge to enter NoHo.

BEST CANDY SHOP: BEN AND BILL'S CHOCOLATE EMPORIUM

Last on the list of the Main Street Tour of NoHo is Ben and Bill's. This place serves hand-made, hand-dipped bon bons. Whether it's truffles, chocolate covered cherries, gummy bears, sour patch kids or anything the sweet tooth can crave, Ben and Bill's has it all. They serve a wide variety of delicious, premium ice creams as well. It's near-impossible to walk in for a cone and walk out without a bag of candy. The intoxicating smell of melted chocolate will make patrons feel like Augustus Gloop before he fell into the chocolate river at Willy Wonka's factory. Their fudge is fantastic as well.

For a winning combination, take a date to Amanouz for lunch or Spoleto for dinner, then hit Ben and Bill's for dessert. After that kind of wining and dining, she'll pretty much have to say yes ... to another date!

Brendan Murphy can be reached at brendanm@student.umass.edu.

Off The Wall Games
$12 Thursday Night Draft!
Look for us at ConBust at Smith College
March 26-28!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays
WARHAMMER 40,000
41 Russel St (Village Barn Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451
MAGIC The Gathering

Paddy Moloney and the Chieftains grace the FAC

HANNAH COHEN/COLLEGIAN

Paddy Moloney and the Chieftans played to a delighted audience at the Fine Arts Center on Wednesday. Their traditional reels and jigs were complimented by dancing and accompaniment on the harp, fiddle and bagpipe. The performers also blended the traditional Irish numbers with Bluegrass and Latin beats.

BY KATE MACDONALD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Grammy-winning Irish band The Chieftains along with their leader Paddy Moloney came to the Fine Arts Center Wednesday night. They began playing their traditional tunes after the audience was offered the customary Irish Guinness in the lobby.

The audience filed into the FAC, nearly filling every seat, even the balcony rows. Though most of the onlookers seemed to be of a mature age, there were quite a few college kids and even multiple young children in attendance. They were all there to have a good time, and Moloney and The Chieftains delivered.

After a FAC worker inspired raucous cheers from the crowd when she mentioned the importance of the band coming to play in March, exactly a week before St. Patrick's Day, the seven musicians took the stage. Though the band is usually comprised of four members, fiddler Sean Keane is not performing on this tour, choosing instead to spend time with his family.

The lights went down as the drone of the uilleann pipes, commonly called the Irish bagpipes, echoed off of the venue walls, ushering in the first of many Irish jigs. The soft, lilting tone began to pick up, keeping with the mostly fast-paced theme of the evening. Hoots and yelps came from various Chieftains as they began really feeling the music.

To the delight of many concertgoers, the first song, along with most of the others, also included a bit of visual entertainment in the form of Irish step dancers. Brothers Nathan and Jon Pilatzke along with Cara Butler danced in unison during many of the songs. During a solo song, Jon, a fiddler playing with the band, managed to dance a jig while seated and playing his fiddle. Nathan and Butler joined on chairs, creating their own style, even tapping up against the chair's legs. This was an obvious crowd pleaser, and elicited the loudest audience response of the evening, with a woman in the crowd taken aback, saying, "oh wow."

The brothers Pilatzke danced together on a number of jigs, as well. Their merriment was obvious, even while dancing they exchanged grins. This prompted many laughs and cheers, and one viewer shouted "Yeah Canada," an ode to their homeland. Jon seemed to get a laugh out of this, and took the time to make a comment about the recent Olympics, quipping to American fans, "Sorry about that hockey game, there."

Other special guests on the evening included Nashville natives Deanie Richardson and Jeff White, who played fiddle and guitar, respectively. They performed in every song, but had two particular solos together, a bluegrass waltz Richardson announced she learned from her grandfather, and a jig. One may not normally think of bluegrass as pretty, but the way Richardson played it, it sure was.

Also on stage was Triona Marshall on harp and keyboard. She served to add an ethereal air to many of the tunes, as did the Stephen P. Driscoll Memorial Pipe Band, who played drums and bagpipes, adding beautiful melodies to the songs.

The standout of the night, besides The Chieftains themselves, was Scottish singer Alyth McCormack. She first exhibited her deep, haunting voice in "Lullaby for the Dead," but really shined in "The Foggy Dew," about the British presence in Ireland, which Moloney brushed off as "a little trouble with the neighbors." She was also able to bring a Scottish style of music into the show, performing a few pieces in the form of "Scottish mouth music." In this style, she sung the words in Scots-Gaelic, but altered her voice to sound like rhythms and instruments while singing, lending a unique and almost unnatural sound to the song.

The theme of blending different types of music with typical Irish sounds was prevalent. The Chieftains performed an Irish "remix" of "Cotton Eye Joe," which Moloney deemed "the national anthem of Texas."

Many of their songs had Spanish and Mexican flavors to them, and came from the albums "Santiago" and "San Patricio," the latter of which is just days old. "San Patricio" is primarily filled with songs about an Irish battalion which fought for Mexico in the Mexican-American War, as they could not kill fellow Catholics. The group and guests performed "Guadalupe" and "The Sands of Mexico" with Mexican and Spanish flair, but always ending in an Irish reel.

By the end of their set, the audience was still rapt with attention. Even some of the ushers had taken seats in the hall to watch the band, who were accompanied by a team of young, Amherst-based Irish step dancers. After each of the band members played their own solo tunes (complete with audience foot stomping in place of percussion), a jig hailing from Celtic France ended the night on a high note, prompting many audience members to stand and dance.

As the viewers milled out, many spoke about the fast-flying feet of the dancers and hands of the fiddlers, all moving so fast they seemed to be blurs. Others spoke of interest in buying their newest album. One woman asked, "Wasn't that moving?" It was.

Forget the luck of the Irish, on Wednesday night at the FAC, Paddy Moloney and The Chieftains operated on pure talent.

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kattlynn@student.umass.edu.

CINEMARK
For advance tickets & showtimes visit
cinemark.com
or call 1-800-FANDANGO + Exp Code 1118#
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
FIRST MATINEE SHOWTIME (7 DAYS A WEEK) $5.25
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.50 • STUDENT $7.25 (WITH ID)
◆ ALICE IN WONDERLAND - REAL D 3D ($2.75 SURCHARGE) [PG13] 115 400 645 930
◆ GREEN ZONE [R] 115 410 700 945
◆ OUR FAMILY WEDDING [PG13] 145 435 735 1000
◆ REMEMBER ME [PG13] 105 420 725 1005
◆ SHE'S OUT OF MY LEAGUE [R] 130 425 720 1020
◆ ALICE IN WONDERLAND - 2D [PG] 210 305 455 550 740 835 1025
◆ AVATAR - 2D [PG13] 110 440 810
◆ BROOKLYN'S FINEST [R] 100 405 710 1010
COP OUT [R] 155 430 715 955
THE CRAZIES [R] 120 415 730 1030
CinéArts
SHUTTER ISLAND [R] 1255 400 705 1015
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

COURTESY FOX.COM/SONSOFTUCSON

Pathological liar and all-around deadbeat Ron Snuffkin, played by Tyler Labine, falls in with some bad company when he meets the Gunderson boys, three young troublemaking kids with absentee parents. Together they get into all kinds of shenanigans, demonstrating remarkable chemistry as a cast.

FOX's latest, 'Sons of Tucson' good for a cheap laugh

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

The latest half hour comedy, "Sons of Tucson," is set to premiere Sunday, March 14, at 9:30 pm. It's just one of some new shows Fox will be premiering to establish itself as a comedic powerhouse among the other great networks, as it already has the reality TV spot covered with megahit "American Idol."

"Sons of Tucson" is about a deadbeat with a low level job, Ron Snuffkin. He's living in his car, no family or money to speak of, and spends his days pathologically-lying in order to get out of every responsibility he has. He's approached by three young, troublemaking boys with absentee parents.

In order to establish themselves, and in order for Ron to get out of yet another mess he's gotten himself into with criminals, the four guys devise a plan in which Ron pretends to be their dad, while he finally gets that elusive roof over his head.

Ron is played by Tyler Labine, known for his work in "Invasion" and the funny "Reaper." A veteran of mediocre half hour comedies, Labine shines in this new role. He is spot on with his comedic timing, coming off as a young man trying to con his way through life. In various, short (and by short, we're talking seconds-long) scenes, the audience is eventually able to see that Ron has a heart, and could even learn to care for these young boys.

The Gunderson boys, ranging from about 8 to 14 years old, are played by Benjamin Stockham (Robbie), Frank Dolce (Gary) and Matthew Levy (Brandon). Through their various hijinks, they establish themselves as the dangerous youngster, the brains of the operation, and the dumb cute kid, respectively.

The crazy situations these boys get themselves into at home and school bring new meaning to the old phrase "boys will be boys."

The young newcomers have excellent chemistry together. It seems like the new millennium's version of "Malcolm in the Middle," with only one level-headed and ridiculous parental figure. This comes as no surprise, seeing as former "Malcolm" star Justin Berfield is an executive producer.

Not all of the cinematography is ideal, however. In various scenes in the pilot episode, the camera shakes. While it is not violent, it is noticeable. The rock score and soundtrack that accompany the show add to the carefree nature.

Overall, it seems to be a fairly promising show. The premise is amusing and will provide for some pretty laughable storylines. Some of the jokes seem overplayed, but they are funny. And the talent of the four male leads cannot be overlooked. Stockham, as the eight year-old Robbie, will probably be the breakout star of "Sons of Tucson." Every line and joke that comes out of his mouth is hit with near-precision.

Held against other shows in the genre, however, such as the likes of "The Office" and "30 Rock," it simply will not stand up. It is not seem to be a classic comedy that will go on for many years and remain a cult classic, like "Friends" or "Sex and the City." But it is a different, fresh story altogether and should not (and cannot) be compared. The timeslot it is slated to be in, however, is an untapped comedic time period.

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kaitlynm@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY FOX.COM/SONSOFTUCSON

The pilot, produced by "Malcom in the Middle" star Justin Berfield features juvenile hijinks and predictable (but still entertaining) jokes.

With a redneck grandma, an irresponsible father figure, a beautiful teacher and three loony boys running around, "Sons of Tucson" is sure to garner a few laughs. If all else fails, at least give Sunday's pilot a chance. Seeing a slightly overweight grown man ride a little girl's tiny pink bike is always a reliable, if cheap, laugh.

UMass faces Stony Brook in road stint

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

Having played five of its seven games at home this season, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team has yet to face a long road trip. That changes this weekend as UMass begins a six-game road stint stretching into April.

First on the calendar for the Minutewomen (3-4) is Stony Brook, which UMass takes on Saturday. Then, the Minutewomen will remain in New York and head to the state's capital the following Saturday to face Albany to round out the spring break schedule.

UMass is coming off a win against Yale to snap its three-game losing streak during its four-game homestand. Behind a strong defense and a possession-controlling offense, the Minutewomen seized the 9-5 win against the Bulldogs (1-3).

Sophomores Jackie Lyons, Nina Sarcona and Jesse O'Donnell accounted for all of UMass' scoring to lead the way. Lyons scored a pair of goals and added two assists, while Sarcona and O'Donnell each recorded hat tricks with three and four goals, respectively.

"[Last game] was a huge win, [Yale] was a team with a different style of game and we looked to adapt to that and still come up with the win," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "Going on the road will be a lot tougher but the last win helps up heading to Stony Brook."

The Seawolves, meanwhile, begin a three-game home stretch after playing three of their five games this season on the road. In its last two outings, Stony Brook fell against Johns Hopkins and American to drop to 1-4 this spring. In their only win, the Seawolves had their best offensive performance to defeat Duquesne, 16-8.

The biggest problem for the Seawolves this year has been a drop in production from the first half to the second half of games. Stony Brook's inconsistencies have produced 28 goals in the first period and only 18 goals in the second period. Its shot opportunities have also declined by 17 in the second half while its opponents' shots have increased by the same number.

In its last meeting with the Seawolves nearly a year ago, UMass outshot Stony Brook 34-16 en route to a 14-9 win. Then-sophomore Haley Smith scored a career-high six goals to lead the Minutewomen attack, including a pair of scores in the second half to spark a four-goal run.

Regardless of the Seawolves' struggles this season, Venechanos isn't overlooking them.

"Stony Brook is a really good team and they've been on the road a bunch," Venechanos said. "They've been playing a lot and they're battle tested, so it's going to be another tough matchup."

Albany will enter the matchup with UMass having played only four games, with two of those contests (Siena, Canisius) coming in the week leading up to the Minutewomen.

In their two games so far this season, the Great Danes suffered a closely-contested 17-14 loss to Hofstra on the road before exploding on offense for a 24-2 win over Niagara at home.

Albany has averaged 34 shots a game and has been efficient with its chances, holding a .559 shot percentage. Despite its success on offense, Albany has been dominated by its opponents on draw controls, amassing 22 and allowing 38.

The last occasion when the Minutewomen and the Great Danes met was back in 2007 in UMass' first-ever home game at McGuirk Alumni Stadium. Behind nine goals in the second half, the Minutewomen earned a 15-7 win to improve to 6-0 all-time against Albany.

Rather than vacation, UMass will get back to work this spring break as it looks for a pair of wins against Stony Brook and Albany on the road.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Jackie Lyons is second on UMass in goals scored with 12, behind team leader Jesse O'Donnell. Lyons will look to continue her success when the Minutewomen face Stony Brook.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

After breaking their three-game losing streak in their homestand, the Minutewomen will head on the road for a six-game stretch, beginning this weekend at Stony Brook.

Many UM players head back home

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

Going on the road tends to be a difficult task, no matter the sport or the team.

For the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team though, it may present little trouble if UMass continues to focus on team advantages and play its style of game.

The Minutewomen (3-4) capped off their four-game home stretch with a 9-5 victory over Yale. In the game, UMass worked out the kinks and did things different than it had in its three straight losses at home. In the upcoming road trip, the Minutewomen will look to keep the momentum going with things that helped them attain their last victory.

"It's going to be a challenge," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "We need to take it one game at a time."

Away-field advantage

The Minutewomen will have a unique advantage heading into Long Island this weekend, an advantage that many other traveling teams might not have.

For freshman Megan Connolly and junior Jackie Lyons, it will be a homecoming this Saturday against Stony Brook, as both are returning home for the match against the Seawolves (1-4).

"We've got a lot of kids from Long Island, so I think they're going to be excited to play against Stony Brook," Venechanos said. "We're expecting another top game."

The last time that one of the Minutewomen players returned home was in the season opener when Merritt Cosgrove went back to San Diego to face Northwestern. Despite being home, Cosgrove's efforts were not enough to earn the Maroon and White a victory.

Though Lyons and Connolly are the only players from Long Island to be returning, the roster includes another 14 players from the New York/New Jersey area.

Offensive possession

One of the keys to the game that the Minutewomen will be looking to continue after their match against the Bulldogs (1-3) is the offensive possession. Throughout the match against Yale, UMass was perfect on its clears, keeping the ball away from its opponent.

In the final nine minutes of the contest, the Minutewomen went on a four-goal run, keeping the ball on their side of the pitch.

UMass was also quite dominant on the draw control, beating Yale 11-to-5 in the category. Even after several draws for the Bulldogs, the Minutewomen stole the ball away to keep the possession.

In its first five games of the season, Stony Brook averaged just over seven goals a game, while UMass has averaged eight. The Minutewomen have not scored less than six goals since their first two contests against Northwestern and Holy Cross.

Gameplan

The last match against Yale featured a different UMass squad that followed the game-plan, which the Minutewomen will look to do again when they face Stony Brook.

"This is the first time we've followed the game-plan from top to bottom," Venechanos said after the game. "Usually in the past, it's one thing or the other. The attack kind of settled it away with their finishes and we took the shots we wanted to take."

One of the pieces to the game-plan came from attacker Jesse O'Donnell, who notched four goals (18 seasons total) in the match. Despite being on the road and being a target for her upcoming opponents, O'Donnell wants to do more of the same.

"I'm going to stick to the same game-plan and just keep working hard," O'Donnell said.

Over the course of the season, Venechanos has praised the importance of the draw controls in her strategy. Throughout the opening games of their respective seasons, the Minutewomen have the advantage over the Seawolves in the category (85-61).

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribner@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Senior Justin Braun led the UMass offense against Maine last weekend, scoring two goals in each win to help the Minutemen earn a playoff berth.

Busy spring break on tap for UMass

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

While the best offense can be a good defense, a team could also outscore its opponents by nearly 17 goals.

Going into this week's games against No. 13 Harvard (2-1) and Providence (0-2), the No. 19-ranked Massachusetts men's lacrosse team holds a 58-41 scoring advantage over opponents.

The Minutemen are 5-2 in the series against Harvard dating back to 2003. During that span, neither team has won at home.

In the last meeting, UMass won 7-3, but UMass coach Greg Canella doesn't foresee an easy victory against the Crimson this time.

"Harvard's excellent, they have athletes everywhere," Canella said. "[Harvard head coach and assistant coach] John Tillman and Kevin Warne have done a great job recruiting there. They're young in a lot of positions but they're very good defensively."

In its first three games, Harvard forced 18 total turnovers and allowed 8.68 goals per game.

A big part of UMass' offensive output (11 goals) comes from midfielder Bobby Hayes. Hayes started the season with four goals against Sacred Heart en route to scoring multiple goals in all four games this season.

Hayes' production puts him on pace for a career season, as he is one goal away from matching last season's career-high 12 goals in 15 games for the Minutemen (3-1).

Hayes leads a potent UMass offensive threat that ranks second in the nation in scoring offense (15.67 ppg) and points per game (25) in all of Division I.

Another aspect of what makes the midfielders so dangerous for the Minutemen is the emergence of junior Ryan Hantverk who also added four scores against the Pioneers (1-3), as well as two assists. Hantverk and Hayes have six combined turnovers this season on a UMass team that ranks fifth in the nation in turnovers per game with 13.33.

The solid ball control for the Minutemen bodes well for redshirt sophomore Tim McCormack. Four games into his first full season starting in goal, McCormack ranks second in the Colonial Athletic Association with a .479 save percentage, averaging 8.75 saves per game.

While the Minutemen have a conference-low 3.25 penalty minutes per game this season, UMass' .312 penalty-kill percentage is the worst in the CAA.

Attacks Dean Gibbons (10 goals), Jeff Cohen (eight goals) and Kevin Vaughan (five goals) lead a Crimson offense that should make for a high-scoring game when matched up against the Minutemen.

"It's going to be a challenge," Canella said. "They've probably had this [game] circled since we beat them at their place last season, so it should be a good game."

The Friars have 10 total goals to their credit in two games this season, five less than the Minutemen scored in their season opener alone.

Amherst is the last stop on a season-long four-game road trip for Providence, a team that hasn't had a winning record in the past five seasons despite making it to the NCAA tournament in 2006. Three players have a share of the team-lead in goals scored with two apiece. Frank Cicero and Tim Finnegan have each started in goal for Providence this season.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillme@student.umass.edu

BC hosts UM for first round series

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

Boston College has already defeated the Massachusetts hockey team on three occasions this year. The postseason, however, is the beginning of a whole new season.

This weekend, UMass will look to change its luck against BC in a best-of-three series in the opening round of the Hockey East tournament at Conte Forum. The Minutemen (18-16-0, 13-14-0 HEA) earned a playoff berth after winning both games against then-No. 17 Maine last weekend at Alfond Arena.

On Friday, UMass received multi-point nights from four different players to claim the 5-2 victory over the Black Bears. Senior Justin Braun scored two goals to lead the offensive attack, while junior goaltender Paul Dainton made 25 saves between the pipes.

The following night, the Minutemen began scoring early with three goals in the final 10 minutes of the first period. Braun recorded two more goals and Dainton made 35 saves to hold off the Maine offense long enough to earn the playoff-clinching win.

The Eagles (21-10-3, 16-8-3 HEA), meanwhile, faced conference-leader New Hampshire in a home-and-home series over the weekend. In the first game on Friday, BC and the Wildcats battled to a 3-3 tie in Durham. The Eagles were in control heading into the third period with a 3-0 lead, but UNH erased the deficit with three goals to force the deadlock. In another closely-contested game on Saturday, BC broke a tie by scoring with less than three minutes left to play in the final frame to earn the 3-2 win.

"We've got a great weekend to come off. BC had a win and a tie so they've got a good weekend to come off," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "I'm not thinking about that, I think that this is a whole new season."

The Eagles swept the Minutemen in the regular season with 3-1 and 7-1 wins at the Mullins Center, along with a 2-1 overtime win at Conte Forum. Including the three wins in the regular season, the Eagles are 42-10-3 all-time against the Minutemen and have won six of the last seven meetings.

"We've shown we can be a terrific team, but we've also shown our dark side," Cahoon said. "I'm hoping this weekend we show our bright side and we're good from start to finish. That's the only way we can prepare for BC and not get carried away with what's happened behind us."

The two teams first met in the Hockey East tournament in 1995 in UMass' first playoff appearance. Despite defeating BC 5-4 in that play-in game, the Minutemen would lose to Maine in the quarterfinals.

In 2005, UMass and the Eagles would meet again in the conference tournament. This time, however, BC would get the edge, winning 2-1 and 5-1 to advance past the quarterfinals. After defeating the Minutemen, the Eagles would go on to win the Hockey East tournament title.

Conte Forum has given UMass trouble, where it hasn't won in the past few years. The last win for the Minutemen on BC's ice was back on Nov. 17, 2007 by a score of 3-2. Dainton made 30 saves in the contest and has five 30-plus save games against the Eagles, including a career-high 39 in a 4-3 overtime win on Nov. 22, 2008.

Cahoon realizes the difficulty of winning games on the road in the playoffs, but feels his team has the ability.

"We've got to want it more, win more battles, make more plays, and we've got to just find a way to outcompete them," Cahoon said. "It's a tall order but it's doable."

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

After beating Albany 11–6 at Garber Field on Tuesday, the Minutemen host Harvard and Providence this upcoming week before heading on the road.

UMass travels to take on Richmond

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

This is uncharted territory.

For the first time since 2002, the Massachusetts men's basketball team is playing a second game in the Atlantic 10 tournament tonight when it takes on third-seeded Richmond in Atlantic City.

After the No. 11-seeded Minutemen (12-19) upset sixth-seeded Charlotte Tuesday night, it punched its ticket to Atlantic City and an opportunity to compete for the conference's automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament.

Richmond (24-7), which already appears to have a spot in the NCAA tournament locked up, had a bye in the first round of the A-10 tournament. UMass travelled to Richmond on Jan. 13 and after forcing overtime, fell to the Spiders, 70-63. Prior to the loss, the Minutemen had won three in a row in the series with Richmond.

The Spiders are led by a trio of scorers who all average double-digit points per game. Kevin Anderson leads the way with 17.8 points per game, followed by David Gonzalvez (14.3 ppg) and Justin Harper (10.7 points ppg). Anderson also leads the team with 7.54 assists per game and plays nearly every minute (36.7 minutes per game) for Richmond.

Defense is emphasized on the Spiders team as they allow 61.4 ppg and are strong defending against 3-point shots, allowing just over 29 percent on the season. All around, opponents have struggled hitting shots against Richmond, netting 39 percent of shots compared to the Spiders' 44.6 percent.

The Minutemen will rely on senior Ricky Harris who has carried the team to their past two victories over Rhode Island and Charlotte with an average of 26 ppg. In the last 10 games, Harris has averaged 23.7 ppg.

UMass will also rely on its defense just as it did against the 49ers. Despite the Minutemen shooting only 32.1 percent from the field in the game, Charlotte was held to 37.1 percent. A number of key defensive stops down the stretch by the Minutemen gave them an opportunity to pull out the victory.

With its first streak of A-10 tournament wins on the line, UMass looks to advance to the semifinals, where it would face the winner of tonight's game between second-seeded Xavier and seven-seeded Dayton.

The Minutemen lost to both Dayton, 96-68, and Xavier, 87-79, earlier this season.

No. 11-seeded UMass holds the lowest seed it has ever had in the A-10 tournament, a tournament in which the Minutemen possess a 30-28 record in. The 30 wins are second to only Temple, which has gone 49-19 in A-10 tournament games since the tournament began in 1977.

The Minutemen held the No. 3 seed back in 2008, earning a first-round bye, but were knocked out when Charlotte upset them, 69-65, in the quarterfinals. The loss was the sixth time in a row UMass had fallen in its first game of the tournament, and after last season's 69-65 loss to Duquesne, the streak was extended to seven years.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Javorn Farrell has been a major contributor for UMass in only his freshman season. Farrell recorded four rebounds and four assists to help the Minutemen defeat Charlotte.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Senior Ricky Harris is the driving force behind the playoff charge for the Minutemen. In the opening round win against Charlotte, Harris finished with 24 points for UMass.

Harris leading UM in postseason run

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

Even as a freshman, Ricky Harris built a reputation on stepping up for the Massachusetts men's basketball team when the postseason is on the line.

He scored seven points in seven minutes against Alabama in the first round of the National Invitational Tournament on March 13, 2007. He converted 5-of-6 from the free-throw line, including one with 14.3 seconds left to put UMass up, 82-80.

The Crimson Tide drained a 3-pointer at the buzzer to send the game into overtime after then-sophomore Chris Lowe converted on a free throw of his own. The Minutemen eventually battled back and won, 89-87.

As a sophomore, Harris led UMass with 23 points as a starter in the 2008 NIT Quarterfinals before a 16-point performance against Florida in the Semifinals. His contribution helped his former coach, Travis Ford, get the Minutemen to the NIT Championship against Ohio State, where they fell short in a 92-85 loss.

In the ideal situation, Harris would want his last season to be his best, but with UMass in rebuilding mode, just getting into the Atlantic 10 tournament was going to be a challenge for the second year in a row.

The Minutemen needed either a win over Rhode Island or a Saint Joseph's loss in order to avoid missing the A-10 tournament.

Similar to years past, Harris lived up to the challenge with 28 points on Saturday against URI as he lifted UMass (12-19, 5-11 A-10) to a 69-67 victory over the Rams. He also hit the biggest shot of the game, a layup with three seconds remaining to give the Minutemen the win and a first-round matchup with Charlotte.

Harris showed once again that he wasn't ready for his last game wearing the No. 5 jersey for UMass. Even with a 5-for-13 shooting night, he finished the game with 24 points thanks to 11-of-12 free-throw shooting, boosting his team to its first A-10 tournament win since 2002.

The Minutemen will get to play third-seeded Richmond for the first time this season.

"Ricky Harris is really leading us and playing like a senior should play in tournament play," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said following the win over Charlotte.

Throughout the season, Harris has been frustrated with UMass losing as many games as it has. However, he never gave up on the inexperience or struggles facing the Minutemen with the hope of leaving his legacy on some sort of positive note, even if it isn't the NCAA tournament.

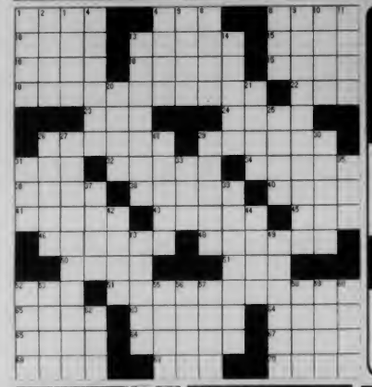
Harris was the leading scorer in 10 of the last 13 games with at least 20 points in nine of those contests. Even when he scored the team-high in points during that stretch, UMass was still 4-6.

In fact, the two times he scored at least 30 points (Feb. 6 against URI and March 3 against La Salle), the Minutemen lost. To make matters worse, they lost point guard David Gibbs to a broken foot, which gave Kellogg no choice but to start Freddie Riley, giving UMass three freshmen in the starting lineup.

Regardless of the box score, Harris continued to work with the younger players and worked hard in practice while staying optimistic.

His patience eventually paid off.

Freshman Javorn Farrell had two blocks in the win against the 49ers while forward Terrell Vinson hit a jumper to put the Minutemen up by three points with 54.8 seconds left in the game. UMass held on for the victory after Charlotte called a timeout and drew a technical foul for having six players out on the floor.



Even if Friday is the last time Harris ever puts on a uniform, he can leave knowing that he broke eight years of losing in the A-10 tournament in a year that was supposed to be about the future.

"It's unbelievable, and it's a pleasure to watch them," Harris said of his teammates following the first round of the A-10 tournament. "I wish I had another year, because next year they will be a good team with well-rounded individuals."

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

comics

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Streetcar
5. Not on
8. First World War plane
12. Certain something
13. Egg-shaped
15. Parisian airport
16. 13 in Roman numerals
17. Vitality
18. Stiff hair
19. Accidental
22. Atlantic food fish
23. Hearing organ
24. Bit
26. Disparaged
29. It's ruled by an empress
31. Standard operating procedure
32. Not late
34. Parisian river
36. Cobras
38. Crown
40. Dissolute man
41. Jewish unit of weight
43. Ancient Roman magistrate
45. Website address
46. Barren
48. Pass
50. A prisoner's room
51. Be mistaken
52. Floral necklace
54. Perceptible
61. Fabrics made from goat hair
63. Beside
64. Breakfast or supper
65. Select by ballot
66. A can for storing tea
67. Cobs of corn
68. Once again
69. An affirmative
70. Impolite

DOWN
1. Cab
2. Destroy
3. Operatic solo
4. An unmarried girl
5. Not under
6. Garrison
7. Half of ten
8. Mayday
9. Fraught with danger
10. Countertenor
11. Pair
13. Gorge
14. Fabric for jeans 20. Windmill blade
21. Not bottoms
25. Level
26. Modeled
27. Regard
28. Desiccated
29. Bird's nest
30. Habituate
31. Droop
33. Young boy
35. Moray
37. Economize
39. Hypersensitivity reaction
42. Grasp
44. Acquire deservedly
47. Pelvic
49. An introductory textbook
52. Magma
53. Black, in poetry
55. Kill
56. Cypher
57. Concludes
58. Boyfriend
59. Piecrust ingredient
60. If not
62. Stitch

Summer Session Just Got 50% BIGGER!!!

3 Sessions to Choose From:
- Session I: May 17 - June 7
- Session II: June 8 - July 13
- Session III: July 14 - August 17

Registration Begins March 15

Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net

UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

WHAT'S ON TAP AT THE AMHERST BREWING COMPANY?

Every Thursday
JOHN SHELDON'S MASTERS OF THE STRATOCASTER
DOWNSTAIRS 9 PM - 12 AM

Every Tuesday
LOST IN HD
UPSTAIRS ON THE BIG SCREEN

Monday March 15th
AMHERST JAZZ ORCHESTRA
DOWNSTAIRS 8:30 PM - 11 PM

Wednesday March 17th
ST. PATTY'S DAY DINNER
LOCAL CORNED BEEF & CABBAGE!

facebook
BOOK YOUR GRADUATION PARTY NOW!

24 N. PLEASANT
AMHERST MA
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

Think twice.
Borrow once.

Apply once and secure financing for your entire college career! Rest assured your local not-for-profit cooperative will be with you every step of the way.

UMassFIVE COLLEGE FEDERAL CREDIT UNION
800.852.5886
umassfive.org

Student Choice

Crunky Loafers

		8	3		1			6
7	4		8				1
1				9		2	5
6						5
	8			1		9
3		2	4	8		7		1
	3			2	7
		9	6		8		3	2
	1	6			5		4

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE

PUFFTON VILLAGE

Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from Umass

Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses

All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!

On site laundry,
off street parking.

Basketball and Tennis Courts.

Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!

Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.

Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com

Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub — chainsawsuit.com

Hark! a Vagrant by K. Beaton — harkavagrant.com

BASIC INSTRUCTIONS — How to Use Your Modest Internet Fame to Get What You Want — by Scott MEYER

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal by Zach Weiner — smbc-comics.com

I finally found a use for that Nobel Peace Prize.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 -
Attention! This is an urgent news horoscope! SPRING BREAK WOOOOO!

pisces Feb. 19 -
While you are on Spring Break, try to stay away from guacamole fiends.

aries Mar. 21 -
Swimming with manatees causes frustration and wild goosebump stories.

taurus Apr. 20 -
How many times a day do you check the time? Rarely does it miss you.

gemini May. 21 -
On your journey home, always break for squirrels and weird guys with duffel bags.

cancer Jun. 22 -
If you could count to ten, I would be shocked and appalled.

leo Jul. 23 -
Spelling your name properly takes a lot of effort. Apply this to your shoe tieing.

virgo Aug. 23 -
Stay away from meat assortments, they contain cloned human flesh.

libra Sept. 23 -
Do not mind the Aquafina bottle, it is merely happy to see another smiling face.

scorpio Oct. 23 -
Your computer will never love you back no matter how many gigs you give it a night.

sagittarius Nov. 22 -
It is important to respect all kinds of textiles, they are comfortably flammable.

capricorn Dec. 22 -
Mentos may be the freshmaker, but only a true wingman can be a playmaker.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

FOR RENT

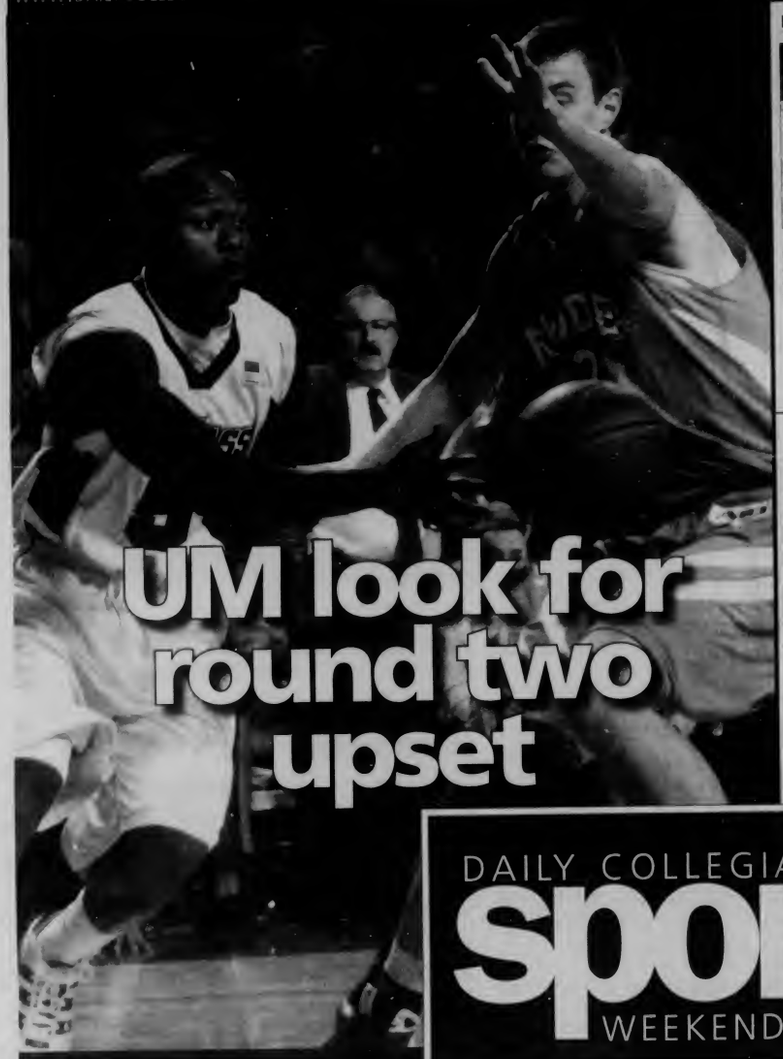
Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

TUTORING SERVICES

Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats, GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 Jboid42@yahoo.com

SERVICES



Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends From $89 Complete. montrealExpress.net MontrealBlowout.com 781-979-9001

ACTIVITIES

Bartenders needed for FT/PT positions. No experience required. Earn $20-$70 per hour. Call us at 617-849-8074

UM look for round two upset

HOCKEY

The Minutemen travel to Conte Forum for a best-of-three series against Boston College in the quarterfinals of the Hockey East tournament.

SEE PAGE 12

MEN'S LAX

UMass hosts Harvard and Providence at Garber Field over spring break week to continue its three-game homestand.

SEE PAGE 12

DAILY COLLEGIAN sports WEEKEND EDITION

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Not Published

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 59 LOW: 45 www.DailyCollegian.com MONDAY, MARCH 22, 2010

CampusLIVE launches video chat service

Online chat alternative aims to connect students via web

By Nick Bush
Collegian Staff

Five minutes on ChatRoulette can be very revealing – sometimes too revealing.

The former University of Massachusetts students at CampusLIVE have an answer for those who feel that the video chat options currently in existence are a bit too inconsistent (or creepy) for their tastes.

The company has announced its latest development VideoChat, which launches today on CampusLIVE.com, seeking to connect college students from campuses across the country via a live, online video chat platform.

The CampusLIVE team "has given college students an answer to their problems with ChatRoulette: filtering options that eliminate perverts and increase female usage," which aim to place the company at the forefront of online chat technology, according to a press release sent yesterday.

"Over time, we will allow students to filter their partners by campus, gender and interests," said Michael Miklavic, CampusLIVE's director of product development.

Students will have the choice of limiting their video chat to only UMass students, but can also opt to include the web cams from more than 200 other schools, including Boston College, University of New Hampshire, Northeastern University and Florida State University.

Soon, students will have the ability to swap personal information if they like who they see on the other end of the webcam.

Users will have the chance to add those they meet on the VideoChat network to a list of "favorite people," so that they can connect with them again in the future.

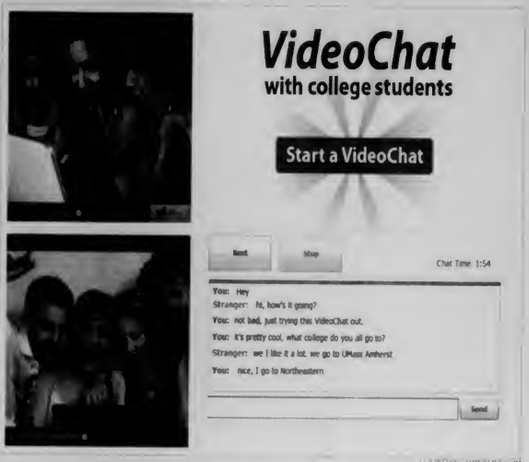
The service will also allow students to pick specific Facebook friends with which to video chat, allowing individuals to talk to one another across campus and around the world.

This aims to offer another option for couples and other chatters that, until now, have chosen Skype and similar programs.

"We'd like to offer students an alternative," said Ryan Durkin, CampusLIVE's COO, "a place where students can go and meet new people from across campus and throughout the country."

Founded in the Southwest Residential Area in 2007, CampusLIVE has grown to incorporate nearly 200 colleges across the county, with more than 2 million unique visitors a month on the company's website.

After raising more than $300,000 of capital in January, the Internet startup is now looking to expand its offerings to students beyond specialized homepages and restaurant menus, and into the territory of established online companies, such as ChatRoulette and eBay's Skype.



"VideoChat is the first of numerous upcoming developments of which we have been working on in the LIVE communication space," said Boris Revsin, CampusLIVE's CEO.

"We've seen a shift in communication over the past several months in the college demographic. Students are interested in expanding beyond simply using Facebook for all of their social media needs."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian and CampusLIVE are currently partnering to bring UMass students the Collegian's online local dining guide, which launched last week on Dailycollegian.com.

CampusLIVE VideoChat can be found at www.campuslive.com/umass/videochat.

Nick Bush can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY CAMPUSLIVE.COM

VideoChat, launched today on CampusLIVE.com, seeks to connect college students from campuses across the country via a live, online video chat platform.

UHS receives accreditation for quality health care service

JENNIFER CASEY/COLLEGIAN

University Health Services was granted a three-year term accreditation by the AAAHC, the maximum term of certification for excellence in health care services in an ambulatory setting.

By Jennifer Heshion
Collegian Staff

Following an extensive review process, University Health Services at the University of Massachusetts was certified by the Accreditation Association for Ambulatory Health Care, recognizing the organization's excellence in offering high-quality health care services.

UHS was granted a three-year accreditation term by the Accreditation Association for Ambulatory Health Care, a private, non-profit organization established in 1979 which has become the preeminent leader in developing standards which enhance the quality of health care services in an ambulatory setting.

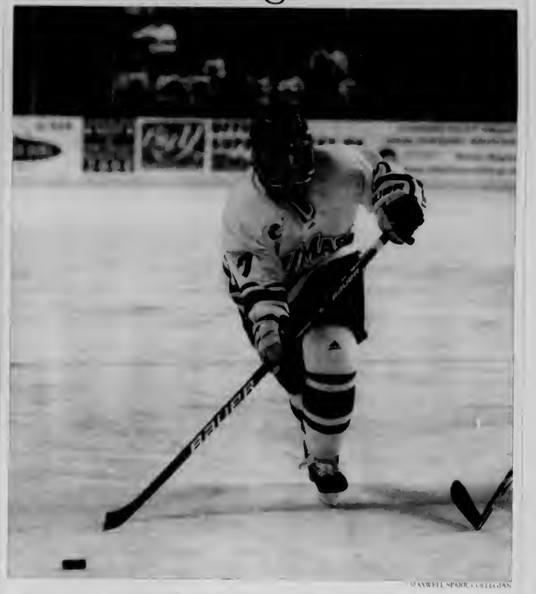
According to the organization's official website, the AAAHC was formed to assist the various ambulatory health care organizations in improving the quality of care provided to patients.

In addition to an official review by the AAAHC's surveyors consisting of physicians, nurses and administrators, all of whom have extensive experience in the ambulatory health care field, the accreditation process also involves a self-assessment conducted by the health care organization.

Certification by the AAAHC is specifically awarded to health care groups providing medical or diagnostic services in settings where overnight stays are not usually required, such as university and community health centers, as well as group medical and dental practices.

The three-year term awarded to UHS is the maximum length accreditation granted by the AAAHC.

With terms ranging between six months and three years, accreditation by the AAAHC is a voluntary process by which a health care organization can measure their performance, as well as the quality of the services they provide, against the nationally recognized standards as detailed in the "AAAHC's Accreditation Handbook for Ambulatory Health Care."



The core standards of which the health care organization must meet in order to receive accreditation from the AAAHC include the following categories: Rights of Patients, Governance, Administration, Quality of Care Provided, Quality Management and Improvement, Clinical Records, and Infection Prevention and Control and Safety and Health Information, as well as Facilities and Environment.

For the staff at UHS, the accreditation is both a symbol and a welcomed acknowledgment of their commitment to the health care field and for the education and referral services of which the UHS staff provide for UMass students, faculty and staff.

"UHS' mission is to provide quality health care for the University community," said UHS executive director Bernette A. Melby. "Scrutiny and consultative feedback from an independent, not-for-profit group benefits both the health center and those we serve."

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu.

Wellman goes Wild

MAXWELL SPARR/COLLEGIAN

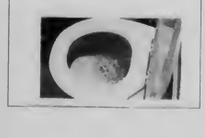
Sophomore Casey Wellman chose to forego his final two years of eligibility last week when he signed a two-year, free-agent contract with the NHL's Minnesota Wild.

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

Within less than a week of his sophomore season ending, Casey Wellman is making an impact on the ice again.

In his first game as a professional, after signing a two-year entry-level contract with the National Hockey League's Minnesota Wild, the former Massachusetts hockey player recorded an assist within his first 10 minutes of playing time at the NHL level.

With UMass' season coming to an end last Saturday with its loss to eventual Hockey East tournament champion Boston College, the Wild signed Wellman as a free agent in an attempt to get younger players.



After finishing a successful sophomore campaign with 22 goals and 23 assists, Wellman made his NHL debut on Friday night against the Columbus Blue Jackets. In the second period of the Wild's 4-2 loss, Wellman assisted Chuck Kobasew to give Minnesota a 2-0 lead at the time. Wellman also played over 11 minutes and took two shots in the Wild's 4-3 victory on Sunday.

"Casey is a skilled, offensive forward who shoots the puck," Wild general manager, Chuck Fletcher, said in the team's press release. "He was a highly sought-after free agent, and we are excited he chose to sign with us."

Wellman, a Brentwood, Calif., native, had a strong two-year career as a Minuteman, finishing with 34 goals and 45 assists. His 11 goal, 23 assist freshman season earned him All-Rookie Team Honors.

Prior to playing at UMass, Wellman played two years with the Cedar Rapids RoughRiders of the United States Hockey League. During that time, he totaled 69 points (30 goals) in 118 games.

See WELLMAN on page 6

ARTS & LIVING

"What's My Pee Telling Me?"

When nature calls, take note of the subtle messages your pee is telling you. Learn more in the new book about how to interpret urine color and odor.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Minutemen fall to Spiders in A-10

After winning its first Atlantic 10 tournament game in eight years, UMass fell short of extending that streak to two games when they lost to Richmond, 77-22.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Alex Perry wants to revive the lost art of old-fashioned dating.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Go to DailyCollegian.com to check out the baseball season preview and roster breakdown.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 36

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Jotmon
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Cal Scannell
COMICS EDITOR Andrew Witts
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elwe Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ellie Rubyn-Miller
ASSISTANT COMICS Domonic Mei
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Asser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cody
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, the Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson
COPY EDITOR
Caitlin Quinn
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Dan Centola

Swarthmore College reacts to Chile

THE PHOENIX
VIA COLLEGE NEWS NETWORK

On Feb. 27, just a month after the community of Swarthmore, Pa., gathered in support of those affected by the earthquake in Haiti, another earthquake — recorded as the fifth largest in history according to USA Today — devastated Chile, leaving hundreds of people dead and displacing 1.5 million more.

Through the efforts of Deivid Rojas '11, associate professor of Spanish Aurora Camacho de Schmidt and the dean's office, a gathering and moment of silence was organized for the following Thursday afternoon, March 4 in the Scheuer Room.

Garikai Campbell '90, acting dean of students, opened the event. "We hope that our gathering today can serve as a first moment to come together in reflection, in remembrance, in honor and in service to those who have suffered loss," he said.

The event was the first effort taken in mobilizing the college in support of Chile. This week, various student organizations, such as Enlace, I-20 and Coalition for a Free Haiti, plan to jumpstart their efforts to support those people in Chile who have been displaced.

During the first days after the earthquake, however, Rojas and Camacho de Schmidt found the response of the student body to the earthquake surprising. Nothing was actually being planned on campus a couple days after the earthquake struck. Rojas said. Jennifer Marks-Gold, International Students and Scholars Advisor, also didn't "get the sense of urgency in the same way [as with Haiti]."

"It's hard to bring Chile as much into the spotlight, because the damages weren't as bad as Haiti, the death toll wasn't as high. It's a country that has the capability of helping itself," said Tanya Rosenblut '12, a member of ENLACE who has family in Chile and used to live there.

Known as the most earthquake-prone country in the region, Chile is also considered the most earthquake-prepared country in Latin America. Buildings were built to sustain large shocks and children were exposed to quake drills at young ages. But this particular earthquake — with a terrifying magnitude of 8.8 — tore Chile apart and led to further aftershocks and tsunamis, destroying more buildings and homes. On March 1, Chile's President, Michelle Bachelet, estimated the death toll to be around 711.

Even though this quake took significantly fewer lives than the one that devastated Haiti, it did not stop the dean's office from taking immediate action, Campbell said. The Sunday after the earthquake struck, the deans put together a short list of students who could have been directly or indirectly affected by the natural disaster.

"We knew that we wanted to act quickly to recognize what people were going through and to acknowledge that we wanted to do something," Campbell said.

Marks-Gold noted that there are no international students from Chile currently attending Swarthmore. There were, however, several students who had family and friends in the region. The dean's office checked in with those students right away. All students' families were safe.

Rojas was particularly concerned about his uncle, who had moved to Chile from Columbia last summer with his wife. Connecting with his uncle as soon as he could, Rojas discovered that his uncle's house on the coast of Chile was completely flooded, but that he and his family were safe.

"I've never heard my uncle cry," Rojas said at the gathering. "He was crying on the phone saying how his new home had been completely destroyed. And I asked him, 'So what are your plans now? Do you plan to move back to Columbia? What are you going to do?' And before the conversation got cut off, he said, ... 'The people of Chile, they're very resistant, they're very resistant, they have a lot of strength.'"

Camacho de Schmidt, though not of Chilean descent, has always felt a particular connection with Chile, she said. Immediately after news of the earthquake reached her, she got in touch with her Chilean friends and colleagues to make sure their family and friends were safe.

"We are in solidarity with the people of Chile," she said at the moment of silence event on March 4.

For the past two weeks, Camacho de Schmidt has taken an active role in promoting awareness of the earthquake as well as of Chilean history and culture. "What is important for me as a professor is that we continue to know Chile to the best of our abilities," she said.

She encourages students and faculty to attend Villanova University's Festival de Poesía from March 25 to 27, which just recently turned into a fundraiser for Chile.

Thus far, in part due to the recent break, no future fundraising events have been planned on campus specifically to support relief efforts in Chile. Student-run clubs are still in the beginning stages of brainstorming events. The dean's office is also willing to support any efforts that are in the works.

"I think because there wasn't a Chile organization beforehand, it's just very overwhelming to bring together efforts," Rosenblut said. "It's going to take awhile, but I think it will work out."

ENLACE is planning to circulate collection boxes around campus this week and next, Rosenblut said. They hope to have one at Pub Nite tonight and one at an upcoming ENLACE party.

Rojas also hopes to organize some type of auction to raise money and awareness or an event similar to the Haiti Charity Ball that was held on Jan. 26. The Coalition for a Free Haiti plans to incorporate Chile into their future events and awareness campaign, Jacqueline Bailey-Ross '12, co-founder of the group, said in an e-mail.

"Everybody is looking to collaborate, because everybody understands that that's one of the ways we can get the best work done," Campbell said.

While he has not had the chance to touch base yet with student organization leaders, he is confident that the student community will "find ways of being supportive and find ways of repairing."

Students of Swarthmore College gathered for a moment of silence on March 4, in support of and out of respect for those who had been affected by the earthquake in Chile.

Virginia college students get vocal for equal rights in state

Letter from attorney general incites fury among students

THE DAILY TITAN
VIA COLLEGE NEWS NETWORK

Virginia college students were outraged after the state's attorney general said that Virginia's public colleges shouldn't ban discrimination against gay employees.

The letter from Attorney General Ken Cuccinelli II was released just before the students' spring break began. This hasn't stopped the students from expressing their anger online and to their student body representatives.

Almost 7,000 students have joined a Facebook page titled, "WE DON'T WANT DISCRIMINATION IN OUR STATE: UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES" and have organized a rally for March 23.

Matthew Jarvis, California State Fullerton political science professor says something like this isn't likely to happen in California.

"I'm not as worried about discrimination based on sexual orientation being a problem in a California university," Jarvis said. "If they said we couldn't ban it, it's like, so what? We weren't going to do it anyway. Not banning is different than being forced to do so."

While Jarvis is not as worried about discrimination in Calif., he thinks many other states, especially those who don't support gay rights, may see this opportunity in Virginia as a way to discriminate freely.

"Some universities might want to discriminate against gays or lesbians if only they could, if only the state would let them," Jarvis said. "While I'm generally not as concerned about it in academia as I would be in most other walks of life like government hiring, among other things ... it still would be a cause for concern."

Some CSUF students, like 19-year-old psychology major Laura Burril, feel that Cuccinelli shouldn't be in power.

"I really think that the schools should just drop [the issue] all together and call Cuccinelli out for the obvious homophobia he's showing," Burril said. "Someone who has such a bias against a certain sexual orientation shouldn't be allowed to hold a high position."

Other powerful officials in Virginia, like Gov. Bob McDonnell (R) and former Gov. Jerry Baliles (D), have spoken openly about Cuccinelli's letter.

McDonnell supports Cuccinelli. A spokesperson for McDonnell said that Cuccinelli's opinion is consistent with all prior opinions from other attorney generals for over 25 years. Although he backs Cuccinelli's letter, he said that he would "consider" supporting legislation that would extend legal protections based on sexual orientation.

Baliles, on the other hand, doesn't support Cuccinelli and wrote a legal response to his letter.

Professors and deans in the Virginia public university system don't plan on heeding Cuccinelli's advice, and Jarvis believes this is because most public universities would lose money if they discriminated.

Burril predicts disaster if the universities listened to Cuccinelli.

"They realize that if they discriminate against students [and professors] based on sexual orientation, they'll lose money and students and [it will] possibly cause them to dive into a financial crisis like what California is in now," Burril said.

Although Jarvis believes that this

COURTESY THEDAILYTITAN.COM

Angered by a letter written by the state's attorney general, almost 7,000 Virginia college students planned a rally for gay rights scheduled for March 23.

How do we fit over 600 courses in more than 60 subjects, 6 international programs on 3 continents, 4 summer institutes, 3 field study programs, and 6 courses on Nantucket into just 13 weeks?

There's only one way to find out.

Summer 2010 at UMass Boston

SMALL CLASSES. BRILLIANT FACULTY. DEDICATED STUDENTS. MAJOR RESEARCH.
SUMMER.UMB.EDU | 617.287.6000
UMASS BOSTON

UMass is a BIG campus,
and we need your help covering it.

Know of something that's happening?
Want to see an event get news coverage?
Let us know!

Go online and head to DailyCollegian.com and click "Submit a Tip."

A letter from the editor

To our readers,

After decades of reporting on campus events, we'd like to take a few paragraphs to report on the changes we have coming up here at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

Please hold the sarcastic shock when I say that these tricky economic times and a monumental platform shift in the news industry have been hard on all newspapers.

For campus publications with limited expertise, it has been especially difficult to gauge the market and how advertisers will adjust their budgets to advertising in the online marketplace.

Our pages are fewer than they have been in years prior, but luckily, this is not a farewell note. It's a thank you.

After relaunching DailyCollegian.com, we've experienced a larger audience than ever before. Though we have fewer paper pages, we've seen a major difference in the number of students who have clicked through those we create on DailyCollegian.com — those that include video, rich photo slideshows, interactive maps and all in color!

So while the paper will still be around to litter the campus, we want to say thanks, and as a token of our appreciation, we're launching a series of major improvements to DailyCollegian.com

We and Localaliteracy.org, a company created by UMass students, got together and will now offer you a better platform on which to respond and contribute to our articles. We want our content to be more interactive and more democratic.

Register and contribute to our coverage by telling us if we have missed something. Vote great comments to high priority, and actively vote down the yellers and fools who misuse the service.

Following many of our stories, we will include a question for you. Through your response we can read not only your opinions, but through your prioritizing them, we can also weigh your opinions. After all, votes can be counted or weighed.

We've also made our site's front page a resource for more than news. We like to think we do news well, but we're adding different kinds of information. A new partnership with CampusLIVE will tell you the best restaurants to frequent, when they're open and what number to call. The dining guide allows you to browse menus, write reviews and order a slice right to your door.

I would encourage you all to check it out, but so many of you do already. Since we relaunched, we've experienced huge traffic booms and a great response. So while you're with us, contribute to the conversation. By the month's end, we hope you'll do it from your Androids, iPhones and Blackberrys, too.

Cheers,
— Will McGuinness, Editor in Chief

Group advocates for animals

Las Vegas organization holds nationwide campaign for aid

THE REBEL YELL
VIA COLLEGE NEWS NETWORK

Kittens and chicks are equally cute, but why domesticate one and consume the other?

This is the thought-provoking message on a billboard promoted by the local association Vegas Veg in partnership with Mercy For Animals.

Vegas Veg is a local organization consisting of individuals interested in promoting plant-based eating within the Las Vegas area.

Elaine Vigneault, Vegas Veg main organizer, is a supporter of MFA, which is a national non-profit farmed animal advocacy organization.

MFA used the billboards in Chicago, Boston, New York City, Denver, Toronto and Michigan to raise awareness for animal cruelty.

Vigneault saw a photo of the billboards online and contacted Nathan Runkle, executive director of MFA, to see if they could do the billboards in Nevada.

Runkle handled most of the logistics and Vigneault took care of the fundraising.

Runkle said that there is a growing discussion taking place around the country concerning food choices and their impact on our health, environment and animal welfare.

Vigneault said that there are a lot of animal lovers in the Valley, but they normally extend their love to only dogs and cats.

"Our message is simply to encourage people to extend the kindness that they give to cats and dogs," Vigneault said, adding that "Pigs, cows, chickens, turkeys and even fish are capable of feeling pain just like cats and dogs."

And the idea behind the billboards is to ignite some thought about animal cruelty and health consciousness.

"For her, farm animals are treated like meat before they're even slaughtered.

They suggest people choose animal-friendly options as much as possible.

And besides the promotion of better life quality to farm animals, Vegas Veg is also concerned about the food quality that people eat.

Their mission statement is: "Vegas Veg focuses on ending human dependence on animals by promoting a compassionate, healthy, plant-based lifestyle through grassroots educational activities," according to Ann Petit, one of the organizers.

Runkle gives the example of books like "Eating Animals" by Jonathan Safran Foer, and documentaries like "Food, Inc." where it shows consumers being more conscious about their food choices.

"This billboard campaign builds on that discussion and urges consumers to think about why we call some animals companions and others dinner," Runkle said.

The billboards are made to make people think, even for a second, about what they are eating. Kellie Benway, a Vegas Veg member, hope it plants a seed in their minds.

For Benway, Vegas Veg's main message is about a new option, one that includes being a vegan or vegetarian.

"We are all just normal people who happen to care about all animals and show our concern for their welfare by not eating them. And it is OK to be different," Benway said.

And all these members have something in common: They are interested and passionate about food, nutrition and animal welfare.

"I like people who are kind. I am attracted to people who question common paradigms," said Vegas Veg Daryl Elliott, explaining why he joined the group.

For these members, they feel that they live in a culture that prides itself on caring for domestic animals while farmed animals lack any type of attention and dignity.

"There is a path, veganism, of acting in a way that is more consistent with how people generally see themselves, which is as loving and caring people," Elliott said.

"[By] promoting humane and compassionate vegetarian food choices, we are inspiring people nationwide to reject products of animal abuse," Runkle said adding that "As the demand for meat, dairy, and egg products is reduced, so too will the number of animals subjected to these cruel and inhumane conditions."

Right now, there are 376 members and about one-third of the group are active members who participate in the events promoted by Vegas Veg.

Vigneault said they try to keep the activities low-stress, fun and nonjudgmental.

And even though they are mostly social, the core intent is about enlightening people and sharing information.

"We're constantly striving to educate people and help them make truly informed food choices," Vigneault said.

And the supporters know there is a far-from-ideal world out there and Vegas is definitely a part of it.

"It was an excellent idea to get these billboards to Las Vegas, where people are sometimes challenged to pursue a healthy lifestyle with the odd casino working hours and seeming acceptance of excess everywhere," said Ina Mohan, Vegas Veg member.

She said that even though people within the group may have different lifestyles, it does not stop them from getting the most out if it.

According to her, the information they share with each other is very important to this learning process.

"You can't force a certain lifestyle onto others if they don't want it, but revealing the truth about the food industry cruelties and the benefits of vegetarianism is an ongoing duty that we have towards our fellow humans," Mohan said.

And the billboards were a way they found to express what they believe in and share their thoughts.

"I think [the billboards] are great. It's wonderful that we have some billboards that give people an opportunity to think about their actions as opposed to only having commercial billboards," Elliott said.

But not everyone was so enthusiastic about the idea the billboards right from the beginning.

"At first I was a little uncomfortable with the image," said member Valeria Taylor, adding that she later changed her mind and realized "that it must be effective since it is clearly provocative."

Taylor is also optimistic about the future.

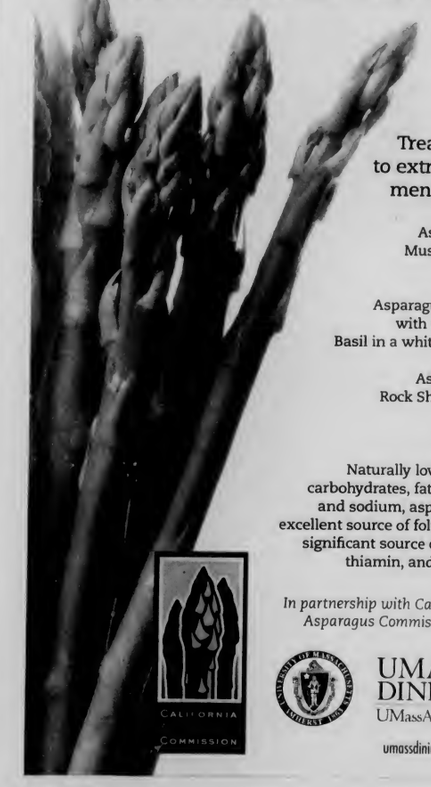
"I have seen food consciousness grow over the past 16 years and I believe that more people are ready now to embrace vegetarianism and veganism than ever before," Taylor said.

Taylor said the group's philosophy is to help people become savvy food consumers.

She believes that path will lead to personal growth, which will ultimately guide to choices that are beneficial to both humans and animals.

MAROON CENTRAL
Student & Alumni Online Community

Use MaroonCentral to Connect With a Minuteman Mentor
[UMassAlumni.com/students]



- Want to know who's hiring in your field of study?
- Want advice on what classes to take, for your future career?
- Looking for ways to polish your resume, or practice interview questions?

MaroonCentral is where you need to be.
To register for FREE on MaroonCentral, you need to use your unique alumni ID.

UMass Amherst ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
Call the Alumni Association to obtain it at 413.545.2317 or email alumni@admin.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
...for ...70 ...much
On-Campus Local Biz Ads for
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

Fresh Asparagus Introduces Spring!
March 22–26 in all DCs

Treat yourself to extraordinary menu choices:

Asparagus and Mushroom Filled Crepes

Asparagus Fettuccine with Pancetta and Basil in a white wine Broth

Asparagus and Rock Shrimp Risotto

And more...

Naturally low in calories, carbohydrates, fat, cholesterol, and sodium, asparagus is an excellent source of folic acid and a significant source of vitamin C, thiamin, and vitamin B6.

In partnership with California Asparagus Commission

CALIFORNIA ASPARAGUS COMMISSION
UMASS DINING UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

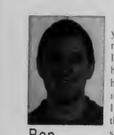
WELCOME BACK
to Your Award Winning Dining Services!

MARCH - APRIL - MAY
Upcoming Events

- Guest Chef Betty Rosbottom
- Fresh Asparagus Introduces Spring!
- 5K Road Race
- Thai Dinner
- Guest Chef Hiroko Shimbo
- Cooking/Baking 101
- UMass Idol Preliminary
- Sorrento Day
- Student Iron Chef Competition
- Taste of UMass
- Taste of Home
- Spring BBQ
- Midnight Buffet

RESTAURANTS AT THE ATRIUM Ivy
UMASS DINING UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN



EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, MARCH 22, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The eyes of the world

Ben Moriarty

Over two years ago, I realized when I sat in the back of lecture halls not paying attention, I couldn't read the PowerPoint slides or the board.

Over one year ago, I went to an optometrist and got a prescription for glasses so that if I ever decided to pay attention in class, I would be able to see.

One year and one day ago, I finally got glasses.

It was exhilarating and, comparatively, wildly different. I could read words that were 10 feet away. I could see things in the distance; figures weren't so blurry and I noticed there was a lot more detail in the world than I ever remembered. It was like everything was sharpened. I understood things a little better and I could see things more clearly.

It was like I had an epiphany, until I started asking people if they could see the things I could see. It turned out that yes, they could.

It was like I had an epiphany, until I started asking people if they could see the things I could see. It turned out that yes, they could.

But what about that, way off in the distance? Can you read that?

Yes. And I realized that I didn't go from good to better, I went from bad to good. Maybe even from bad to just normal.

When I bought the glasses, there was a deal at the store. There was also my insurance. The deal at the store saved me more money than the insurance did. This wasn't a life-saving surgery. I endured, but it surely was something.

Yesterday, there were new developments in Congress that could signal the end of the tiresome health care debate. I realized, like me not getting my glasses for an unnecessarily long period of time, this health care issue has been in the spotlight since even before the inauguration of President Barack Obama.

The debate over this issue has been going on for decades for some senators. It has been the lifelong career goal of some to bring about legislation that would provide health care to every American — as if that should even be a debate in and of itself.

The issue has been resolved in many European countries, but here, it is an unattainable ideal. And with its resolution, it might not go from good to better. It might go from bad to good. It might even go from bad to normal.

Unfortunately, what is currently on the table isn't what the late Sen. Ted Kennedy would have hoped for. Like my eyesight, health care policy will go from realizing the benefits other countries have in terms of coverage, to acknowledging that what we're currently passing isn't nearly as beneficial.

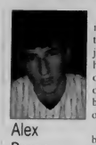
It is a bill with a decade-long plan that would increase federal spending like crazy, hoping to be balanced by taxes and economic corrections in other areas. It's riddled with things like forcing Americans to pay for health insurance, instead of just ensuring that it will be there. It is an idea being made an action with an uncertainty that it will work.

Obama said, thankfully, there would be no federal spending on abortions, which gained the votes of several Democrats.

Yet there is still uncertainty. I'm certain that I can see well, at the least, well enough. I am certain that the bill passed will work well, or at the least, well enough.

But when it comes to the lives of human beings, of children in poor areas who need this health care bill and of human beings everywhere, it seems reckless and silly that there should be such a debate. "Well enough" shouldn't be an option. A deal at a store shouldn't come before insurance — unless it is a damn-good deal, but barring damn-good deals, no hospitals are giving out damn-good deals. There are no damn-good deals.

The damn-good deals are — when it comes to making sure ourselves and our neighbors have health care — in our own pockets. There is no philosophical argument that argues one person's pocket should take precedent over another person's life.



If someone has it, tax it. If they don't like it, they can get a damn-good deal somewhere else.

Ben Moriarty is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bmoriart@student.umass.edu.

Five reasons why Congress was finally able to pass health care

1) They stopped flaming each other's Wikipedia pages.
2) It was all riding on Robert Morris winning.
3) Everyone realized that the longer it took to pass, the more time it will spend in the Supreme Court.
4) The more they keep "Lost" out of the headlines, the more votes they lose in November.
5) The Democrats distracted the Republicans with kittens and puppies.

The death of real romance

Alex Perry

I am tired of most things in our "progressive" culture today — and I'm not just talking about the "Let's have government solve all of our problems" warpath our expert NCAA basketball bracket-picking president is on.

Specifically, one of the biggest problems keeping me tossing and turning at night is the seemingly ridiculous, dumb phenomenon that has become mainstream in recent years: casual "hook-ups." Of course, this situation is not exclusive to our campus here at the University of Massachusetts, it is seemingly present at every college and high school around the United States these days.

This culture of people "hooking up" with others whom they are not dating or, God forbid, married to drives me crazy for a few reasons. The first is how unattractive and degrading it is for women, but that is just me. That's not what I want to talk about. What I want to talk about is what it means for where our society is headed. When my parents were my age, it was not commonplace for people to "hookup" with one another without dating. In their crazy world, the norm was for people to date and then, if after dating for a period of time a couple decided they liked each other, they might have engaged in "hooking up" before marriage. But somewhere along the line during the past 20 years, men were apparently successful in creating a culture where the norm became hooking up with someone for a period of time and then, if you like the hookups, consider dating.

I want to be clear about something, particularly to my female counterparts. Hooking up with someone without dating them is not a winning strategy for forming a long-term romantic relationship. Most guys are just not going to respect a girl they are casually hooking up with enough to enter into a romantic relationship with them. The reason they are hooking up casually with girls is because they only want to be hooking up casually with girls. If they intended to date the girl they are hooking up with, they would've already asked the girl out on a date.

I think a common question among girls my age is why they haven't been asked out on dates. Why are they single? Many girls seem to have just convinced themselves that "dating is dead" or "people just don't date anymore." I can tell all the girls who feel this way why they are never asked out on dates — guys no longer have to do this to get what they want on a Friday night. Girls have enabled men to hook-up with them casually, no strings attached.

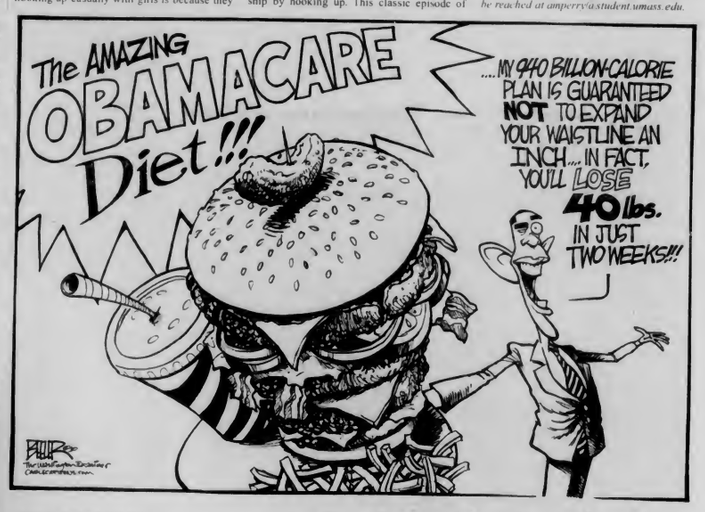
I want to be clear about something, particularly to my female counterparts. Hooking up with someone without dating them is not a winning strategy for forming a long-term romantic relationship.

I say girls have enabled this because they engage in the behavior of hooking up casually, too. If girls want relationships over casual hookups, they simply shouldn't enable guys to hookup with them without being committed.

Why would a guy ask a girl he could casually hookup with on a date? What is the benefit of dating for a college-aged male in this situation? Getting to know her, too? I don't think getting to know someone is high on a guy's priority list on a Friday night. Casual hookups probably are, though.

I was watching a show on MTV the other day entitled, "True Life: I Have a Friend with Benefits." For those who don't know, "friends with benefits" are people who are allegedly friends, but cross the lines of a standard friendship by hooking up. This classic episode of "True Life" documented how poorly these relationships work. It showed the girls in these relationships crying at the end because they were so devastated that the friends-with-benefits relationship wasn't going to turn into a long-term romantic one. The guys in the show rejected them.

Girls know that friends-with-benefits relationships don't end well for them, yet still practice the behaviors they know are doomed to fail.



I'm just tired of girls complaining about a problem that they themselves are causing. "Am I ever going to find someone?" It's ridiculous. No, it is highly unlikely you will find someone while engaging in casual hookup behavior. It's like a fat man eating a Big Mac, fries and a liter of Coke at McDonald's, then complaining about his weight. You are causing the problem my friend. You can only solve the problem by disengaging from this behavior.

I hate to single out girls for this issue, but they are the problem. This "casual hookup" scenario is not a problem from a guy's perspective. Hooking up with girls without having to put forth any effort? It would have sounded like a paradise fantasy world for guys 50 years ago. Guys don't want to change this situation; they want to keep it going. If girls are waiting around for guys to step up to the plate, they are also probably waiting for Kansas to cut down the nets in the Final Four.

The way to stop our culture from regressing to the point where no one ever bothers to get married anymore is for women to stop praising behavior found in shows like "Sex and the City." Girls should start conducting themselves like rational human beings. Stop becoming friends with benefits. Stop casually hooking up with guys when you binge drink on Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights. Only when this occurs will our country be able to revive a culture of dating. Until then, I don't want girls who casually hookup with guys to complain about being single, or ask why guys are not asking them out on dates.

Get your act together, or you girls will continue to stare at that "single" status on Facebook.

Alex Perry is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at amperry@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MARCH 22, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Local haunt, the Harp gives back to town

By Brendan Murphy
Collegian Staff

The Harp is the quintessential traditional Irish bar that every town needs, but very few have. In addition to their 16 beers on tap, they offer a wide selection of great food and entertainment to keep their patrons happy. Upon walking in, there's a noticeable feel that this bar is different than any other in Amherst. The walls are adorned with Red Sox garb, and of course, everything Irish. Heroes from Ireland's history such as Daniel O'Connell, Robert Emmet and Wolfe Tone hang outside the men's room. Flags, jerseys and shamrocks decorate the place as well, and festive green lighting trims the ceiling all around.

As a restaurant, the Harp serves lunch on Fridays and dinner Tuesdays through Saturdays. Starting this week, they are offering lunch on Thursdays and Saturdays as well. "We're known for our seafood," said bartender Yasmin Abbyad, referring to their regularly offered fish and chips and frequent lunch and dinner seafood specials. Their menu is packed with everything from burgers and hot dogs to hot sandwiches and salads, and flatbread pizzas are available any time the Harp is open. The beer-battered boneless chicken is flavorful, juicy and delicious, while their appetizers make for great pub food when knocking back a couple beers. Anything from non crispy, golden French fries to jalapeno poppers are available. Their famous Irish nachos, Cajun-seasoned waffle fries topped with cheddar jack, olives, sour cream, salsa and jalapenos, go hand-in-hand with their trivia night. It is, by far, the most popular appetizer on the menu.

The Harp offers entertainment in the form of a trivia night on Tuesdays and live traditional Irish music on Thursday afternoons and Friday evenings. After 8 p.m. on Thursdays, Irish music yields to the brand-new karaoke night. It also doubles as a sports bar, and is probably one of the only places in town to televise soccer and rugby matches. When the Red Sox regular season kicks off, they set up an 8x10 foot projection screen on their outdoor deck to show the games.

The wildly popular trivia night is one of the Harp's busiest events. Most nights of the week, Harp owner Mark Power (also known as "Harpo") is at the bar, running around greeting regulars or introducing himself to newcomers. On Tuesdays, however, he takes the microphone and emcees trivia, announcing 50 questions to his patrons. Multiple teams of up to five people compete for five different cash prizes of varying amounts. At the end of the night, there's a free all-you-can-eat buffet that seems to cap off the evening perfectly. There's a mandatory $5 donation to join in, and all of the proceeds (besides the cash prizes) go to charity.

As a well-respected contributor to the local community, the Harp generates tens of thousands of dollars each year in charity donations. Trivia night proceeds go to a different organization each week, ranging from cash-strapped RSOs at the University of Massachusetts, to the Amherst Survival Center. The Anthony B. Anderson fund, founded by the Harp, donates thousands of dollars each year to local youth sports organizations. Patrons who wear a Yankees hat into the bar must donate a dollar to the Jimmy Fund, the Red Sox-sponsored cancer charity.

Born in the Mission Hill neighborhood of Boston and raised in Roxbury, Mass., Mr. Power was a boat builder by trade. He came to Amherst in his 20s and opened the Harp nine years ago, coincidentally on the anniversary of the Easter Rising in Ireland.

When asked what the inspiration was to start a traditional Irish bar, he explained, "I became interested in Ireland after studying Norman history. Norman influence can be seen almost everywhere, including Ireland. I studied Irish history, and essentially my interest in that caused me to create the Harp."

The Harp isn't like the average Amherst bar. It caters to a wide variety of clients, from local farmers and lumber yard workers to students and university faculty. He wanted to create a different experience other than what he calls "Meat-rack bars: Drunks yelling over noise."

During my interview with Mr. Power, he excused himself to cut a check out to the local Boys and Girls Club and point a local farmer in the direction of recycled fryolator oil, used to power his farm equipment.

When asked about his regular charitable donations, Power explained, "The Harp's primary function is charity. My theory is that I donate the same amount to charity as what I pay myself." There's no arguing that the Harp's donations have helped out many different organizations around Amherst. Places like the Jones Library and the Amherst Survival Center are grateful for the hard work and money that the Harp doles out regularly.

In addition to being a bar owner, Power teaches classes at the University of Massachusetts, is a member of the Amherst Town Meeting and holds a seat on the farm committee. He has experience teaching early and late medieval history and early and late western civilization, and for the past 20 years has taught "The Irish Experience" through the University's continuing education program.

The Harp is located at 163 Sunderland Road in North Amherst, Mass. Although many students don't discover it until their senior year, or at least until they turn 21, it's just a seven-to-eight minute walk from Hobart Lane or Brandywine Apartments. Stop in for lunch or dinner, or just come for a drink to be greeted by the lovely staff of bartenders. The Harp's theme is steeped in Irish tradition, but there's enough going on for people of all backgrounds to have a truly great time.

Brendan Murphy can be reached at brendanm@student.umass.edu

North Amherst, Mass.-based Irish pub, the Harp, serves delicious food, cold beer and hosts a weekly trivia night on Tuesdays. The proceeds are given to local charities, including the Amherst Survival Center.

Next time nature calls, take note of the subtle messages your body's trying to tell you through the quality of your urine. The new book, "What's My Pee Telling Me," combines bathroom humor and medical advice, allowing readers to interpret the color and odor of urine.

Potty talk: 'What's My Pee Telling Me?'

By Lily Hicks
Collegian Correspondent

Poop. Everybody does it; no one wants to talk about it — or rather, no one wants to talk about it seriously. With the five-and-under demographic monopolizing what little open conversation exists today regarding urine, feces and flatulence, there has been no opportunity for adults to just … let it out. Authors Josh Richman and Dr. Anish Sheth of "What's My Pee Telling Me?," the much anticipated sequel to "What's Your Poo Telling You?," are hoping to open up a new line of communication between medical experts and those of us who are looking for information outside of the doctor's office about what's happening inside our bathrooms.

As the title indicates, "What's My Pee Telling Me?" devotes a considerable portion of its pages to the subject of urine. It boasts an array of illustrated sections anywhere between one and two pages apiece that concern a common type of urine and/or urination — for example, "Pungent Pee" is the section dedicated to urine that smells "fishy."

To be accurate, "pungent pee" smells "eggy," not "fishy," after the consumption of asparagus due to "the release of sulfur-containing compounds during asparagus digestion," according to the book.

Eggy-smelling pee, as Richman and Sheth emphatically report, is not to be confused with "fruity-smelling" pee, which could be a sign of diabetes. Ketones, or molecules that are by-products of high blood sugar, can spill into urine and give it "a fresh berry-type aroma." If your pee ever smells more pleasant than you think it should, you might consider shaking or wiping yourself over to the nearest doctor. And to think that some people have judged smell to be the least important of the five senses!

After the pee chapter, chapters on poop and farting "demystify the inner workings of the human body." Topics range from how to "poo" at work ("Be sure that your staff photo ID is not hanging off of your pants for the next-stall neighbor to clearly identify who you are") all the way to "Flatogenic Foods."

"The Explosion" ("likened by some to the roar of a lion") is a particular form of gas-passing whose repeat offenders often have their diets to blame for their flatulence; lactose, beans, broccoli and other foods listed as "flatogenic" in the book are less easily digested in the body and leave "ample leftovers for the gas-producing bacteria in our large intestine," according to the authors.

Following the fart chapter is "Bodily Myths Exposed: Myth or Truth?" Here, myths claiming that it takes seven years for the body to digest gum, or peeing on a jellyfish sting will relieve pain, are refuted. Like other hard-to-digest foods, gum very rarely forms what doctors call a "bezoar," a ball of undigested material in the stomach.

As for jellyfish stings, urine — with a normal pH of seven — is hardly acidic enough to neutralize alkali-based jellyfish venom. Vinegar, at a pH of about 2.5, is a more viable alternative. Some myths, on the other hand, are proven true, such as "Sitting on the toilet for too long causes hemorrhoids."

Countless other funny pictures and funnier facts grace the pages of "What's My Pee Telling Me?" Dr. Patricia Moyer at Mount Auburn Hospital in Cambridge, Mass., supports the humorist approach Richman and Sheth undertake in their writing. When asked whether or not she uses humor as a means of communicating with her patients, Moyer replied, "all the time."

"Laughter and humor help people put things in perspective," she said.

Moyer praises the physical benefits of laughter as well, noting that laughter is medically proven to lower blood pressure.

As she leafed through the pages of "What's My Pee Telling Me?," Moyer commented that the book looked "informational but relaxed." In using humor and a casual style of writing to transmit a message that stresses the importance of bodily awareness, Richman and Sheth reach more people than, say, a lengthy book loaded with medical jargon.

But is reading a book enough for people to overcome a persistent reluctance to talk about their poop, pee and everything in between? Moyer has her doubts.

"Much stronger than a book are people's inhibitions," she said. "You have to create an atmosphere where people can talk about those things."

Richman and Sheth might not keep us from keeping mum about our last visit to the loo, but they may help us spot irregularities where we hadn't before, prompting us to seek medical attention earlier than we might have. Although it's safe to say "What's My Pee Telling Me?" won't completely revolutionize the way we see pee (or anything else in our toilets), it's certainly a solid start — and an even better laugh.

Lily Hicks can be reached at lhicks@student.umass.edu

'Heavy Rain' a hit

New Playstation game earns mature rating and accolades

By Justin Hoeger
McClatchy-Tribune News Service

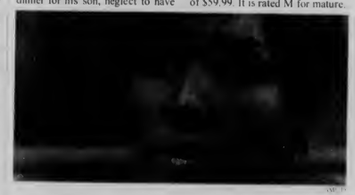
In most games, the story serves the game play. In "Heavy Rain," a fantastic-looking serial-killer yarn with a brooding noir flavor, it's the other way around. The player guides four characters through the game's many chapters, and any of them, as well as various secondary characters, can die, leaving the story to continue without them.

Ethan Mars, the first character we meet, is broken by tragedy and has a difficult relationship with his young son. The second, Scott Shelby, is a private investigator who keeps finding himself in dangerous situations. The third, Norman Jayden, is an FBI agent on the trail of an elusive killer with the help of an advanced virtual evidence-gathering device. Finally, Madison Paige is a photojournalist troubled by insomnia and disturbing dreams.

All four are trying to track down the Origami Killer, who leaves folded paper figures in the hands of his victims — always young boys, found drowned days after they disappear in times of heavy rainfall.

The game's age rating is earned. Aside from the subject matter, there's matter-of-fact nudity, intense violence and other R-rated content. It is not for kids.

Each chapter is a self-contained vignette in the story of the character it focuses on; sometimes the goal is clear, sometimes it's not. Activities range from the exciting to the mundane. In one chapter, Mars may brush his teeth, do some laundry, fix dinner for his son, neglect to have him do his homework, watch some television, and go to bed. In another, Shelby could get in a brawl with a thug or talk a desperate man down from a robbery attempt.



Some of the split-second decisions feel a bit like those in "Mass Effect 2," but there are no Paragon or Renegade points to earn here, just new branches in the story. Characters can walk around and interact with various objects using the analog sticks. Moving the right stick in various motions tends to activate objects — pressing up can cause a character to pick up or look at an item, a quarter-circle to one side may open a door.

Some items and actions require shaking the motion-sensitive controller. Other times the player will have to press a certain button, hold one or more in combination or press buttons within a short time to carry out an action.

The actions are simple, quite similar to the monster-killing mini-games in "God of War" in mechanics if not effect. But they translate into everything from shaking a carton of orange juice, to jumping out of the way of a truck, to a desperate fight against several assailants.

Trying to hit all the right buttons and make all the right motions when the life of a character hangs in the balance is exciting, and made all the trickier when the prompts that show what actions are available jitter around for characters under extreme stress.

"Heavy Rain" is available for Sony Playstation 3 at a retail price of $59.99. It is rated M for mature.

"Heavy Rain" allows players to shape the game. The plot centers around a serial killer who drowns young boys during heavy rainfall.

Kell leads the way

MEN'S LAX from page 8

defense for the Minutemen with a game-high three of the 13 caused turnovers against Providence.

Sophomore goalie Tim McCormack (two saves, two goals against) earned the win in the cage for UMass in 45 minutes of play before Cannella elected to put in freshman Steve Mahle (three saves, one goal against) after victory seemed all but imminent for the Minutemen.

After allowing 14 goals on 26 shots against the Crimson, Cannella showed that faith in his starting goalie wasn't in question at this point in the season.

"We have a ton of confidence in Tim to make saves," Cannella said. "We're going to work with him like we do every day in practice. [Assistant coach Doc Schneider], who works with the goalies, prepares them in a fantastic way."

On March 13, Harvard staved off a late comeback by UMass, but rattled off seven-straight goals in the second half and commanded extra-man scoring opportunities to earn the win.

The Minutemen held a 44-35 shot advantage, but a combination of patience on the offensive end and consistency and physicality on the defensive side of the ball led to a win for the Crimson.

Along with Kell's three goals, attack Will Manny and midfielder Anthony Biscardi also had hat tricks on the day. Sophomore Greg Rushing aided the offense by winning 14-of-28 face-offs on the day.

Harvard put UMass on the defensive from the opening whistle, scoring the first three goals of the game. Harry Krieger (13 saves) earned the win in goal for Harvard.

Next up for the Minutemen is a 4 p.m. road game on Tuesday, March 23 at Brown.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Wellman adds assist in first game in NHL

WELLMAN from page 1

"We're attracted to his offensive potential," assistant general manager, Brent Flahr, said in the Wild's press release. "He's your typical late-blooming kid that went undrafted. He's not a finished product, we're aware of that. But with his shot and offensive potential, we were willing to take a shot and get him in here, and hopefully get him going on his pro career."

Wellman's signing is a bit of a rarity for Minnesota. The last time the Wild signed a college free agent was in 2006 when they signed defenseman Mike Madill, and the last United States college free agent they signed was Travis Roche in 2001.

While college free-agent signings may not have been past procedure for Minnesota, the team says they have other targets who could make an impact like Wellman.

"[Wellman] was obviously one of the main targets," Flahr said. "Our guys work all year long to identify free agents. There are a couple names that we listed at the end of the year. But we're not out to sign players just to sign players. We're looking for players that have a chance to play in the NHL, and people we want in the organization. We're just trying to do the best we can to supplement the talent we have coming."

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

UM falls over break

WOMEN'S LAX from page 8

shots by Lyons and Cosgrove.

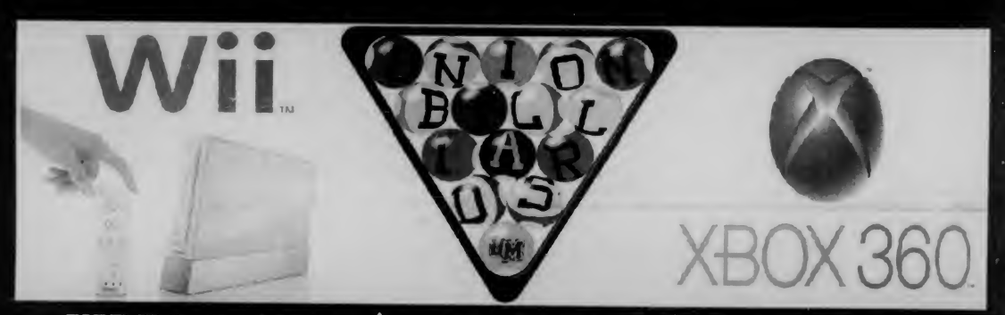
Seven minutes of back-and-forth play ensued. The match loosened up with a little over eight minutes left in the first period with a goal by the Seawolves' freshman Kerry Kresse.

The momentum picked up for the Minutewomen side, as Cosgrove notched her second goal with three minutes, 17 seconds remaining. Right from the break, UMass continued its push with sophomore Ali Houlis gaining a score.

All of the Minutewomen's first half goals were scored off free-position shots. The only goal in the first half that came off something other than a free-position shot came from an assist by SBU junior Samantha Djaha.

The push by UMass going into the second half was cut short, as the Seawolves answered back with two goals to lead, 5-4. O'Donnell notched her 19th goal of the season to tie the game up, but the SBU side would not keep it that way for long.

After O'Donnell's score, a five-goal run began for the Seawolves. Over a 16-minute span, Djaha (2), Jackie Hughes, Courtney Bertolone and Nicole Morane all put the ball into the back of the net to give SBU a 10-5 lead.



Houlis broke up the run with another free-position goal, but her efforts were downed after the Seawolves closed out the game with another two-goal run.

The Minutewomen led in draw controls (12-8) and ground balls (16-15); however, other pieces of the game left much to be desired. Over her 58 minutes of play, goalkeeper Katie Florence earned one save, opposed to SBU goalkeeper Mickey Cahill who earned 10 saves.

Despite earning five goals off the free position, UMass failed on eight other attempts from the same spot. The Seawolves were a perfect 4-for-4 on the free position.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu

PLEASE

VIDEO GAMES ♦ BILLIARDS ♦ PARTIES

WED GRAND OPENING

FREE Play untill 7pm!

THU Rock Band Tournament 7pm-10pm

FREE

come with your band or get matched up

raffles/dj/prizes

PRIZES

FRI GRAND OPENING PARTY 7pm-10pm

blow off some steam at our Grand Opening!!!

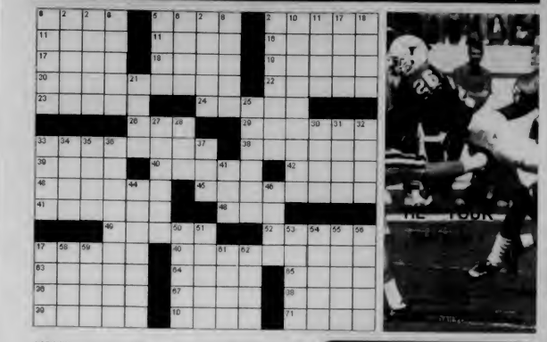
modern warfare nights ... tournaments fight night grand ... pool billiards ... gaming

Located inside Union Billiards across from the hatch food court



Find us on Facebook

545-8127

THE PLACES ... ASSOCIATION ... ODS

COMICS

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Dried hemp leaves
5. A cereal grass
9. Foot lever
14. Within
15. A fight with deadly weapons
16. Silly
17. Stepped
18. Chocolate cookie
19. 100 in a dollar
20. Three-dimensional images
22. Braid or plait
23. A resin used in incense
24. A gesture of indifference
26. 17th letter of the Greek alphabet
29. Constructs
33. The backline of a tennis court
38. A particular point
39. A mild expletive
40. A magical spirit
42. Small island
43. A castrated man
45. Soaked
47. Save from harm
48. Scottish for "Uncle"
49. A handwoven wall hanging
52. Liquorice-flavored seeds
57. Exhilarate
60. Levity
63. Piece of turf
64. Yeap, high or low
65. Sun
66. Unable to react
67. Biblical garden
68. Wild African sheep
69. To the point
70. Repose
71. Trot

DOWN
1. Chance or lot (archaic)
2. Enlist
3. Robbed
4. Destroyed with Gomorrah
5. Smell
6. Nimbus
7. Swarms
8. Spill clumsily
9. Photograph
10. Industrious
11. A citizen of Denmark
12. Picnic animals
13. Not more
21. Young lady
25. Ransom
27. Not lower
28. Anagram of "Eon"
30. Country singer Johnny ____
31. Thin slab of linoleum
32. Sleigh
33. Ale
34. Shivering fit
35. French for "Without"
36. Teachers
37. Finish
41. Anger
44. A type of surgical instrument
46. A low tide
50. Not before
51. Slip
53. Relating to the nose
54. Introduction (abbrev.)
55. North American diving duck
56. Lofty nest
57. Assemble or modify written material
58. Connects 2 points
59. Assert
61. Mid-month days
62. Closely confined

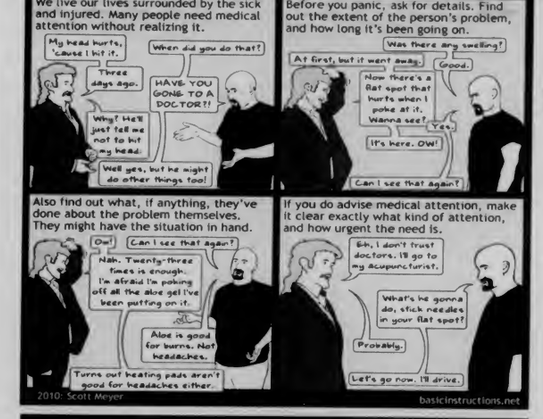
Take UMass Amherst home with you this summer

THREE Summer Sessions

200+ online classes

REGISTER NOW!

Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net



UMASS AMHERST

Continuing & Professional Education

BASIC INSTRUCTIONS

How to Urge Someone to Seek Medical Attention

by Scott MEYER

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
We all know you are a fan of party tricks, but that one you do with alcohol is actually called a "problem."

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Though your anger may be strong towards them, never resort to violence. Try "smurfing" the hell out of them instead.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Always remember that when times are tough, you can shave a baby. It is the new craze among psych majors!

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Your next romantic companion should have less to do with crime and more physical attributes akin to Moose. A Moose.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Sexually transmitted diseases are not like Pokemon. It may be fun to "catch them all," but they will never be as loveable as Pikachu.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Tired of trying to get with the girl of your dreams? Try moving on to the boy of your dreams instead.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Oranges are actually quite delectable. You would know if you were not mishandling them ,you sick, sick person.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
It seems you have too much dignity. Fix this by watching some of the Twilight DVD extras.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
If photos steal souls, then what would happen if you took a picture of a photograph? If only Mythbusters were a better show...

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Do not be afraid of who you are. You spoon the hell out of that pillow and be proud of it!

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Those apple–scented mints aren't working. Unless the apples were grown in a sewage facility. Be more careful next time.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
It is a terrible crime to burn books. Freezing them on the otherhand, is just plain futuristic.

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

CITY FOOTWEAR
Students and Staff of the five Colleges Eligible for 10% of with ID
nike New Era Clarks TIMBERLAND OUTDOOR PERFORMANCE
34 Pleasant Street · Northampton
413.341.5581

Micro Ship

					3		9
	2				7			5
	6			9				8
6			4			7	5	3
	9	8					6
7				6	4		1
9						5	3

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from Umass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.puffton village.com

SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com

Hark! a Vagrant by K. Beaton harkavagrant.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Full Time Summer Employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $11.50/hour. The job description and application are available at the Housing Assigment Office, 235 Whitmore and is due April 2nd.

Bartenders needed for FT/PT positions. No experience required. Earn $20-$70 per hour. Call us at 617-849-8074

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

Hobart Condos 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. study in basement. Cable & Phone in all bedrooms & study. NOW SHOWING for June & September. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 413-253-7879

TUTORING SERVICES

Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats, GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 Jboid42@yahoo.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MARCH 22, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Spiders end UMass' season

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

The Atlantic 10 tournament has not been kind to Ricky Harris and the Massachusetts men's basketball team. In a year when the Minutemen least expected it, they won their first A-10 tournament game in eight years against Charlotte, but couldn't continue their rally against Richmond, who finished as the weekend's runner-up.

UMass (12-20, 5-11 A-10) battled back from a 17-point deficit, but couldn't pull ahead in its 77-72 loss to the Spiders.

Richmond	77
UMass	72

"We played an NCAA team on a neutral court that's [26-8] and they shot lights out tonight, especially in the first half," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said following the loss. "That was one of my biggest worries."

Guard Anthony Gurley did everything he could offensively to extend Harris's senior with 24 points on 8-of-11 shooting and seven rebounds, but the Minutemen never cut the lead below three points.

Harris finished his last game at UMass with 19 points and became the third all-time leading scorer in school history. But Richmond's 55 percent 3-point shooting proved too much for UMass to handle. The Spiders (26-8, 13-3 A-10) used 9-for-13 shooting from beyond the arc to take a 38-21 lead into the half.

"They got a lot of good looks and converted on all of them, took advantage early and put us in a bit of a hole," Harris said of their first half shooting. "When you're playing a team like that, you have got to take advantage of each possession and each defensive stop and each defensive opportunity."

Although the first half took UMass out of the game, the second half went much differently.

The Minutemen scored 51 second-half points with Gurley and Harris combining for 34 of them. Gurley first cracked Richmond's double-digit deficit with a 3-pointer to cut the lead to 46-28 with 10 minutes, 53 seconds left to play.

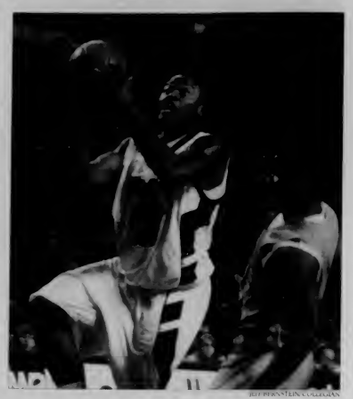
The Spiders eventually undid UMass' efforts and regained a 17-point lead with 6:53 to play. The Minutemen stormed back with a 12-3 run to once again cut the lead to eight.

With a six-point lead and seven seconds left in the game, Kevin Anderson fouled Harris on a 3-point attempt. The senior made all three shots to put UMass down three points.

However, the Minutemen couldn't get the ball back as Kevin Smith converted on a pass by Ryan Butler with a dunk to put the game out of reach.

Although UMass won back-to-back games to earn a spot in the quarterfinals, Harris was still upset with his leadership during the postseason in his four years as a collegiate basketball player.

"I've been here four years and I've only won one postseason game in the Atlantic 10 conference," Harris said. "I can't really be happy about that because this is UMass basketball and we're known for winning games. This is what we do here, and I just can't accept that right now."



Kellogg praised his senior leader after the game and said he would be willing to help him in whatever capacity he needed. He also believes that Harris will be good enough to play some type of professional basketball and be successful.

With a team as young as the Minutemen, Kellogg believes this summer will be important for his team as it now has the experience of playing against A-10 opponents. One of the areas he believes his team needs to improve on the most is its strength.

"If you look at our team when we stand next to the other teams we play since they are a little bit older and more mature, we always look, I'd say, longer and skinnier and not totally developed," Kellogg said.

He hopes that the process of maturing along with spending time in the weight room as part of an NCAA team will help change that for next season.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Senior Ricky Harris drives to the hoop in UMass' regular season finale against URI. Harris finished his career third on UMass' all-time scoring list.

Minutemen fall to Harvard, rout Friars

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

During a week that saw the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team drop a 14-13 game to No. 11 Harvard and regroup three days later to dominate Providence, 17-3, Art Kell was a constant for the Minutemen.

The sophomore attack scored a combined eight goals in those two games, including a career-high five against the Friars (0-5).

UMass	17
PC	3
Harvard	14
UMass	13

After the loss to Harvard, UMass coach Greg Cannella cited one of the most widely-used sports clichés to describe how UMass can move forward.

"You can learn a lot from losing, but I don't want these guys to become too smart," Cannella said. "If you're going to learn that much from losing, I'd rather not learn. You don't like losing so you hope that what they learn is that there needs to be a great sense of urgency each time you step out there on the field."

Kell showed this philosophy through his play on the field against the Friars by scoring in every quarter but the third and notching four goals by halftime. He also assisted on attack Mike Wilus' goal at the 11th minute in the third quarter.

While Kell was a key contributor for the Minutemen (4-2), he was one of 11 players to score on one or more of the four Providence goalies used during the game.

Midfielder Ryan Hantverk scored the game's first goal just before the 10-minute mark in the first quarter with an unassisted goal against the Friars' starting goalie, Tim Finnegan (10 saves, nine goals against). In addition to his two goals on the day, Hantverk also added to his 17 points this season by assisting on one of Kell's goals at the 11th minute of the second quarter.

Hantverk's goal sparked an 8-0 run to start the game for the Minutemen that led to Finnegan exiting the game at the start of the second half in favor of Frank Cicero (three saves, three goals against).

UMass finished the game with a 14-9 face-off advantage, scoring on six of the draws. The Minutemen also cut down on turnovers (10) after committing 18 against the Crimson (4-1).

The UMass penalty kill fared better against the Friars, limiting Providence to one goal on their only extra-man opportunity after allowing four goals on seven power plays against Harvard.

Redshirt senior All-American Diogo Godoi anchored the

See MEN's LAX on page 6

BC sweeps, ends UM's season

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts hockey team showed a lot of fight just to make it into the Hockey East tournament.

A sweep of Maine on the final weekend of the regular season lifted it to the tournament where they continued to show that fight, but this time it wasn't enough. The Minutemen (18-18-0) fell to Boston College in the opening round of the Hockey East tournament on March 13.

In the best-of-three series at the Kelly Rink, the No. 4 Eagles (25-10-3) and eventual tournament champions took Game 1, 6-5, before ending UMass' season on March 13 in Game 2 with a 5-2 victory.

BC	5
UMass	2
BC	5
UMass	5

"We played with them toe-to-toe each game, and there was no question that it was a hard-fought series," UMass coach Don Cahoon said following Saturday's loss. "But nonetheless, it's very disappointing in terms of results."

For the first two periods of Saturday's contest, the Minutemen responded to goals by BC, leading each team to be even at two goals heading into the third period.

The Eagles got on the board first when Matt Price found Barry Almeida at the five minute, 37 second mark of the game. Sophomore Casey Wellman, however, was there for the Minutemen almost seven minutes later.

Justin Braun – who was named on Wednesday to the 2009-10 Hockey East Old Time Hockey Defensive Defensemen, which honors the league's top defensemen – started the play, making a pass from the left side of the ice to James Marcou. Marcou rifled a low shot on net that was blocked by BC's goaltender, John Muse (16 saves), only to have Wellman pick up the rebound and knot the game at one.

It was Wellman again in the second period who tied the game up for UMass, after the Eagles' Carl Sneep gave his team a 2-1 lead at the 12:42 mark of the period on a shorthanded goal. Still on the power play and just 33 seconds after falling behind one goal, Wellman put away another rebound following a shot from T.J. Syner.

The third period was a different story as BC scored three unanswered goals in the period to end the Minutemen's season.

The previous night's 6-5 loss saw even more resilience from UMass as they trailed 6-3 entering the third period.

Both teams traded goals in the first 25 minutes of play, with BC striking first and Braun tying the score at one at the 9:13 mark of the first period. Cam Atkinson extended the lead back to one with over five minutes to play in the period, only to have Syner even the score at two at the beginning of the second period.

Two minutes after Syner's goal, the Eagles scored three unanswered goals in a 2:04 stretch to make it a 5-2 lead. Wellman stopped the bleeding at the 17:15 mark of the second period to cut the deficit to two, but this time BC responded with a goal 1:39 later to extend the lead back to three.

The deficit was quickly reduced at the beginning of the third period as Martin Nolet and Marcou each found the back of the net in the first 54 seconds of the period. For the remaining 19 minutes of the game, the Eagles held onto their 6-5 lead, giving them the 1-0 series lead.

Prior to the weekend series with Maine, the Minutemen squared off at BC, falling to the Eagles 2-1 in overtime. On the season, UMass was 0-5 against BC.

"They are a great team and they will prove to be a great team before this season is over," Cahoon said. "We went toe-to-toe with them in three straight games and so that was a good sign. We never quite got over that big hump we were trying to get over the second half of the season."

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Casey Wellman fights for a puck earlier this season against a Boston College player at the Mullins Center. The center had three goals and an assist in the Hockey East tournament against BC.

Minutewomen drop 2

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

While the students at Massachusetts were enjoying their respective spring breaks, the women's lacrosse team could not find the same sense of enjoyment as they suffered two road losses over the past 10 days.

Albany	14
UMass	7
SBU	12
UMass	6

On Saturday, Albany opened up the first period of play with a six-goal run over a span of 20 minutes to gain a lead it would never lose, resulting in their first-ever victory over UMass (3-6), 14-7.

The Great Danes (4-1) jumped out early with goals by sophomore Melanie Sosnowski and junior Taylor Frink. Sophomore Jesse O'Donnell came to the rescue to keep the Minutewomen in the game with an unassisted goal. Down 2-1, the Minutewomen fell to four more goals by Albany juniors Mel Rorie (2), Jodi Battaglia and senior Olivia Jarem.

Merritt Cosgrove stopped the run with a goal off of a free position opportunity, putting the Minutewomen deficit at four goals. This changed 24 seconds later when senior Kayla Best and Sosnowski pounded a pair into the net. Just before the break, Cosgrove earned an assist off a pass to Houlis, who scored the final goal of the first period, leaving the score at 8-3.

The second half moved a bit slower, as the first goal wasn't scored until just over two minutes in. Frink notched her second goal of the game off an assist from Sosnowski.

The 215 spectators in attendance had to wait nearly 10 minutes until the next score, which came from sophomore Danielle Pelletier. Senior Jackie Lyons followed up with a goal of her own, cutting the lead once again to four goals.

Frink and Best notched their own pair of goals to erase the latest UMass push. While senior Stephanie Hopkins scored her first goal of the year to cut the Albany lead to five goals, the Great Danes kept their attack strong.

After a trade-off of goals between the two sides, Albany closed out the game with a pair of scores, resulting in a 14-7 final score.

UMass led in ground balls (21-17), but fell in the draw control category (14-9). Both teams were unsuccessful on the free-position shot, with UMass going 3-for-7, and Albany going 1-for-6.

An impressive part of the game was Florence's 12 saves, which came from the 31 shots taken by the Great Danes.

Despite a straight dead-lock in the first half of UMass game earlier in the week against Stony Brook, the Minutewomen could not keep the momentum going into the second half, as they fell 12-6 to the Seawolves on March 13.

SBU jumped out quick to get ahead in the game, scoring on two free-position shots to gain the early lead. Down by a pair of goals, UMass picked up the pace, knotting up the score off its own pair of free-position

See WOMEN's LAX on page 6

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Merritt Cosgrove looks for an open teammate against Yale early this season. The senior had three goals and an assist over break as UMass went 0-2.

Maroon and White start 0-9

By Dan Gigliotti
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team endured a long road trip this week and on Sunday, it got longer.

UMass (0-9) was swept in three separate series over the past 10 days, concluding in a 17-13 loss at William & Mary. In their first action of the season, the Minutemen had no answer for the strong bats of Oklahoma State and played formidably in two games against No. 13 Oklahoma. Their bats came alive this past weekend against the Tribe (13-6), only to come up short on the scoreboard.

"Things didn't go our way today as much as we hoped, but offensively we're starting to get more comfortable," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We're getting more comfortable at the plate and defensively we're playing well."

A seven-run UMass lead evaporated in the sixth inning of Sunday's game as Chris Forsten's go-ahead grand slam off of Brian Leigh (L, 0-2) altered the numbers on the scoreboard in William & Mary's favor, 9-8. Forsten was 4-for-5 on the day, recording a school record-tying eight RBIs. The Tribe then used an eight-run seventh inning to capture the lead for good.

After a one-out triple by Ryan Williams and an RBI ground-out by Sean Aitken gave William & Mary an early 1-0 lead in the second inning, the Minutemen responded with eight runs in the third. Four of those runs were accounted for by Kyle Multner, beginning with a lead-off single and a run and ending on a grand slam to put UMass up 8-1. Multner finished 4-for-5 with three runs and five RBIs.

The eight runs in the third inning by the Minutemen were more than they totaled in both series against Oklahoma or Oklahoma State, and more than they had driven in against William & Mary in their previous two games.

An RBI single by Matt Gedman in the top of the seventh evened up the score again until the Tribe exploded for eight more runs off of seven hits in the bottom half, regaining the lead 17-9.

The Minutemen made a last-ditch effort to come back in their final frame, going deep three times to cut the deficit in half. Peter Copa hit a solo shot off of William & Mary closer Tyler Trexell with one out. Two batters later, Tom Conley belted a two-run blast, followed by Mutner's second home run of the day. With two outs and no one on, however, Trexell struck out Bryan Boudinet to end the rally and an unsuccessful UMass road trip.

The 13 UMass runs were four less than they scored in their first eight games this season and more than they accounted for in their six games in the state of Oklahoma.

Starter Mike Gedman (5.52 ERA) pitched four innings, giving up four earned runs on seven hits and two walks. He left the game with an 8-3 lead in place of Leigh, who struggled in his third appearance this season.

After giving up a leadoff double and single in the bottom of the fifth inning, Gedman was moved to the designated hitter and Leigh inherited those runners. Leigh gave up a single to Forsten but managed to force a ground-out and a double-play to limit the damage. Leigh pitched all of the sixth inning, giving up the lead, and was relieved by Ron Wallace in the bottom of the seventh with runners on second and third.

"We need to make meaningful pitches in meaningful situations. When it's a nip-and-tuck battle, like it was today, we need to get used to being in those situations and execute," Stone said.

The Minutemen needed four different pitchers to get out of the home seventh and passed through six hurlers on the afternoon.

The 17 runs allowed are the second most UMass has given up this season, losing in a 20-1 drubbing to the Cowboys in Stillwater, Okla., in their third game of the season. During that four-game series, the Minutemen were outscored 46-4, including losses of 10-1 and 11-0.

UMass played more competitively against Oklahoma, losing two contests (4-2 and 8-4), and have played better with each series this season. Coach Stone says that it is normal for a team to show some signs of lagging at the onset of a season.

"It takes about 10 games before you're ready to really feel comfortable as a [player]," Stone said. "This spring trip schedule was a tough schedule, but we can benefit from it."

The Minutemen take the field again on Wednesday in their home-opener against Hartford.

Dan Gigliotti can be reached at dgigliot@student.umass.edu.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

RAIN HIGH: 51 LOW: 37 www.DailyCollegian.com TUESDAY, MARCH 23, 2010

Isenberg opens communication lab

By Matt Bouteillier
Collegian Staff

The Isenberg School of Management (SOM) recently added a new component to its communication center, along with two courses, that aim to advance students' abilities to speak publicly and construct presentations.

Until this academic year, the University of Massachusetts business school's Channing L. Bete Communication Center, founded in the early 1990s, had focused primarily on improving students' writing skills. But during the fall, SOM opened a facility to provide students with professional help to improve their public speaking skills as well as their visual displays, such as slideshow presentations.

And, although students are required in many business courses to present in front of their classmates, there had previously been no courses designed to hone in on public speaking skills the way the University's junior year writing requirement focuses on writing. So at the beginning of this semester, SOM launched two one-credit public speaking courses – "Professionally Speaking: Presentation Delivery for Business Majors" and "Professional Presentations: Strategies for Business Majors."

The courses are taught back to back allowing students to choose one or both, depending on their interest, said Gail Cruise, a communications specialist and SOM lecturer.

As for the new room designated for practicing public speaking, "it's a room with tons of capabilities," said Cruise, who was one of the driving forces behind the creation of the creation of the space last fall.

The center, located in room G12 in the SOM building basement, features several technological components, including numerous projectors and interactive smart boards, as well as a dual screen computer used for editing and feedback.

Among the most useful aspects of the communication center is the video recording equipment, Cruise said. A student, or group of students, can have their presentation recorded and then have it played back to

See LAB on page 2

MAYRA BARRERA/COLLEGIAN

Isenberg students looking to brush up on their public speaking skills can take advantage of the school's new communication lab, which is located in room G12 of the School of Management building, and no longer need to rehearse in locations such as the atrium (above).

2010 SGA Election Winners

SGA President
Brandon Tower

Student Trustee
Mike Fox

North East Area Government
Jimmy Cheung (Area Governor)
Kaela Barta (Lt. Governor)
Helena Tave (Secretary)
Leng Ung (Treasurer)

Orchard Hill Area Government
Garett Gowen (Area Governor)
Jessica He (Lt. Governor)
Will Fan (Secretary)
Kevin Truong (Treasurer)

Commuter Area Government
Maria Burden (Area Governor)
Evan Waghelstein (Lt. Governor)
Trevor Bullard (Secretary)
Kyle Borowiec (Treasurer)

Sylvan Area Government
Mitchell Fleischman (Area Governor)
Alexis Harewood (Lt. Governor)
Silvana Melo (Secretary)
Christine Avery (Treasurer)

North Area Government
Ben Johnson (Area Governor)
Alex Cidado (Lt. Governor)
Alex Cidado (Secretary)
Alex Cidado (Treasurer)

Southwest Area Government
Alexandra Booth (Area Governor)
Eric DiGiovanni (Lt. Governor)
Julie Davis (Secretary)
Zachary Dawson (Treasurer)

Central Area Government
Cody LeGros (Area Governor)
Michael McKenzie (Lt. Governor)
Cody LeGros (Secretary)
Chris Capone (Treasurer)

Federal student aid reform passes with health care vote

By Walter Hamilton and Larry Gordon
McClatchy Newspapers

The federal government is moving toward the most sweeping overhaul of college financial aid in decades.

The House of Representatives voted for the measure as part of its passage of health care legislation Sunday.

Under the proposal, private lenders would no longer make federally subsidized student loans. Instead, the government would make all such loans itself, instead of only some as it does now.

Eliminating the middleman would save the government an estimated $61 billion over the next decade. About $36 billion of that would be used to increase so-called Pell grants for lower-income students. The legislation also allocates $2.5 billion to historically black colleges, $2 billion to community colleges and at least $10 billion to reduce the federal deficit.

The Senate is expected to take up the measure as early as this week.

Backers of the move hailed it as a boon for students struggling to pay for college in a tough economy.

"This is incredibly good news for students and families and taxpayers," said Lauren Asher, president of the Project on Student Debt, a nonprofit advocacy group in Berkeley, Calif. "Taxpayer dollars that were being used to guarantee private lenders' profits are now being redirected to student aid and other important reforms to help keep college more affordable."

The bill would boost annual Pell grants, which go to about 6 million students, to a maximum of $5,975 by 2017 from $5,550 this year.

Without the legislation, the grants could be cut in coming years to offset a funding shortfall.

But other advocates said the bill wouldn't do enough to ensure

See STUDENT AID on page 3

$1.6 million override up for vote in Amherst town election

By Nick Bush
Collegian Staff

Polls will be open from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. today across Amherst, as the town's voters decide the fate of a proposed $1.6 million tax override, which would increase real estate and property taxes in order to balance the current budget deficit.

The town's five-member Select Board voted unanimously last month to place the override question on this year's ballot, which asks Amherst voters whether the town "will be allowed to assess an additional $1,680,441 in real estate and personal property taxes for the purposes of funding the following expenses: Town Operating Budget ($452,252), Elementary Schools Operating Budget ($400,000), Regional School District Assessment ($739,195) and Libraries Operating Budget ($88,994) for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 2010."

In 2007, voters defeated a similar tax increase by more than 200 votes when it was raised as a referendum question in the annual election. The town has only passed two overrides in its history, in 1991 and 2004 respectively.

The other major issue facing voters today is electing two candidates from a field of five running for a three-year term on the School Committee. Incumbent Andrew M. Churchill is declining to seek re-election, but fellow incumbent Kathleen D. Anderson will be squaring off on the ballot against candidates Ernest J. Dalkas, Richard B. Hood, Vincent J. O'Connor and Robert A. Spence.

Voting locations are as follows:

Precinct 1 – North Congregational Church, 1193 North Pleasant St.

Precinct 2 – North Fire Station, 601 East Pleasant St.

Precinct 3 – Immanuel Lutheran Church, 867 N. Pleasant St.

Precincts 4 and 5 – Bangs Community Center, 70 Boltwood Walk.

Precinct 6 – Fort River School, 70 South East St.

Precinct 7 – Crocker Farm School, 280 West St. (Route 116)

Precinct 8 – Munson Memorial Library, 1046 S. East St.

Precinct 9 – Wildwood School, 71 Strong St.

Precinct 10 – Hampden Dining Commons, Southwest Residential Area, University of Massachusetts.

Nick Bush can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu.

Grand entrance

Students filed back into Kennedy Tower in Southwest Sunday night, making their return from many different stormy spring break locales. With less than two months of classes left, it's time to get back to work.

ARTS & LIVING

A guy with a Magic Pipe

Mike Silverman performed at the Iron Horse Music Hall as a one man show, using his man-made instrument as his only musical accompaniment.

SEE PAGE 6

SPORTS

Minutemen and Bears square off

Two of the top offensive teams in the nation face off when the No. 18 ranked Massachusetts men's lacrosse team takes on No. 15 ranked Brown in Rhode Island today.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

International Collegian columnist Nick O'Malley knows that some of the best things you take away from studying abroad are stories, and he has one.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

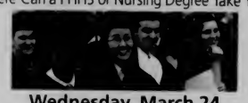
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian and Localdeer.org have teamed up to offer UMass students an interactive and democratic way to respond to our news coverage.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 37

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Joinson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Cal Scannell
COPIES EDITOR Andrew Witts
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolniert
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ellie Rulon-Miller
ASSISTANT COPIES Donomic Mei
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Auser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cody
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semesters. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.



PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Rocheleau

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Whitton

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shaina Jackson

UMass Amherst ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
Campus to Career
STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
Alumni 2.0:
Where Can a PHHS or Nursing Degree Take You?

Wednesday, March 24
5:30 p.m., Memorial Hall
An alumni panel answers questions regarding their careers, job searches, and more! The discussion gives students a glimpse of where their UMass Amherst education and experiences can take them. The panel consists of young alumni from the School of Public Health and Health Sciences and the School of Nursing.
FREE REFRESHMENTS
To register visit the Alumni Association website at UMassAlumni.com/students
Enter to win a UStore gift card at all Campus to Career events.

Speak easy: New Isenberg lab aims to help public speaking watch how they did. With help from the center's staff, students can see exactly where and how to improve.

LAB from page 1

To give the room a professional feel, there is a conference table directly in front of the presentation area to simulate presenting in an office environment, not just an empty room.

The worth of this room to business majors cannot be overstated, Cruise said.

The advantage is particularly unique for UMass business students who are required to give presentations in some form during their years in SOM because the school sees effective public speaking, in conjunction with technological visual displays, as an essential skill in today's business world.

After presenting during class, students typically get feedback from the professor on how to improve. However, students can find it difficult to understand that constructive criticism without actually watching themselves present and seeing exactly how their presentation appears.

The center continues helping students with their business writing in SOM room 208. However, said Cruise, simply having good writing skills in today's business environment is no longer enough.

"The program kind of evolved for the need to have polished and professional business majors with organized and strategic public speaking capabilities," she said.

With the video recording and playback, students can pair the improvement ideas of public speaking experts with real footage from the perspective of someone in the audience. The result can drastically improve public speaking capabilities, Cruise said.

Thus far, the public speaking component of the communications center has been used mostly by upperclassmen, particularly marketing majors, who have practiced presenting ideas that will eventually be presented to companies such as General Motors and Ford.

"We would like to start seeing it being used by freshman and sophomores," said Cruise.

The writing and public speaking centers in SOM are open only to the business school's students, but writing and speaking assistance is provided to those students for any of their courses – not just SOM courses.

Students who are interested in working on their presentation skills, "can visit the Communication Center individually or as part of a small work team to arrange edits on papers and obtain feedback on writing and speaking assignments," said assistant professor of marketing Kathleen Debevec.

"It is up to students to take advantage of this great program," she added.

Students do not need an appointment for writing assistance, however for help with public speaking, students should e-mail Cruise at gcruise@som.umass.edu to make an appointment. For more information visit, http://www.isenberg.umass.edu/undergrad/For_Current_Students/Student_Resources/Writing_Center/

Matt Bouteillier can be reached at mbouteil@student.umass.edu.

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Isenberg School of Management students now have the ability to work on their PowerPoint skills in the new communications lab.

Mill Valley
E·S·T·A·T·E·S
Looking for a place to live next year?
Check us out at the HOUSING FAIR $500 OFF Security
FREE $300-$500Visa Card*
FREE Nintendo Wii*
Thursday, March 25th 10AM-3PM
Campus Center Concourse

More info at 413-253-7377
www.MillValleyApts.com
Housing Fair ONLY, some restrictions apply

HPV Fact #13:
About 2 out of 3 people will get genital warts after having any kind of genital contact with someone infected.

HPV Fact #11:
You don't have to actually have sex to get HPV—the virus that causes genital warts.

Why risk it
Visit your campus health center.

MERCK
Copyright © 2010 Merck & Co., Inc. All rights reserved. Printed in USA.
hpv.com
21080004(40)-01/10-GRD

House passes student aid with health care

STUDENT AID from page 1

cash-strapped families access to college.

An earlier version would have boosted the maximum Pell grant to $6,900. And even though the grants would be indexed to inflation for the first time, that provision would be in effect for only five of the next 10 years, said Mark Kantrowitz, publisher of Finaid.org, a college-aid Web site.

"It's falling far short of tuition inflation," he said. "It could have been a lot better."

Thirty years ago, Pell grants covered 77 percent of the average tuition at a public university, Asher said. That's down to 35 percent today.

The financial industry has lobbied hard against the bill, arguing it would cost jobs at student-loan companies, which would still have contracts to service some student loans.

Kevin Bruns, executive director of America's Student Loan Providers, a trade group, predicted the legislation would reduce the quality of service to borrowers because private operators would make lower profits.

"The margins on service contracts are pretty narrow," he said.

Sarah Bana, 21, an economics major and student government activist at University of California at Irvine, was in Washington this week to lobby for the bill.

"It was beautiful to see legislators finally speaking up for students and students' rights," she said.

Bana, a senior, said she received a $3,400 Pell grant this year and about $12,400 in other financial aid.

Pell grants "are definitely a big factor for me being able to come to college," she said.

Nancy Coolidge, the UC system's coordinator of student financial support, said she was very pleased about the bill, especially its protection of the Pell grants. More than 55,000 UC students receive Pells, totaling about $200 million a year and averaging about $3,500 per UC recipient, she said.

If the bill had failed, the maximum Pell grant would have dropped to about $2,150, less than half the $5,500 maximum projected for next year, she said. "So this is a very good outcome. It's a big relief," she said.

The legislation's provisions on loans wouldn't affect UC students much because all 10 UC campuses have already opted to offer loans directly from the federal government, avoiding private lenders.

One benefit would be a slightly lower interest rate for parents who take out federal Plus loans, Coolidge said. And students who started out with private bank loans would be able to consolidate those with direct government loans when they graduate, she said.

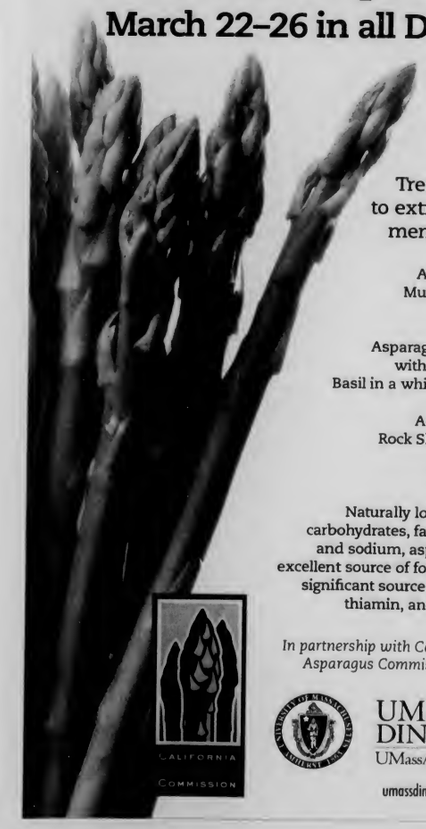
Whittier College and Stanford University also were among the schools planning to switch to direct loans by fall, whether the bill passed or not.

Whittier's vice president for enrollment, Lisa Meyer, said she hopes the loan application will be "simpler for families" than the one involving private banks issuing federally guaranteed loans.

If direct loans become mandatory nationwide, she said, "there may be some bumps along the way as colleges figure out what we need to do and the government figures out the level of support colleges need. But I anticipate in the long run, it will be a positive thing."

Jack Scott, the chancellor of California's community colleges, said he was "thrilled" the bill included funding for community colleges to develop and improve career and trade training and programs that help students stay in school at historically black and minority-serving colleges.

The funds would be awarded through competitive grants, so it's too soon to say what the effect would be in California, he said.



President Barack Obama addressed the nation from the East Room Sunday night, following the House vote on health care reform, which also included an overhaul of federal student aid.

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
Needs You!
Do you want to build your resumé?
Do you need business and sales experience?
Become an ADVERTISING REPRESENTATIVE
SOM Students strongly encouraged to apply.

To Apply: Contact Mike Tortorici @ 545-3500
or e-mail thecollegian@gmail.com

Fresh Asparagus Introduces Spring!
March 22–26 in all DCs

Treat yourself to extraordinary menu choices:

Asparagus and Mushroom Filled Crepes

Asparagus Fettuccine with Pancetta and Basil in a white wine Broth

Asparagus and Rock Shrimp Risotto

And more...

Naturally low in calories, carbohydrates, fat, cholesterol, and sodium, asparagus is an excellent source of folic acid and a significant source of vitamin C, thiamin, and vitamin B6.

In partnership with California Asparagus Commission

CALIFORNIA COMMISSION
UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

WELCOME BACK
to Your Award Winning Dining Services!
MARCH - APRIL - MAY
Upcoming Events

- Guest Chef Betty Rosbottom
- Fresh Asparagus Introduces Spring!
- 5K Road Race
- Thai Dinner
- Guest Chef Hiroko Shimbo
- Cooking/Baking 101
- UMass Idol Preliminary
- Sorrento Day
- Student Iron Chef Competition
- Taste of UMass
- Taste of Home
- Spring BBQ
- Midnight Buffet

ivy RESTAURANTS
UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, MARCH 23, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Giant's Causeway story

Nick O'Malley

There are a lot of reasons that people study abroad, the most often cited one being "for the experience." Or, to be honest, "doing awesome stuff in another country so you can tell stories about awesome stuff you did in other countries."

I'm at the point in my Celtic adventure where I can start musing about not just what I've done, but about the stories and lessons I have experienced. For example, I'm going to tell the Giant's Causeway story and how, much to my chagrin, it reinforced one of life's more annoying clichés: It's not the destination, but the journey itself.

10:20: We ride through what is known as the "concrete moat" that divides Belfast. Apparently, the British and Irish used to fire stones at each other across it this while traffic went by. Save me.

The only reason this is called the Giant's Causeway story is because it was the ultimate destination of the journey, meaning it provided the moment at which my friends and I said "gah, this is so awesome." What makes it a good story, though, was our crazy bus driver tour guide, the absurd hours and the silly things that happened along the way. It's a good story, even if I remove all the touristy moments we were looking forward to. So that's how I'm going to tell it.

5:00: My cell phone alarm goes off. The snooze button is promptly hit.

5:07: Fine I get up, making some yeti-like groan in the process. We'd spent the night at a hostel near the famous Temple Bar in Dublin. We have to meet the bus at the Dublin Tourism Office at 6:30 a.m. My body hates me.

5:30: I'm the last one ready. My friend Julie was up at 4:30 a.m. and is blow-drying her hair to its usual level of fabulousness while my friend Andrew had snagged the only available bathroom before me. What kind of place has one bathroom for 10 people?

5:46: We head to the nearby Spar convenience store to pick up food. Chicken fillet rolls for two Euros? Score.

6:02: I'm getting nervous about us all making the bus. Our friends Jared and Meg spent the night with Jared's step mom's fifth cousins – seriously – and were being driven in while our friend Elisa, who was in from England, was meeting us there, hopefully. As we headed to the tourism office, I imagined an Ocean's 13-like split frame montage of all three parties all working towards the meeting point.

6:10: We meet Elisa, whose only instructions 48 hours ago were "Meet us at the bus in Dublin at 6:30." Glad we worked that out.

6:15: The bus, an ancient, light-blue, cramped Mercedes Benz, arrives and a small Irishman starts to usher our sleep-deprived shells onto the bus.

6:25: Meg and Jared round the corner. Jared has a pizza. Sure, why not?

6:34: We leave the tourism office. The bus driver introduces himself as Joseph Patick Mulligan (JPM) and follows it up by what I can only describe as "Irish noises."

6:50: JPM says he's going to let us sit back and relax, but continues to ramble and sing old Irish songs. More Irish noises.

6:51-8:50: A blur of sleep, Irish noises and Brazilians in front of me rambling.

9:00: We arrive in Belfast. Sure, it has a bad reputation, but we'll be fine.

9:22: We make a couple stops to pick up sterling (no Euros in Northern Ireland) and go to the bathroom. JPM parks illegally. He says if the cops come, tell them we broke down.

10:12: We pass the Europa hotel. JPM tells us that, at 35 times, it is the most bombed building in Europe. I withdraw my previous statement.

10:20: We ride through what is known as the "concrete moat" that divides Belfast. Apparently, the British and Irish used to fire stones at each other across it – this while traffic went by. Save me.

10:45: I got up at 5 a.m. It's not too early for lunch. Don't judge me.

11:05: JPM is waist-deep in his laundry list of traditional Irish songs that all have something to do with where we are on the trip.

11:20: We stop for photos and Andrew jumps on my back for some reason. Meg, seizing the opportunity presented by being uphill from us, jumps on Andrew's back to pull off the legendary double-piggy back.

11:45: We arrive at the Carrick-a-Rede rope bridge and do tourist stuff.

12:03: We find the most picturesque bench in the world. Jared must be photographed upon it.

12:15: After the picturesque bridge-crossing, I notice that the tiny crag of an island on the other side has a distinct peak. Re-enacting the scene from Rocky IV, I run to the top and yell "Dragooo."

12:20: Andrew lies down on the grass and realizes that it is the softest grass in the world. We nap briefly.

12:30: Andrew poses for some pictures and takes his shirt off after we jokingly goaded him to. He tosses the shirt, which I grab right as the wind catches it and almost sends it off a cliff into the North Atlantic.

1:00-4:10: Touristy stuff. We go to Giant's Causeway. It's awesome.

4:10: After waiting outside the bus for 10 minutes for JPM, a man from Florida goes to the back of the bus and knocks on the window. JPM wakes up and asks if it's time to leave.

4:17: JPM berates the first of three drivers of the day for not being able to drive.

4:20-6:40: No clue. I got up at 5 a.m., what do you want from me?

5:45: We arrive in Belfast an hour late, but the entire tour collectively says "screw Belfast" and suggest we only stay there for 45 minutes.

6:00: We find the highlight of Belfast: a Tesco Supermarket that is apparently built in a cathedral with Corinthian columns out front.

6:30: We go back to meet the bus, but a police officer tells us that the streets are cleared and there is no way our bus will be picking us up there. We're confused and lost until our eyes see the glory of JPM in the Benz-Bus somehow getting through a barricade and committing what I can only assume was at least seven moving violations to get us the hell out of Belfast.

6:35-8:30: Blur of sleep, Irish noise, a story about the French supplying the Irish with weapons, watching Space Jam on my laptop and I think I ate a croissant at some point as we rode back to Dublin to pass out without consuming a single pint. We may have broken a law by doing so.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

Student loan bill matters, too

Sara Crossman

The news everyone has been talking about is the healthcare bill that finally passed over the weekend, but there is another important piece of legislation riding the healthcare bill's coattails: a student loan bill. For many students, the effects of this bill will be significantly more immediate than those in healthcare reform.

This bill will follow the same expedited rules as the healthcare legislation did in the Senate if it passes in the House. A similar version of this bill was passed by the House of Representatives members last year, but it failed in the Senate. This time, it will need only a simple majority to pass, which nearly all but guarantees its success.

For the past four decades the government has paid fees to private banks and lenders so that they could act as intermediaries in the issuing of student loans. The government has essentially subsidized loans from private companies in order to keep the interest rate down for students. If this bill is passed, the government will be the originator of all assistance loans.

Naturally, the banks and other lenders have lobbied against this bill, but so far they have failed. This will end a long-term source of revenue for these companies, but it will help students and taxpayers. Though government subsidized loans from private businesses help students, the interest rates have generally been higher than those on loans issued by the government, which will help more students minimize their debt.

By increasing loans and other aid issued directly from the government, the Congressional Budget Office estimates that the government will save approximately $61 billion over 10 years.

This increase will help offset the growing number of students expected to enter college over the next several years, and may encourage some who thought that they could not recieve enough money to attend college to go.

Forty billion of this money will go into higher education over the next 10 years, the majority of which – $36 billion – will be put into the Pell Grant program to increase the amount students can receive per year as well as the number of students receiving funds. One can only hope that the remaining $4 billion is put into loan programs that will reach far more students than the Pell Grant. The remaining $19 billion will be used to reduce the budget deficit and to offset the costs of the new healthcare system.

The bill proposed last year was significantly more ambitious. It planned to allocate more money to student loan plans, community colleges, and an additional $8 billion for early childhood education.

The maximum Pell Grant would also have increased to $6,900 over the course of 10 years, whereas the current bill is only increasing the maximum by about $400, from $5,500 next year to $5,900 in 10 years.

Every year the University of Massachusetts Financial Aid office helps approximately 20,000 students to receive $198 million dollars, but only a small amount of students receive the Pell. Although the first increases from this legislation would not come into effect for two years, students who are still in school at the time may receive more funding. In addition, since the campus may be adding to its overall number of students in the coming years, the number of students affected by these changes could increase from the current average.

More than just here at UMass, community colleges and historically black colleges will likely see an increase in funding for their students, since they have traditionally received more Pell Grant students. This increase will help offset the growing number of students expected to enter college over the next several years, and it may encourage some who thought that they could not receive enough money to attend college to go.

For students unaffected by changes to the Pell Grant who still need aid, opportunities for loans and scholarships will not be diminished by the increase of funds used for the Pell Grant or by eliminating assistance loans from private companies. This bill will increase the number of parents eligible in the loan PLUS program, which has lower interest rates in the direct loan program than the average private loan.

In addition, this legislation will change rules about loan repayment, but only on loans issued after July 1, 2014. The new rules are, as far as income based repayment is concerned, the percentage of discretionary income on which loan repayment will be based will drop from 15 percent to 10 percent, and loan forgiveness will be accelerated to 20 years from 25.

Overall, this bill will create good changes for the federal aid system, but most of us will not be in school long enough to see its effects.

Sara Crossman is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at scrussma@student.umass.edu.

Federal sales tax solves all federal woes

Shane Cronin

The number one reason conservatives are opposed to illegal immigration – other than the obvious fact it is against the law – is money. Illegal or undocumented immigrants do not pay taxes other than state sales taxes. This accounts for only a fraction of tax revenue, however, and ranges from being only 5 to 7 percent of the goods.

The jackpot is in the federal income tax. Even those who live at the federal poverty level qualify for an income tax of up to 15 percent, excluding any state level income taxes that may apply. But because illegal residents do not have social security numbers, they cannot work on the books, and therefore, do not pay this tax.

There is a possible solution for bringing in the estimated 11.5 million or more unauthorized people onto the U.S. tax rolls: a value added tax (VAT). A VAT is essentially a sales tax on goods and services, however, it would be imposed by the federal government rather than at the individual state level. The VAT, like the state tax now, would most likely apply to all items with few exceptions: necessities such as food and clothing as well as home buying. The VAT would stand somewhere between 20 and 30 percent. For example, if one bought a $100 television, a VAT of 25 percent would increase the cost of the item to $125.

At first glance this seems outrageous. But consider this: in addition to introducing a VAT, the feds would repeal the federal income tax. For those of you whose parents jointly make $34,000 to $137,700 a year, the government receives 25 percent of it.

According to a 2009 Pew Hispanic Center study, 170,000 undocumented immigrants work under the table in Nevada. That is more than 12 percent of the entire state's workforce and more than double the national average. Imagine the revenue both the state and federal governments could generate by operating with a VAT rather than an income tax.

Many ultra-liberal democrats would be too happy to impose a VAT and maintain the federal income tax to fund and continue major spending.

Currently 130 countries worldwide employ some form of VAT. It is particularly popular in Europe, where countries like Finland, Iceland, Sweden and Norway use one. The U.S. under the Obama administration has paid mild credence to the idea of a nationwide sales tax. Last year the White House Budget Director hired a consultant to explore the new revenue option. In addition, former chairman of the Federal Reserve, Paul Volcker, has acknowledged the potential in a VAT. And with the nearly trillion dollar healthcare legislation now the law of the land, the U.S. needs a new well from which to draw water.

Referring to one of my earlier points, it is vital that if a VAT is to be enacted, the federal income tax must be repealed, or at the minimum, most Americans must be exempted from it. Many ultra-liberal democrats would be too happy to impose a VAT and maintain the federal income tax to fund and continue major spending.

I would argue that the nation's highest earners could be subject to an income tax as well as a VAT.

Deficit projections are absolutely bleak, forecasting into the trillions. The United States Treasury borrows 46 cents for every dollar it spends, largely from China. This is unequivocally unsustainable fiscal policy.

No doubt the VAT has its critics and skeptics, but outright dismissing it as the future tax model in the U.S. is premature. Unfortunately, there aren't enough pro-VAT and anti-income tax enthusiasts in power. One could argue that jacking up the price of goods during a recession is insane.

One could also argue that enforcing a healthcare bill on American people who largely don't want it, and have no way to pay for it, during a recession is insane. But it can be done.

Shane Cronin is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at scronin@student.umass.edu.

Fed/Up? Ed/Op.

UM drops two before defeating Presbyterian

By Ben Lambert
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts tennis team spent its spring break on a road trip through South Carolina, going 1-2 against three schools from the area. UMass lost to Charleston Southern and the College of Charleston, but ended on a high note with a victory over Presbyterian.

The 6-1 victory snapped a five-match losing streak for the Minutewomen and improved their record to 8-6 on the season. Five of the six losses have been to ranked opponents.

UMass earned its first point by sweeping the three doubles matches. Candynce Boney and Maude Lecluyse defeated Heather Heusel and Paige Oelke, 8-6, at No. 1 doubles, while Julia Comas and Tanisha Hodgson beat Olivia McMillan and Virginia Waldron, 8-3, at No. 2. Jocelyn Providence and Kaitlyn Carpenter finished up by defeating Megan Davis and Lindsey Krause, 8-5.

In singles play, Comas had her first victory at No. 1 singles this season as she knocked off Heusel, 6-4, 6-3. Other notable UMass victories include Boney's 6-0, 6-0 blanking of Olivia McMillan at No. 2 singles and Providence's 5-7, 6-4, 10-8 triumph over Cara Caruso at No. 6 singles.

Presbyterian fell to 2-9 on the season with the loss, although it now stands at 3-9. They earned their first conference victory of the season on Friday when they defeated Liberty, 4-3.

The Minutewomen began their trip with a valiant effort against Charleston Southern, but ultimately fell 5-2. The victories for UMass came from Boney, who knocked off Brooke Pletcher, 3-6, 6-3, 10-7, and Providence, who beat Susita Das, 6-3, 6-4. Lecluyse took her match against Marija Dzakovic into a climatic tiebreaker, but lost 6-7 (3-7), 6-0, 10-4 in the end.

The Buccaneers entered the contest 6-0 in dual match play, with victories over No. 66-ranked UNC-Greensboro, UNC Asheville, and Liberty to their credit. They also sport a perfect 3-0 mark in league play.

With the win, the Buccaneers moved into the Intercollegiate Tennis Association National Poll for the first time this year at No. 65.

Next, the Minutewomen traveled to the College of Charleston. UMass lost 6-0 in a rain-shortened event that saw the teams only play the singles matches because of the inclement conditions. The brightest spot for the Minutewomen was Lecluyse, who took her match to a tiebreaker for the second straight time. However, Lauren Borza ultimately triumphed 4-6, 6-0, 10-5. No other UMass player took their match to three sets.

With the win, the College of Charleston raised its record to 11-8. The victory was the Cougars' fourth sweep of the year, with the others coming against conference opponent Western Carolina as well as non-conference opponents Case Western and Charlotte. They are now ranked at No. 58 in the country and have a perfect 4-0 record in the Southern Conference.

The Minutewomen will return to action Saturday as they hit the road to play the New Jersey Institute of Technology at 10 a.m.

Ben Lambert can be reached at wlambert@student.umass.edu.

AMANDA JOHNSON/COLLEGIAN

The Minutewomen recieved a win from No. 1 doubles team Candynce Boney and Maude Lecluyse to defeat the Blue Hose.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
Ads for $6.70 per inch
On-Campus Local Business Ads for $5
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

AMERICAN RED CROSS
UMASS MULLINS CENTER
BLOOD DRIVE
THURSDAY MARCH 25th
11 am – 4 pm
UMass Mullins Center
ALL PRESENTING DONORS WILL GET A BOSTON BRUINS "BLEED BLACK & GOLD" SHIRT!
For an appointment please call
1-800-922-4376 or visit
RedCrossBlood.org
Positive ID Required.
MULLINS CENTER
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST
American Red Cross

The Bryant Master of Professional Accountancy Technical Excellence. Market Advantage.
"Bryant's accounting programs are developed with and for the marketplace. I continue to be impressed by the quality of employees we recruit from Bryant."
ROBERT CALABRO '88
TAX PARTNER, PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS
Start your career with a competitive advantage. Earn your Master of Professional Accountancy (MPAc) degree at Bryant University.
• The two semester MPAc program meets the 150-hour requirement for CPA licensure.
• Complete in Summer/Fall, Summer/Summer, Fall/Spring or Spring/Summer.
• More than 40 firms recruit at Bryant each year.
• Build your accounting knowledge, and learn the leadership, client relations, and project management skills that will set you apart from the crowd.
To learn more about this program and upcoming information sessions:
Contact us at (401) 232-6230 or e-mail mpac@bryant.edu
Graduate School of Business
Smithfield, Rhode Island
www.bryant.edu/mpac
(401) 232-6230
Bryant University

UMASS 5K DASH & DINE FOR RELIEF
WALK & RUN TO BENEFIT HAITI
Runners/Walkers/Teams
Prizes awarded by age/gender/team
Wheelchairs and strollers welcome
Authentic Haitian Lunch and Health Fair
Public Welcome
Register online by Thurs., March 25, 2010 at www.umassdining.com
Race day registration also available
$10 for meal plan members
$25 for public/non-meal plan members
Lunch and t-shirt included in entry fees
Check in begins at 9:00 am at Haigis Mall
Race begins at 11 am
Prizes award at noon
Authentic Haitian Lunch and Health Fair to follow
UMASS DINING UMass
www.umassdining.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MARCH 23, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

That 1 Guy breaks it down at Iron Horse

By Tappan Parker
Collegian Staff

The Iron Horse Music Hall was packed on March 11 for a special Northampton performance from That 1 Guy, a one-man band known for his instrument, the Magic Pipe.

The night started with another one-man band, Matt Lorenz, whose stage name is The Suitcase Junket. Lorenz managed to get the crowd's attention with his folk and blues sounds and an instrument setup that was literally dug out of the trash. It seemed like Lorenz was a street performer gone pro, and it was a very different experience. With mellow lyrics and slow songs, Lorenz opened himself up to the crowd.

After Lorenz left the stage, all that was left was the Magic Pipe, the sole performer who stayed on the stage from start to finish. Looking at it, it seemed like some crazy hardware contraption with gizmos and gadgets thrown in here and there, attached by a string or two, rather than an actual instrument.

However, that is exactly what it became once Mike Silverman, otherwise known as That 1 Guy, took the stage.

Beating on the Magic Pipe and plucking its strings with a drum stick, Silverman began playing his first song of the night, titled "Modern Man." This high-energy opener riled up the crowd, and they cheered in time with the beat for Silverman's first wolf howl, which the crowd eagerly repeated.

Silverman brought plenty of new songs to Northampton from his most recent album, "Packs a Wallop!," as well as some old crowd favorites, including a new remix of "Buttmachine," which was created and performed especially for the Iron Horse. All of his songs bring something new to the mix of his elaborate repertoire, but every one of them has some sort of funk or groove that everyone can enjoy.

Some of the songs played, such as one called "Bananas," had a tribal energy and build up. Other songs were mellower and relaxing, such as That 1 Guy's rendition of "Somewhere Over the Rainbow," played on the Magic Saw.

One major highlight of the show occurred when Silverman took out a bow and started making the Magic Pipe sound like a cello. Then he added some beats to it, taking the classical sound and adding it to a rock and roll setting. To continue the sound, he added distortion, and created something that can only be described as 'rockello'.

How much of what was performed was actually from the songs, only Silverman knows, as it was impossible to tell when he was simply messing around and when he was actually playing written material. He frequently joked around with the crowd, either with musical humor, such as playing a sample repeatedly at odd times, or physical gags like his laser bows.

The sounds that came from the stage completely contradicted what was being heard; audience members heard a big band playing, yet saw only one man banging on a pipe. Somehow, Silverman managed to create an entire band's sound at once, and man did it work.

But the sound is only part of it. Silverman moved and grooved with his instrument, which has been designed to be able to move around with him as well. With adjustable positions and a flexible base, the Magic Pipe moved and grooved just as much as Silverman did, amplifying the mood that he projected with his music.

It is clear just from watching him that Silverman loves what he does, from the huge grin on his face to his amplified movements to talking to the crowd. At the same time, it is obvious that everything he does is still experimental.

As the inventor of his own instrument, Silverman is constantly modifying and improving the Magic Pipe, and this is still a project. When asked about where he sees himself going next with the Pipe, Silverman responded that he "wants to keep perfecting the instrument."

However, Silverman does not have plans to ever market the instrument, mainly because he does not "think anyone could play it, it would be too limiting." But still, he strives to improve. Doing so many shows allows him to "push yourself to improve" and he uses the challenges "in order to cope with stress," he said.

The one thing about That 1 Guy is that his music is an acquired taste. His eccentric lyrics may shock at first, his odd-ball stage antics may put some off, but if you stick around, you grow to appreciate the music and laugh right along with him.

Tappan Parker can be reached at tparker@student.umass.edu.

Mike Silverman, whose stage name is That 1 Guy, demonstrates the sounds coming from his man-made musical instrument, which he refers to as the Magic Pipe, at his Iron Horse Music Hall show on March 11.

MATTHEW HANSON — COLLEGIAN

Literary artist Tracy K. Smith will be the featured guest poet at a reading at Smith College tonight.

COURTESY SMITH COLLEGE

Prestigious poet to visit Smith College

By Margaret Gaby
Collegian Correspondent

The Smith College program for the Study of Women and Gender will hold a poetry reading tonight, recognizing the youth of New England's excellence in the art of poetry.

Tracy K. Smith, who helped judge the 4th annual Smith College Poetry Contest for high school students in New England, will be a visiting guest. The four winners of this contest will be reciting their poetry alongside the prestigious writer.

Smith is an African-American writer who received a bachelor's degree in English from Harvard University and a M.F.A. in Creative Writing from Columbia University. She was a Wallace Stegner Fellow in poetry at Stanford University, and is presently an assistant professor of creative writing at Princeton University.

She has published two prize-winning collections of poems. These include her first book, "The Body's Question," which won the Cave Canem Prize, and her second book, "Duende," which received the James Laughlin Award of the Academy of American Poets.

Smith's poems deal with grief and loss, as well as historical interrelations with race and family and the transition between childhood and adulthood. She has been described as "a voice that can weave beauty and terror into one breath" by fellow American poet Yusef Komunyakaa. Literary artist Joy Harjo calls her work "a true merging of the ancient roots of poetry with the language of an age of a different kind of sense."

She won the Whiting Writer's Award in 2005 for poetry, the Rona Jaffe Foundation Writer's Award, a fellowship from the Bread Loaf Writers' Conference and a grant from the Ludwig Vogelstein Foundation. The 38-year-old has also appeared in many journals such as the New Yorker, Post Road, Boulevard, Callaloo, Columbia: A Journal of Literature and Art, the Gulf Coast, West Branch and the Nebraska Review.

First place winner of the Smith College Poetry contest, Haeyeon Cho, a student at Milton Academy will be reciting her poem, The Soup Kitchen will be at tonight's reading, along with the contest's three finalists – Samantha Ardoin of Phillips Exeter Academy will read "No Meaning Intended"; Elizabeth Bennett of Milton Academy will recite "Race Days" and Carly McIver from Marblehead High School will read "In Which a Past Shows Visions of the Future and the Mallard Duck Regrets His Choice of Living Quarters".

The event, which will be held tonight at 7:30 in the Smith College Poetry Center. The reading is free and open to the public, and will be followed by a book signing.

For more information from the Smith College Poetry Center visit http://www.smith.edu/poetrycenter.

Margaret Gaby can be reached at mgaby@student.umass.edu.

Are in-season fruits and vegetables a better match for your nutritional needs?

By Carlos Alcala
McClatchy Newspapers

Over a couple of decades, local farmers market advocate Renae Best has developed a seemingly unique theory that should appeal to people who subscribe to community-supported agriculture or shop at farmers markets.

Both farmers markets and CSAs – which deliver produce to subscribers on a regular basis – provide fruits and vegetables that are locally grown and in season.

Many experts – not just the growers, but nutrition gurus and writers like Michael Pollan – recommend that you eat local food that's in season.

But Best, general manager with her husband for Certified Farmers' Markets of Sacramento, seems to be the first to develop this unusual claim:

She believes produce that is ripe and locally available during a particular season provides exactly the nutrients your body needs during that season – at least amid the bounty of California.

For example, she suggests that watermelons are ripe in summer when you need the hydration they provide. Plus, they have potassium.

"It's like a Gatorade, but it's natural," Best said.

It's "the innate intelligence of nature," according to Janet Zeller, marketing manager for the Sacramento, Calif. Natural Foods Co-op. She also encourages in-season nutrition by talking about melons' hydration benefits.

Those who study nutrition are skeptical, though they don't knock the idea of eating what's in season.

"I'm not aware that the nutrients in fresh vegetables are needed more at certain times of year than others," said Marion Nestle, a New York University nutrition professor and expert on federal dietary policy.

"I think it's just a nice idea to eat what's in season," said Kirsten Ransbury, a registered dietitian for Kaiser Permanente, who also expressed skepticism.

Still, Best and Zeller had other examples. In winter, kiwi and citrus are ripe and loaded with vitamin C. Best calls kiwi a fuzzy vitamin pill.

"The cold and flu season is when the things high in vitamin C are in the market," she said.

Winter is also when you may see a lot of foods rich in beta carotene, a source of vitamin A. That would be darker-colored things like broccoli, sweet potatoes and butternut squash.

"Night vision depends on vitamin A entirely," Best wrote in a newsletter she distributes. And after all, nights are longer in winter.

Best isn't a nutrition scientist.

"It was something I stumbled on purely by coincidence," she said.

She started thinking about it after her husband took over management of the markets years ago. It seemed that her family – eating lots of fresh stuff – got sick less than relatives

See NUTRITION on page 7

While some nutritionists argue that fresh fruits and vegetables are most beneficial when they are in season, it is important to incorporate them into your diet year-round, especially for foods that are rich in vitamins, such as oranges, tomatoes and carrots.

MCT

Fresh foods a must, no matter the season

NUTRITION from page 6

who didn't have the same access to produce.

"Nature just kind of had a plan," she said.

To Nestle, it's not so much a plan as a selective look at the nutritional data.

"Mind you," she added in an e-mail interview, "I'm strongly in favor of farmers markets, but there are plenty of (other) reasons to support them."

Ransbury of Kaiser had a similar response when interviewed while walking around a farmers market the HMO sponsors at its Roseville, Calif., campus to promote healthier eating.

At the market, one farmer's sign pointed out that blood oranges are rich in antioxidants.

But, said Ransbury, "that would be true of all fruits and vegetables."

It's not only the ones that have been dubbed "superfoods," but the woman at the market booth felt obliged to specifically compare the blood oranges to blueberries.

There's a problem with reducing a fruit or vegetable to a particular vitamin or nutrient, Ransbury said. If someone doesn't like that fruit, they'll try to take a pill instead.

"It's not the individual nutrient, it's the whole package deal," she said. Each fruit is made up of hundreds of chemicals, and we don't always know how the benefits accrue.

Instead, she said she believes you'll do well if you eat the items of fresh produce you like. Moreover, despite Best's examples, there are examples of out-of-season items that can offer the same nutrients – say, a tomato providing vitamin C in summer, not flu and cold season.

"You need those nutrients year-round," Ransbury said.

Moreover, our Sacramento Valley perception of summer doesn't apply evenly all over California.

Paul Underhill, co-owner of Terra Firma Farm – a CSA provider – noted that his customers in San Francisco, where it's foggy and cool in summer, don't want so much melon when it's ripe.

The nutrition experts also uniformly said that your body needs pretty much the same stuff year-round.

That doesn't mean there aren't nutritional reasons for the seasonal produce.

"My position would simply be that the seasonal foods would tend to be higher in nutrients in general than foods that undergo nutrient degradation in the time it takes to transport them to us from long distances," said Christopher Gardner, director of nutritional studies at the Stanford Prevention Research Center, via e-mail.

That is, the peach arriving from South America in winter probably won't have as much nutrition as the locally grown one in summer.

Zeller also suggests that what's in season and local is at its peak of flavor.

If you eat around the seasons, you'll enjoy it more and get a variety of nutrients, she said.

The bottom line is that, yes, fresh produce is good for you, but trying to reduce vegetables to individual nutrients may not be useful.

"I don't think anyone disputes that vegetables are good for you," said Danielle Best, who has researched the nutrition issues with her mother, Renae.

"The statements (of seasonal value) aren't wrong," Nestle wrote, "They just miss the point, which is that eating a variety of relatively unprocessed fruits and vegetables does really good things for health."

Eat your veggies. What a concept.

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IS HIRING A DISTRIBUTION MANAGER

We are looking for someone to be responsible for managing delivery in the early morning hours.

If you think this job is right for you stop by 113 Campus Center Basement, Call 413.545.3500 or E-Mail thecollegian@gmail.com

Have an interest in music fashion movies art health and dining?

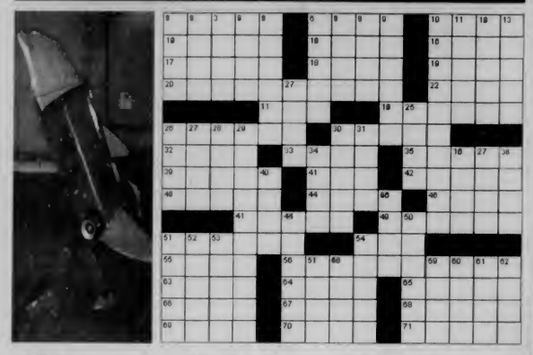
Write for arts and living!

Email us at arts@dailycollegian.com.

Constant Kate

Katie Chandler is finding balance as the legal guardian of her teenage sister, her busy life and her promising career. Every day, she's feeding her life, her career and her future.

Feed your future at www.pwc.tv



PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2010 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Remove the surface
6. Leave out
10. Garboard plank
14. Loaded
15. Monetary unit in Yugoslavia
16. Expert flyers
17. Turn aside
18. Highly excited
19. Just right (2-1-1)
20. Frolicking
22. Gaelic
23. Genus of house mice
24. Breadwinner
26. Bushes
30. Prone to wander aimlessly
32. King of the jungle
33. Gripped
35. Lets fall to the ground
39. Adjust
41. Misery
42. US symbol
43. Black European thrush
44. Sea eagle
46. Fruit tart
47. Way in
49. Have in mind
51. Prisoner
54. Metric unit of area
55. Podium
56. Appeals
63. Former Italian currency
64. A support for a bridge
65. Treasure
66. Not odd
67. Singer Fitzgerald
68. Plucked instruments
69. Repose
70. Like a snake-like fish
71. 10 in a decade

DOWN
1. Dross
2. A Polynesian alcoholic drink
3. Anagram of "Diem"
4. Action word
5. Bury
6. Gemstones
7. Wise men
8. A metal used to make steel
9. Labelled
10. Ship or boat
11. Fruit of the oak tree
12. Rental agreement
13. An organic compound
21. Luxurious
25. Assistant
26. Shut forcefully
27. Conceal
28. Lion sound
29. Obnoxious
30. High honor
31. City in Yemen
34. Pitcher
36. Look amorously
37. Scheme
38. Dispatch
40. Canvas dwelling
45. Ireland
48. Native tent
50. Tidily
51. A do-nothing
52. Innocent
53. Gets stuck
54. An impressive display
57. River in Egypt
58. Impart information
59. Not false
60. A very small amount
61. Always
62. Dried hemp leaves

This One is HARD

	3	7	5				6
	6			4	3		7
	4	9			7
							5
5	8		9		4		7	2
9		2	3		1
			7	9				1
6	5	1	2	3	8		4
				1		6	2

INTERESTED IN GETTING BUSINESS EXPERIENCE?

THE COLLEGIAN IS HIRING A NEW BUSINESS MANAGER FOR 2010-2011.

APPLICATIONS ARE AVAILABLE AT 113 CAMPUS CENTER.
DUE FRIDAY, MARCH 26TH. BY 5 PM.

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE

PUFFTON VILLAGE

EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS

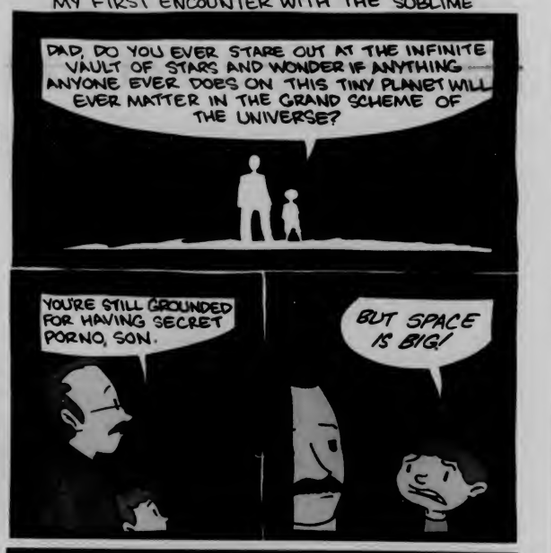
SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses

ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!

ON SITE LAUNDRY, OFF STREET PARKING.

BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.

OFFICE HOURS: 8AM TO 4PM MONDAY - FRIDAY
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM



Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub — chainsawsuit.com

Hark! a Vagrant by K. Beaton — harkavagrant.com

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal by Zach Weiner — smbc-comics.com

Are you looking for a Job for next semester?
The Daily Collegian Graphics Department is hiring for advertising production in 2010!
Contact Amanda Joinson at Advertising@DailyCollegian.com for more information, or stop by The Collegian office in the Campus Center Basement

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Some people consider you to be a hot commodity during these tough financial times. Start selling before the bubble bursts.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
One of your friends is on the verge of going to the slammer. You better learn to bake sweets with files in them.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Every day we are faced with the results of our decisions. That is why God made Facebook status updates.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Opportunities are available to those who look all over. China needs new Internet censorship, and the hiring process is mad chill.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Licking various types of Swiss cheese will not reveal what the three water flavors of the moon are. Try spicy Havarti instead.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
You may think that in you are invincible in your dreams, but there is no place that you can run that Bill Cosby won't find you.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
You may be terrible in the theatrical arts but if Channing Tatum is famous, so is your big toe. Wiggle your big toe.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
The world has asked only one thing from you: to create a children's program that teaches them to NOT commit adultery.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
If your significant other is joining these new Farmville guilds, please consult your nearest center of worship because all hope is lost.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Everyone is wondering why you are glowing today. Well are you going to tell them your tragic bed-side accident or am I?

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Try and use a new shampoo. It's not that your current one isn't doing the job, its just that it kills monkeys in secret labs on weekends.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Either Budweiser's marketing campaign is genius or you really are absurdly perplexed at the thought of Bud Light made of Bud Light.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Full Time Summer Employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $11.50/hour. The job description and application are available at the Housing Assigment Office, 235 Whitmore and is due April 2nd.

Bartenders needed for FT/PT positions. No experience required. Earn $20-$70 per hour. Call us at 617-849-8074

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

28 Stockbridge St: 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, fi nished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,575/Mo+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

TUTORING SERVICES

Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats, GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 Jboid42@yahoo.com

MISCELLANEOUS

Looking for a business opportunity that allows you to not only market services people use everyday, but the services of the future too? This opportunity provides outstanding earning potential with ongoing training and support. You are in business for yourself but never by yourself. Stop imagining and start living. ACN Independent Representative-William Carey 774-232-8604 wmc7771@gmail.com http://4incomefromhome.acnrep.com

UMass heads on road

MINUTEMEN from page 10

Brown is the ability to spread the ball around the field. UMass holds a 55-36 advantage over the Bears in assists this season. Additionally, attack Andrew Feinberg (11 goals) is the only player to have a double-digit goal total this season for the Bears, compared to four for the Minutemen, including freshman attack Will Manny.

Manny leads all freshmen in points this season, with 11 goals and eight assists coming off the bench as a legitimate scoring threat for Canella.

Redshirt senior All-American Diogo Godoi (10 caused turnovers) and sophomore Tom Celentani (16 caused turnovers) lead a Minutemen defense that looks to find a weakness in a Bears offense that has above-average stick-handling skills (38 turnovers).

On the defensive side of the ball, Brown has 10 caused turnovers this season in two fewer games than UMass, which has 73.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Against a talented Brown offense, redshirt senior All-American Diogo Godoi (10 caused turnovers) and sophomore Tom Celentani (16 caused turnovers) will look to lead the UMass defense.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTUESDAY

TUESDAY, MARCH 23, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Rivarly renewed with UMass facing Brown

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team will be in Providence, R.I. today to take on Brown at 4 p.m. as the Minutemen look to break a three-game losing streak against the No. 15-ranked Bears (3-1).

Coming off a 17-3 win against Providence (0-5), its largest margin of victory since 2002, No. 18 UMass (4-2) brings the fifth-ranked scoring offense in NCAA Division-I (14.2 goals per game) to Meister-Kavan Field.

Last season, Brown left Amherst with a 9-8 win, edging the Minutemen in every quarter by one goal. UMass held a 46-34 shot advantage, but the accuracy of the Bears proved to be the Minutemen's undoing.

A problem that plagues this year's UMass team is unanswered goals. In the loss against then-No.14 Harvard (14-2), the Crimson went on runs of two, three, and eight-straight goals before the Minutemen could find the back of the net.

However, UMass coach Greg Canella thinks that the win against Providence proved that the Minutemen have a better sense of urgency when giving up multi-goal strings to opponents.

"We've been in a bunch of those this season," Canella said of games with multi-goal runs by either team. "Whether we've been up by a couple goals or vice-versa, we've been in these games before so our guys are getting comfortable playing in tight games."

The stat sheet shows no glaring difference between the two teams, just missed opportunities. Neither team yielded a goal on special teams, but this season tells a different story.

UMass' 14 man-down goals allowed in 23 opportunities and Brown's three goals allowed in four opportunities show a vulnerability that either team can exploit.

The Minutemen return sophomore Art Kell (16 goals, eight assists) and junior Ryan Hantverk (11 goals, six assists) who each scored against then-senior All-American goalie Jordan Burke in last season's contest.

UMass also boasted an All-American goalie in Doc Schneider. Burke now serves as an assistant coach for the men's lacrosse program at Northeastern.

Both goalies have since graduated, but the Minutemen have the advantage with Schneider returning as an assistant coach to mentor incumbent goalie Tim McCormack.

McCormack is 4-2 in his first year as a starter this season. Tanks to the coaching of Schneider and the sensational play of members of his offense, McCormack has added assets in addition to his already solid skills in the cage.

Kell is coming off a career-high five goals against the Friars, while Hantverk had a point in every game this season except the loss to Harvard.

Both teams have a stronger offensive output in the first half on paper, but Canella insists that there is only so much that can be done to rally the team at halftime.

Canella said there's "not much" he tells his players at halftime.

"You don't have much time at halftime, and you don't want to give them too much information as well," he said.

One advantage that the Minutemen look to have over

See MINUTEMEN on page 9

By Stanley Cullegan

Sophomore attackman Art Kell leads UMass with a team-high 16 goals and 24 total points this spring. Kell is coming off of a career-high five-goal effort in a 17-3 victory against Providence over spring break.

SARAH ARKO/COLLEGIAN

The Minutemen travel to Rhode Island today to face No. 15 Brown in a matchup of two offensively talented teams. Both the Minutemen and Bears are two of the top seven scoring teams in the NCAA this season.

Scoring coming from various areas for UM

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team scored a combined 30 goals over spring break, including 17 in its win against Providence on Saturday.

The Minutemen scored the first eight goals of the game, as sophomore attackman Art Kell registered a hat trick for the eighth-straight UMass tally with just under 11 minutes to play in the second quarter.

In the second half, eight different UMass players scored the Minutemen's eight goals as they outshot Providence 55-17 on the day. Eleven different players scored for UMass, including Kell who finished with a career-high five goals and an assist for six points in the victory.

"It was nice to have five goals, I really couldn't have done it without my teammates," Kell said. "I think I got an assist on every one of the goals, so I really give thanks to my teammates for that."

Kell leads the team with 16 goals, while senior captain midfielder Bobby Hayes is second with 12, and freshman attackman Will Manny and junior midfielder Ryan Hantverk are tied on the team with 11 goals each.

On the season, 14 different players have registered goals for the Minutemen, with eight different players scoring at least five goals so far this year.

Along with Kell, the Minutemen were paced by Hantverk (two goals) and Manny (two goals), as midfielders Colin Fleming and Mael Walkowiak scored their first career goals for UMass in the win against the Friars.

"For those guys who feel comfortable playing, they deserve it and they've earned it. They work hard in practice every day, and to see that they saw some success out there to help their confidence and our confidence," UMass coach Greg Cannella said.

On the season, UMass has scored 88 goals, including 15 and 20 goals in its first two games of the 2010 season against Sacred Heart and Hartford. The 88 goals have led the team to a 4-2 record.

In the 20-10 victory over the Hawks, the Minutemen scored their most goals in one contest since 2002, as six different players had multi-goal games for UMass.

The Minutemen are scoring an average of 14.67 goals per game, as their opponents have scored just 58 goals against them so far this season.

UMass has lost games when scoring 13 and 12 goals, but in games when the Minutemen score 15 or more, they are 3-0.

Last season, UMass averaged 9.5 goals per game, scoring 143 over the course of the season. Through six games last season, the Minutemen scored 72 goals and were 3-3.

First loss at Garber

The Minutemen dropped their first game at home against No. 11 Harvard last Tuesday, as they scored 13 goals, including four in the final four and a half minutes. UMass was 2-0 at Garber so far in 2010 with wins over the Hawks and Albany before dropping the contest to the Crimson.

The Minutemen rallied and defeated the Friars to move to 3-1 at Garber Field so far in 2010.

Before the loss to the Crimson, UMass' last defeat on their home turf was back on April 18 of last season in a 10-7 loss to Georgetown. The Minutemen also fell to Syracuse last season at McGuirk Alumni Stadium, 10-3.

UMass looks to earn its fourth win at Garber Field when it hosts Hofstra Saturday at 1 p.m.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Minutewomen suffer loss to Long Island, go 4-3 in classic

By Geena Lombardi
Collegian Staff

Striking out eight batters and allowing just six hits was not enough from starter Sara Plourde as the Massachusetts softball team fell to Long Island, 2-0, on the final day of the San Diego Classic II. The Minutewomen went 4-3 at the classic and improved to 15-7 for the season.

The 49ers (14-13) scored its two runs in the second and sixth innings with the first coming off of a throwing error by shortstop Whitney Williams. The second and final run was scored after three walks and an RBI single by Ashley Levine.

UMass' offense fell short against Long Island with zero runs earned on three hits. However, Williams hit her team-leading seventh double of the season, along with Kylie Magill and Audrey Boutin contributing a hit each.

Plourde broke school records on Game 1 of Saturday, striking out 22 batters and allowing one hit in nine innings pitched. Former starter Brandice Balschmitter previously held the school record with 19 strikeouts.

"I felt pretty good," Plourde said. "I felt like I was just going after them, and I had my team behind me."

The hit from No. 22 Texas A&M in the bottom of the ninth inning proved to be the difference as the Aggies took a 1-0 victory.

Despite outhitting Texas A&M (27-6) 4-1, UMass could not find the tying run. With two batters on in the top of the ninth inning, starter Rebecca Arbino struck out a batter and forced a ground out to end the inning for the Minutewomen.

The Maroon and White's offense bounced back in Game 2 on Saturday, defeating Oregon State, 6-1. UMass showed its diversity on offense, with hits from six different players. UMass coach Elaine Sortino gives credit to her team for having patience and timely hitting to come back from losses over the weekend.

The Beavers (12-13) scored their lone run of the game in the first inning from a double to right center. Plourde struck out 11, a total of 33 for the day, and did not allow a walk to stop Oregon's offense. Michelle Libby also helped out on defense with two diving saves in outfield that robbed the Beavers of potential runs.

Audrey Boutin walked to bring home Williams, who was hit by pitch, to score first for the Minutewomen. A sacrifice fly ball from Libby and a fielder's choice from Reeves brought in two more runs to end the inning. Katie Bettencourt and Williams scored two additional unearned runs in the fourth inning. Reeves wrapped up UMass' scoring with an RBI double to bring home pinch runner Cyndil Matthew.

UMass takes day two

The classic's second day brought back-to-back wins for UMass, led by three hits from Normandin and 11 strikeouts from Plourde.

After defeating Illinois-Chicago (9-18), 5-4, at the FIU Combat Classic, the Maroon and White defeated them again, 5-0 on Friday afternoon. The five hits for the Minutewomen came in the sixth inning as Normandin scored first, followed by a three-run double from pinch hitter Boutin. Williams followed with a second double to drive in the final run for UMass.

Strong hitting continued into the second game of the day as the Minutewomen earned a 3-1 win over San Diego. A double from Libby put UMass up by two in the top of the first inning.

The Toreros (9-17) put up a run in the second inning, but 17 strikeouts from Plourde stopped San Diego from scoring another run. Danielle Duhart's single was the one run allowed by Plourde in her 14 innings pitched on the day.

"She works hard, she's a very strong athlete," Sortino said of Plourde. "She's very fit, she loves the game and she loves to pitch."

A single from pinch hitter Jessica Serio drove in the third and final run for UMass.

"Jess Serio did a great job. She came up big in Game 1, and she broke it open for us in Game 2," Sortino said. "I brought her in to pinch hit for Meghan [Carta], and she had a key at bat."

UMass splits day one

The Minutewomen split day one of the San Diego Classic II with a victory over Kansas and a loss to host San Diego State.

Bettencourt, Normandin, Williams and Libby helped UMass to an early lead that it held onto for the remainder of the game against the Jayhawks (14-15). After both teams scored in the first inning, the Minutewomen came back in the bottom of the second with four runs. A homerun from Libby in the fifth inning and a Magill double in the sixth inning gave the Minutewomen a 7-1 lead.

Kansas looked to make a comeback in the seventh inning, scoring two runs off of relief pitcher Bailey Sanders. Plourde returned to the mound, allowing three singles that led to three additional runs. Plourde came back and struck out the final two batters to give UMass the 7-6 win.

A wild pitch in the first inning and a single in the third inning gave San Diego State a 2-0 lead that the Minutewomen could not recover from. Plourde pitched strong despite the loss, allowing only four hits and striking out nine batters.

UMass looked for a comeback in the sixth inning when a Libby single drove home Magill to cut the Aztec's (18-9) lead in half. Pitchers Samantha Beasley and Bailey Micetich combined to strike out 11 UMass batters to hold on for the win.

The Minutewomen start conference play on Sunday when they travel to Washington, D.C. to face George Washington.

Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombard@student.umass.edu.

By Stanley Cullegan

Second baseman Kyllie Magill had one of UMass' three hits in its 2-0 loss to Long Island in the final day of the San Diego Classic II.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 55 LOW: 31 www.DailyCollegian.com WEDNESDAY, MARCH 24, 2010

Body of UM alumnus found in R.I. river

By S.P. Sullivan
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts alumnus was found dead in Providence, R.I. last week, after having been missing for several days.

The body of Gregory Hart, 23 of Dedham, was found in the Woonasquatucket River late afternoon Tuesday, March 16.

Medical examiners in Rhode Island concluded that Hart, a 2009 UMass economics graduate, was "highly intoxicated" and drowned to death in the river.

Hart's family, however, is convinced otherwise.

"His body and his face is not the face of a drowning victim," said his younger sister Victoria Hart, 20. "He was beaten."

Hart's family have offered a $20,000 reward for information surrounding his death, and have accused the Providence Police Department of botching the investigation.

Hart disappeared late Saturday evening into early Sunday morning from the Red Room Bar, located at 1 Fox Place in Providence, R.I.

The bar is owned by the wife of Providence detective Sean Carroll.

He was last seen with William McClennen and Zachary Piwko, both former UMass students from Milford, Mass.

His body was not found until approximately 2 p.m. Tuesday, March 16, when Victoria Hart's boyfriend Cory McColgan and friend Ryan Gearty discovered it in the river.

According to Hart's family, his eye socket had been severely damaged, his clothes torn and there were cuts on his knuckles and cheek.

McColgan and Gearty were part of an approximately 40-person search party assembled by Hart's family early Tuesday morning.

Members of Hart's family, including Victoria Hart and her mother Marianne, had been looking for him since Sunday, scouring Providence alleyways and dumpsters in the search.

Bridget Prisk, a former UMass student and Gregory Hart's girlfriend of four years, took issue with the delay between his reported disappearance and when police began their search.

"It was very mishandled," Prisk said. "It's really upsetting that we were down there looking for him and the Providence police didn't send anyone looking for him until Tuesday."

Police told The Providence Journal they had been gathering cadets for their own search when the body was found.

The Collegian could not reach detectives investigating the case for the Providence Police Department for comment.

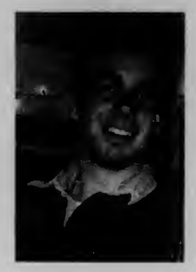
Chief Dean M. Esserman told The Journal Thursday that he is reviewing the department's handling of the case due to the Hart family's "very serious claims."

Prisk and Victoria Hart described Gregory Hart as a caring and driven student who had graduated with honors and worked as an economics tutor in the Learning Commons at the W.E.B. Du Bois Library.

He was about to begin work as an applications specialist at Meditech, a medical software company based in Westwood, Mass., when he went missing.

"Our freshman year we both lived in McNamara — he lived down the hall from me," said Prisk. "He was one of those people, you'd be in a class of 300 and he'd be raising his hand."

"Greg was such a good person," said Victoria Hart. "He had so much to do and someone stole him from us."



Hart's family is offering the reward in hopes of opening a deeper investigation into the case.

Though police have deemed his death "suspicious," they reported to numerous media outlets that the probable cause of death was drowning, citing that Hart was "highly intoxicated."

"They're making my brother seem like a drunken jerk who fell over the railing in the river," Victoria Hart said.

S.P. Sullivan can be reached at spsulliva@dailycollegian.com.

Missing Person

Name: Gregory Hart

DOB: 2/21/1987

Description: W/M, 5'8", Blue Eyes, Brown Hair

Clothing: Last seen wearing a Grey Leather biker jacket with a green hooded sweatshirt. Black pant and black shoes.

Last Seen: Downtown Providence area the morning of 3/14/2010.

Any Information: Contact Providence Police at (401) 272-3121.

COLLEGIAN STAFF

Though medical examiners have ruled the cause of death for Gregory Hart to be drowning, his family remains unconvinced foul play did not have a hand in the loss of their loved one.

UMass cautions safety with launch of awareness campaign

By Jennifer Heshion
Collegian Staff

"R U ready 2 Stop?"

Featured in posters circulating around the University of Massachusetts campus, the question asked by University officials is the chief focus of a recently launched campaign hoping to raise pedestrian awareness among those who utilize their driver's licenses on campus.

Along with the engineering department, and increased traffic law enforcement, UMass officials hope the preventative measures will curb the rate of accidents on campus due to distracted drivers, as well as equally distracted pedestrians.

With the weather warming up and more students taking to the outdoors, UMass Police Department (UMPD) decided to take extra caution by initiating the campaign during what they deem a hazardous time for pedestrians because of the increase in foot patterns.

"As the spring weather arrives, we want to raise awareness for both drivers and pedestrians," said UMPD Chief Johnny C. Whitehead.

The mission of the program is not to focus primarily on drivers, but rather, the precautionary measures are addressed to pedestrians as well, who can be just as distracted and at risk for causing accidents.

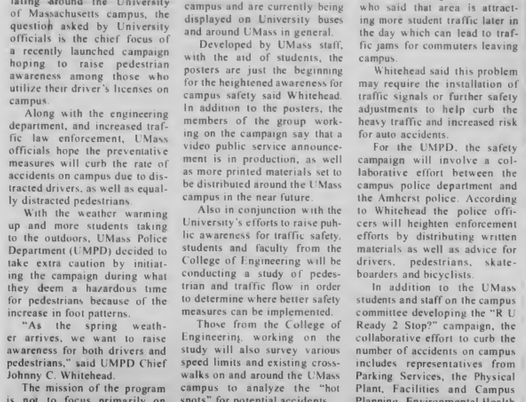
Featuring a distracted driver using their cell phone and a pedestrian lost in the music of his iPod, the posters exhibit an all too common scene on campus and are currently being displayed on University buses and around UMass in general.

Developed by UMass staff, with the aid of students, the posters are just the beginning for the heightened awareness for campus safety said Whitehead. In addition to the posters, the members of the group working on the campaign say that a video public service announcement is in production, as well as more printed materials set to be distributed around the UMass campus in the near future.

Also in conjunction with the University's efforts to raise public awareness for traffic safety, students and faculty from the College of Engineering will be conducting a study of pedestrian and traffic flow in order to determine where better safety measures can be implemented.

Those from the College of Engineering, working on the study will also survey various speed limits and existing crosswalks on and around the UMass campus to analyze the "hot spots" for potential accidents.

According to Whitehead there are, for example, 15 crosswalks on North Pleasant St. alone, which, given its location, is a high traffic area for both pedestrians and drivers.



The new Recreation Center on Commonwealth Ave. is also one of the "hot spots" under review according to Whitehead who said that area is attracting more student traffic later in the day which can lead to traffic jams for commuters leaving campus.

Whitehead said this problem may require the installation of traffic signals or further safety adjustments to help curb the heavy traffic and increased risk for auto accidents.

For the UMPD, the safety campaign will involve a collaborative effort between the campus police department and the Amherst police. According to Whitehead the police officers will heighten enforcement efforts by distributing written materials as well as advice for drivers, pedestrians, skateboarders and bicyclists.

In addition to the UMass students and staff on the campus committee developing the "R U Ready 2 Stop?" campaign, the collaborative effort to curb the number of accidents on campus includes representatives from Parking Services, the Physical Plant, Facilities and Campus Planning, Environmental Health and Safety, as well as the Office of News and Media Relations.

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu.

AP Photo/UMass [illegible]

The "R U Ready 2 Stop?" posters, as seen above, depict the stereotypical scene of distracted drivers and pedestrians more interested in technology than in paying attention to the rules of the road.

AP Photo/UMass

Two members of the summit, Gov. Patrick and graduate school dean John Mullin, discussed possible long-term solutions for recovery for the state following the economic recession.

Gov. Patrick attends Pioneer Valley economic summit at UM

By Jennifer Heshion
Collegian Staff

When Governor Deval Patrick addressed the gathered crowd at the University of Massachusetts for the Pioneer Valley Regional Economic Summit he expressed his hope that, despite the recession, Massachusetts will rebound faster than any of the other states in the union.

On March 19, Gov. Patrick visited the UMass campus with members of his cabinet, area legislators, local and regional planning officials as well as economist Barry Bluestone of Northeastern University to assess the current state of Massachusetts' economy, and in particular that of Pioneer Valley.

According to the Massachusetts governor, while Massachusetts has suffered more job losses than in some other areas of the country and with unemployment standing around 9.5 percent, the recovery from the economic recession may be slow, but hope remains.

Gov. Patrick said that the state appears to be rebounding faster than most of the other states due to the leading sectors such as education, life sciences and clean technology.

Patrick was joined by UMass Provost James Staros, Vice Chancellor for Research and Engagement Michael Malone, graduate school Dean John Mullin as well as other members of the faculty to analyze long-term solutions for the Pioneer Valley.

Such long-term solutions, according to the members of the summit, will work towards creating access to capital and advice for small businesses, as well as clearing the way for business expansion.

According to Patrick, the hope for accomplishing these goals rests on further investment in public education.

"We are putting more money into public education than at any other time in the history of the state," Patrick said.

UMass Chancellor Robert C. Holub affirmed Patrick's standing on the importance of public education in recovering from the national recession.

"We're delighted to have hosted this important summit and I'm particularly pleased that our faculty participated. It was critical to have the public and private sectors collaborating on solutions for growth," Holub said.

"I can't think of a better place to have that kind of discussion than the Commonwealth's public research university."

According to Bluestone, who is the founding director of the Kitty and Michael Dukakis Center for Urban and Regional Policy, one of the most difficult challenges facing the state will be a workforce shortage.

While the summit specifically focused on the local economic rebound, Tim Brennan of the Pioneer Valley Planning Commission said that though recovery may be rough, the Pioneer Valley boasts having lower home prices and an attractive environment for people to reside and find work.

Last Friday's economic summit was the second in a series of regional events that were developed in order to help Massachusetts in its recovery from the recession.

The summit was organized by the Executive Office of Housing and Economic Development led by Secretary Greg Bialecki, as well as a planning committee of leaders from UMass, the city of Springfield, the Pioneer Valley Commission, Franklin Regional Council of Governments, the Economic Development Council of Western Massachusetts, Holyoke Community College, Hoppe Tool, the Massachusetts Life Sciences Center, MassDevelopment and regional chambers of commerce and local officials.

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu.

ARTS & LIVING

Emerald Isle brews thick n' tasty

Beer reviewer Andrew Sheridan takes on the famous dark and frothy Celtic pints from across the Atlantic Ocean.

SEE PAGE 6

SPORTS

Minutemen upset Brown

Art Kell finished with two goals and three assists while Goalkeeper Tim McCormack had 17 saves as UMass beat Brown, 11-10.

SEE PAGE 12

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Columnist Leigh Greaney speaks to the negative effects of genderizing relationship roles

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian and Localocracy.org have teamed up to offer UMass students an interactive and democratic way to respond to our news coverage.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 37
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Scannell
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Ellie Rukon-Miller
Assistant Comics Domonic Mei
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jon Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Senior Producer Sara Cody
Senior Producer Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Jeffrey R. Larnard
COPY EDITOR
Hannah McGoldrick
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Guarino

– Crime Log: March 9 through 22 –

Tuesday March 9

Alexander Protheroe of Newton, Mass. was arrested for drug law offenses.

Working closely with an informant, the detective bureau of the University of Massachusetts Police Department (UMPD) bought a small amount of marijuana from Protheroe using marked bills.

After obtaining a search warrant looking for the marked bills and illegal drugs, the UMPD went to Protheroe's dorm room in Brown dorm.

In the room, the detectives found paraphernalia including small clear bags, an electronic scale and hundreds of dollars, including the marked bills.

The investigation on Protheroe began at the start of the month.

Protheroe was arrested on the charges of distribution of a Class D drug, possession to distribute a Class D drug and possession of a Class D drug and distribution of drugs within 1,000 feet of Marks Meadow Elementary School.

Wednesday March 10

Andrew Musci of New Fairfield, CT was arrested at 2:12 a.m. for disorderly conduct.

A UMPD officer on patrol viewed Musci attempting to break the passenger side window of a parked car in Lot 22.

Musci threw a rock at the window four times, each time failing to break the glass.

After the officer identified himself to Musci, he ran from the officer.

Once stopped, he continued to struggle.

Musci was arrested on the charges of disorderly conduct and malicious destruction of property worth more than $250.

Scott Smiley of Wyckoff, NJ was arrested for drug law offenses.

The UMPD received a tip that Smiley was dealing marijuana and prescription drugs on campus, and while working with the informant, the officers set up a buy.

The detectives of the UMPD bought an undisclosed amount of marijuana from Smiley using marked bills.

After obtaining a search warrant, the UMPD searched Smiley's dorm room in John Adams Tower.

In the room, the officers found 71 oxycodone pills, hundreds of dollars and the previously marked bills.

The department also searched Smiley's band safe deposit box for further evidence.

The UMPD plans to seize the funds in the account.

Smiley was arrested on the charges of possession to distribute a Class D drug and possession of a Class D drug, and possession of a class B drug.

Thursday March 11

Kevin Christopher Schunk of Norfolk, Mass. was arrested at 8:57 p.m. for disorderly conduct.

The UMPD responded to a call from the Kennedy Tower that someone had thrown a chair through a window.

Upon arrival, the officers saw a 3-by-4-foot hole in a window in the 5th floor lounge of the tower.

The officers also viewed the damages done to a car parked on the north side of Kennedy that was damaged from the falling glass.

After being identified by witnesses, Schunk admitted to the officers that he had thrown the chair.

Schunk was arrested on the charges of disorderly conduct, and three counts of malicious destruction of property worth more than $250.

Friday March 12

George L. Waugh of Brockton, Mass. was arrested at 4:39 a.m. for disorderly conduct.

The UMPD responded to a call from Mary Lyon dormitory about a disturbance.

Waugh had reportedly been knocking on a female student's door for over an hour after an altercation between the two.

Waugh and the victim reportedly were in a verbal argument that turned physical, with Waugh kicking the student who he previously had a relationship with.

Upon arrival, the UMPD found the male to have already have left the dorm in his car.

Waugh was stopped on Eastman lane, and arrested.

While taking an inventory of Waugh's car before it was towed, the officers found a loaded black and silver pistol in the car.

Waugh has previously trespassed on the UMass campus.

Waugh was charged with domestic assault and battery, assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, disorderly conduct, disturbing the peace, speeding, failure to stop for police, failure to wear a seatbelt and violating a marked traffic lane.

Saturday March 13

Christopher Johnson, currently homeless, was arrested at 9:35 p.m. for drug law offenses.

The UMPD responded to a call from the Lincoln Campus Center of a man feeing faint and experiencing dizziness.

Johnson admitted to having injected three bags of heroin throughout the day.

Though Johnson refused treatment, the officers took him to Cooley Dickinson Hospital for fear that he had overdosed.

The officers found drug paraphernalia in his pocket as well as the drug Seroquel, a prescription drug used to treat bipolar disorder.

Johnson was arrested on the charges of possession of a class A drug, and possession of drug paraphernalia.

Tuesday March 16

Lisa A. McKeag of Amherst, Mass. was arrested at 1:43 a.m. as the result of a traffic stop.

While driving on Massachusetts Ave., an officer viewed McKeag speeding.

After running her license in the police database, the officer found that her license was suspended.

McKeag was arrested on the charges of operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license, and speeding.

- Collegian News Staff

Mill Valley
E·S·T·A·T·E·S
Looking for a place to live next year?
Check us out at the HOUSING FAIR
$500 OFF Security
FREE $300-$500Visa Card*
FREE Nintendo Wii*
Thursday, March 25th 10AM-3PM
Campus Center Concourse
More info at 413-253-7377
www.MillValleyApts.com
Housing Fair ONLY, some restrictions apply

UMass is a BIG campus,
and we need your help covering it.
Know of something that's happening? Want to see an event get news coverage? Let us know!
Go online and head to DailyCollegian.com and click "Submit a Tip."

YOU HAVE YOUR REASONS FOR LIVING OFF-CAMPUS...
So Do We.

BRANDYWINE APARTMENTS
549-0600
www.Brandywine-Apts.com
16G Brandywine Drive
Amherst, MA 01002
BRANDYWINE AT AMHERST

Obama signs health care bill into law after historic victory

By Steven Thomma and David Lightman
McClatchy Newspapers

WASHINGTON — President Barack Obama on Tuesday signed into law a vast overhaul of the nation's health care system, the most sweeping expansion of government social policy in more than 40 years, and perhaps the most polarizing.

A triumphant Obama heralded what he called "a new season in America," saying that the new law finally delivered changes in health care that generations of Americans had sought and fought for.

"Our presence here today is remarkable and improbable," Obama said. "It's been easy at times to doubt our ability to do such a big thing, such a complicated thing, to wonder if there are limits to what we, as a people, can still achieve."

Now, however, he said, "we are affirming that essential truth – a truth every generation is called to rediscover for itself – that we are not a nation that scales back its aspirations."

The president signed the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, cheered on by Democratic lawmakers as well as Vicki Kennedy, the widow of the late Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., who'd made the expansion of health care his life's work.

Supporters interrupted several times with applause and campaign-like chants, turning the ceremony into a celebration. Even before Obama walked in, a group of Democratic women from Congress lined up on the stage to pose for pictures. Others broke into chants of the Obama campaign refrain, "Fired up, ready to go."

There were no Republicans at the historic signing. Every Republican in Congress voted against the bill, and Republicans protested anew Tuesday that the measure threatened Americans' freedom.

"We've heard a lot today about how historic this bill is, and it's true. It is an historic betrayal of the clear will of the American people. It is an historic loss of liberty," Republican National Committee Chairman Michael Steele said. "It's not too late to repeal this bill, but to do that we need a change in management at the U.S. Capitol."

Outside Washington, 14 state attorneys general – all but one of them Republicans – filed two lawsuits in federal court challenging the constitutionality of the new law, arguing that its mandate that people buy health insurance exceeds federal power.

"It forces people to do something – in the sense of buying a health care policy or paying a penalty, a tax or a fine – that simply the Constitution does not allow Congress to do," said Florida Attorney General Bill McCollum, who's seeking the Republican nomination for governor.

He was one of 13 attorneys general who filed one suit, along with those from Alabama, Colorado, Idaho, Louisiana, Michigan, Nebraska, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, South Dakota, Texas, Utah and Washington state.

Virginia Attorney General Ken Cuccinelli, who's also a Republican, filed a separate suit.

The bill, passed Dec. 24 by the Senate and Sunday by the House of Representatives, is designed to provide health insurance by 2019 to 32 million Americans who lack it now, institute new federal regulation of health insurance companies - including a mandate that they insure everyone regardless of prior medical problems - and curb costs.

Despite the fanfare at the White House, the law was just one step of a grand political bargain that was needed to get it through the House and to the president's waiting pen.

Soon after the signing, the Senate took up the second step, a "reconciliation" plan to amend the law in order to change the way it would finance the benefits and strip out some of the deals used to win Senate votes on Christmas Eve, such as the "Cornhusker kickback" of Medicaid benefits just for Nebraska.

The combined plan would cost an estimated $938 billion over 10 years.

Vice president Joe Biden and President Obama celebrated their victory Sunday stating that the passing of the health care bill signals "a new season in America."

Democrats stuck to a different script, citing examples of individuals and businesses who'd benefit under the new law. Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., who's facing a difficult re-election campaign, described how some 24,000 small businesses in his state now will be able to afford insurance for their employees.

What the legislation does?

The bill is expected to insure about 32 million more Americans by 2019, according to the CBO, or 94 percent of eligible Americans. Currently, about 83 percent are insured.

President Barack Obama's signature triggers a series of changes in health care laws almost immediately.

By mid-June, high-risk coverage pools would be available for people who lack insurance because of pre-existing conditions.

By fall, insurers would be barred from denying people coverage when they get sick, denying coverage to children with pre-existing conditions and imposing lifetime caps on coverage.

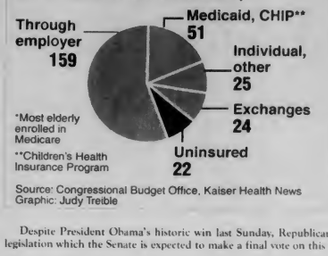
After September, people could stay on their parents' policies until they turn 26. After Jan. 1, insurers would have to offer small group and individual plans and would have to spend 80 percent of their premium dollars on medical services.

Large group plans would have to spend at least 85 percent.

The bill would require most people to obtain coverage, and most employers to offer it, starting in 2014.

It would create exchanges, or marketplaces, in which consumers could shop more easily for policies.

The reconciliation bill makes several changes to the Senate-drafted measure.



In 2013, it would increase the Medicare payroll tax and expand it to dividend, interest and other unearned income for singles who earn more than $200,000 annually and joint filers who make more than $250,000.

Who will be uninsured?

Estimates of coverage under the health care overhaul show 22 million will still be uninsured by 2019 when the law is fully implemented.

How people will be covered in 2019

In millions; does not include elderly*

*Most elderly enrolled in Medicare
Children's Health Insurance Program

Source: Congressional Budget Office, Kaiser Health News
Graphic: Judy Treible

© 2010 MCT

Uninsured in 2019

- About 8 million illegal immigrants (they are not eligible under health care law)
- Those who want to pay fine rather than buy coverage
- Those released from mandatory coverage if it costs more than 8 percent of income

Despite President Obama's historic win last Sunday, Republicans hope to overturn the reconciliation legislation which the Senate is expected to make a final vote on this Thursday.

Financed by tax increases and cuts in Medicare, it would reduce the federal budget deficit by $143 billion over the decade, according to the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office.

It's the broadest move by the federal government to guarantee health care since the creation of Medicare for the elderly in 1965.

It exceeds the expansion of Medicare to cover prescription drugs, passed by the Republicans and signed into law by President George W. Bush in 2003.

The Senate expects a final vote Thursday on the reconciliation plan.

The House already has approved it.

Republicans suffered a major blow from the Senate parliamentarian late Monday in their effort to derail the reconciliation bill.

According to GOP Senate officials, Parliamentarian Alan Frumin gave them informal guidance that a key part of their plan to challenge the bill won't hold up.

Republicans' best hope of overturning the reconciliation legislation involved Social Security.

Their thinking went like this: Since the new bill delays an excise tax on high-end insurance plans until 2018, it's due to begin in 2013 in the Senate bill – that would mean less revenue for Social Security, and thus wouldn't be permissible under reconciliation rules.

However, the parliamentarian advised them that the tax delay was in order.

Republicans still plan a series of procedural challenges as well as amendments. Sen. Judd Gregg of New Hampshire, the top Republican on the Senate Budget Committee, set the tone by calling the legislation "the fourth major step forward in the push to drive this country down a road towards a European-style government."

The other three, he said, were "quasi-nationalization of the financial system, nationalization of the automobiles, quasi-nationalization of the health industry and now this bill has in it, which nobody's focused on, the nationalization of the student loan industry."

~ GUEST CHEF SERIES ~
Thursday March 25 from 5—9 pm Berkshire DC
MEET BETTY ROSBOTTOM
- Cookbook author
- Syndicated food columnist
- Television personality
- Cooking teacher
- Cooking school director
Recipes from Betty's "Big Book of Backyard Cooking" will be showcased.
RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS Ivy Awards
UMASS DINING UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

Cooking Baking 101
WILLIE SNG, EXECUTIVE CHEF
SIMON STEVENSON, PASTRY CHEF
Learn the Art of Truffle Making, Dipping Strawberries, Sushi and more...
April 9 Chocolate 101 UMass Bake Shop 2 - 5 pm
April 16 Chocolate 101 UMass Bake Shop 2 - 5 pm
April 23 Chocolate 101 UMass Bake Shop 2 - 5 pm
April 23 Cooking 101 Stir Fry Berkshire DC 2—5 pm
April 30 Chocolate 101 UMass Bake Shop 2—5 pm
April 30 Cooking 101 Sushi
Willie Sng, Executive Chef
Simon Stevenson, Pastry Chef
UMASS DINING UMassAmherst
umassdining.com
- Must be on a meal plan
- Registration is on a first come first serve basis
- Limited to 15 participants per class
Sign up at: jtower@mail.aux.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 24, 2010

"What progress we are making. In the Middle Ages they would have burned me. Now they are content with burning my books." – Sigmund Freud, 1933

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Stop genderizing 'hook up' roles

Leigh Greaney

At this point in time, it seems that the long argued gender debate is so tired that it should be peacefully at rest. Equality should have ceased to be a buzz word and become a reality – and not simply equality of opportunity, but equality of expectation.

Somehow, this is still not the world we live in. We're still living in a society that chokes everyday on gender stereotypes and generalizations.

The biggest problem might just be what appears to be the most small. Many women seem to be concerned about recognition of equality in the eyes of society meaning in the workplace and economically.

However, in order to truly conquer the disease of misogyny, women might want to think not only about the big hurdles, but the smaller ones too. All stereotypes must be eradicated – even the ones we seem to overlook.

Because they've been embedded so deeply into society, women tend to play their "role" and men play theirs. Although it is obvious that the only difference between men and women is in their anatomy, people seem convinced that there is a difference of thought process, motive, desire and "role."

Sexual craving and craving for commitment are not gendered ideals, and they never have been.

Even in this culture that we deem to be "progressive," patterns arise where they don't necessarily need to. The continuation of these patterns only leads to the belief that the motives, desires and intentions can be assumed for the whole gender.

One pattern that has been "assumed" feminine connects directly to romantic relationships between men and women. Women in this culture are assumed to want the "safety" and "comfort" of a relationship with a man. They don't want to simply "hook-up" and be forgotten. They want something that could lead to commitment – and hey, if they're lucky – maybe even marriage!

The assumption continues that men – quite on the contrary – would rather spread their seed wherever and whenever with whoever (as long as the woman is attractive enough). Men would rather have commitment-free hook-ups. They avoid anything monogamous if they're sexual hunger can be fulfilled without it – and that's how they all like it.

This is so very wrong.

This is an epidemic of thought that has placed people in little boxes for too long. This categorizing phenomenon of intent and aspiration is the same that plagued past generations. It's the same trend that told homosexual people in the past that they should "desire" people from the opposite gender and not of their own. It took an entire movement to convince the masses that people want what they want and that there is no mold for what we crave based on the structure of our chromosomes.

It's time society sees that they can't predict what people want.

A man may desire to be with a man. A woman may desire to be with a woman. A woman may desire a committed relationship. A woman may not. The flaw we must battle is the assumption of desire based on gender.

Sexual craving and craving for commitment are not gendered ideals, and they never have been. Men and women both have hormones. They both like sex. They also both like security and the feeling of being loved. Yet, a woman who has as much sex as a guy in her life is a "slut" and a guy that doesn't sleep around with lots of women is considered to be "missing out."

Why are we still at this plateau in progression? Insecurity? Yes. Fear? Yes. Mostly, though, it's because no one is ready to get over their ego. Men are going to keep being misogynistic if women let them.

Just the same, women are going to keep repressing their desires if all other women seem to be following that pattern.

Women must break out of their shell. They must have sex if they want to and not feel shame of self-resentment for it. Men must break out of their shell, too. If they want to settle down with one person and cease his prowl around for new legs to pry open, then they should – and without feelings of being emasculated.

It's okay to want to be in a relationship. It's also okay not to want to be in one. It's okay not to want to have sex with someone you're not committed to, and its okay to not care if commitment has anything to do with the sex. This works for both sexes.

Relationships are a lot of pressure. If having fun and having sex with someone regularly without slapping a Facebook status on it works for someone, then who is to say that's negative?

What is a relationship anyway? Is it a date every Friday night at Judies? Is it sharing all your deep dark secrets? Is it sex? Is being jealous and wary of anyone who talks to your significant other? Is it someone to sleep next to? People should be allowed to define their happiness in whichever way suits them.

By letting society dictate whether you're just a "slutty girl" or a "guy who is whipped by his girlfriend and missing out on all the other babes," we're letting society tell us what should make us who we are. It's time we decide for ourselves. Only then can both sexes be equal and happy at the same time.

Leigh Greaney is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu.

When seconds matter urgent care saves lives

Matt Kushi

About a month ago, it was reported that the town of Amherst would be expanding the urgent care center that the Cooley Dickinson Hospital provides in its main Northampton branch to the Cooley Dickinson outpatient center in Amherst at 170 University Dr. This was reported in both the Boston Herald and this very paper itself.

Let's think about this. This is a great move for the eastern sector of the Connecticut River in the Pioneer Valley. While it is true that there is a Cooley Dickinson Hospital building already on University Dr, it does not currently offer the urgent care services that the actual hospital in Northampton does.

Rather, what the Cooley Dickinson Hospital building on University Dr. currently houses is services related to injuries that require MRI, X-ray and rehabilitation services concerning these injuries.

By expanding the urgent care center services into the current Cooley Dickinson Hospital outpatient building that currently exists in Amherst, the hospital has done the Pioneer Valley a great service.

It is convenient and useful for the communities that surround it. Most important of all, it can help save lives.

There are many reasons as to why this expansion of services is a good idea. However, I would like to point to two general benefits in particular.

One is that this expansion will benefit on communities that lie to the east of the Connecticut River in Western Mass. The other community affected by this action is the University of Massachusetts community.

Why is this a good idea locally? The most prominent hospital in the area is Bay State Medical Center. However, that is in the heart of Springfield, which is in the southern half of the Pioneer Valley. Who provides coverage for the small towns that are situated upon the shores of the Connecticut River? Cooley Dickinson Hospital does.

If you have been around the Pioneer Valley long enough, you know that Cooley Dickinson Hospital is located in Northampton, which is on the western banks of the Connecticut River.

In order to get from the eastern shore to the western shore of the Connecticut River, one needs to cross the Calvin Coolidge Bridge between Hadley and Northampton or the Sunderland Bridge between Sunderland and South Deerfield. Unless you want to drive to Greenfield up north or Chicopee down south, these are your options.

Usually crossing these bridges is not much of a problem, as long as you are not attempting to do so at rush hour. Additionally, ambulances have priority on the road during rush hour.

However, when a life can potentially be decided in minutes and seconds, every minute and second counts. The difference between saving a person's life who has a critical injury or condition could be taking a 10 minute ambulance ride from Sunderland to Amherst instead of a 20 minute ride to Northampton.

Yet another benefit is that this will positively help Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton.

As the main hospital in the central Pioneer Valley, Cooley Dickinson Hospital receives many patients in the emergency room every day. Sometimes too much.

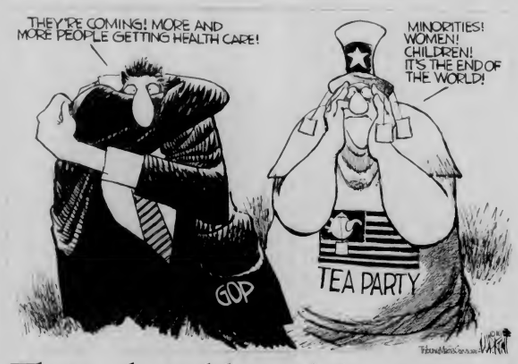
Wait times in the emergency room can seem too long in any hospital. Cooley Dickinson Hospital is not an exception. As many patients will tell, the wait time in the emergency room can seem illogical and quite painful.

By opening the urgent care center in the Cooley Dickinson Hospital facility in Amherst, some of the patients that may have had to wait their turn to be treated in the main hospital in Northampton can now be treated in Amherst. As for the main branch in Northampton, its emergency room wait times should go down. While there will not be any less emergency calls and situations, there will be more areas and places in which patients can go.

Additionally, University Dr. extends from Route 9 through the base of the Southwest Residential Area on campus. Therefore, it is very close to campus. Having emergency care services just down the road will also aid University Health Services. As was stated in a previous article in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, the Cooley Dickinson Hospital branch is not expected to compete with University Health Services.

Where the real benefit for this urgent care services expansion comes in for UMass is with the students. If it has not been realized yet, college students often require a lot of medical care. This is due to the fact that there are thousands upon thousands of students crammed into a small section of a town. This is also because college students are usually still maturing.

There are hundreds of health related stories that occur every day on campus for various reasons.



Some are caused by excessive partying, a common exercise at every college. Occasionally, someone will try drinking their friend under the table only to succeed in drinking themselves onto a gurney. Some medical issues are caused by fights on and around campus.

Some of these medical issues are caused by the campus in which we inhabit or just through random acts of life. If one looks, this University is located on a gently rolling hill. However, the paths that we use to navigate this hill are not so gentle. Just look and you'll find a jig here, a jag there and a crag elsewhere. We are constantly walking up and down this hill. Sometimes we fall down this hill instead of walking down it.

Sometimes life happens, and people get hurt in the process.

This is why it is a great idea to bring urgent care services to the Cooley Dickinson facility in Amherst. It is convenient and useful for the communities that surround it. Most important of all, it can help save lives.

Matt Kushi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mkushi@student.umass.edu.

The real world won't hesitate to label a 'loser,' why should teachers?

Dave Coffey

For one reason or another, it seems that lately the topics I've been choosing to write about have been at least somewhat controversial, if not downright unpopular.

After recently discussing suicide pilots, sexism and the bashing of clean energy protestors, I've come to the conclusion that I might as well just go out and look for the stuff that people would absolutely hate to see me write about. Why not? I figure a good deal of the readers out there most likely already hate my guts, and even the more controversial points of social happenings must be addressed.

So one could only imagine my delight when I came across a recent news story about a North Carolina teacher named Rex Roland who is receiving some negative attention for his teaching methods. Apparently, at least one parent of one of Roland's students are taking exception to the fact that Roland sometimes writes comments such as "loser" on his sixth grade students' papers.

Perfect, I thought, now all I have to do is call Lucifer and make sure he's cool with me being his advocate for the umpteenth time.

Let me get the part out of the way where I try to avoid angering absolutely everyone by saying this: yes, I know, verbal abuse and the bestowal of a child are wrong; this is information that everyone can agree upon. Even though I'm no, the biggest fan of young children, I can at least admit abusing a child in any way, shape or form prenatally doesn't look very good on a resume for several reasons. In a scenario in which a teacher purposefully physically harms sexually abuses or even screams at a child, that teacher should be fired, because that teacher is really not doing his or her job properly.

But here, that is not the case. The teacher was indeed doing his job properly; in fact, he was going above and beyond what your average teacher usually does.

The main point to recognize here is that most of Roland's students' parents are aware of the fact that he frequently calls their students "losers" in class and while grading their work.

God forbid anybody's child actually develops some thick skin in school any time soon. While we're at it, why don't we fire the teachers who fail their students? After all, that's a lot more detrimental than calling someone a "loser."

Yet, most of the parents are actually completely okay with this. In fact, most of them embrace it.

According to an article regarding the situation published online on AolNews, many parents defended Roland's actions, and claimed his methods were "progressive" in that he engaged students on a level most teachers don't, and that he was thus able to reach out to students as not only an authoritarian figure and a superior, but as a peer too. Therefore, according to students and parents alike, Roland was making a connection to students that most teachers never could. So essentially, this guy was trying, albeit in an odd way, to reach out and actively engage his students in an educational environment instead of treating them like a herd of sheep he has to babysit like most teachers do.

Where does this parent get off trying to get this guy fired just because the parent's child can't take a jesting part of this teacher's approach that was working wonders for other students?

According to the same article, one of Roland's other students, Ian Andrews, Roland is, "the cool teacher that people wanted to be in class with." This teacher managed to achieve the nigh impossible by making most of his sixth grade students actually want to go to school and learn. Yeah, no, that sounds terrible; we can't be having any of that.

I mean, God forbid anybody's child actually develops some thick skin in school any time soon. While we're at it, why don't we fire the teachers who fail their students? After all, that's a lot more detrimental than calling someone a "loser." Has this parent heard how these little sixth grade angels tend to address their peers and their teachers? The term "loser" is practically a term of endearment compared to the garbage that probably gets thrown around in their daily conversations. The exception is that in those cases, it's not a well-intentioned teacher who's helping anyone's education of the real world saying it, because it's some snot-nosed punk who insults people simply because it makes him feel awesome.

Sure, you could argue words might carry a bit more weight than usual if a teacher says it. Still, even if using terms like "loser" wasn't doing any good (which it arguably was in this particular case) this sort of thing doesn't entail the end of the free world as we know it, as many outraged parents are making it seem it should.

I'm no experienced parent, but if I had a sixth grader who was upset that a teacher wrote "loser" on his or her paper, I'd probably respond thusly: "Hey, little Timmy/Tammy, I know you're upset, but there's actually many worse things in life than being called a 'loser' by someone whose job description doesn't require that he like you. It turns out life sucks some times. Here's your helmet, champ."

Is it an unorthodox method to call your students losers? No one's arguing against that. But unorthodox and bad are not congruent terms. In fact, if Roland's methods were as effective as many of the students and parents suggest, then call the kids whatever you want, and forget about the overly sensitive parents.

Dave Coffey is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dscoffey@student.umass.edu

UM winless in road stretch with Midwest able on the mound and execute his pitches. We expect a better outing from him."

BASEBALL from page 12

While the pitching staff has struggled, the Minutemen offense showed signs of life last game by scoring 13 runs. It was the first time UMass put up double-digits in a game this year.

Outfielder Kyle Multner hit two home runs, going 4-for-5 out of the No. 9 spot in the lineup. Infielder Tom Conley and catcher Peter Copa had home runs of their own and Matt Gedman added four hits. Copa and Multner are tied for the team lead in home runs with two apiece.

Catcher Andy Drexel leads the Hawks with three home runs. Outfielder Andrew Siano has three stolen bases in four attempts. The Minutemen, on the other hand, are 1-for-3 in stolen base attempts.

Hartford faces UMass a day after its game to Boston College was postponed for a one-game showdown. This is the only time the Minutemen will play the Hawks this year. Last year both clubs met only once as well, on March 25 at Hartford. UMass won that game, 6-4.

While Stone holds no meaning towards that game, he does anticipate the same outcome.

"I never show up expecting to lose," Stone said. "I expect our guys to be hungry. I expect them to come out and play their butts off."

Pete Vasquez can be reached at pvasquez@student.umass.edu.

MASWE I STARK – ALL RIGHTS

Pitcher Robert Machado throws a pitch during a game last season. UMass coach Mike Stone hopes his pitching can lower its 10.12 earned run average in its first home game of the year.

Stone sees Gedman as team's bright spot

PITCHING from page 12

Mike Gedman has been one of those bright spots for the Minutemen. In three appearances, Gedman (0-2) has a 5.52 ERA and thrown nine strikeouts in 14.2 innings pitched. Although his numbers are not startling, he pitched a complete game against Oklahoma in which he scattered four runs over eight innings to give his team a chance to win. However, UMass didn't score more than two runs and Gedman incurred the loss.

In their nine games this season, the Minutemen got on the scoreboard first in two of those games and has scored a combined total of five runs over the first four innings, not including Sunday's contest against William & Mary.

Their last time out, the Minutemen accrued an 8-1 lead on a huge third inning only to be outscored 8-0 in the next four.

Stone believes his team could have turned more double plays over its road trip (four), but his team still carries the glove well with a .980 fielding percentage and six errors, and that alone couldn't account for the lopsidedness.

Stone and his players will have to address that issue and they hope to cure their scoring woes by tomorrow's home opener against Hartford.

The Hawks have not been shy in the batter's box this season registering about seven runs per game on over 11 hits per game.

Oakley (0-1) will take the mound for his second start of the season. Oakley lasted three innings against Oklahoma State, giving up nine runs (seven earned) on nine hits, recording two strikeouts and one walk.

"He pitched okay the last time and we have confidence in him," Stone said.

Dan Gigliotti can be reached at dgigliot@student.umass.edu.

WANT TO WRITE FOR SPORTS?
Contact Jeffrey R. Larnard at
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
...or On-Campus Local Ads for...
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

UMASS 5K DASH & DINE FOR RELIEF
WALK & RUN TO BENEFIT HAITI
Runners/Walkers/Teams
Prizes awarded by age/gender/team
Wheelchairs and strollers welcome
Authentic Haitian Lunch and Health Fair
Public Welcome
Register online by Thurs., March 25, 2010 at www.umassdining.com
Race day registration also available
$10 for meal plan members
$25 for public/non-meal plan members
Lunch and t-shirt included in entry fees
Check in begins at 9:00 am at Haigis Mall
Race begins at 11 am
Prizes award at noon
Authentic Haitian Lunch and Health Fair to follow
UMASS DINING UMass
www.umassdining.com

SUMMER I:
Day: May 17 - June 24
Evening: May 17 - July 2
SUMMER II:
Day: July 6 - August 13
Evening: July 6 - August 2
Enjoy Boston. Earn credit.
Accelerate your studies with a Suffolk Summer Program.
Suffolk University welcomes visiting undergraduate and graduate students to attend summer classes in the heart of Boston.
- Earn credit on campus, online, or abroad
- Choose courses in the College of Arts & Sciences and Sawyer Business School
- Take a 2-week Summer Institute course
- Study abroad in exciting 2-6 week programs in Paris, Madrid, London and more www.suffolk.edu/summer
SUFFOLK UNIVERSITY

Beer Review: Emerald Isle brews

Thick, dark and frothly suds supreme across the big pond

By Andrew Sheridan
Collegian Staff

Murphy's is the favorite stout of Cork County, Ireland. Brewed locally, the beer is full-bodied and thick, packing a creamy head and a smooth finish. Murphy's is only available in Cork and surrounding counties.

The Republic of Ireland is famous for many things, including shamrocks, leprechauns, fierce religiousness and an even more fierce hatred of the British. But if the Emerald Isle is famous for one thing above all else, it's beer.

The people of Ireland are renowned far and wide for their love of that Holy Grail known as the pint, and in the spirit of this great drinking tradition, I decided to travel to Cork, the second-largest city in the republic, to find out what Irish beer is all about.

The first thing to know about Irish drinking is that, with the exception of one or two national brands, the beers available on tap are highly regional. While Guinness and Carlsberg are available anywhere, what's on tap in Cork is not what's on tap in Belfast or Dublin.

That being said, pints are divided into three categories: stouts, ales and ciders. We'll start with the first and most popular group, stouts.

The classic Irish brew, stouts are dark beers characterized by a heavy body and a bitter finish. While heavy in taste, they are surprisingly light in calories and will fill up a light drinker in no time flat.

Guinness is far and away the most popular stout in the Republic and, for better or for worse, it has become the unofficial symbol for the country. While there is a big deal made about trying it "from the source," Guinness tastes largely the same across the pond as it does in the U.S. malty, thick and black as night, it has the same bitterness and taste in the homeland as most drinkers love, but with perhaps a bit more thickness. The main difference lies in achieving the proper pour, an art form that is well-mastered in Ireland, but never guaranteed in the States.

If you happen to find yourself in the south of the country, Murphy's is the drink to look up. Brewed in County Cork, it has a creamier taste and thicker head than Guinness, which is balanced out by a less significant finish. Whether this is a positive or a negative depends on personal preferences of bitterness, but Murphy's is certainly a beer to keep an eye out for.

The third major brew in this category is Beamish. While many look down on the drink, those who do are quite enthusiastic. This discounted stout is surprisingly good, with a thick head and more of a bite than some cream stouts.

Ales are a broader category. While less popular than stouts, they come in come in much more varieties and colors.

Irish red ales have a long history, and while the classic export to the United States is Killian's, the horse-headed beer is difficult to find in bars and package stores. More popular by far in Cork is Rebel Red beer. Named after the proud rebel tradition of the area, this beer is dark amber-red in color but surprisingly light in body. Like most reds, it has a mellow and refreshing flavor with little malt and only a hint of hoppiness.

Honey Dew is another, decidedly less traditional variety of ale available. A well-made beer, Honey Dew is brewed entirely organically. The natural honey gives it a light, sweet background that is difficult to achieve without overpowering the hops. Medium-bodied and light, Honey Dew is seriously good selection on shelves that are starved for locally-brewed ales.

The final pint-filler available on tap is cider. Very different from the spiced ciders of New England, Irish cider is light and carbonated, in the same vein as the sparkling cider given to kids on New Years in lieu of champagne. Ranging from five to six percent alcohol, they are a good substitute for those who don't have the taste for beer, but don't want the heavy booze packed by most cocktails.

By far the most popular bar cider is Bulmers, a nationwide brand that inexplicably goes under the name of Magners in Northern Ireland. Bulmers is thick and sweet, with a full flavor that easily trumps the "malt beverages" that pass for beer substitutes in the U.S. While it is good, I couldn't help reminiscing of cold, alcoholic apple juice whenever I was poured a glass.

In contention with Bulmers is Druids, a self-styled "Celtic Cider" whose true Celtic roots are questionable at best. Druids has a lighter, fruitier taste than Bulmers, but as with all things sweet and light it can leave the drinker with a case of dry-mouth.

In addition aforementioned brews, Ireland's stores and pubs are often a cross-section of European beer culture. Belgian, German, Danish and even American beers are represented, although the classic locals are always in style. Micro-brews are rare but existent, and the locals seem to appreciate a good glass of suds no matter where it comes from.

One thing is for sure: the Irish are not going to be putting down their pint glasses any time soon. St. Paddy's day has come and gone but as always, the taps flow on.

Andrew Sheridan can be reached at asher1@student.umass.edu.

Top 10 wicked killa' films based in Boston

By Tappan Parker
Collegian Staff

Anyone from Massachusetts probably has some small amount of Boston pride. Many of whom tend to get a little excited when they find out that Hollywood filmed the next blockbuster in, or around, the city. So why not celebrate them with a list of 10 good movies that were filmed in the city known for the most epic tea rager in history?

"Shutter Island"

For those of you who haven't seen the movie or didn't know, "Shutter Island" takes place in Mass. on an island off of the Boston coastline. Set in 1954, Teddy Daniels (Leonardo DiCaprio) is an upcoming U.S. Marshal investigating the disappearance of an inmate at Shutter Island Ashecliffe Hospital. Critics gave generally positive reviews to the mystery thriller and the movie has Leo which makes it instantly that much more awesome. What's not to love? The movie is still in theaters so head down and check it out!

"Edge of Darkness"

Another recently released film, the movie stars Mel Gibson in his first leading role in seven years. Finally leaving his secret island fortress to star in a movie, Gibson plays Thomas Craven, a detective who works the streets of Boston. When his daughter is killed right outside his doorstep, Craven begins investigating the murder which leads him to discover a plot filled with corporate conspiracy. The Boston critics loved it and you should too.

"Spartan"

No, this is not another movie about Spartan's in Greece who wore muscles for body armor. This movie, filmed almost entirely in Boston, stars Val Kilmer as Scott, a U.S secret agent, who is hired to recover the kidnapped daughter of a government official. Scott, who represents many of the characteristics of a Spartan warrior, eventually discovers a deeper plot that leads him on an action filled chase throughout Mass. It's definitely a fun movie to watch if you like thrillers and action, although I can only imagine part of Kilmer's ruthlessness in the role is because his character doesn't have a last name.

"Gone Baby Gone"

"Gone Baby Gone," directed by Ben Affleck and starring his younger brother Casey Affleck, is about the disappearance of a four-year-old girl from Dorchester. Reluctant private detectives Patrick Kenzie and Angela Gennaro take the case and face the tough streets of Boston, facing drug dealers, gangs and the like in order to find the girl. A critically acclaimed emotional story, this one is a must see. Plus it also stars Morgan Freeman and his voice alone is reason enough to see a movie.

"Mystic River"

This Oscar winning film, directed by Clint Eastwood, follows the story of three childhood friends, Jimmy Markum, Sean Devine and Dave Boyle, who reunite during their adult years following the death of Jimmy's daughter. Sean is the police detective on the case and Dave is one of the suspects in a plot that twist and turns in an incredibly moving story. Also, it's in the city of Boston. Definitely a must see.

"Good Will Hunting"

In the only movie on this list not involving cops or criminals, this film is an Academy Award winner starring Robin Williams, Matt Damon and Ben Affleck. Will Hunting (Damon) is a janitor at MIT with an extraordinary ability for mathematics which could take him out of the blue-collar life he lives, if he was willing to leave his neighborhood and best friend. A brilliant movie with some very emotional scenes, this is another Boston-based must see film.

"The Friends of Eddie Coyle"

This gangster film from 1973 stars Robert Mitchum as Eddie Coyle, a Boston gangster as he is caught between ratting out his friends to avoid doing jail time and smuggling guns to bank robbers. Based on a true story, the film is gritty and digs into the dirtier side of Boston cops and robbers. One of the better realistic gangster movies out there, this is definitely worth a view.

"21"

Based on the true story of a bunch of MIT students who learn to count cards, go to Vegas, and make a ton of money while living it up. With Kevin Spacey as the professor who trains the students, this is an awesome flick for any college student who wants to know what they can do with math. Disclaimer: card counting is frowned upon and will get your knees broken by Laurence Fishburne.

"The Boondock Saints"

"The Boondock Saints" celebrates the story of two Irish brothers, living in Boston, who set out to rid the city of its criminal underbelly. This movie is surprisingly overlooked, having only a limited theatrical release and receiving generally poor reviews from critics. Yet despite this many have come to love the movie for its vigilante justice and stylistic action sequences and over the years it has developed a huge cult following. The critics can't always be right.

"The Departed"

What would a list about Boston movies be without "The Departed," one of Boston's most celebrated crime thrillers? With four Oscars under its belt, including best picture, this movie has an all star cast with Jack Nicholson, Matt Damon and DiCaprio. The movie follows two graduate officers from the Mass. State Police Academy and the officers trying to rid Boston of the Irish mob. This is a must see no matter where you're from.

Tappan Parker can be reached at rtparker@student.umass.edu

Mass Effect 2 outshines original

COURTESY ELECTRONIC ARTS

While the story lacks the kick fans expected, Mass Effect 2 proves to be an overall improvement over the first installment. The structure of the latest version of the popular series is vastly different than the original.

By Andrew Witts
Collegian Correspondent

In 2007, Bioware released one of the most creative, thought provoking and visually impressive video games of this current generation with Mass Effect. Shortly after the release of Mass Effect, the project lead Casey Hudson announced that it was the first chapter to a plot line that would span three games total. It has been three years, and Mass Effect 2 has finally been released on PC and XBOX 360. Does this second installment top its predecessor? In a word, completely.

For those who have never experienced this game series before, the Mass Effect series is a sci-fi adventure shooter where players assume control of Commander Shephard, one of the most skilled soldiers in human history. To immerse players into the role of Commander Shepherd, players could customize everything about their main character from his or her appearance to unique weapon specializations. From this point, the game focuses on Shepherd's quest to save the galaxy from utter annihilation while commanding an elite team filled with colorful and deeply interesting characters.

First things first, Mass Effect 2 is almost an entirely different game from the original. Where the first installment's game play was structured like a traditional RPG with third person shooter elements, Mass Effect 2 focuses more on being a well rounded shooter. For the series' fans this is a bit of a shock at first as hunting for Spectre-class inventory across the Milky-Way Galaxy. However, once players sit down with this game for about an hour they will either be hooked by the astonishing opening sequences or how well composed the game's structure is. Essentially Mass Effect 2 shoots like Gears of War and upgrades like Dead Space. If either of these games are not your cup of tea then maybe just maybe Mass Effect is not the series for you. However, nothing can be more fun than lifting your foes up with a biotic power and vaporizing them with a shotgun filled with incendiary ammo.

The overall presentation is nearly flawless. No longer do textures pop in and out of view during cut scenes or game play like the first game. Instead the graphics have greatly improved with great lighting effects during some set pieces and action sequences. Once again Bioware reminds the entire video game community that their speech system is still top dog in the industry. Alien species will converse with your character and you often find yourself gazing at their mouth movement as it synes perfectly with the spot-on voice work.

The story itself is the weakest part of the game as the main quest is pretty cut and dry. In fact with the exception of a few missions, the description on the back of the box is pretty much the gist of the whole game. Luckily there are enough side missions that are far more interesting and far more fun to keep you busy and happy on your journey towards the conclusion of the game. Speaking of the conclusion, the final boss battle is somewhat of a let down both structurally and also artistically. Some people will say that the difficulty was disappointing, as it should be the greatest challenge that a video game can pose.

When looking at the Mass Effect series as a whole, it is pretty clear that it is only getting better with age. Mass Effect 2 in particular manages to preserve the universe of the series while still managing to innovate the game play and simplify it for a wider audience. Thematically, Mass Effect 2 falls short of the first installment, but with Mass Effect 3 currently in preproduction and series director Casey Hudson still controlling Bioware's biggest intellectual property, the end may definitely justify the means.

Andrew Witts can be reached at awitts@student.umass.edu.

The best bakery no one's heard of

By Jazmine Pendleton
Collegian Correspondent

It's a regular Tuesday night at Hampshire Dining Commons, and a pan of crumb cake sits on the counter waiting for the first student to grab a piece. One after another, students quickly pile the cake onto their plates. Yet, as they indulge, many are unaware the tasty dessert comes from a bustling bakery tucked away underneath the C-Store unknown to the average University of Massachusetts college student.

Anyone walking through the Hampden Bake Shop would be quickly invigorated by the heady aroma of fresh baking bread and chocolate fudge brownies. The room is filled with large revolving ovens, dough mixers and workables pasted with stains of spilled flour and other ingredients. Men and women adorned in white, chef coats and puffed hats quickly bustle around: measuring flour, washing pans, spreading frosting, or kneading dough. Trays upon trays of rolls, muffins and other pastries sit ready to be shipped out for the day.

The Hampden Bake Shop, located below the Hampden Dining Common in the Southwest Residential Area serves 20,000 to 25,000 people on campus every day. The bakery provides baked goods for each of the four dining commons on campus, all retail operations and catered functions.

On top of this feat, head pastry Chef Simon Stevenson personally caters for the chancellor's VIP gatherings, which can range from five to 300 people, with the university patrons to the governor.

Many believe the deserts come out of pre-made, packaged boxes; a misconception Stevenson would like to debunk.

"We make everything handmade here, from carving the fruit to whipping the frosting on the cakes, the bakery produces it all," he said, gesturing as if he were molding an imaginary pastry. Yet, many students are unaware of the preparation, skill, and time put into these everyday desserts, which can range from mascarpone cheeseeake to lemon bars.

The bakery reflects Stevenson's passion for the quality work he and his staff try to produce every day. In his small office, filled with clutter of new menus, plaques of recognition and culinary degrees cover the walls. Books to better his craft fill the shelves, along with a plate of chocolate shoes that sits for display. It's a pair of shoes he completed at a chocolate 101 course he taught the week before.

"What do you think are the biggest complaints we get from students?" Stevenson asked. Quickly he responded, "The students want healthier choices and variety."

Little do they know, there are 30,000 combinations a student can eat for lunch, and the bakery has a rotating schedule for 21 days, which allows a student not to repeat desserts for quite a while because the menu never repeats, unless it is a special for the day.

Many students at UMass, however, do not recognize the work put into these dishes.

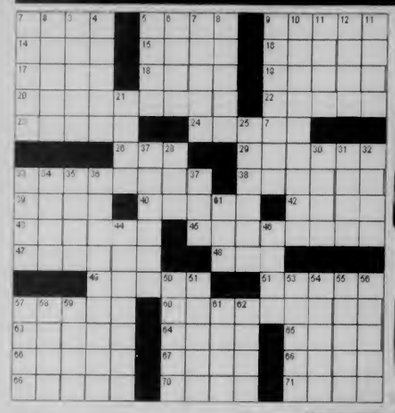
"I never eat the desserts in the DC," said Vanessa Laine, a senior at UMass. "It's like the same every day, or they don't have anything I like." Imagine, everyday a student can experience a different dessert if they only realized this was possible.

The bake shop follows by its own set of Ten Commandments. One of which explains how to act as if you are baking for three people: yourself, your mother and the local food critic. If you then could not serve the product to them, the dish cannot be sent out. Stevenson stresses that the students of UMass "are our guests," and it takes time and dedication to put out quality food for them. When the bakery was testing out a new baguette, it was tested six times so they could improve it before they sent it out for their guests to eat.

"We care about what we produce here," Stevenson said as he shared a hot, freshly baked roll. "It is such a personal experience, we pour so much into the food, we touch it, manipulate it and alter it, and the finished product ends up inside someone's body, how much closer can you get with someone?"

Two bakers share over 25 years each in experience in baking. The shop also includes a gold medal baker, who is one of the few to obtain this achievement for baking. The staff consists of one assistant pastry chef, eight more bakers and 25 students. "The atmosphere is great here, everyone is friendly," a student worker, Rachael Mroz, pointed out. The senior staff and students work together to make the bake shop work. Many bakers arrive at the bakery as early as 3 a.m. to provide, fresh muffins and pastries for the students at breakfast.

As you bite into that bagel, remember The Hampden Bake Shop is not providing bread from some store, but rather, the hands, dedication and love from a group of people who really want to produce the best for you.



Jazmine Pendleton can be reached at jpendlet@student.umass.edu.

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
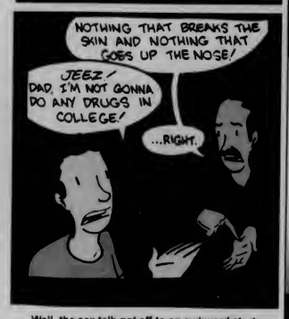
We like the things you whisper in our ear...

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Blemish
5. Backside
9. Flower feature
14. Found in skin lotion
15. Prison
16. San Antonio fort
17. Person, place or thing
18. Matured
19. A parish
20. Retrieve
22. Alter
23. Prophets
24. Wear away
26. An uncle
29. Lime tree
33. Imagine
38. The whole thing
39. Bridle strap
40. Inhale audibly through the nose
42. Acknowledge
43. Appraise
45. Without agony
47. Horse barn
48. Registered nursing assistant
49. Detecting by radio waves
52. Map within a map
57. Street urchin
60. The Pilgrim ship
63. Homeric epic
64. False god
65. "Encore!"
66. Sew together loosely
67. Former vice-president Al
68. Operatic solo
69. Aromatic compound
70. Once again
71. Accomplishment

DOWN
1. Declines
2. Without company
3. Road
4. Male singing range
5. Slightly open
6. Indian music
7. Military blockade
8. Deacon
9. Someone who fights for a cause (archaic)
10. Primary
11. Adhesive strip
12. Ends a prayer
13. God Almighty
21. Purposes
25. Any unsaturated aliphatic hydrocarbon
27. Overlooked
28. Long, long time
30. Plunge
31. Cupid, to the Greeks
32. Current event information
33. Historical periods
34. Where a bird lives
35. Credit card brand
36. Intoxicate
37. Bite
41. Distant
44. Libel
46. Wood fastener
50. Spanish for "(girl) friend"
51. Radioactive gas
53. Bedouin
54. Affirmed
55. Strange
56. Step
57. Taunt
58. "Oh, my!"
59. Spray
61. Bygone time
62. Aviated



Summer Session Just Got 50% BIGGER!!!
NEW! 3 Sessions:
• Session I: May 17 - June 7
• Session II: June 8 - July 13
• Session III: July 14 - August 17
Classes fill up quickly...REGISTER NOW
Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net
UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

Gimme Yo Digits

2			1			5	9
	1		5		8	7
	3						4
	6		9				5
					3		2
	8	9
		7	6			9	4
8	9
		3			7

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IS HIRING A DISTRIBUTION MANAGER
We are looking for someone to be responsible for managing delivery in the early morning hours.
If you think this job is right for you stop by 113 Campus Center Basement, Call 413.545.3500 or E-Mail thecollegian@gmail.com

SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

Well, the sex talk got off to an awkward start.

INTERESTED IN GETTING BUSINESS EXPERIENCE?
THE COLLEGIAN IS HIRING A NEW BUSINESS MANAGER FOR 2010-2011.
APPLICATIONS ARE AVAILABLE AT 113 CAMPUS CENTER,
DUE FRIDAY, MARCH 26TH, BY 5 PM.

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com

Pictures for Sad Children by John Campbell picturesforsadchildren.com

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I'm Troy McClure, and I'll leave you with what we all came here to see: hardcore nudity!"

The Simpson's Troy McClure

Healthcare by Dan'Nott

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
If you lead a life of crime, remember that you can take a bite out of both life and crime.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
That candy he gave you wasn't really candy. Enjoy the next fourteen hours.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Don't just read the labels! Love the labels, work the labels, smooch the labels!

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Your love life is like Channing Tatum's acting career, devoid of talent.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
One should take the time and do something very symbolic and thoroughly exploited. Build a house of cards, anyone?

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
When you say goodbye to your parents next time, you can say goodbye to your kidneys.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Crest White Strips should not be worn while inhaling the fumes and hemp infused combustibles.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Paint is not a beverage but if you are so compelled, remember to drink primer first before things get too out of hand.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
You have been looking for days but sadly it is time to inform you that "glow in the dark" is not part of the 2010 Crayola crayon set.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
If you had a nickel for every penny that you had, then you would need to do math and luckily you will stay away from it.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
A pinky ring is for your hand. Please don't ignore this, no one wants to see you on "True Life: How I Lost my Genitalia."

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Never judge a book by the dirty guy in the van selling it outside of your apartment building.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Full Time Summer Employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $11.50/hour. The job description and application are available at the Housing Assigment Office, 235 Whitmore and is due April 2nd.

Bartenders needed for FT/PT positions. No experience required. Earn $20-$70 per hour. Call us at 617-849-8074

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

TUTORING SERVICES

Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats, GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 Jboid42@yahoo.com

EMPLOYMENT

Fall 2010 internships with the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn 12 undergraduate credits. No experience necessary and will provide training! Contact us at 413-545-1995 or stop by at 922 Campus Center.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

Feb. 5 loss against BC started 2nd half slide showed.

HOCKEY from page 12

After UMass took a 2-0 lead in the first period, the Wildcats recorded three unanswered goals to take a 3-2 lead. With 11 seconds remaining in regulation Wellman tied the game at three leading to David Boehm's game-winning goal two minutes into overtime.

Paul Dainton was strong in net for the Minutemen recording a career-high 42 saves.

While the game may not have seemed like much of a contest with the teams' records at the time, the loss for UNH was a spark that led to a seven-game unbeaten streak and a first place finish in the conference standings.

Jay's Pick – Nov. 13 OT win over UNH

The best game of the season came in mid-November as the UMass fans were treated to a dramatic overtime finish at the Mullins Center.

Prior to the front-end of a weekend series with New Hampshire, the Minutemen were in the midst of playing their best hockey of the season. UMass was 6-1 overall and 3-1 in the Hockey East, while the Wildcats were struggling in the early going with a 2-5-2 overall record.

The contest was a back-and-forth affair with clean play as only three total penalties were whistled. The Minutemen came out in the first period and took an early 2-0 lead, before UNH responded with a pair of goals in the second frame.

The Wildcats took their first lead of the game early in the final period and almost hung on to the win in regulation. With 11 seconds remaining, however, Wellman scored the game-tying goal to send the contest into overtime.

Boehm gave the Minutemen the 4-3 victory with a goal in the extra frame for the most dramatic win of the season. Since that game, UMass and UNH seemingly switched places as the Wildcats finished the season in first place in the Hockey East, while the Minutemen squeaked into the playoffs.

BIGGEST DISAPPOINTMENT

Jeff's pick – Feb. 5 7-1 loss to BC

With then-No. 15 UMass and then-No.14 Boston College locked in a tie for second place in the Hockey East standings, the Mullins Center was packed for what was expected to be one of the best games of the year in the Hockey East.

The game televised on NESN turned out to be a bust as the Eagles took a 4-0 lead after just one period, and many fans at the Mullins Center began to file out. By the end of the second period, the lead was 7-0.

The Minutemen managed one goal in the third period to avoid the shutout, but the loss was the start of a six game losing streak that led UMass to finish seventh in the conference standings.

Jay's Pick – Second half slide

With the way UMass played in the first half of its schedule, it didn't seem prone to another late-season collapse.

JEFF BERNSTEIN / COLLEGIAN

Junior James Marcou tries to keep control of the puck against a Boston College defender. BC won the game, 7-1 and eventually won the Hockey East tournament.

JEFF BERNSTEIN / COLLEGIAN

The Minutemen celebrate after beating New Hampshire in overtime on Nov. 13. The Mass Attack qualified for the Hockey East playoffs, but was swept in the first round against Boston College.

The Minutemen, though, struggled after winter break, losing eight of nine games at one point, including a six-game losing streak. UMass lost its national ranking which it held for a portion of the season, and fell from the top of the Hockey East standings to fighting for a postseason berth.

With wins in the last two games, the Minutemen earned a matchup with Boston College in the Hockey East Quarterfinals. The Eagles swept UMass and kept it from advancing.

Though the Minutemen look like a different team every season in the first half compared to the second half, they might be starting to figure it out. Maybe next season will be a different story.

Jeffrey R. Lamard is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at jlamard@dailycollegian.com. Jay Asser is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

WANNA HOOK-UP?
FREE High Speed Internet and Expanded Cable
1, 2, 3 , and 4 bedroom apartment homes
RESERVE YOUR APARTMENT TODAY!!!

SUGARLOAF ESTATES
APARTMENT HOMES
28 River Road, Sunderland
866-301-1445
www.sugarloafestates.com

ASPEN CHASE & ALPINE COMMONS
apartment homes
133 Belchertown Road, Rt. 9, Amherst
866-301-1445
www.aspenchaseapartments.com
www.alpinecommons.com

FREE Heat, Water, Hot Water, Cable, Internet Electricity in Select Units

On the Bus Route, Salt Water Swimming Pool, Fitness Center, Pet Friendly
FLEXIBLE LEASE TERMS

$$ MENTION THIS AD AND SAVE ON YOUR MOVE IN COSTS $$

Daily Iowan discusses prospective coaches

Former UMass assistant pegged as potential new Iowa coach

By DI Staff
Daily Iowan (Iowa)

KENO DAVIS —

Keno Davis is the right man for the Iowa men's basketball job.

He is the head coach at Providence and a former head coach at Drake, where he was named 2008 Associated Press National Coach of the Year after leading the Bulldogs to a 28-5 record and an NCAA tournament berth.

He is also the son of former Iowa head coach Tom Davis. Iowa should not be forced to extend Keno's daddy's contract in 1999 after 13 seasons, despite a 269-140 record and nine trips to the Big Dance.

And Iowa basketball has not been the same since then.

Through eight years under Steve Alford and three years under Todd Lickliter, the Hawkeyes have gone 190-163 overall, including an embarrassing 70-106 record in the Big Ten.

In order to give the Iowa program Keno Davis is the answer.

He knows what it takes to be successful at Iowa. He served as an assistant coach for the Hawkeyes under his father for four years.

But perhaps most importantly, the 38-year-old Davis would bring something that has been missing from the Iowa basketball program lately: energy.

Unlike the slow, deliberate style of Lickliter that relied on hot 3-point shooting and made games slower than a two-hour lecture on sedimentary rocks, Davis would bring a track meet-like tempo to Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

Using the same style of play that his father utilized to attract former greats such as Jess Settles and Andre Woolridge to Iowa City, there's no reason to think Davis couldn't bring in more players similar to Eric May and less like Anthony Tucker.

Davis is on the record as saying he's staying put at Providence, but he will have a hard time resisting an offer from the Hawkeyes, who could easily offer him much more money than he is making.

So Gary Barta, look no further than Keno Davis.

Winning at Iowa is in his blood.

by Jordan Garretson

STEVE LAVIN —

Iowa fans have heard Steve Lavin on TV, and if they're lucky, the Hawkeye players will get to hear him in the locker room.

Outside of a seven-year run as the head coach of the UCLA basketball team, Lavin might be best known as an enthusiastic and sometimes unorthodox commentator for ESPN.

His uncanny and sometimes mixed analogies and observations from college games might serve as a reminder of his coaching style to some of the Bruin fans he left behind.

Several loyal Bruins have voiced their disapproval of Lavin's tenure at UCLA, the worst of it culminating in designating Lavin as "The Blagojevich of College Hoops."

All Blago references aside, it seems that those fans in Los Angeles had been spoiled by legendary coach John Wooden. But when you look at the facts and stats, Lavin's resume should shut those doubters up.

In his time at UCLA, Lavin's teams started every year in the AP's top 25, ranking no lower than No. 17 in those polls. He won at least 21 games in his first six campaigns before being fired after one losing season – his last one at UCLA.

And Lavin's postseason success should have Iowa fans drooling over the prospect of hiring him.

It's been a painful wait to make it back to the Big Dance for the Hawkeyes. They haven't been able to expunge that painful 3-point loss to Northwestern State from their memories.

Lavin may be able to remedy that.

He led the Bruins to five Sweet 16 appearances in his first six years and made it to the Elite Eight on his first try.

With success such as that, the Hawkeyes' "One Shining Moment" could come with the employment of Lavin.

by Matt Schimmer

TONY BARBEE —

Todd Lickliter's three-year reign in Iowa City ended in typical fashion, with his team scoring more than 60 points only three times in its last 13 games.

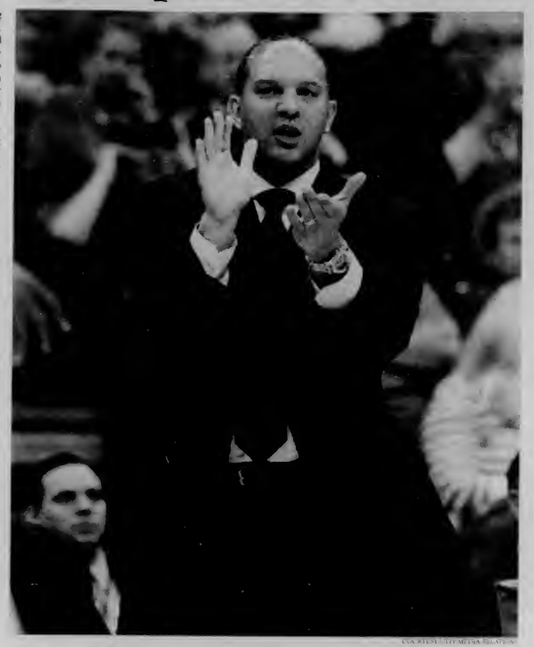
Quite simply, there was nothing fun about watching the Hawkeyes. They played slowly, they appeared to be athletically inferior, and they regressed as the calendar dipped into March. Iowa was last in the Big Ten in scoring offense (60.5 points per game) and ninth in the conference in scoring defense (66.0).

Lickliter's painstaking offensive system didn't work, resulting in the worst three-year stretch in Iowa basketball history and also the three lowest attendance seasons ever in Carver-Hawkeye Arena. Consequently, Athletics Director Gary Barta fired Lickliter on March 15.

Perhaps more than anything, Lickliter's replacement needs to be a high-level recruiter – someone who can snag the second-tier prospects from Chicago – who values an up-tempo offense.

Tony Barbee – the current UTEP coach and former longtime assistant under John Calipari at Memphis and UMass – is essentially everything Lickliter was not: a sound recruiter, an offensive-minded head coach, and a person who would not be overwhelmed by Iowa's current state.

This alone makes him a viable candidate at Iowa.



According to his UTEP bio, Memphis signed top-10 recruiting classes in each of Barbee's six seasons (2000-2006) on campus. His first class at UTEP served as the backbone for the Miners' 26-7 (15-1) record this season, which included an NCAA Tournament at-large birth.

This year, Barbee headed a squad that was in the Conference USA's top-four in scoring offense (75.5 points per game) and defense (64.6). In fact, UTEP ranked No. 1 in Conference USA with a plus-11.5 scoring margin. For a point of comparison, Iowa was minus-5.5 this season.

Barbee, who runs Calipari's patented dribble-drive offense, has improved in each of his four years at UTEP, winning 14, 19, 23, and 26 games in his four seasons as head coach.

Many have called this the most important hiring in Iowa basketball history, pressuring AD Gary Barta to make a "Splash hiring." Barbee, because of his recruiting prowess and his fun-to-watch style, would satisfy both fans and players, making him the Hawkeyes' best option.

by Scott Miller

UTEP coach and former UMass assistant coach Tony Barbee is one of the coaches being considered for Iowa's coaching vacancy. The Miners lost to Butler in the First Round of the NCAA tournament, 77-59.

West Virginia looks forward to game against Washington

By Brian Gawthrop
The Daily Athenaeum (West Virginia)

Da'Sean Butler's reputation says he can handle pressure.

His team proved Sunday it could do the same.

The West Virginia men's basketball team effectively broke down Missouri's full-court pressure to claim a 68-59 win over the Tigers in the second round of the NCAA tournament and advance to the program's fourth Sweet 16 in the past six years.

The Mountaineers (29-6) will now play No. 11-seeded Washington Thursday at the Carrier Dome in Syracuse, N.Y.

"It wasn't like that was the first time I saw it," said WVU head coach Bob Huggins of Missouri's pressure. "I had a pretty good idea [of what we needed to do]. I knew what we did in the past [to defeat Missouri head coach Mike Anderson]."

It was Huggins' fifth win in six tries going up against Anderson.

The veteran coach will admit a little help from Butler didn't hurt, either.

The senior scored 19 of his team's 30 points in the first half and finished with a game-high 28 while hitting 12-of-13 from the free-throw line.

The senior's biggest play, however, was a put-back off a Cam Thoroughman missed free throw with 1:17 remaining to give the Mountaineers a 64-57 advantage and seal West Virginia's Sweet 16 bid.

"Nobody really hoxed me out," Butler said. "So I just went up there, grabbed it and laid it in. It was just a matter of getting to the basketball."

West Virginia jumped out to an 8-0 lead in the first two minutes thanks to Butler's back-to-back 3-pointers. After a Mountaineer 6-0 run, Mizzou brought the game within one, forcing Huggins to call a timeout.

Butler came out of the timeout and hit two more 3-pointers and was followed with an Ebanks jumper in the paint for a six-point Mountaineer advantage.

But Ebanks' bucket was the last WVU field goal in the final 9:03 of the first half, allowing Missouri to tie the game 25-25 with a Kim English 3-pointer with 3:10 left before the half.

West Virginia didn't hit another field goal until 3:48 into the second half when Butler assisted Truck Bryant on a fast break, giving WVU a 36-29 advantage and ending a 12:49 scoreless drought in which WVU shot 0-for-10 from the field.

"We got our first one by being mentally tough, taking care of the ball and running sets," Butler said, who has made 40 of his last 45 free-throw attempts.

Free throws kept the team in contention, however. Butler hit 5-of-6 from the line in the final 1:19 of the opening half to give WVU a five-point lead into the locker room. The team shot 25-of-33 at the charity stripe in the game compared to Missouri's 12-of-20.

The Mountaineers made 10 of 14 shots from the line in the final five minutes of the game.

"We wanted to attack their pressure," Huggins said. "When you're as aggressive as what they are, you're going to foul. We knew that."

The Bryant bucket opened the flood gates for the Mountaineers. The team hit three buckets within the next two minutes and answered on every Tiger bucket including a Kevin Jones 3-pointer from the left corner for a six-point lead.

On the ensuing possession, Butler was fouled on a 3-point attempt and hit all three free throws for a 50-41 lead with 11:28 remaining.

Tiller was one of four Tigers to reach double-figure scoring, led by freshman Michael Dixon's 15 points on 6-of-10 shooting.

Devin Ebanks and Kevin Jones ended with 14 and 13 points, respectively, while Jones added nine rebounds.

With the win, the Mountaineers tied the 51-year-old school record for most wins in a single season with 29 which was first set in 1959.

"I'm happy to win it, and we're going to celebrate it," Butler said. "But we need to win the next one to make it that more special."

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
Needs You!

Do you want to build your resumé?

Do you need business and sales experience?

Become an
ADVERTISING
REPRESENTATIVE

*SOM Students strongly encouraged to apply.

To Apply: Contact Mike Tortorici @ 545-3500
or e-mail thecollegian@gmail.com

Are you looking for a Job for next semester?

The Daily Collegian Graphics Department is hiring for advertising production in 2010!

- Flexible work schedule
- Valuable Experience
- Awesome people

Little to no experience in graphic design necessary!

Looking for undergrads with good computer skills, strong motivation, the ability to learn, and a keen eye.

Contact Amanda Joinson at Advertising@DailyCollegian.com for more information, or stop by The Collegian office in the Campus Center Basement

Getting ready to rent an apartment off campus?

OFF-CAMPUS HOUSING • MARCH 25 + 27 2010 • INFORMATION DAYS

Don't miss the Apartment Rental Fair

THURSDAY, MARCH 25
Campus Center Concourse
10:00am - 3:00pm

- Many large and small landlords will be represented!
- Get a FREE raffle ticket! Enter to win a Wii system or Wings gift certificates!

www.umoch.org

Sponsored by Off Campus Housing and the Housing Assignment Office in collaboration with the Student Legal Services Office

UMassAmherst

PUFFTON VILLAGE

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE

EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS

SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses

ALL RENTS INCLUDE:
HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!

ON SITE LAUNDRY,
OFF STREET PARKING.

BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.

549-0145

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSWEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 24, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen score late to upset No. 18 Brown

Sophomore Anthony Biscardi looks for the ball during UMass' 11-6 win over Albany.

McCormack reaches career-high in saves

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

Going into the 2010 season, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team wondered who would step up and account for the losses of Tim Balise and Jim Connelly on the offensive side of the ball.

Sophomore attackman Art Kell did just that on a rainy Tuesday afternoon, contributing two goals and three assists, as the No. 18 Minutemen (5-2) defeated No. 15 Brown for the first time since the 2006 season, 11-10.

Kell leads the team in goals (20), assists (14) and points (34), and was one of four two-goal scorers, which include sophomore midfielders Anthony Biscardi and Steve D'Amario along with freshman attackman Will Manny. Senior midfielder Bobby Hayes, junior attackman Ryan Liebel and senior midfielder Christian Hain also added a goal for the Minutemen.

"Well, we lost two one-goal games so, winning means a lot for their confidence, believing in themselves that they have the ability to win those games," UMass coach Greg Cannella said.

UMass	11
Brown	10

The Minutemen fell to fellow Ivy League opponents No. 16 Harvard and No. 20 Yale by one-goal margins earlier this season.

The loss snaps Brown's three-game winning streak, as it falls to 3-2.

Goalkeeper Tim McCormack had his best performance as a member of the Minutemen, registering a career-high 17 saves, including 10 in the second half.

"Brown is a great team off the ground, and you need that kind of performance out of Tim McCormack if you want to beat a top ranked team like we did today," Cannella said.

While the offense was impressive, the defensive unit played a complete game, as junior defensive midfielder Stephen Zorkers led the team with six groundballs, and sophomore defenseman Tom Celentani caused four turnovers and secured five groundballs.

"The [defense] backed me up all game, and it was a good win all over," McCormack said. "There was great communication from the middies to the close [defensive] guys to the polls, we got our slides down, and it was just a very fluent game."

Hayes sparked the final run for the Minutemen, tying the game at nine with just over six minutes to go in the game.

Hain put UMass up 10-9 with just over four minutes to go in the game, as Kell put the game away with one minute to go in regulation.

UMass scored the last three goals after both teams traded scoring runs throughout the game, as the Bears took two one-goal leads on two of its three-goal spurts, but the Minutemen answered back.

The Bears were led by Andrew Feinberg (four goals), Thomas Muldoon (two), and David Hawley (two).

Goalkeeper Matt Chriss had 12 saves in the loss for Brown.

The Bears' extra-man offensive unit could not capitalize on their opportunities, as freshman Ryan Hollenbaugh, sophomores Alex Reinhard and Brett Newgaard held the Bears to one extra-man goal.

UMass went 1-of-3 in extra-man opportunities on the day.

It also won 15 of its first 17 draws, with sophomores Greg Rushing and Anthony Toresco winning 11-of-16 and 5-of-8 face-offs, respectively.

The Minutemen open their first CAA regular season schedule when they host No.6 Hofstra at Garber Field Saturday at 1 p.m.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

UM searching for 1st victory

By Pete Vasquez
Collegian Staff

After a nine-game road trip, the Massachusetts baseball team is eager to play its first home game and hopes that its first win of the season follows. The Minutemen went winless on a Midwest trip that featured three series against Oklahoma State, Oklahoma and William & Mary.

"We've played some very good teams," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We knew it was going to be a great challenge, but if we handle it the right way and improve, we can turn this into a positive. We'll find out what kind of competitors we've got."

The Minutemen (0-9) get their next chance to record their first win today when they host their home opener against Hartford, a team also struggling to find its rhythm. The Hawks came into this week with three straight losses to Yale. In their last seven games, the Hawks are 1-6, after winning their first two games of the year.

UMass' pitching staff has not fared well recently, allowing at least seven runs in seven of its nine games, including 17 in the last game against William & Mary. Stone attributes the struggles in his pitching staff to a lack of comfort on the mound.

"Our guys just need to get outings under their belts," Stone said. "We need to get more innings and more game-like situations in. It's our spring training."

Isaac Oakley will get the start for UMass. Oakley has only one start this season, which came against Oklahoma State. He went three innings and surrendered seven earned runs as the Minutemen suffered their worst loss of the young season, 20-1.

However Stone believes that Oakley will show improvements in his next start.

"[Oakley] has the potential to be a very good pitcher," Stone said. "He's a fastball pitcher with a good curveball and changeup. He's got to get comfort-

See BASEBALL on page 5

Outfielder Brian Baudinet swings at a pitch during a game last year. The Minutemen (0-9) play their home opener today against Hartford in hopes of getting their first win of the season.

Pitching trying to fix troubles

By Dan Gigliotti
Collegian Staff

When you give up as many runs as the Massachusetts baseball team has in its first nine games, it's hard to beat anyone, let alone some of the top competition in the country.

UMass has given up nearly 10 runs per game over its first nine contests including a season-high 20 against Oklahoma State in its third game of the season and 17 against William & Mary on Sunday.

To their defense, the Minutemen (0-9) have faced experienced teams with high winning percentages. UMass saw its first real action this week, playing against teams that had been competing since last month. Oklahoma State had a 4-2 record before hosting the Minutemen, No. 13 Oklahoma was 15-2 and William & Mary was 10-6, playing its ninth different team since it began its season exactly one month prior to Saturday's season opener.

"It's kind of like spring training for us," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "It's just a matter of comfortable with game experience and getting used to it. Hopefully they will improve with every outing."

UMass has been up once this season going into the sixth inning and even then, it relinquished the lead by the next frame.

The Minutemen's pitching goes into Wednesday's game against Hartford with a 10.12 earned run average. Their starting pitching has accounted for eight of their nine losses and only twice have they lasted six or more innings. In total, the starters have lasted less than half of the innings pitched this season (40.1/81). Overall, the staff allows a .366 opponent batting average and has mustered 56 strikeouts as compared to 36 walks.

The UMass coaching staff has had some pitchers warrant their attention during the young season, but a starting rotation has not been set in stone.

See PITCHING on page 5

2009-10 end-of-year awards handed out to Mass Attack

The 2009-10 season was similar to ones in years past for the Massachusetts hockey team. UMass started the season as one of the nation's best and then went on a second-half skid.

While the season didn't end the way the Minutemen had envisioned it, there were still plenty of bright spots and stellar performances. Here are hockey beat writers, Jeffrey R. Larnard and Jay Asser's, end-of-the-year awards.

Team MVP

Jeff's pick – Justin Braun

James Marcou may have led the team in points and assists while Casey Wellman led in goals, but Braun was an offensive threat while also being the best defensemen on the team. His eights goals and 23 assists placed him third on the team with 31 points and his plus 3 rating was good for second on the team, while possibly seeing more ice time than any one in the conference.

His work earned him Hockey East First Team honors, the only member of the team to be named to the first team.

Most importantly was the senior's will to lift his team to the Hockey East tournament with five points (four goals) on the final weekend of the regular season at Maine.

Jay's Pick – James Marcou

Don't be fooled by the size, though he's usually the smallest player on the ice, J. Marcou was the most important player for UMass this season.

He may not be the most physically gifted player on the team, but his size fits his game perfectly. Weaving through defenders with his quickness, J. Marcou would rather add to his team's goal total before his own.

Though he's not the leading goal scorer for the Minutemen, J. Marcou is involved in a significant portion of UMass' scoring. The forward finished the season with 40 assists, second only to Maine's Gustav Nyquist (42) in the nation. Along with his 11 goals, J. Marcou totaled 51 points to place him fifth in all of college hockey.

Justin Braun is Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard's pick for 2009-10 team MVP for his all-around play with the Minutemen.

Forward James Marcou tries to get a shot past a Boston University defender during a game earlier this year. He was the team leader in points and assists despite being one of the smallest players on the ice.

Jeffrey R. Larnard
Jay Asser

As one of the most creative playmakers in the country, J. Marcou is the sparkplug that makes the potent Minutemen offense go.

Most Improved Player

Jeff's Pick – Michael Marcou

After notching just one assist in his freshman year while playing in 20 games, M. Marcou saw significant minutes in his sophomore year including time on both special team units. In the extra playing time, M. Marcou came up big with seven goals and three assists.

Two of the defensemen's seven goals were the deciding goal in a game, including his first collegiate goal, which came against Maine earlier in the year. The other game came in the first win of a weekend sweep over sister school UMass Lowell.

Jay's Pick – Will Ortiz

As a senior, Ortiz was entering his final season with a last chance to make a mark on UMass.

After having his best season as a freshman in 2006-07 when he led all rookies on the team in goals (seven), assists (14), and total points (21), Ortiz's production was on the decline the past two years.

This season, Ortiz ranked second on the Minutemen in goals (13) and fifth in assists (13), finishing with 26 points. His mark in goals matched his total amount of scores over the past two years, while his tally in assists was one more than he had in his sophomore and junior seasons combined.

Ortiz stepped up and was a key weapon to the UMass attack all season, playing up to the high expectations that were placed on him back as a freshman.

Best Game

Jeff's Pick – Nov. 13 OT win over UNH

At the time the Minutemen were ranked 14th in the country and New Hampshire was coming off a struggling non-conference schedule, but the teams were a lot closer than their records

See HOCKEY on page 9

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 61 LOW: 38 www.DailyCollegian.com THURSDAY, MARCH 25, 2010

Journalist returns to UM with tales

Foreign correspondent and founder of GlobalPost.com Charles Sennott returned to speak at the University of Massachusetts Wednesday, where he graduated with a degree in history in 1984.

By Chelsea Whitton and Anna Meiler
Collegian Staff

For Charles Sennott, the War on Terror began 17 years ago, when he found himself at the center of the 1993 World Trade Center bombing. This moment sparked his career as a foreign correspondent and executive editor and vice president of GlobalPost.com.

Last night, Sennott shared a section of his multimedia website GlobalPost.com, "Life, Death and the Taliban," to a group of about 60 University of Massachusetts faculty and students. He chronicled his experience as a foreign reporter, and the events that led him on a chase to find the truth behind the theologies which fuel Middle Eastern conflict, specifically the ideology of the Taliban.

After reporting the 1993 bombing for the New York Daily News, Sennott transferred to the Boston Globe where he became a Middle Eastern correspondent, reporting from countries such as Egypt, Sudan, Pakistan, Afghanistan, Iraq, Saudi Arabia and Israel – at points so close to the terrorism he was covering that bus bombings would rattle his windows.

With four young boys, Sennott decided to relocate to London only weeks before 9/11, which he said changed everything.

"After eight years they did it," said Sennott. "They finally got the funding, resources and capability to carry out such a devastating attack."

After 9/11, Sennott returned to the Middle East to continue reporting on the attacks.

The Boston Globe then took a tough hit from the economic collapse, and cut down the size of its foreign reporting desk. Sennott left his job as a foreign correspondent for the Globe in 2008, and returned to Afghanistan to continue coverage of the Taliban for upstart Web site GlobalPost.com.

In January 2008, Sennott and Philip Balboni started GlobalPost, which has offered a new approach to foreign reporting, covering Africa, Asia, Europe, the Middle East and the Americas through multimedia, opinion and news reporting. GlobalPost has a staff of 15 editors in Boston and 70 correspondents abroad in over 50 countries.

GlobalPost is an international news site intended to give Americans a deeper understanding of the war on terror, especially at an economic time when newspapers have cut back on international coverage and been forced to stay more localized.

Sennott's experiences in the field have led him into the same room as Osama bin Laden at a conference in Saudi Arabia, and into interviews with leaders of the Taliban.

Sennott recalled a distinct memory while in the Middle East, in which he walked into a room where 30 12-year-olds sat chained to a log, memorizing the Koran.

"I remember this image because it was like machinery, clanking chains and murmuring," said Sennott. "It is those guys who are the Taliban."

According to Sennott, the Taliban is based in the Wahhabi theology – which is rooted in fundamentalist religious views, and strongly promotes anti-Americanism.

"It's a war of ideas," said Sennott.

Even nine years after 9/11, we still don't understand the essence of Wahhabi influence and how it has been warped into anti-Americanism, said Sennott.

"We need to understand what they're all about in a sophisticated way," he said.

Reporting on the conflicts in the Middle East is more than a career for Sennott, it's a passion. His experiences have fully immersed him in an understanding of anti-Western views, although this hasn't deterred him from maintaining his own perspectives on the conflict.

Sennott said he did not agree with the military operations in Afghanistan. He noted that the U.S. had a chance to capture bin Laden and "lost the initiative."

"There was hesitancy," said Sennott. "Did America really want to go into caves, and lose a lot of lives?"

Sennott believes it is going to be very difficult for troops to withdraw from Afghanistan, because the United States can't get a hold of areas long enough to get people to support the development of roads and hospitals. Rather, the Afghani civilians witness a strong and active presence of the Taliban leadership.

"The Taliban will wait us out and come back," he said. "The prognosis is bad."

Sennott graduated from UMass in 1984 with a bachelor's degree in history.

At the event, Sennott emphasized his experience as an undergraduate, calling UMass "a gem." He explained how he applied his love for history into his reporting and Web site.

Jim Hicks, editor of the Massachusetts Review, which hosted the event, introduced Sennott.

"Charlie's writing is grounded in history," said Hicks. "Almost every source he quotes comes from the country he is writing in, rather than what we [Americans] want to hear."

Sennott labels himself as an adrenaline junkie, but joked that working on a Web site is "a healthy transition from war reporting."

Chelsea Whitton can be reached at cwhitton@student.umass.edu. Anna Meiler can be reached a ameiler@student.umass.edu.

Annual Apartment Rental Fair today in Campus Center

Representatives from many of the area's apartment complexes, real estate agencies, property management companies, and small landlords will set up information tables on the Campus Center Concourse today from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. for the annual Apartment Rental Fair.

On Saturday, special buses will pick students up from the various residential areas around campus and bring them to the Haigis Mall where they can then board one of three Apartment Complex Tour buses that will take students to see complexes in Amherst and Sunderland, according to the University of Massachusetts off-campus housing website, www.umoch.org.

Buses run from 12:30 to 5 p.m. and participating complexes include Alpine Commons, Aspen Chase, Brandywine, Mill Valley Estates, Rolling Green, Southpoint, and Sugarloaf Apartment Homes in Sunderland.

- Collegian News Staff

It's a beautiful day in the neighborhood:

Recent UMass psychology graduate awarded the Fred 'Mr.' Rogers Memorial Scholarship

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

It was certainly a beautiful day in the neighborhood for one University of Massachusetts alumnus.

Last Monday, UMass psychology graduate Rachel Schecter was awarded a Fred Rogers Memorial Scholarship by the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences for outstanding work in contributing to the education and development of children through media.

Schecter, along with two other talented students, was awarded $10,000 at the first-annual Fred Forward Conference in Pittsburgh, Penn. Beyond the financial incentive, the trio will also be assigned a mentor from the Television Academy's Children's Programming Group, which will work with them in devising ideas for enriching children's lives and academic horizons through new media.

"The recipients of the Fred Rogers Memorial Scholarships represent the future of children's media," said Television Academy Foundation Executive Director Terri Clark in a Wednesday release. "The Television Academy Foundation is proud to honor these students, who will be torchbearers of the Fred Rogers legacy by improving the quality of educational programming for children."

The scholarship was established to honor the late Rogers, better known for his on-air persona, "Mister Rogers" on his program "Mister Rogers' Neighborhood."

The scholarship is being co-sponsored by global professional service and auditing firm Ernst & Young, which said in Wednesday's release that it was thrilled to be supporting the nourishment of America's youth through television.

"Ernst & Young has been thrilled to be involved with the Fred Rogers Memorial Scholarship since its inception," said Lynette Horrell, managing partner of Ernst & Young's Pittsburgh office. "The program fits who we are as a firm, and reflects our strong commitment to the education and mentoring of today's youth. We share the Television Academy Foundation's vision of and commitment to public broadcasting and quality television for children and look forward to seeing the contributions of the award recipients."

The Fred Rogers scholarship is now in its sixth year. Funding for the award comes from Ernst & Young.

The Fred Forward Conference took place March 22 and 23 in Pittsburgh. The event brought together experts in education, research, public policy and children's media in the hopes of exploring how these divergent groups can synthesize to develop new educational media for children.

The Academy of Television Arts & Sciences was established in 1959 as the charitable branch of the Television Academy.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com

Minutemen take home first win of the season

The Minutemen got their first win of the season Wednesday against Hartford, 14-6, and will take on SJU Friday in their first A-10 game of the season.

ARTS & LIVING

Theater Guild presents 'Rent'

The Theater Guild puts on their production of the popular musical this weekend. The play is set during the HIV/AIDS epidemic of the late 1980s and 1990s in New York City.

SEE PAGE 4

SPORTS

UMass snaps losing skid

Behind clutch hitting from Matt Gedman and strong pitching from Issac Oakley, the Minutemen defeated the Hawks 14-6 for their first win of the 2010 season.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Collegian columnist believes that Amherst voters correctly approved the tax override, but that they should have done so with a sunset provision.

SEE PAGE 6

DailyCollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian and Localocracy.org have teamed up to offer UMass students an interactive and democratic way to respond to our news coverage.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 38

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Toreorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Scannell
Comics Editor Andrew Watts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolniert
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Ellie Ralion-Miller
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Senior Producer Sara Cody
Senior Producer Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sam Butterfield

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Dugan

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

CAMPUS PERSPECTIVES

What do you have to say about this UMass issue?

The Town of Amherst Board of Health will consider voting today on whether to ban smoking at outdoor events, including Extravaganja and other activties on Amherst Common. What do you think?

Alex Ehlke
Senior
Japanese major

"I understand about not being able to smoke in public establishments, but not smoking outdoors? You might as well ban cigarettes."

Silas Ray-Burns
Junior
Chemistry major

"People who go out to [events] sometimes like to smoke cigarettes … People should be able to smoke; it should be a choice. [This bylaw] is going to affect the economy … It's a cheap way for the Town to get money by handing out tickets."

Helga Lyons
Junior
Kinesiology major

"I personally don't like cigarettes … Everyone I know I tell not to smoke … I think that it would be great, personally. But if people couldn't smoke at events like Extravaganja, that could defeat the purpose. If it's going to affect businesses, I don't think it's a good idea."

Louis Dumas
Junior
Biology major

"I feel that they should let events and businesses make their own rules. For Extravaganja, it would be affecting a tradition … To abandon it out of nowhere would be unfair."

By Nick Bush, Collegian Staff

Summer
Sustainability
Studies at UVM

Study in beautiful Vermont this summer. UVM's environmental expertise connects you with the innovative leaders and organizations you'll find only here. Gain hands-on farm experience with our Farmward Bound™ program. Explore emerging areas of environmental art. Learn about sustainable business practices, alternative and clean energy, and wildlife tracking from the state's foremost experts and innovators. Undergraduate and graduate courses are available.

Reasons for you to Think Summer U
- Online classes
- Transferable credits
- Four summer sessions
- Housing available
- Special interest programs
- Graduate on time
- Smaller class sizes

Register today and take advantage of the 15% Summer '10 Tuition Savings at uvm.edu/summer/umass.

Think Summer U

Catch up. Get ahead. Save 15%.
The University of Vermont
Summer University

THE BRYANT
GRADUATE PROGRAMS

The Bryant University Graduate School of Business prepares students for success in their chosen professions. As a graduate, you will join an impressive alumni community that includes industry leaders across the country and around the world.

The Bryant MBA One-Year Program
Full-time, day program for all majors
- No professional experience necessary
- Distinguish yourself in a competitive job market
- Gain hands-on experience with the Business Practicum

The Bryant MBA Two-Year Program
Part-time, evening program for professionals from any field
- Develop high-level business skills for long-term career success
- Enter and progress through the program with a supportive team
- Build your network while enhancing your resume

The Bryant Master of Professional Accountancy (MPAc)
Full-time, day program for accounting majors
- Meets the 150 hour requirement for CPA licensure
- Complete in Summer/Fall, Summer/Summer, Fall/Spring, or Spring/Summer
- More than 40 top global, national and regional accounting firms recruit at Bryant

The Bryant Master of Science in Taxation (MST)
Part-time, evening program for tax professionals
- Build an expertise in all areas of taxation
- Network with tax executives and industry professionals
- Flexible scheduling options

Learn More About What Bryant University Graduate School Has to Offer

www.bryant.edu/gradschool • 401-232-6230

Bryant University
Graduate School of Business
1150 Douglas Pike
Smithfield, Rhode Island

AACSB Accredited

This week in higher education: Suicides plague Cornell campus

By Ruby Cramer
The Miscellany News

Cornell witnesses three student suicides in the course of a single month

On Friday, March 12, third-year engineering student Matthew Zika was reported to have died after dropping from the suspension bridge over Cornell University's Fall Creek Gorge. Though Zika's body was not recovered until Sunday, Ithaca Police first responded to a 3:45 p.m. call on Friday from a motorist who reported spotting a person drop from the suspension bridge.

Though the apparent suicide is still being investigated by the Ithaca and Cornell University Police Departments, Zika's death is believed to be the third Gorge suicide in one month at the University and the sixth suicide in six months.

According to The Cornell Daily Sun, Friday's incident "immediately prompted a series of mass e-mails from the University and an aggressive mental-health campaign throughout the [following] weekend."

That week, the University stationed staff at bridges, heavily advertised its counseling services and sent staff to knock on the door of every dorm room on campus. "Student leaders also announced plans for events aimed at combating the somber mood on campus," reports the Sun.

Hamilton adopts a need-blind admissions policy, despite financial crisis

Admission to Hamilton College in Clinton, N.Y. will become "need-blind" starting this fall with the Class of 2014, announced the chairman of the College's Board of Trustees on March 8. The policy—which mandates that the College make admission decisions without considering an applicant's ability to pay—is one already in effect at other liberal arts schools; Amherst, Williams and Swarthmore Colleges all follow the policy, and President Catharine Bond Hill announced Vassar's move to need-blind in May 2007. Hamilton's choice to adopt this new system, however, comes at a strange time. Following last year's financial crisis, schools across the country were dealt a serious blow, and, as a result, many have put their need-blind policy on the chopping block.

On Feb. 16, Williams College announced that it would no longer extend its policy to international applicants. Of Hamilton's decision to go need-blind, Hamilton Dean of Admission and Financial Aid Monica Inzer said in a New York Times interview, "It might be a little risky right now. It's not always easy to do the right thing."

Drew University student arrested for stealing and selling valuable historic letters

Drew University freshman William John Scott was arrested on Sunday, March 14 for allegedly pilfering from University archives of famous and expensive letters written by 16th President of the United States Abraham Lincoln, founder of the United Methodist Church John Wesley and former first lady of the Republic of China Madame Chiang Kai-Shek. The New York Times reports that Scott—a political science major and defender on the Drew lacrosse team—worked part-time at the University's Archive Center, giving him access to the letters. According to prosecutors involved in the FBI case, Scott sold several of the letters for thousands of dollars, leaving others in a pile inside his dresser drawer.

On Sunday, Scott was returning on a bus with his lacrosse team from Spring Break and was arrested as soon as the vehicle pulled into the Madison, N.J. campus.

"He looked utterly surprised, like we were," said one of Scott's teammates to the Times. The next day, Drew's Chief Communications Officer Dave Muha told The Drew Acorn that the University was "very grateful to the FBI for their swift action."

Faculty vote 'no confidence' in president of Texas community college

The Dallas Morning News reported that on Tuesday, March 16, the faculty association at Mountain View College issued a 47-9 vote of "no confidence" with the school's president, Felix A. Zamora. To receive a vote of no confidence is rare at institutions of higher education and, when issued, is a symbolic message to a president to either review his or her leadership methods and policies, or, often, to resign.

Faculty members cited several reasons for the vote, the primary ones being Zamora's fostering of "a climate of fear and mistrust and his lack of respect for faculty by cutting positions while enrollment increased," reported the Morning News. In addition, Zamora has been accused of financial mismanagement, as well as making decisions without appropriate faculty consent.

UMASS AMHERST
United States Census 2010
IT'S IN OUR HANDS

What: The U.S. Census counts every resident in the United States, and is required by the Constitution to take place every ten years. Everyone is required to complete the census: undergraduates, graduate students, U.S. students, and international students, as well as graduating seniors and others who plan to leave the area at the end of the semester.

Why: The results determine how federal funds are allocated to states and to communities. The results affect college tuition grant and loan money, research done on campus by faculty and by students, the number of congressional representatives assigned to our state, and many critical services that affect college students.

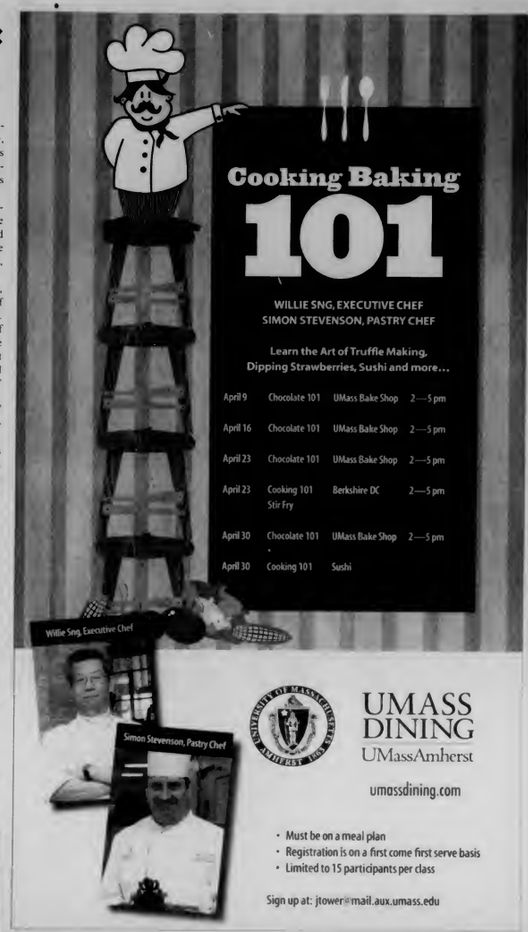
Where: People are counted where they live and sleep most of the year. You will receive a census questionnaire at your UMass address, either on campus or off campus, not at the address of your parents or home address.

How: If you live on campus, you will receive the census in your residence hall. If you live off campus, you will receive it in the mail.

When: UMass Amherst Census 2010 runs from March 29 to April 15.

UMass Amherst students will be available at the following locations to answer questions about the importance of filling out the census and who is eligible to do so, and to provide bilingual support in Chinese and Korean languages.



March 29 – April 1 (Monday – Thursday)
Campus Center Concourse: 9:30 a.m. – 2:30 p.m.
The Integrated Sciences and Engineering Library: 7 – 9 p.m.
Lincoln Apartments: 7 – 9 p.m. (Monday, March 29 only)
North Village Apartments: 7 – 9 p.m. (Tuesday, March 30 only)

April 12 – 15 (Monday – Thursday)
Campus Center Concourse: 9:30 a.m. – 2:30 p.m.
The W.E.B. Du Bois Library: 2 – 4 p.m. and from 9 – 11 p.m.

Historically, college students have low participation in the census. This year, make a difference in your future.

It's in your hands!

For more information, visit UMass Amherst Census 2010: http://www.umass.edu/umhome/census2010/

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, MARCH 25, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

How to sip wine like a professional

By Matthew Harrison
Collegian Staff

Although tasting wine is considered by some to be an art form, it requires minimal knowledge of fine wines and is easily done by even the most inexperienced wine drinker. A decanter, pictured above, is used to prepare wine for serving.

Wine offers a wealth of exciting tastes to experience, but not a lot of college students are as into it as they could be. It tends to be regarded as an expensive hobby that only the "upper class" enjoys, and it has a stigma of being snooty and overly complicated, requiring years of experience and knowledge to fully understand. The good news is anyone with taste buds and an open mind can enjoy wine.

The most important part of tasting wine is to use proper stemware. While you don't need a fancy glass for each different style of wine, you should have at least one basic wine glass. Look for something with a larger, rounder body for red wine, and a thinner glass with a longer stem for white wine. If you want to get serious about wine, invest in a decanter, or a large vessel to pour the wine into several hours before you plan to drink it. You'll also need a corkscrew. The "waiter's style" is actually easier to use and has less chance of damaging the cork than the "wing style" screws which have levers or arms that raise up.

After you've selected a bottle of wine which appeals to you, you need to pop the cork and pour the wine into either a decanter or glass. Red wines should be decanted for a few hours or at least be left sitting in a glass for a minimum of half an hour before drinking. The reason for this is that wine needs a lot of oxygen in order to fully "open up" and release all of its flavors. Decanting also helps soften the wines, removing some of the harsher and more tannic flavors. This step is extremely important, and a lot of inexperienced wine drinkers have said all wine tastes the same to them because they drink it immediately after pouring, which doesn't give them a chance to get all of the flavors. White wines don't need as much decanting, but they should still sit in the glass for at least half an hour.

Swirl the wine around in your glass a lot and look at its color and see if it looks watery or viscous to you. Swirling the wine also helps oxygen get into the wine, and it helps the alcohol evaporate which "carries" the aroma (also called the "nose" or the "bouquet") out of the glass. Stick your nose right into the glass and smell it several times. Think about which smells the wine reminds you of – you may think of strawberries, blackberries, leather, tobacco, wood, and even dirt, mushrooms and manure for certain types of reds.

Drink a little of the wine and keep it in your mouth. Swish it around like mouthwash and take a couple of short breaths to let some more air mix with the wine. Think about how it feels to you – does it feel rich and thick in your mouth, or does it feel thin and watery without much substance? Swallow the wine and focus on all of the flavors. You'll get a lot of the same flavors as the aromas, but you'll also find new flavors like black currants, apples, vanilla, oak and nuts. Try and describe the taste in terms of foods you've had that taste similar. Think about how long the "finish" of the wine lasted in your mouth – does the taste go away quickly, or does it linger for a while? Does the wine feel dry and tannic, or sweet and velvety?

Did you like the way it tasted and smelled? Was it too watery for you, or was it too intense? Was it too sweet or dry for you? Which foods would you link to drink the wine with? Don't worry about what wine critics or other people have said about the wine – what's important is what your individual palate thinks of it. Keep in mind which individual flavors you liked, and look for new wines which have similar characteristics.

Now that you know the basics of tasting and appreciating wine, get out there and try new wines as often as you can. Don't be afraid to get a bottle of something you've never heard of, and definitely don't go by price or ratings. You may even want to learn about the different wine producing regions of the world and find out which areas make wines you might like. Wine tasting is all about being open to new things and finding out what you like!

Cellar No. 8 is a wine producer from the historic Asti Winery in Sonoma County, California which only makes red wines: Cabernet Sauvignon, Merlot, Pinot Noir, and Zinfandel. I'll be tasting their 2008 Pinot Noir today, which was purchased from Whole Foods in Hadley for $13.

Pinot Noir grapes (French for "black pine") are most commonly found in the Burgundy region of France, but they're grown all over the world in places like Australia, Chile, South Africa, Italy and California. They're known for making light to medium body wines with flavors of black cherries, raspberries and currants, but they're also used in the production of Champagne and sparkling wine. A lighter bodied, fruitier style of Californian Pinot Noir wines has been increasingly gaining

See WINE TASTING on page 5

'Rent' brings seasons of love this weekend

By Matthew Robare
Collegian Staff

The UMass Theater Guild will be performing "Rent" tonight, tomorrow and Saturday at 8:00 pm in the Bowker Auditorium. Tickets are $6 for students and $10 general admission.

"Rent" is a musical about a group of young people living a Bohemian lifestyle in New York City in the late 1980s and how they cope with money problems, HIV/AIDS, love and friendship.

"One of the things that the directors and I agreed upon was that we do not want the UMass Theater Guild's production of the Broadway show, we want the UMass Theater Guild's production of 'Rent,'" said executive producer Dana Levy. "We worked very hard to make sure it's not the same thing. It's not Ben Sharton who is playing Roger playing Adam Pascal's Roger, it is Ben Sharton's Roger."

Levy emphasized that no songs have been cut and that everything is very straightforward. "It's very much the East Village in the 90s," she said. "I'm from New York so I'd be a little offended if we changed it that much."

"My technical directors– Rich Elsdon and Andy Ferlo– they designed the set, they built the set and it's beautiful," she said. For 'Out Tonight,' one of Mimi's songs, our choreographer requested a stripper pole, since Mimi is a stripper, and instead of having an arbitrary stripper pole on stage, it is a street sign that doubles as a stripper pole. It's little things like that they built a telephone pole that's Bell Atlantic because that's what they would have had. My favorite thing is the historical accuracy."

"It definitely captures the spirit of 'Rent,'" Levy said.

"Roger is in his mid-twenties, living in the East Village with his friend Mark and is a struggling musician," said Ben Sharton, who plays Roger. "Prior to the show he recently found out that he's HIV positive and his girlfriend committed suicide and he is now trying to come to grips with the fact that his days are, unfortunately, numbered, and so Roger's struggle throughout the show is to find that one song he'll be remembered for when he's gone."

"Traditionally, Roger has been sort of a downer, kind of depressed for the whole show. He's very jealous. So one of my goals in playing Roger is to keep all those necessary emotions there while still making him sympathetic. I think it can happen that the audience finds Roger to be a little grating, because he's just so depressed all the time," Sharton said.

"Rent" is Sharton's thirteenth production with the Theater Guild and he said that it is the seventh in which he has actually performed. He played Sweeney Todd last semester in the Guild's production of it. "I've been in the Guild now for five years," he said. "It's been incredible."

Darvin Hernandez plays Angel and Micheal McSweeney plays Collins.

"Angel is pretty much, I feel like, the backbone of 'Rent,'" Hernandez said. "He falls in love with Collins and he's this flamboyant character to who lives his life to the fullest. He knows he has AIDS, but I feel like that knowing that he perceives himself as this person who just needs to strive."

"Collins is an anarchist educator of philosophy," McSweeney said. "In 'Rent' he's sort of a wayward soul and also knows he has AIDS. He's trying to find something to give his life a bit more meaning and that's when he meets Angel. Angel is sort of that thing that makes him believe in life and to have that thirst for life again. That's how Collins grows and progresses throughout the show."

"Angel and I are actually both similar and different in many ways," Hernandez said. "I feel like I was able to capture Angel's role because I could

The musical 'Rent' focuses on major themes such as HIV/AIDS, love, and death. See it at Bowker Auditorium through Saturday.

See RENT on page 5

Players Lounge opens

By Lauren Spano
Collegian Correspondent

The wait is over. At long last, the place likely to become the University's premiere recreational offering is ready for action.

The new Players Lounge, located inside Union Billiards in the Student Union, has almost endless entertainment potential for just about any sort of gamer. Boasting six nine-foot billiards tables, six next-generation consoles with the viral gaming phenomenon Rock Band and air hockey, these only mark the very beginning of an impressive number of activities available at the new facility. What's more, usage of the Lounge will be totally free until 7 p.m for the first three days of its running, until Friday.

Tonight, from 7-10 p.m., the Players Lounge will be hosting a Rock Band Tournament, complete with prizes, raffles and a DJ. This is a monumental competition which will finally settle once and for all just who is the greatest of the great. If you think you have what it takes to win, or if you're just looking for a great – and probably hilarious – time, grab a few friends and head on over.

Friday night marks the official Grand Opening party, also from 7-10 p.m. This should be a fun event to start your evening. Food and drinks will be served throughout the night.

Public console gaming is obviously one of the major highlights, sure to draw in scores of students. A specific listing of the consoles includes two PlayStation 3s, two Xbox 360s, and two Wiis. Modern Warfare, Madden, Mario Kart, Wii Sports, Fight Night and Little Big Planet are just some of the games stocked so far. For anyone who is not familiar with these titles, all of them are at least two-player, and most of them are four-player.

Show up with your friends and never risk a boring week night again. Or, come along and turn strangers into friends over an intense battle in Modern Warfare (or customize Sack Boys and Girls together in Little Big Planet, if that's more your style).

For hardcore gamers, the Players Lounge will regularly be hosting leagues. Obviously, these commodities themselves are enough to draw in much of the university crowd. But, there's more.

The Players Lounge includes the aforementioned billiards tables, air hockey, darts, table tennis and hoop shoot. Poker tables, foosball, and pinball will also be eventually added.

Coming soon, Thursdays will be deemed "Thirsty Thursdays," perfect for students looking to start the weekend a little early. Also coming soon is "Ladies Night," exclusively for those aged 21 and over. The exact day for that event has not been settled yet.

On Saturdays and Sundays the Lounge will be available to rent for large groups.

Hours of operation are now 11 a.m. – 10 p.m. daily. Remember, for the first three days the Lounge is free – this is not an opportunity to be missed.

Lauren Spano can be reached at lspano@student.umass.edu.

The Players Lounge will have its grand opening this Friday night in the Student Union from 7-10 p.m. The lounge will feature several different gamin platforms as well as billiards and other games.

How to drink wine like a pro

WINE TASTING from page 4

popularity since the 2004 film "Sideways."

Even though a 2008 Pinot Noir is a very young wine which doesn't require a lot of decanting, I poured it into the decanter two hours before I tasted it. After I poured it into my glass, I noticed it had a beautiful bright ruby red color, and a similar thickness to grape juice – not too watery, not too thick.

The nose of the wine was very vibrant, fresh and berry-like without being the least bit fake smelling or candy-like. I detected strong hints of blackberries, raspberries and strawberries, with just a hint of oak. The nose was very fruity and sweet overall.

It felt similar to grape juice in my mouth. Strawberries were the dominant flavor, and I also tasted very sweet blackberries and a hint of oak. It wasn't the least bit dry in mouth, and it felt very velvety and sweet. Not too complex, but not boring either.

This wine would pair well with lighter meats like duck, pork and chicken. I don't think it would go well with red meat or rich foods like pasta. It would go very well with a green salad and Italian or balsamic vinaigrette dressing. This wine would pair nicely with a fruit salad for a delicious and fresh summer beverage.

I like to rate my wines based on a letter grade since I'm a college student and I understand what it means to get an F, C, and A+. Many wine critics use a 100-point scale, but since this scale doesn't start until 50 or 60, it can be a little misleading. Overall, I give this wine a B. It came to class, applied itself, and did well, but it didn't go the extra mile to really wow me and earn an A. It's very pleasant to drink without being too intense. It's affordable and would find a good home at the table with dinner.

If you'd like to learn more about wine and see a video review of this wine and several others that I've tasted, check them out at http://TheBottleReview.com, and of course, http://dailycollegian.com. Until next time, cheers!

Matthew Harrison can be reached at mharriso@student.umass.edu or matt@thebottlereview.com

Wine can smell like a wide variety of things to the drinker, such as strawberries, leather, and dirt. Different wines are typically paired with different foods in order to complement a meal.

'Rent' performed at Bowker

RENT from page 4

just put myself in the position of someone who does have AIDS. If they told me that I had AIDS and I only had two years to live, what would I do, what would my reaction be? How would I try and live my life to the fullest. That's what I brought to Angel."

"I guess what I bring to the role of Collins, I guess I can relate to someone looking for something special and trying to find meaning in life, especially at our age," McSweeney said. "You know we're about to enter the real world and we're trying to find ways to justify ourselves and our lives."

A full listing of cast and crew is available online at www.RENTUMass.com. "Rent" has three performances this week in Bowker. Tickets are available online, at the Fine Arts Center Box Office and at Bowker before the show.

Matthew Robare can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
for $10
On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

AMERICAN RED CROSS
UMASS MULLINS CENTER
BLOOD DRIVE
THURSDAY MARCH 25th
11 am – 4 pm
UMass Mullins Center
ALL PRESENTING DONORS WILL GET A BOSTON BRUINS "BLEED BLACK & GOLD" SHIRT!
For an appointment please call 1-800-922-4376 or visit RedCrossBlood.org
Positive ID Required.
MULLINS CENTER
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST
American Red Cross

Are you looking for a Job for next semester?
The Daily Collegian Graphics Department is hiring for advertising production in 2010!
• Flexible work schedule
• Valuable Experience
• Awesome people
Little to no experience in graphic design necessary!
Looking for undergrads with good computer skills, strong motivation, the ability to learn, and a keen eye.
Contact Amanda Joinson at Advertising@DailyCollegian.com for more information, or stop by The Collegian office in the Campus Center Basement

Open 'till 11pm everyday!
FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS

BEER * All beer prices plus deposit
Stella Artois 24 pk btl $22.99*
Miller Lite 30 pk can $20.49*
Bud & Bud Light 24 pk btl $16.99*
Sierra Nevada 12 pk btl $12.99*
Busch & Busch Light 20 pk btl $11.99*
Opa Opa Light Lager 12 pk btl $10.99*
Pabst Blue Ribbon 19 pk can $9.99*
Molson 12 pk btl $9.99*
Miller High Life 18 pk btl $9.99*

LIQUOR
Lagavulin 16yr 750 ml $59.99
Patron Anejo 750 ml $52.99
Dewars White Label Scotch 1.0 L $25.99
Wild Turkey 101 Proof 750 ml $20.99
Svedka Vodka 1.75 L $19.99
Admiral Nelsons Spiced Rum 1.75 L $17.99
Johnnie Walker Red Label 750 ml $20.99
Captain Morgan Spiced Rum 750 ml $16.99

WINE All wine 750 ml except where noted
Black Box 3.0 lt All Varieties $19.99
Beglo Vineyards Phantom Red Blend $18.99
Moon Dance Cellars Cabernet Sauvignon $14.99
Layer Cake Malbec $13.99
The Velvet Devil Merlot $10.99
Blackstone Merlot $10.99
Mark West Pinot Noir $10.99
Santi Pinot Grigio $10.99
Milbrandt Vineyards Riesling $10.99
Castle Rock Cabernet Sauvignon $9.99
Callia Alta Malbec $8.99

584-8174
333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

UMASS 5K DASH & DINE FOR RELIEF
WALK & RUN TO BENEFIT HAITI
Runners/Walkers/Teams
Prizes awarded by age/gender/team
Wheelchairs and strollers welcome
Authentic Haitian Lunch and Health Fair
Public Welcome
Register online by Thurs., March 25, 2010 at www.umassdining.com
Race day registration also available
$10 for meal plan members with 1 meal donated to Haiti Relief Efforts
$25 for public/non-meal plan members with $5 donated to Haiti Relief Efforts
Lunch and t-shirt included in entry fees
Check in begins at 9:00 am at Haigis Mall
Race begins at 11 am
Prizes award at noon
Authentic Haitian Lunch and Health Fair to follow
Nutrition
UMASS DINING UMass
www.umassdining.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, MARCH 25, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
-Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Lackluster on conservation

Tim Cheplick

The University of Massachusetts long ago decided global climate change and our own local emissions are an important issue to address.

They've been quantifying emissions and have even finished a document earlier this year called the "Climate Action Plan" which outlines the efforts, plans and goals of the University in lowering greenhouse gas emissions. One such area discussed in the report is energy conservation, a key to lowering emissions.

But the University can talk about energy conservation as much as they like, and they can implement countless measures to reduce use (they claim 40 individual measures), but I still see foolish waste everywhere I look.

Using my own research through the UMass website, the campus claims to have reduced electricity consumption by 9 percent since 2002. If you assume the last available data for consumption in a year is 2009, this is only a 1.29 percent annual decrease. Respectable, but not enough. Committee after committee will not solve the problem.

I've been in the Franklin DC in the middle of the day for lunch and above me are rows upon rows of light bulbs. They add the most insignificant amount of light to a room that's already lit with sunlight. Certainly there's a switch somewhere someone can flip. I volunteer to be that person.

The ground floors of many dorm buildings have small televisions, turned on 24/7. I will argue that these are completely unnecessary – there are flyers for every known event everywhere on campus, as well as online. Plus, no one ever looks at those TVs, anyway.

I can only live in one room at a time, but I'm writing about what I know. Even on the coldest days in the winter, my room was so hot that the windows had to be open. Clearly, this is wasted energy, and to my discomfort as well. I've heard others similarly complain.

The more you look, the more places you'll see to save. The university should set a good example and make energy conservation a part of everyday life on campus.

Of course, my dear reader, you may point out that the problem is really every individual person on campus – the students, namely. You are correct, in part, but you should recognize that no amount of education in the form of posters made by the Eco-Reps, or the little signs posted in your room next to the door will make a significant difference.

The University needs to foster participation in energy conservation and make it hands-on, and perhaps mandatory. UMass can sponsor competitions between floors or buildings for efficiency like other campuses have already done. Most importantly, they can provide strong incentives.

Most students don't care enough about reducing energy use, especially when they feel it intrudes on their daily life. Students need solid incentives to use less energy.

Fridges are big energy hogs in the dorm room – so give us an incentive not to have one. Cars on campus are polluting and take up a lot of space – so give us an incentive not to bring one to UMass.

The University needs to foster participation in energy conservation and make it hands-on, and perhaps mandatory.

Though the University's electricity no longer comes from coal as of Fall 2009, it still comes from a fossil fuel of which there is a finite amount, and which still releases greenhouse gases when burned – natural gas.

Energy conservation can play a significant role in reducing our usage, thus lowering emissions of global warming-causing carbon dioxide and methane, and at the same time saving the university money. $38 million goes to paying for energy every year at UMass (according to the campus' Climate Action Plan). The potential for savings is huge. Remember that we are the ones paying for it.

While it is all well and good for the university to be striving for carbon neutrality by 2050, there are ridiculously simple acts that can be done immediately, with little effort, and that can achieve big results. Give the student body real incentives to conserve, and let everyone enjoy the benefits.

Tim Cheplick is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at tcheplic@student.umass.edu

Evaluating the override

Shane Cronin

Most of the voters I spoke to outside of the Bangs Community Center (behind Starbucks and adjacent Rao's) on Tuesday supported the Prop 2 1/2 Override on the ballot in Amherst this spring. The override, which will allow the town to levy an additional $1.68 million in real estate and property taxes, will be the third in the town's history. The most recent attempt at a similar tax increase failed in 2007 by a little less than 300 votes. Tuesday's override vote passed by roughly 900.

Every proponent of the measure I talked to cited funding concerns for Amherst public schools – many of whom were parents of students who attend them. In the last three years, 33 (more than one in four) high school teaching positions were cut from the budget. From 2008 to 2010, Amherst made $7 million in budgetary cuts in total. One mother stressed this point, arguing that the town demonstrated fiscal responsibility by doing so.

Rick Hood, elected Tuesday to one of Amherst's two open seats on the school committee, was in favor of the override measure. "We really need the money," he told me, while holding a "Vote Yes for Amherst" placard on the cold and rainy Tuesday morning outside Bank of America.

The override will roughly cost homeowners an extra $11-22 per month in taxes depending on the value of their property, which is a pittance in the opinion of many of the "yes" voters. Some of those opposed to the ballot initiative were uncertain how they would manage the additional $134-$300 annual increase, however. One voter said she hesitantly voted in favor of the override because of her friends who work at the library who could be adversely affected without it. But she admitted she couldn't afford it. Her only income is social security, and she pays her current real estate taxes with her dwindling savings.

Opponents of the measure argue that Amherst spends too much money on its school system as it stands. Nomoreoverrides.com cites the nearby town of Northampton as testament to this.

"Northampton has a comparable school population [to Amherst]... Special education costs for the elementary schools in Amherst increased $1.6m in the period 2000-2009 but the special education population increased by only one student, from 233 to 234."

The website notes that the school committee has hired a consultant to evaluate special education costs; however, the vote took place prior to its completion.

Voters should demand what is known as a "sunset" provision when asked to support a tax increase.

Generally, I am opposed to property tax levies. All too often in Massachusetts and throughout our country, our mayors, city councilors and other officials with budgetary duties misappropriate funds or are guilty of outright fiduciary malfeasance.

Instead of resorting to wage and hiring freezes or pension plan overhauls, town leaders tax and spend egregiously. But that does not appear to be the case in Amherst.

Amherst public school teachers agreed, contingent upon the override passing, to a salary "giveback" equivalent to $1000 per educator. Also, the community will shutter Mark's Meadow Elementary School at the close of the school year. Mr. Hood says this is a combination of lack of enrollment and budget cuts.

Various committees have evaporated in the wake of monetary shortfall as well. Although several attempts have been made in recent years at a property tax increase, only two have passed. I would feel differently about the override if the town frequently utilized this method to finance its sustainability.

Had the override not been approved, Amherst would be forced to cut library hours, staff and its book budget. More teachers would be laid off in addition to the 51 that were last year.

Elective classes and extracurricular activities would also be cut.

Unfortunately local aid allocated by the state is being cut across the board due to the tough economic climate. Massachusetts upped its five percent sales tax last year in order to generate an estimated $750 million annually. Municipalities don't have sales taxes to raise capital.

My reservation about increasing taxes during the hard times is that they are seldom decreased during the good times. Voters should demand what is known as a "sunset" provision when asked to support a tax increase.

Essentially, a sunset provision on a law is an expiration date.

For reasons I have stated above, those in power do not often champion them. This tax increase will only be revoked by the means it was enacted: ballot initiative. At a minimum, Amherst residents should be guaranteed that their property tax rates will remain steady into the reasonably distant future.

Shane Cronin is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at scronin@student.umass.edu.

Lend us your letters! editorial@daily-collegian.com

Fed/Up? Ed/Op.
editorial@dailycollegian.com

Every student's challenge with a troublesome SPIRE

Amanda Joinson

Most simply stated, I have a problem with class registration. As you all may know, registration for Fall 2010 classes is around the corner and although the convenient system of having a shopping cart is in place, there are still problems with the process.

The day of class registration is always frustrating. Students' 8 a.m. registration time leaves them no longer nestled all snug in their beds because they worry about not getting into the classes they had hand chosen with care the night before. They rush to their computers still in a daze hoping all their sections will be there. The suspense of what will be available kills, as they scramble onto SPIRE only to find half of their requirements sitting in their shopping carts, waiting to be checked out, are filled.

For the available classes they have chosen, they can only hope that all prerequisites are waived. Enrolled in half the classes they want to take, they must look for classes that may not meet any requirements or at the very least, are less appealing. Students type in a bunch of random numbers that are written haphazardly on a napkin only to enroll in classes that RateMyProfessor.com simply states are "completely ridiculous" or "really painful."

Frustrated to the point of no return so early in the morning they give up after accepting that the only section of their last major requirement is at 8 a.m. on Monday and Wednesday with a three hour lab on Tuesday nights, and there is nothing they can do to change it.

The registration process needs altering, leaving everything to chance and waiting until fall to beg and plead to the professor at the end of class should not be required for at least one class each semester.

Registration leaves many students in a unique predicament, especially when classes are offered early in the morning or in the same time slot.

Having to wake up for an 8 a.m. when the rest of your classes are after 1 p.m. is not favorable, and I'm not even talking about general education requirements.

Upper-level courses are being offered at this outrageous time in the morning. Whose idea was that? They force us to wake up ridiculously early only to fall asleep in class and stumble home back to bed.

Another little problem is when all the classes that are supposed to be taken during your first semester sophomore year or last semester senior year are offered at the same time as all the other classes that you need to take. I cannot physically be at the 11:15 a.m. meeting of Journalism 300, Journalism 360 and Psychology 305. Three requirements at one time leads to another dilemma, but there are bigger problems.

The schedules we so carefully select never work out and it is not the fault of SPIRE for the first time in history. This time, it simply falls in the hands of the University. The UMass budget, in a shaky place, leaves us all unable to get into the classes that are needed to graduate on time because there may be fewer sections being offered to the same amount – if not more – students.

I understand that only a limited amount of sections can be offered, but if there is more demand for the class, the class enrollment size needs to be increased.

The registration process needs altering.

Leaving everything to chance and waiting until fall to beg and plead to the professor at the end of class should not be required for at least one class each semester.

Sometimes, the classes a student wants are not even available.

For example, there are two parts to some classes, an introductory class and an advanced class.

Well, most introductory classes are offered all year long while, for some reason, the advanced courses are only offered in the spring. What happens to the students that took the introductory class in the spring and now cannot take the advanced course until the following spring? They will most likely forget the basic concepts and processes needed in the advanced class. Not to mention, what if they are graduating after the fall semester?

No, because the university has a completely ridiculous system in choosing what classes will be offered, you cannot graduate on time? There's a big problem, but we can only hope that after meeting with advisors we still have a chance.

Registration will still make us all quite berserk, but all we can do is dream that UMass will implement something that works for a broader range of students, offering more seats and more courses every semester.

Amanda Joinson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at ajoinson@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

The Minutemen earned their first victory of the season Wednesday afternoon, behind 19 hits and 14 runs, while leaving five runners on base. UMass takes on Saint Joseph's Friday afternoon.

Misho impressive in bullpen, starters still up in the air for UM said. "It's just the first game he's started, but it's a good way to get going for him. We think he can be a good starting pitcher for us, it just remains to be seen."

PITCHERS from page 10

Other probable starters include junior Nick Serino, senior Jared Freni, and senior Mike Gedman.

Oakley believes he will factor in with that trio.

"I'm still getting more comfortable on the mound," Oakley said. "It's just my second collegiate start, so I look to be better next time."

The beginning of the game provided UMass with a cushioned lead, as the Minutemen pushed seven runs across within the first two innings.

The good start was important for UMass. However, the bullpen proceeded to relinquish five runs down the stretch. If not for the 14 runs, UMass could have experienced another heart-breaker.

"I thought they should've solidified it more. We got behind hitters a little bit and created situations that probably shouldn't have happened," Stone said. "We got ourselves in trouble, and I don't think we should've given up the runs we did at the end of the ballgame. Our relievers got behind in the count a few times, and I expect more but it's a tough day to pitch and play defense."

The highlight of the bullpen's performance proved to be sophomore Glen Misho, who tossed two scoreless innings without giving up a hit or a walk.

The Minutemen committed three errors in the infield as well, going against the Minutemen's creed of "pitching and defense."

"It's indicative of the type of day it was. It was a tough day to play," Stone said. "We have to adjust to conditions, handle the wind and the cold and for the most part, we made pretty good plays."

UMass' next game at home comes on Tues., March 30, when it hosts Holy Cross at 3 p.m.

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

Rematch of A-10 seminfinals

UMASS from page 10

A-10 game we've been a part of has been a tough game from start to finish."

Going into the A-10 schedule, UMass has competed against top-ranked opponents in No. 1 Northwestern, No. 12 New Hampshire and No. 7 Boston University.

"We try to stimulate those [games] in practices. We know the little things make a big difference, and we hope the experience will help us," Venechanos said.

In draw controls, UMass has a 106-87 edge over GW. The Minutewomen also lead in goals scored (85-76) and in cleared ball percentage by a mere .053. The Colonials have the edge in groundballs (151-109) and caused turnovers (62-57).

A key matchup for the game is between UMass midfielder Jesse O'Donnell and GW attacker Megan Seidman, who both have twenty goals over the course of the season.

Despite this being the third contest of a five-game road trip for the Minutewomen, Venechanos is not worried about how the team might be feeling from it.

"We do a lot of bonding on the road trips, and we didn't have any road trips in the beginning of the season," Venechanos said.

Faceoff is set for 4 p.m. at Mount Vernon Field.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu.

Winning Atlantic 10 games will help Venechanos and Co.

A-10 from page 10

have comfort that experiences last season helped us get to the A-10 tournament, and right now, we're just trying to play well and do the same thing."

With a strong out-of-conference schedule in its first nine games of this season, UMass faced difficulties. The Minutewomen suffered tough losses against teams such as five-time defending national champion Northwestern, then-No. 10 Boston University, and then-No. 19 New Hampshire.

Now, UMass gets an opportunity to take advantage in their own conference, which has struggled overall, with no A-10 teams holding an above .500 record. The best records in the conference belong to La Salle and St. Bonaventure, which are both 4-4 this season. Other than the National Lacrosse Conference, the A-10 is the only conference in Division I women's lacrosse which fails to have a team with a winning record at the moment.

George Washington and Richmond, the two teams the Minutewomen face this weekend, haven't had any more out-of-conference success than UMass. The Spiders are tied with the Minutewomen with a 3-4 record, while the Colonials sit in the basement of the A-10 along with Saint Joseph's at a league-worst 2-7.

Richmond is ranked the highest of any A-10 team in the LAX Power computer poll at No. 37. UMass, however, is right behind the Spiders at No. 38. George Washington is the second-lowest ranked team in the conference, just ahead of the Hawks at No. 63.

"The majority of the coaches know how important the A-10 schedule is, so playing teams that have been in the NCAA tournament is challenging," Venechanos said of the conference's struggles. "You hope those games are going to put you in a better position for the A-10 tournament. I think that's probably what the mindset is, but the records are also thrown out the window when we start A-10 play."

Though the Minutewomen have had offensive troubles in their last six games, in which they've failed to reach double digits in scoring, so has the majority of the A-10. UMass is fifth in the conference with 9.62 goals per game, not far behind league-leading Duquesne, which averages 12.94. The three teams behind the Minutewomen (Temple, GW, and Saint Joseph's) all average fewer than nine goals per game.

UMass didn't fare much better last season, when it finished the spring fifth in the A-10 in scoring at 11.05 goals per game. In conference play, however, the Minutewomen offense performed better, to the tune of over 14 goals per game, helping them claim the A-10 regular season title.

"Our attack has a lot of talent, and we haven't reached our potential yet, without a doubt," Venechanos said of her offense this year. "We have a lot of new faces on attack and we're still trying to get used to each other. After losing 30 to 40 percent of our attack, it takes some time to find new replacements. We're still a work in progress, and I'm hoping we continue to grow and reach our plateau towards the end of the A-10 conference."

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Jackie Lyons helped UMass win the A-10 tournament in 2009.

Gedman and Donato combine for nine RBIs, face Hawks Fri.

GEDMAN from page 10

striking out four Hawk batters.

"It feels real good to be home in front of the fans and family," Oakley said. "I just feel real confident on the mound, throwing strikes and getting ahead of hitters."

It was the first time in three games that a UMass starter went five innings. In the last three games entering Wednesday, the starters had allowed a total of 17 runs, all of which were earned.

"That's what's kind of been our downfall so far this year, and once that gets around, I feel like we're going to get a lot of wins," Oakley said.

"It's good to get that winning feeling heading into Saint Joseph's," Gedman said. "It's big for us this weekend when we start [Atlantic 10] play."

The Minutemen will now travel to Saint Joseph's for a three-game series with the Hawks beginning on Friday. It will begin a stretch of nine conference matchups in 12 games, with two additional three-game series against Charlotte and Richmond.

"We've got to start playing real well on a consistent basis," Stone said. "It's so important that you get off to a good start in the league."

SJU is 3-10 on the season entering Wednesday. Similarly to UMass, the Hawks struggled to begin the season, losing their first six games. However, they abruptly ended that streak by scoring a record 35 runs against New Mexico State on March 7th. Their other two wins have come in their last four games.

Last season, the Minutemen swept the Hawks in a three-game series at UMass from April 17th to 19th.

Pete Vasquez can be reached at pvasquez@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

UMass coach Mike Stone congratulates junior Matt Gedman as he rounds the bases on a home run. Gedman finished the day with a home run, two doubles and four runs scored.

WANT TO WRITE FOR SPORTS?
Contact Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard at sports@dailycollegian.com

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St • 413-253-7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
PROVIDING THE BEST OFF CAMPUS LIVING EXPERIENCE
24 HOUR MAINTENANCE
SAFE APARTMENTS
FRIENDLY STAFF
TWO GREAT LOCATIONS:
AMHERST CENTER AND HOBART LANE
WE START SHOWING APARTMENTS FEB. 3rd FROM 11:30AM – 4:30PM M-F

BU SUMMER '10
Learn. Explore. Discover.
This summer, experience one of the world's top-ranked universities—in one of the nation's great college towns. Boston University Summer Term has 700 courses to choose from, in over 70 subjects. Study with award-winning faculty. Fulfill your academic goals. And fall in ❤ with Boston.
Learn more at bu.edu/summer.
Summer 1: May 18-June 25
Summer 2: June 28-August 6
Boston University Summer Term
BOSTON UNIVERSITY
An equal opportunity, affirmative action institution

KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
www.kaminsrealestate.com
PRESIDENTIAL APTS.
PERRY APTS.
177 N. PLEASANT STREET
LANTERN COURT APTS.
MILL HOLLOW
CRESTVIEW APTS.
COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS.
400 AMITY STREET 253-2515 AMHERST

Desire for volleyball at Illinois goes unmet

By Emily Bayci
The Daily Illini

More than four years ago, senior Emmett Culligan couldn't decide where he wanted to go to college.

He had a passion for sports and was excellent at volleyball, so he wanted to continue playing. However, in a nation with only 23 Division I male volleyball teams, the pickings were slim. He was offered scholarships, but none of the schools had strong academic programs.

Fast forward to today, and the molecular and cellular biology major who wants to be a doctor is a star player of the top-ranked male club volleyball team in the country. But there's one thing he would love more than anything else: the opportunity to play Division I volleyball at the University of Illinois.

"I would definitely play here if it was offered," Culligan said. "I already live and breathe volleyball, and then I would finally get the combination of academics and sports."

However, the possibilities for Culligan's dream to come true are slim. According to the University, the likelihood for an additional men's varsity sport at Illinois in the near future is nearly impossible.

"Right now adding another varsity men's sport is kind of a dead issue, at least on the back burner," said Kent Brown, assistant athletic director and head of media relations. "I mean, never say never, but with the current setup, it is just not feasible for any men's sport to be added to our roster."

Adding another men's sport isn't on the agenda because of both the economic climate and the need for gender equality between sports. Since Title IX was passed in 1972, college programs have worked on creating setups with equal opportunities for males and females. Under the law, everything is supposed to be comparable: treatment, number of participants, practice facilities and more.

Currently, out of 88 NCAA Championships, 41 are for men, 44 for women and three are co-ed. However, due to sports with large rosters, universities still struggle to meet the status quo.

If the University does add another varsity sport in the near future, it would be a women's sport.

"When you look at sports like football, it is impossible to find a female sport with that many participants," Brown said. "We have looked into a variety of new sports for females, including equestrian, rowing, bowling, field hockey, lacrosse and sand volleyball."

Illinois has made several structural changes to varsity sports in the past 17 years.

In 1993, men's swimming and diving, along with fencing, were cut from the program. Women's soccer entered the scene in 1996, and softball began in 2000.

The male sports had to be cut in order to abide by Title IX laws, which former men's swimming and diving coach Don Sammons regrets.

"It came pretty sudden to us that they cut the team," Sammons said. "I think it was terrible because these young men were now denied the opportunity to grow from the experiences of a varsity sport. Ron Guenther said that he hopes to reinstate it some day, and I hope it happens soon."

The swimming and diving team did not have the most successful program history, but the fencing team had several national titles, Brown said.

"In cutting sports and adding sports we look more at the numbers and facilities than the team's performance," Brown said.

Brown said the University also attempts to not cut any benefits available to varsity athletes, who are provided with a variety of services that aren't available to those who play club sports.

Foremost among them is that varsity sports offer scholarship aid to many athletes and academic support through the Irwin Academic Center. As part of scholarship aid for football, volleyball and men's and women's basketball, athletes have access to one meal a day at the Varsity Room.

The sports medicine staff provides medical care, and student-athletes have access to certain strength and conditioning programs and weight rooms.

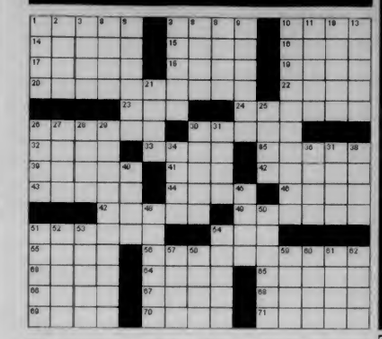
Brown said that these services are essential to a student-athlete's experience at the university.

In making decisions, officials analyze what other colleges are doing. Brown said currently men's gymnastics and wrestling are being cut at many universities. He added Illinois strongly hopes to not cut another sport but still must observe the current trends.

At Illinois, the D-I club hockey team has had a history of recent success, winning the ACHA title in 2008 and consistently advancing deep into the postseason. Still, the team simply can't offer the benefits that other Division I schools offer, such as Wisconsin, Minnesota and Michigan State in the Big Ten.

"When we don't have money or services to offer athletes, it's hard for us to get any good recruits," senior hockey player JJ Heredia said.

Brown said that the athletic department has recognized successful club sports and their desire to become Division I varsity programs, but it is just not feasible during this current economic situation.



"It is what it is," Brown said. "We're not going to be adding any sports any time soon. The sports that we have are enough for us all to handle."

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
We like the things you whisper in our ear...

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Crystal-lined stone
6. Offensively malodorous
10. Drift
14. Colorado resort
15. Coastal raptor
16. Noboin
17. Not now
18. Earl Grey and orange pekoe
19. Speaker's platform
20. Promising
22. They come from hens
23. Atlantic food fish
24. Ancient ascetic
26. Giggles
30. Precipitous
32. Backside
33. Small
35. Malicious burning
39. Fragrance
41. Tear
42. Depart
43. III
44. False god
46. Once again
47. Increase
49. Bovine mammaries
51. Gather on the surface, chemically
54. African antelope
55. Rodents
56. Betrothal
63. Decorative case
64. Defeat disastrously
65. Not at any time
66. Canvas dwelling
67. Indolent
68. Nigerian monetary unit
69. Bitter
70. Cobras
71. A mixture of 2 or more metals

DOWN
1. Celebration
2. Jacob's brother
3. Chooses
4. Profound
5. Make wealthy
6. Malodorous
7. Chocolate cookie
8. A Central American sloth
9. Tenant
10. Throughout far and wide
11. Maxim
12. Pretend
13. Piece of armor for a thigh
21. Price
25. Secure against leakage
26. Not first
27. Part of a foot
28. ___-friendly
29. Unselfishness
30. Malicious
31. Erratum
34. Colored part of an eye
36. Rational
37. Not under
38. Current event information
40. Rip
45. Breathing organ
48. European peninsula
50. Chaperone
51. Mountain crest
52. Old hat
53. Bitten
54. Movable fence barriers
57. Gestures of acceptance
58. Swallow
59. Breakfast or supper
60. Wickedness
61. A Roman emperor
62. In a cafeteria, what food is served on

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IS HIRING A DISTRIBUTION MANAGER
We are looking for someone to be responsible for managing delivery in the early morning hours.
If you think this job is right for you stop by 113 Campus Center Basement, Call 413.545.3500 or E-Mail thecollegian@gmail.com

LA PIAZZA
Sundays Open at NOON
Best Deals in Town!!
ALL CALZONES $4.99
ALL 12" SUBS $4.99
ALL SALADS $4.99
ALL ENTREES $5.99
10" CHEESE PIZZA $4.99
Each X-Tra Topping .75
12" CHEESE PIZZA $5.99
Each X-Tra Topping $1
16" CHEESE PIZZA $8.99
Each X-Tra Topping $1.25
16" CHEESE PIZZA + 10 WINGS (BONE) $11.50
16" CHEESE PIZZA + 1/2lb WINGS (BONELESS) $11.50
OCMP Free Delivery
(413) 253-5444
www.lapiazzarestorante.us

"Club Nights" at the MONKEY BAR
Thurs. 3/25 DJ BIGGZ
He's Back Again with a Spring Break SUNTAN
Top 40, Dance, Mash-Ups & Techno
Fri. 3/26 Johnnie McKnight
Party... Guest DJ
Making it happen, All Night Long
Sat. 3/27 Guest DJ
Tons of Specials and a Spring Break Suntan Contest!
Tues. 3/30 Techno Tuesday
HOTT Sizzle
Coming out with a Fresh Techno Set
Drink Specials...Rolling Rock Raffle
Two Free Passes to Sugarloaf
413-258-1600
52 North Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
www.mymonkeybar.com
21+

WHAT'S ON TAP AT THE AMHERST BREWING COMPANY?
Every Thursday
JOHN SHELDON'S MASTERS OF THE STRATOCASTER
DOWNSTAIRS 9 PM - 12 AM
Every Tuesday
LOST IN HD
UPSTAIRS ON THE BIG SCREEN
Sunday April 4th
EASTER SUNDAY BRUNCH 10:00 AM-3:00 PM
OUR PATIO IS OPEN ON NICE DAYS!
Monday April 5th
AMHERST JAZZ ORCHESTRA
DOWNSTAIRS 8:30 PM -11 PM
Event updated on ABC events on facebook
BOOK YOUR GRADUATION PARTY NOW!
24 N. PLEASANT AMHERST MA
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

INTERESTED IN GETTING BUSINESS EXPERIENCE?
THE COLLEGIAN IS HIRING A NEW BUSINESS MANAGER FOR 2010-2011.
APPLICATIONS ARE AVAILABLE AT 113 CAMPUS CENTER.
DUE FRIDAY, MARCH 26TH. BY 5 PM.
TO LEARN MORE ABOUT THE POSITION E-MAIL DJETTE@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM OR CALL 413.545.3500

You Ain't Got the Plumbs

	2					5
		8		1	7
7			5		8
		6	8	2				4
				6	9
5								3
		9		7	4			2
2	6			5			1

SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

"That's it," thought Homeless Ted, "climb that ladder..."

*Rides to all airports, train and bus stations
*Private rides with immediate pick-up
*Rides to and from parties
*Point to point transportaion
*Shared rides
*Affordable fares
*Mummingual staff
(413) 306-8298

ENTER TO WIN 2 CARRIE UNDERWOOD TICKETS
Drawing on March 25
MONDAY - SATURDAY
Happy Hour:
1/2 Price Appetizers 9:30 - Close
EVERY THURSDAY:
Promo & Trivia Night
EVERYDAY:
$1.00 Drafts and $5 Movie Tickets!*
21ST BIRTHDAY:
Free Entree or Small Pizza with ID*
Hampshire Mall
Across from Cinemark
413-549-0077
FREE Delivery
ARIZONA PIZZA

amherst cinema
Fri Mar 26 - Thu Apr 1
GREENBERG
2:30 5:00 7:30 10:00 +12:00am Sat & Sun
The Secret of Kells
2:15* 4:15 (5:15 Sun) 7:00* 9:15
+11:45am Sat & Sun *NO 2:15 7:00 Sun
AJAMI
4:30 (4:00 Wed) 7:15* 9:45
2:00 (1:30 Wed)
+11:30am Sat & Sun *NO 7:15 Wed
28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst
www.amherstcinema.org
(413) 253-2547
PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri Mar 26 - Thu Apr 1
ART OF THE STEAL 4:15 7:00 +10:00am Wed
Ghost Writer
4:30 7:15 10:00
+ 1:45 Sat & Sun + 10:30 1:45 Wed
CRAZY HEART
9:30 +1:30 Sat, Sun & Wed
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasantstheater.org
(413) 584-5848

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
You have not heard the music of angels until you have listened to the 1986 "Cobra" movie soundtrack.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Go to Best Buy and buy a new computer keyboard. Your roommate will pay you for it after their extensive apology.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
That scone you just ate didn't belong to you. You have been messing around with the danish of Debra Messing.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Your frequent dreams of one man assaults and explosions should be quelled with the release of Stallone's new flick.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Stay away from Dr. Seuss' wenis. We really mean this.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
If you are going to have dirty day dreams then please refrain from thinking about Chumlee from "Pawn Stars."

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Your recent bank account shows how misplaced your priorities are. I mean, fifty bucks at a store called "Condoms Galore!"

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
You are not the only one that just discovered that the Tostitos symbol is two people eating chips and salsa.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Maybe it is time to censor a bit of your Facebook account. Your likes have come to include "dubbing baby seals".

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Why aren't we all this sing song all the day long?

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
When you open the box, you will make a monumental decision: deal or no deal.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
St. Patty's day has just been extended indefinitely in an attempt to manipulate space and time. For science!

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Full Time Summer Employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $11.50/hour. The job description and application are available at the Housing Assigment Office, 235 Whitmore and is due April 2nd.

Bartenders needed for FT/PT positions. No experience required. Earn $20-$70 per hour. Call us at 617-849-8074

Fall 2010 internships with the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn 12 undergraduate credits. No experience necessary and will provide training! Contact us at 413-545-1995 or stop by at 922 Campus Center.

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

Hobart Condos 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors, study in basement. Cable & Phone in all bedrooms & study. NOW SHOWING for June & September. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 413-253-7879

TUTORING SERVICES

Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats, GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 Jboid42@yahoo.com

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

SERVICES

Have too much fun on spring break? Get tested. Get Birth Control & EC. 27 Pray St. Amherst, behind Bertucci's. Walk-ins welcome! Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday. 413-548-9992 or www.tapestryhealth.org

MISCELLANEOUS

Looking for a business opportunity that allows you to not only market services people use everyday, but the services of the future too? This opportunity provides outstanding earning potential with ongoing training and support. You are in business for yourself but never by yourself. Stop imagining and start living. ACN Independent Representative, William Carey 774-232-8604 wmc7771@gmail.com http://4incomefromhome.acnrep.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTHURSDAY

THURSDAY, MARCH 25, 2010 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Freshman outfielder Rich Graf crosses home plate in the Minutemen's victory over the Hawks. Graf increased UMass' lead to 8-0 with a double in the third inning.

Minutemen register first victory of season

By Pete Vasquez
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team rolled to its first win of the season with a decisive victory in its home opener over Hartford, 14-6, on Wednesday afternoon.

The Minutemen (1-9) scored seven runs in the first two innings to put them in control early, and proceeded to score in every inning until the sixth. They completed their scoring barrage by getting at least one hit in each inning.

"It feels great to get on the right side of it," UMass coach Mike Stone said, after his team snapped a nine-game losing streak. "I was excited about what our little guys did today. They set the tone, making a lot of things happen."

Stone referred to Ryan Cusick and Eric Fredette, the first two hitters in the lineup, as well as Corey Volpicelli and Rich Graef, the number eight and nine hitters. The four were responsible for eight of the Minutemen's 14 runs scored. Cusick and Fredette also added stolen bases, an area which, coming into the game, was not regularly featured in the offensive game plan.

"I love playing that type of ball game where you're stealing and creating havoc on the bases," Stone said. "We did that early, set the tone, and took charge of the game. It's something we hadn't done in the nine games before, and I thought it was important that we got things going in that regard."

Shortstop Matt Gedman led the offense, going 4-for-4 with five runs batted in, including a two-run home run in the bottom of the fourth inning.

"I was just looking for pitches to hit," Gedman said. "It's different coming back after some of the pitches we saw out in Oklahoma and William and Mary. It's good to be at home and seeing the ball well."

Ten games into the season, Gedman leads the team in most offensive categories with a .463 batting average, 19 hits, two home runs, five doubles, nine runs batted in, eight runs scored, and a .732 slugging percentage.

"Matt's swinging the bat well. I'm proud of him," Stone said. "We moved him up to the three hole. Sunday he had four hits, [and] he's really coming into his own and it's good to see."

Outfielder Mike Donato also added a home run in the eighth inning to put the finishing touch on the offensive showcase, finishing with four runs batted in."We scored 13 runs Sunday and 14 today, and when you do that, hitters start feeling good about themselves," Stone said.

Isaac Oakley pitched five effective innings to claim the victory, allowing only one earned run on four hits while

See OAKLEY on page 7

Pitching proves to be key factor for UMass

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

A difficult schedule to start the season has haunted the pitchers for the Massachusetts baseball team.

The Minutemen (1-9) opened their season on a nine-game road trip against Oklahoma State, Oklahoma and William & Mary.

To say the UMass pitching staff had a tough time on the trip is an understatement.

Through its first nine games, UMass' cumulative earned run average stood at 9.56.

With Wednesday's 14-6 win over Hartford (3-7), the pitching staff can breathe a collective sigh of relief, knowing that the toughest times are probably behind them.

Isaac Oakley got the nod to start the game and performed well, tossing 4 1 innings while giving up one run and striking out four.

"It feels good," Oakley said. "I'm just happy to come home and pitch in front of the family and friends – I was really confident. We had a couple bumps on the road trip but it's just a learning process and everyone seems to get better each start."

In UMass' previous game, the pitching staff gave up 17 runs on 18 hits and 10 walks to the William & Mary Tribe.

UMass head coach Mike Stone understood his team needed a strong pitching performance.

"I think [Oakley] did a great job," Stone said. "Early on, he was throwing a lot of strikes and he had a good tempo going. He really took charge of the ball in the game early, so we were glad to see that."

The rotation is still in question for the Minutemen. Stone believes Oakley could factor into the rotation throughout the season, but is not sure how much just yet.

"That's to be determined," Stone

See PITCHING on page 8

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Issac Coakley pitched five innings in the victory over the Hawks, giving up one run on four hits while striking out four and walking one batter en route to his first career victory.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Senior Merritt Cosgrove makes a cut in a game earlier this season. Cosgrove is one of three seniors on the Minutewomen, and will look to lead the team in A-10 play.

Minutewomen head to D.C. for meeting with Colonials

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will play its first conference game on Friday, when it takes on Atlantic 10 rival George Washington in the nation's capital.

"We're very eager and excited to start the A-10 schedule," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "We have the out-of-conference, then we have our conference, and then we have the Maryland game down the road. This A-10 season is very special. We're going in expecting a challenging A-10. We're defending A-10 champions, so we know people are going to come after us, but we're very excited to have that restart."

The Minutewomen (3-6) lead the series against the Colonials (2-7) by a 6-3 margin. The sixth win came in last year's A-10 tournament semifinal, as UMass went on to win 12-9.

"We're going to work on working in offense sets, we've been working a lot of those in practices, getting comfortable with each other and playing a more offensive set," Venechanos said.

Also last season, the soon-to-be A-10 champions took on the Colonials at McGurik Stadium, where the Minutewomen dominated GW 18-5. This victory over the Colonials was the fourth-straight win for UMass in the conference, keeping their unbeaten streak alive. For GW, it was the team's first loss of their A-10 schedule.

UMass jumped out early, earning a 13-2 lead going into the halftime break. Sophomore Dayna Defliese and junior Haley Smith each scored a hat trick, as Smith recorded her fourth goal of the game before the first thirty minutes were up, giving the Minutewomen an 11 point advantage.

Once the second half resumed, the Minutewomen added another five goals to take a 17-2 lead. The 15-point deficit was too much for the Colonials to come back from.

This season, GW has had its hands full as of late. The Colonials are in the midst of a four-game losing streak, suffering losses to Mount Saint Mary's (15-14), Towson (14-4), John's Hopkins (21-11) and Ohio State (19-11).

"GW played a lot of tough out-of-conference games like us," Venechanos said. "They're hungry for a win. We're all coming off some consecutive losses, so we know both teams are going to be hungry for a win. Especially with the A-10, every

See UMASS on page 7

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Junior Hayley Smith moves down field against Yale earlier this year. The Minutewomen open their conference schedule when they travel to Washington, D.C. to take on GW.

Tough non-conference schedule may be beneficial for young team

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

Despite not playing its best heading into its conference schedule, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team hopes to shake its struggles against familiar Atlantic 10 opponents.

After winning its first five conference matchups last season, UMass ended with a 6-1 record in the A-10. The only conference opponent who toppled the Minutewomen was Duquesne, and it took the Dukes two overtimes to do so in a closely-contested 15-14 game.

Though many veteran players experienced success in the conference schedule last spring, there has been a lot of turnover with incoming freshmen this year.

"We are so young, and the majority of our team is underclassmen, so they're comfortable, to an extent," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "We were in a similar situation last year when we were below .500 entering the A-10 [schedule], and I think we have comfort in that. We

See A-10 on page 7

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN PRESENTS
The Spring Real Estate Special

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE

PUFFTON VILLAGE

EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS

SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses

ALL RENTS INCLUDE:
HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!

ON SITE LAUNDRY,
OFF STREET PARKING.

BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.

Mill Valley
E·S·T·A·T·E·S

Looking for a place to live next year?
Check us out at the
HOUSING FAIR
$500 OFF Security
FREE $300-$500Visa Card*
FREE Nintendo Wii*
Thursday, March 25th 10AM-3PM
Campus Center Concourse

More info at 413-253-7377
www.MillValleyApts.com

Housing Fair ONLY, some restrictions apply

Valley Medical Group
Personnes for Medical Care To Help You Live Better, Longer

Valley Medical Group is a multi-specialty medical group offering accessible, coordinated & comprehensive primary care services to children, adults & families.

NCQA

AMHERST MEDICAL CENTER
31 HALL DRIVE, AMHERST, MA • (413) 256-8561

Services Include:

Ambulatory Surgery & Procedure Center – Endoscopy Behavioral Health & Psychiatry
Endocrinology
Hand Therapy
Laboratory
Nutritional Counseling
Optometry
Optical Shops
Pharmacy
Physical Therapy
Podiatry
Rheumatology
Radiology
•Bone Densitometry
•Digital Mammography
•Ultrasound
•X-Ray

We've Added New Practitioners to Meet the Needs of the Amherst Community!

Carol Anderson, APRN, BC
Tina Furcolo, D.O.
Rebecca Jackson, M.D.
Patricia Keough, APRN, BC
Ross S. Midler, M.D.

Jonathan Polgar, PA-C
Chalice Santorelli, NP
Jon Schiller, M.D.
Tatiana Scott, M.D.
Charles H. Weeber III, M.D.

ADDITIONAL CONVENIENT LOCATIONS

GREENFIELD HEALTH CENTER
329 Conway Street
Greenfield, MA 01301
(413) 774-6301

EASTHAMPTON HEALTH CENTER
238 Northampton Street
Easthampton, MA 01027
(413) 529-9300

NORTHAMPTON HEALTH CENTER
70 Main Street
Florence, MA 01062
(413) 586-8400

WWW.VMGMA.COM
New Patients Welcome • Most Insurances Accepted

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
Needs You!

Do you want to build your resumé?

Do you need business and sales experience?

Become an ADVERTISING
REPRESENTATIVE

*SOM Students strongly encouraged to apply.

To Apply: Contact Mike Tortorici @ 545-3500
or e-mail thecollegian@gmail.com

GARDASIL.
[Human Papillomavirus Quadrivalent (Types 6, 11, 16, and 18) Vaccine, Recombinant]

INTERESTED IN GARDASIL?
GARDASIL IS WIDELY AVAILABLE AND MANY PRIVATE INSURANCE PLANS* COVER IT.

TALK TO YOUR CAMPUS HEALTH CENTER OR OTHER HEALTH CARE PROFESSIONAL.

You are encouraged to report negative side effects of prescription drugs to the FDA. Visit www.fda.gov/medwatch or call 1-800-FDA-1088.

While your insurance company may reimburse for GARDASIL, your eligibility for coverage and reimbursement for GARDASIL depends on your individual insurance benefit. You can contact your insurance company for details on coverage for GARDASIL.

MERCK

Tips for having a stress-free rental

THE DAILY BAROMETER
VIA COLLEGE NEWS NETWORK

Landlord and tenant relationships and the laws that govern them can be complex and often subjective, even for those who make a living off navigating through the tangled web of city codes and state statutes.

Those same people who handle the consequences when either a landlord or tenant shows poor judgment say there are more than a few things that can be done to make life easier for all parties involved.

For students who are finally looking for a place of their own, a little research can go a long way in preventing problems later on.

Many communities offer websites where anyone can type in an address and see the entire history on the property, even before seeing the place in person.

"If more people did that, it would save a lot of grief," said Bob Loewen, an official with the Corvallis, Ore. Housing Division who handles cases of landlord-tenant disputes.

When it does come time to see the place, investigate thoroughly. Turn on appliances, check the heat, flush a toilet, run water from any tubs or faucets and ask questions.

Before signing anything, make sure the rental agreement is read thoroughly and understood. Ask questions of the landlord about something that is unclear. Students also often have the option of making an appointment with their school's legal services, where they can sit down and decipher anything that is unclear or address anything that seems out of the ordinary.

Once the rental agreement is signed and students are ready to move in, Bach said it is important to document everything, both in writing and with photographs. She said most landlords provide a move-in checklist, but says students should definitely take some initiative of their own when documenting damages, no matter how insignificant it might seem.

"There was a landlord who charged $6 for each nail hole," Bach said. "The tenant had no way of proving which holes they made and which ones they didn't, so they were charged for each one."

Bach said when documenting any damages at move-in, use today's newspaper in the photograph, or someone who doesn't live in the rental who would be willing to testify to the damage, if needed.

Along with the damages, renters must keep records of any agreements a landlord makes at time of signing and even put it in the rental agreement if necessary, or the landlord has no obligation to fulfill that promise.

"If you rent a place because a landlord promises to build a deck and hot tub before you move in, but then it never gets built, if it wasn't in the rental agreement, then there is nothing that says he has to do it," Bach said.

According to Jim Patton, fire prevention officer of the Corvallis Fire Department, even if you are only going to stay one night in a house or apartment, it is still imperative to make sure that the area is safe from fire danger.

Patton stressed that a working smoke alarm is one of the most pivotal items of fire safety. He said there should be a smoke alarm right outside of each room used for sleeping and preferably inside the room as well. He also said not to disable a smoke alarm for any reason.

"The landlord is required to check all smoke alarms with you at the time of move-in," Patton said.

Patton also said to make sure the room you sleep in not only has a window, but that it is 22 inches tall and 20 inches wide and no more than 44 inches from the ground.

"It is not only to make sure the resident can get out of a fire, but also to ensure that we can get into the room if we need to," Patton said.

Patton said fire safety relies more on the attentiveness of the student, such as paying attention when cooking and burning candles. He advises also taking extra precautions when drinking alcohol because that is when a resident's judgment is most impaired.

"I don't think the greatest risk is the dwelling itself," Patton said. "The student's greatest risk of fire is their own personal habits."

Once moved in, if a problem does come up, such as bad plumbing or broken heat, the renter should always put a request in writing to the landlord for it to be fixed and always keep a copy of the request.

If the problem is not handled, the renter then has the option of calling Loewen, who can look into the problem and make sure it is resolved, most of the time without legal action.

"I prefer a tenant try to work it out with their landlord first," Loewen said. "But they can always call, even if they just have a question."

Another word of advice is to pick roommates carefully because it doesn't matter to the landlord where they get the rent from as long as they get their rent. If one roommate moves out, or if a couple breaks up, it can be an unexpected financial burden because whoever is left in the house still has to cover that portion of rent.

"When you sign a rental agreement, you all sign a contract," Loewen said. "If the other person leaves and doesn't pay rent ... your share just went up."

This story was edited from the original to make it clearer for Collegian readers who are not familiar with OSU or Corvallis.

College dorms lose gender

Kayla Eland, 20, and Lindon Pronto, 21, pictured March 9, 2010, are not boyfriend and girlfriend, just pals who share the same room in a dorm at Holden Hall at Pitzer College in Claremont, California.

Students of different sexes increasingly look past gender norms

BY LARRY GORDON
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

LOS ANGELES — They weren't looking to make a political statement or to be pioneers of gender liberation. Each just wanted a familiar, decent roommate rather than a stranger after their original roommates left to study abroad.

That's how Pitzer College sophomores Kayla Eland, female, and Lindon Pronto, male, began sharing a room this semester on Holden Hall's second floor. They are not a couple and neither is gay. They are just compatible roommates in a new, sometimes controversial, dormitory option known as gender-neutral housing that is gaining support at some colleges across the nation.

Eland, a biology major who hopes to become a doctor, said that a roommate's personality and study habits are more important than gender. "This might not be right for everyone," she said of sharing the small, cinder block-walled room with a man. "But I think it's important to have the right to choose where you want to live, how you want to live and who you want to live with."

Pronto, an environmental studies major who works each summer as a forest firefighter, agreed. Apart from remembering to lower the toilet seat, he said, living with a woman friend is not much different from rooming with a man. "As far as I'm concerned, a roommate is a roommate," he said.

Although the number of participants remains small, gender-neutral housing has gained attention as the final step in the integration of student housing.

In the 1970s, many U.S. colleges moved from having only single-sex dormitories to providing coed residence halls, with male and female students typically housed on alternating floors or wings. Then came coed hallways and bathrooms, further shocking traditionalists. Now, some colleges allow undergraduates of opposite sexes to share a room.

Pitzer, which began its program in the fall of 2008, is among about 50 U.S. schools with the housing choice, according to Jeffrey Chang, who co-founded the National Student Genderblind Campaign in 2006 to encourage gender-mixed rooms. Participating schools include UC Riverside, UC Berkeley, Stanford, Cornell, Dartmouth, Sarah Lawrence, Haverford, Wesleyan and the University of Michigan.

College officials say the movement began mainly as a way to accommodate gay, bisexual and transgender students who may feel more comfortable living with a member of the opposite sex. Most schools say they discourage couples from participating, citing emotional and logistical problems of breakups. Officials say most heterosexuals in the programs are platonic friends.

"College students are adults," said Chang, who is gay and is now a law student at Rutgers University in New Jersey. "They have every single right to choose the person they feel most comfortable living with."

He estimates that at schools where the option exists, only 1 percent to 3 percent of students living on campus choose a roommate of the opposite sex.

Officials at the Association of College & University Housing Officers-International say the trend has accelerated, but they don't expect most schools to adopt it. Experts note that most students prefer a same-sex roommate, and some colleges are reluctant to antagonize parents, legislators and donors who view the option as immoral or even dangerous.

Pepperdine University in Malibu, Calif., which is affiliated with the Churches of Christ, maintains separate dorm wings and apartments for men and women. Asked whether it would consider going gender neutral, Sue Gamboa, a housing department office manager, said: "Not in the wildest dream would Pepperdine move in that direction."

Harvey Mudd College, next to Pitzer in the Claremont Colleges, began gender-neutral housing last fall mainly as an option for gay and transgender students, said Guy Gerbick, dean of residential life. Seven students joined; among them are a man and two women, all straight, who share a triple room.

Parents cannot veto such a decision at Harvey Mudd, but Gerbick asks students to discuss it with their families ahead of time. He also asks applicants whether they are romantically involved; all of this year's participants said no. But if they were, the school could not forbid them from rooming together.

"If we are going into a post-gender world, then the regulation of private behavior is just not practical," he said.

Several years ago, an earlier proposal for gender-neutral housing was killed at Harvey Mudd by skeptical administrators and older, more conservative trustees, Gerbick recalled. More recently, 74 percent of Harvey Mudd students voted in a survey to allow the option and, to Gerbick's satisfaction, a new administration agreed.

UC Berkeley senior Rose DeLeon-Foote, who has a male roommate, laughed at fears that gender-neutral housing might promote promiscuity. In fact, she said, the opposite is true when roommates see each other "all gnarly in the morning."

"It's not sexual, it's just not," said DeLeon-Foote, 19, of Sacramento.

Many schools restrict the option to upperclassmen, to certain floors or to residence halls with gay themes. Pitzer, which has about a dozen students participating this year, avoids such limits out of concern that they may marginalize students, said Chris Brunelle, director of residence life.

Pitzer housing applications ask whether students prefer a roommate to be woman, man, "other," or have no preference. Or students can request to live together, as Eland and Pronto did after losing their original roommates.

Their room, which shares a tiny bathroom with two men next door, has the usual collegiate trappings of beer bottles and political posters. The only unusual sight is women's clothes in one closet and men's in another.

The pair seem to have a warm brotherly-sisterly friendship and, while they try to be respectful, they say they are not inhibited about being in underwear or even nude while changing clothes in the room. They insist their living situation does not interfere with romantic relationships with other people. And although they have not been teased on campus, they face curious questions from relatives and friends.

"I definitely think it's generational," said Eland, 20, of Seattle. "For my grandparents, living with someone of the opposite sex if he is not your serious boyfriend or husband or brother, would be very strange."

Pronto, 21, of Weimar, Calif., said his mother at first worried that he might be distracted by having a female roommate. And fellow firefighters at his "macho" summer barracks may joke about it, he said.

But at colleges, he said, "I think those old-fashioned ways of thinking are kind of dissipating. ... Over the years, this division between men and women, which was so big, is slowly closing."

Eland's and Pronto's living arrangement won't last long.

Both will be studying overseas next fall, she in Spain, he in Costa Rica, and they are not sure where — or with whom — they will live when they return to school.

Townehouse of Amherst Condominiums
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487
www.townehouseofamherst.com

Walk to Campus!
Hurry,
Get 'em before they're gone!

Food Science Graduates are in Demand!

Food scientists apply the basic principles of Biology, Chemistry, Physics, Engineering, Biochemistry, Microbiology and Nutrition to generate food products that are shelf stable, safe, healthy and taste good.

The Food Science Department gives:
• 100% Job Placement
• Small Classes
• Individual Attention

Food Science at UMass has ranked No. 1 in Student Satisfaction THREE years in a row!

The Department of Food Science at the UMass is the oldest in the U.S. and one of the most respected departments in the world!

Learn more at:
www.umass.edu/foodsci

Off The Wall Games
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Daily, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays
WARHAMMER

WANNA HOOK-UP?

FREE High Speed Internet and Expanded Cable

1, 2, 3 , and 4 bedroom apartment homes

RESERVE YOUR APARTMENT TODAY!!!

SUGARLOAF ESTATES
APARTMENT HOMES

28 River Road, Sunderland
866-301-1445
www.sugarloafestates.com

ASPEN CHASE & ALPINE COMMONS
apartment homes

133 Belchertown Road, Rt. 9, Amherst
866-301-2808
www.aspenchaseapartments.com
www.alpinecommons.com

FREE
Heat, Water, Hot Water, Cable, Internet Electricity in Select Units

On the Bus Route, Salt Water Swimming Pool, Fitness Center, Pet Friendly
FLEXIBLE LEASE TERMS

$$ MENTION THIS AD AND SAVE ON YOUR MOVE IN COSTS $$

YOU HAVE YOUR REASONS FOR LIVING OFF-CAMPUS...

SO DO WE.

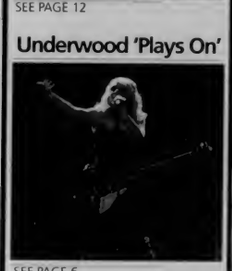
Spacious 1, 2, 3 & 4 Bedroom Apartments
Beautifully Renovated
On the Bus Route
Swimming Pool
Fitness Center
Pet Friendly
On Site Laundry Facilities
Heat, Hot Water & Cable Included
Air Conditioning

BRANDYWINE AT AMHERST

BRANDYWINE APARTMENTS
549-0600
www.Brandywine-Apts.com
16G Brandywine Drive
Amherst, MA 01002

the daily collegian

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MARCH 26, 2010

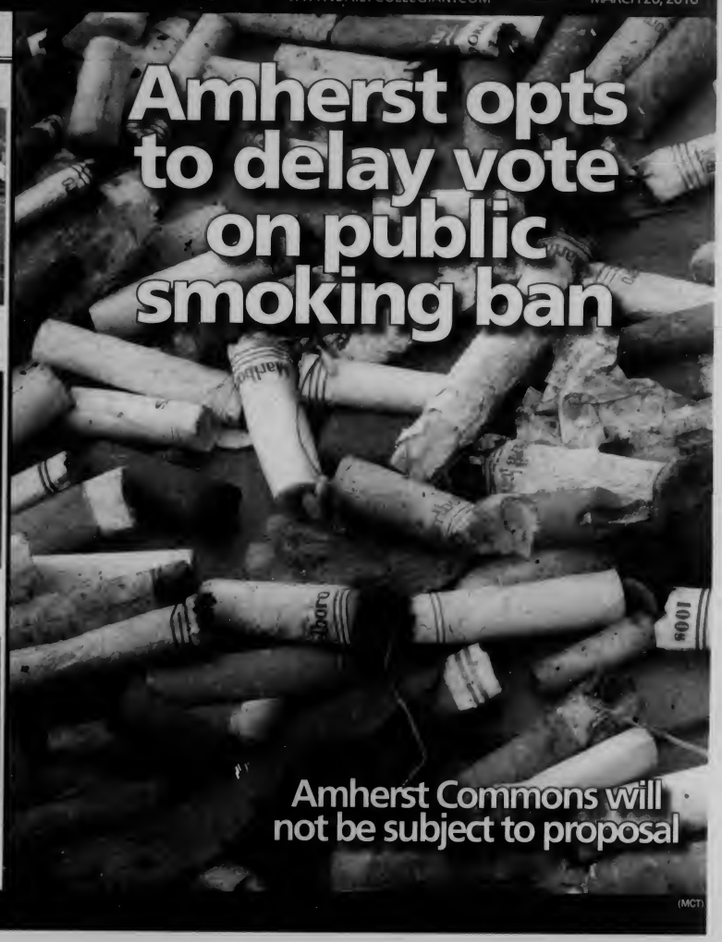


inside this issue:

Scouting Ducasse

SEE PAGE 12

Underwood 'Plays On'



SEE PAGE 6

'Congrats' for MGMT

SEE PAGE 7

Amherst opts to delay vote on public smoking ban

Amherst Commons will not be subject to proposal

(MCT)

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXVIX
ISSUE 39

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S P Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Scannell
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Ellie Rulon-Miller
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Pete Rizzo

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
NICK BUSH

COPY EDITOR
ELIZABETH TRAN

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHAEL SARKES

Board postpones smoking ban vote

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

Although Thursday's Board of Health meeting did not end in a vote, it did alter the contours of the town of Amherst's proposed smoking ordinance.

The committee decided to not include the widely used Amherst Commons in the proposed bylaws, which would ban smoking outside some businesses and at public events, as well as at town parks. The Board voted instead to leave the Commons off the areas where smoking would potentially be banned until it conducts further research on the feasibility of such measures.

On February 25, the Board of Health held an open Town Meeting for community members and business owners to discuss the prospective bill.

After considering the opinions discussed during the open forum meeting, as well as letters sent to the board, the committee decided not to include the Amherst Commons in the bylaws' provisions.

Maria Bulzacchelli, a member of the Board of Health, questioned if the area was even a plausible site for such policies, stating that, "I wonder if it is even possible to impose this regulation at all."

Prior to Thursday's changes, the bylaws had called for outdoor events held at the Amherst Commons to be entirely smoke-free, with the organizers of respective events to be in charge of regulating attendees. The bill would require that four signs be posted around the area stating that smoking would not be permitted. If organizers failed to enforce the non-smoking policies, they would be subject to a $100 fine for the first offense, with higher fines for future offenses reaching $300. The fines would be per event, rather than per offense.

Julie Federman, the health director for the town of Amherst, said such fines were meant to educate the community.

"The fine system, which would be based on the number of offenses, would educate business owners and community members," she said.

Though not currently in the proposed bylaw, events on the Commons may be smoke-free in future years. Federman called for statistics on the impact smoking has on attendees currently.

"I would like to leave it [the Commons] out and do data collection on current events. For example, we could collect cigarette butts during the Taste of Amherst," she said.

This decision is considered by some to only postpone the eventual battle.

Terry Franklin, a town of Amherst Meeting Member and representative for the University of Massachusetts Cannabis Reform Committee, felt the decision wasn't the Board of Health's to make.

"Such a law is a violation of the First Amendment," he said.

Bulzacchelli agreed, stating that "I don't think it is the call of local boards of health to override state laws."

If the bylaw were to have passed, Franklin said the group planned on taking legal action.

"If the bylaw would have passed, a call to the American Civil Liberties Union would have been made in the morning," he said.

Public spaces still affected by the current proposed legislation include public playgrounds, public swimming pools and athletic fields during scheduled events. While the bylaw does include these spaces, it will primarily be enforced while children and other community members are using the spaces.

"We don't want this to affect the man out walking his dog at three in the morning smoking a cigarette," said David Ahlfeld, chair of the Board of Health.

There was also debate over who should regulate smokers during scheduled athletic events. While some suggested coaches of the sporting events should regulate smoking, others argued against this. Federman argued that most coaches were volunteers, and that the only paid employee was normally the umpire of the little league game.

Other topics discussed included possibly banning smoking in some Amherst housing.

Near the end of the meeting, Federman brought up the possible ban of smoking in all units owned by the Amherst Housing Authority. The ban on smoking within units is being considered due a new health concern referred to as "third-hand smoking." Federman said that "third-hand smoking causes deposits on walls and interacts with materials in the walls," explaining that smoking inside the units causes unnecessary expenses to the Amherst Housing Authority.

The Amherst Board of Health discussed a proposed ban on public smoking Thursday.

"Once residents smoke in the apartment, it's really hard to clean, and is very expensive to do so," she said.

The Amherst Housing Authority has housing programs for the elderly, family housing, and Section 8 housing. It owns over 10 properties, including the Ann Whalen Apartments, Watson Farms, and units on Tamarack drive. The issue of banning smoking in private residences is planned to be discussed further at the next Board of Health meeting.

The Board also discussed the decision to close the warming center with the opening of a permanent facility which would provide sleeping quarters to homeless persons. Though the decision to close the warming center was announced Friday, community members attempted to continue the discussion at Thursday's meeting.

Hwei-Ling Greeney, an active coordinator of soup kitchens in the local area and Select Board member, asked for the rules regarding how food is prepared and given to those in need to be revised.

Currently, the rules of food preparation prevent the warming center from serving prepared food, instead only allowing pre-packaged items such as coffee and yogurt. Greeney asked that the Center be allowed to serve food that is prepared in local church kitchens certified by the Massachusetts Board of Health. Federman felt there was much confusion between the Board of Health and community members, including Greeney, and explained that food prepared in a certified kitchen is allowed to be served.

The warming center is planned to close March 31, with winter weather no longer posing a threat, according to the town of Amherst Web site. In a press release, the town said, "The challenges notwithstanding, the goals of this year's program have been met. The homeless were provided a safe and comfortable facility during the winter thereby relieving the stress of living outdoors." A date for the permanent facility for the homeless to open has yet to be set.

Michelle Williams can be reached at mnwillia@student.umass.edu

The Amherst Board of Health convened Thursday at the Bangs Community Center to discuss a proposed bylaw which would ban smoking in public places and at public events.

UM seeks new president

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts system is looking for a new president. In the wake of current President Jack Wilson's March 1 announcement that he would step down effective June 2011, the University announced Thursday that it has formed a Committee to search for the system's next president.

The University of Massachusetts Presidential Search Committee is tasked with developing a group of candidates and suggesting finalists to the UMass Board of Trustees, which will have the ultimate say in choosing a new president.

University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees Chairman Robert J. Manning said he believes the Search Committee is competent and fit for the job.

"This Search Committee is diverse, distinguished and representative of the University and the Commonwealth that it serves," said Manning, who under University policy is responsible for appointing the search panel, in a Thursday release.

"I am confident that this Committee will be able to assemble a pool of superb candidates and will recommend finalists, any one of whom would be an outstanding new leader for the five-campus University of Massachusetts system," Manning added.

"I am confident that this Committee will be able to assemble a pool of superb candidates and will recommend finalists, any one of whom would be an outstanding new leader for the five-campus University of Massachusetts system," he continued.

The Search Committee will be chaired by Vice Chairman of the Board of Trustees James J. Karam, who is also president of First Bristol Group and a 1971 UMass Dartmouth graduate. Karam is also chair of the committee on administration and finance.

"I look forward to this search process and to helping to select a new leader for a University that has accomplished much and is poised to take its place alongside the very best public universities in the nation," Karam said in UMass' Thursday statement.

Henry Thomas III will serve as vice chair of the Committee. Thomas is president and CEO of the Urban League of Springfield in addition to being a University of Massachusetts Trustee and chair of the committee on academic and student affairs.

Also serving on the Committee will be Professor of Economics and Faculty Representative to the Board of Trustees at UMass Lowell Michael Carter, PhD.

He will be joined by Distinguished Professor of Communication and Faculty Representative to the Board of Trustees at UMass Mari Castaneda, PhD, as well as Edward W. Collins Jr., a Trustee and an international representative of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (IBEW), and 1974 UMass Boston alumnus and Chairman of the University of Massachusetts Foundation Investment Committee Edward H. D'Alelio.

The Committee further includes past President of Tufts University, Michigan State University, University of Connecticut and current UMass Trustee John A. DiBiaggio, DDS, Maria D. Furman, a 1976 UMass Dartmouth graduate, UMass trustee and retired managing director and bond portfolio manager of Standish Mellon Asset Management, Robyn Hannigan, PhD, professor and chair of environmental, earth and ocean studies at UMass Boston, Charles J. Hoff, a 1966 UMass Lowell graduate and former UMass Trustee, Phillip W. Johnston, a 1968 UMass graduate and Trustee.

The Committee also has one student member, Laura King, a UMass Dartmouth student.

Other Committee members are Ruben J. King-Shaw Jr., chairman of Mansa Equity Partners, Inc. and Vice Chairman of the Board of Trustees, Winston Langley, PhD, provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs at UMass Boston, Chairman of the Board of Trustees and 1984 UMass Lowell alumnus Robert J. Manning, Nobel laureate and Howard Hughes Medical Institute Investigator and Blais University Chair in Molecular Medicine at the University of Massachusetts Medical School Craig C. Mello, Ph.D., Kathy Miraglia, a 2006 UMass graduate with an Ed.D and professor and chair of art education at UMass Dartmouth, Keri E. Osterhaus-Houle, an M.D. from UMass Worcester and Trustee, S. Paul Reville, secretary of education for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and a Trustee, Mark E. Russell, a 1983 UMass Lowell alumnus and a 1985 UMass master's recipient as well as a vice president of engineering, technology and mission assurance at Raytheon Co., Chairman of the University of Massachusetts Building Authority, former Trustee and president and CEO of Savings Bank Life Insurance Company of Massachusetts, Trustee Stephen P. Tocco and Marcellette G. Williams, PhD, senior vice president for academic affairs, student affairs and international relations for the University of Massachusetts system.

Because President Wilson has more than a year left on his term, the Committee expects to have a replacement selected before his departure next June. Wilson has served as president since 2003.

"We hope and expect to have this process concluded before Jack Wilson's term ends and therefore envision a seamless transition, one that will allow the University to maintain its positive momentum and to serve its students and the Commonwealth to the utmost," Manning said.

The Committee anticipates holding its first meeting in the next several weeks.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com

UMass is a BIG campus, and we need your help covering it.

Know of something that's happening? Want to see an event get news coverage? Let us know!

Go online and head to DailyCollegian.com and click "Submit a Tip."

UMASS AMHERST

United States Census 2010

IT'S IN OUR HANDS

What: The U.S. Census counts every resident in the United States, and is required by the Constitution to take place every ten years. Everyone is required to complete the census: undergraduates, graduate students, U.S. students, and international students, as well as graduating seniors and others who plan to leave the area at the end of the semester.

Why: The results determine how federal funds are allocated to states and to communities. The results affect college tuition grant and loan money, research done on campus by faculty and by students, the number of congressional representatives assigned to our state, and many critical services that affect college students.

Where: People are counted where they live and sleep most of the year. You will receive a census questionnaire at your UMass address, either on campus or off campus, not at the address of your parents or home address.

How: If you live on campus, you will receive the census in your residence hall. If you live off campus, you will receive it in the mail.

When: UMass Amherst Census 2010 runs from March 29 to April 15.

UMass Amherst students will be available at the following locations to answer questions about the importance of filling out the census and who is eligible to do so, and to provide bilingual support in Chinese and Korean languages.

March 29 - April 1 (Monday - Thursday)
Campus Center Concourse: 9:30 a.m. – 2:30 p.m.
The Integrated Sciences and Engineering Library: 7 – 9 p.m.
Lincoln Apartments: 7 – 9 p.m. (Monday, March 29 only)
North Village Apartments: 7 – 9 p.m. (Tuesday, March 30 only)

April 12 - 15 (Monday - Thursday)
Campus Center Concourse: 9:30 a.m. – 2:30 p.m.
The W.E.B. Du Bois Library: 2 – 4 p.m. and from 9 – 11 p.m.

Historically, college students have low participation in the census. This year, make a difference in your future.

It's in your hands!

For more information, visit UMass Amherst Census 2010:
http://www.umass.edu/umhome/census2010/

Off The Wall Games

LOOK FOR US THIS WEEKEND AT SMITH COLLEGE

MAGIC THE GATHERING

WARHAMMER 40,000

Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays
41 Russell St (Village Barn Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

editorial&opinion

"FREE SPEECH IS THE WHOLE THING, THE WHOLE BALL GAME. FREE SPEECH IS LIFE ITSELF" - SIR SALMAN RUSHDIE

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Health care bill is a hoax

Alex Perry

The recent health care bill – Obamacare – that was signed into law Tuesday is nothing but an open attempt by government to drive the current health care insurance industry out of business, leaving people clamoring for a government-run health care system. Let me explain.

I am sure a lot of people are confused as to how Obamacare passed without a public option when, last summer, Nancy Pelosi said, "There's no way I can pass a bill in the House of Representatives without a public option." One of the primary reasons liberals say they have been demanding a public option is that they think it is needed to create competition within the health care insurance industry. Of course, these same people are also opposed to Republican proposals to increase competition within the industry by allowing people to purchase insurance across state lines.

I will tell you the real reason why liberals wanted a public option: they want to drive private health care insurance out of business. Liberals know that the polls show that the majority of Americans are satisfied with their health care, but that most are also frustrated with the rising costs of health care. So who do they blame for the latter? They try and portray the private health care industry as villains; pretending health care officials are out there making all this money while screwing the American public over at the same time. The Obama sob stories don't hurt this cause.

But, is the health care industry really screwing us over? The profit margin for health care plans is approximately 3.3 percent. When you break down businesses by industry, health care plans rank in the mid-eighties for profit margin. I don't hear liberals calling out gas utilities, making a 12.6 percent profit margin. Clearly, these health care CEOs are not sitting around robbing us blind, it is just a reality that health care is very expensive to pay for. Something needs to be done about the cost of health care, and the solution is not as simple as providing a competitor that is interested only in breaking even, such as the government. The prices will still be too high.

amongst Americans that most people would choose a government-run system instead. They started by vilifying the current industry, but that isn't enough. They need to make the private insurance industry too expensive ... If they can accomplish that, drastic change will be demanded by Americans, and that change will be towards government-run care.

How does this bill accomplish that? It is simple. The recently passed bill is going to raise the cost of health care insurance for all Americans because it strips away the ability for health care providers to discriminate against people with pre-existing conditions. As soon as the bill comes into effect, all of the people who currently are very sick and do not have health care insurance will have access to it. The only way the health care insurance industry can afford to take on all these additional costs without raising prices will be to have an even larger amount of people who are very healthy, and who do not currently have insurance, to start paying into the system.

But the health care bill does not make it mandatory for all people to have health care coverage. All it does is slap fines on people who decide not to have health care. There is no incentive for healthy people to buy insurance because the fines are far less than health care coverage would cost for many people. For example, in 2009 the average cost of insurance for family coverage was $13,375. This bill calls for a 2.5 percent fine on the family income if the family chooses not to have insurance. That means a family with an income of $100,000 would only have to pay $2,500, meaning they would be saving $10,875 by not having insurance.

Now you're thinking, "Well what if that family gets sick and then needs insurance?" Obamacare makes it so health care insurance companies can no longer deny you. So once you get sick, you can simply buy into a plan no matter how sick you are. You can't do that today, but you can do that moving forward under Obamacare.

I think most liberal politicians know this. They know that healthy people can drop their health care insurance now, pay the much cheaper fines and then, when they get sick, simply get back into their plans. This system will drive the prices of health care insurance through the roof.

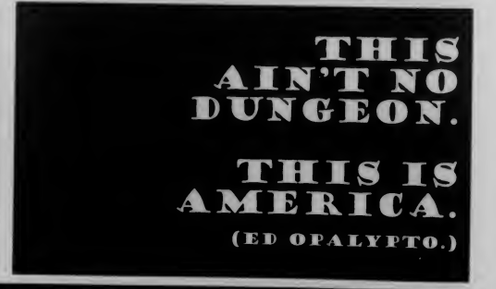
When this happens, liberals will have won. There will be the need for a government-run health care system to get costs back down and, at that point, there will be nothing to stop the government – because private health care will be on the verge of bankruptcy, and will need public support.

Now that Obamacare has passed, the only time we will see our health care costs come down is when government steps in and takes control.

Of course, we could all just overthrow our government now and put a socialist regime in place to save us the time, but I think we would be wasting our effort.

But it may not be necessary, because people already think we have a socialist president.

Alex Perry is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at amperry@student.umass.edu.



> Liberals want to be able to dictate what you can get for health care and what you cannot, and when you can even get care.

So what do liberals propose to do about this? Their plan is health care rationing. They want to control costs by cutting down on expenses like they do in Europe and Canada. Liberals want to be able to dictate what you can get for health care and what you cannot, and when you can even get care. What drugs you will be allowed to have access to. What surgeries you are allowed to have. Anything and everything will be determined by government.

But liberals know they would never be able to pass a government run health care system right now. They have emphasized that this bill is not going to create a government run system many times.

But I disagree. Liberals know they cannot create a government-run health care system now because most Americans would rather have what they've already got. So what liberals need to do is get the current privatized health care insurance system to fall so far out of favor

POINT-DIFFERENT-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

Rebel with an unclear cause

Ben Sullivan

It's that time of the year again – when the days get warmer, the grass gets greener, plants start to sprout and the ducks fornicate in the bushes outside of the Student Union. This month also welcomed another unusual commotion on the steps of the Student Union: students holding picket signs, chanting, marching and screaming into megaphones. This surely was a revolution in the making, right?

On March 4, there was quite a hullabaloo on the University of Massachusetts campus as well as many other college campuses across the nation. The message of the demonstration on the UMass campus, however, was not exactly clear. I blame part of this on the fact that while rallying support on the Student Union steps, there were three people with megaphones chanting three different things.

> If you are one of the people who organize these information sessions and benefit concerts, you should take note of how many people actually show up or care.

I got confused within the chaos of young radicals and the cluster of college ideologies and decided to chant my own demands, which were for more options of dried fruits in the dining commons on campus. This, much like the rest of the protest, went completely unacknowledged and was purposely ignored.

The day of action was just one example of how far and how obnoxious campus political groups have gotten. After the hundreds of flyers littering campus bulletins, dozens of Facebook groups, events and fan pages, rallies, open mic nights and guest speakers, I have started actively avoiding and ignoring any form of political activity on campus. I don't actually see much of a difference between the bombardment from these activists and those nuts that stop by every once in a while toting the giant Jesus banner.

If you are one of the people who organize these information sessions and benefit concerts, you should take note of how many people actually show up or care. If the 100 flyers you printed to advertise your recycling awareness concert were not buried by the 20 other flyers for free yoga classes, then people may have noticed. If no one shows up to your benefit concert, it could also be because no one wants to see your best friend's roommate's screamo duo. If at the end of your event, you count the money raised at the door and realize you've raised nothing, you can blame Tix Unlimited for pocketing the money and petition that they be shut down at your next rally.

It's not just the amount of e-mails I receive or the flyers I see floating in the campus pond. It's also the actions of these individuals that confuse me, and cause me to question the amount of research done before stepping up on that soap box.

Now, before you start a petition to have me expelled from school, let me just set some things straight. I'm not calling these campus radicals stupid. They clearly have studied on Wikipedia the subjects of anarchism, hegemony and socialism. But I do find it funny that a student born and educated in a capitalist society would suggest that we'd all be better off in some type of Marxist society.

While walking to class the other day, I witnessed an act of nature taking place as three male ducks struggled to mount a female duck in an attempt to procreate. A scene placed anywhere else but the wilderness would be considered a gang bang, but this was nature and a natural part of wildlife. To another student in the area, this scene was not a part of nature, but representative of the oppressiveness of male ducks, and this radical look action, chasing away these male ducks in a stand for feminism, defending a helpless duck and preventing any future family of ducklings. Great work.

I'm truly concerned for the future of this country when I look at those who feel they are fit to take leadership. As unorganized as March 4 day of action was for the UMass campus, other campuses around the country also showed promise for the future leaders of America.

Students from University of California Berkley chose to take their protests even further by marching onto Interstate 880. They blockaded the freeway, creating a gridlock of cars that backed up traffic for two hours, while these student radicals danced and shouted in protest to the increase of student fees. Let me just reiterate this. Students shut down a freeway, preventing cars and emergency vehicles from using I-880, and they did this because they were unhappy about paying more to go to school. How unbelievably selfish.

The real doozey in this story though is that when Oakland riot police arrived to disperse the crowd from the freeway, a fifteen-year-old high school student, Francois Zimany, fell off the freeway falling 30 feet, fracturing his skull and causing memory loss. Paramedics could have gotten Zimany to the hospital quickly, but there was one major problem: all the roads were backed up due to the protest.

I know I will get a lot of flak for saying this, but to be completely honest, I have lost sympathy for most political groups on campus. I hate to say I've lost respect for the liberals and radicals on campus who showed up to Don Feder's speech just to not let him speak.

These kinds of acts would have Abbie Hoffman turning in his grave. I'm not becoming a Republican – believe me, I think they're just as ridiculous.

I'm just concerned. I'm concerned for the future of this country, and I'm concerned for the future of all ducks.

Ben Sullivan is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bisulliv@student.umass.edu.

Facts over fiction

Mike Fox

During the year-long debate over health care reform, and while engaging in debates with friends and family leading up to it, I noticed a disturbing trend: supporters and opponents of the bill were spouting off lots and lots of rhetoric, but they appeared to be short on actual statistics.

Both sides have boiled down the debate to the most simple and extreme liberal or conservative beliefs. From the left, I heard the promotion of a security net for those that "fall through the cracks of society," and from the right, a refusal to let their taxes go to support someone other than themselves. While these two principles are obviously important, no one could really state statistics to back their points up.

On a more extreme note, we've all heard about the excessive statements and insults lobbied at Democratic Congressmen this past Sunday by protestors against the health care reform bill.

These two forms of political discourse demonstrate a deeper trend that is hurting productive debate in this country. While Newt Gingrich's Republican Party in 1994 presented a counter platform to Bill Clinton that contained actual policy based on facts, today, facts have left the debate.

> A failure to understand the world around oneself leads one to be more easily swayed by demagogues and those who wish to abuse people's support.

On February 16, Massachusetts Congressman – and target of some of Sunday's slurs – Barney Frank stated here at the University of Massachusetts that the cause of this degradation is that people simply don't receive the same set of facts anymore. Two sides cannot debate and compromise when they don't even have the same perception of the world.

Primetime cable news programming is now dominated by pundits on both sides who discuss and present their views on current events rather than the news for people to interpret for themselves. Don't even get me started on the distortions that Glenn Beck offers up daily. This isn't just limited to mainstream media anymore. With the rate that people check their Facebook newsfeeds and Twitter updates, people can receive a peer's spin on the news and find it unnecessary to seek out further facts.

I don't blame the people who prefer easily digestible news. However, at the same time, a solution short of forcing people to change their way of gathering information is necessary.

I propose that public universities take it upon themselves to teach people how to digest the news and become more aware of the world around them. Back in public school, social studies courses focused on teaching people the basics about our government and the world; the three branches of government, how a bill becomes a law and the roles of elected leaders are taught. Tours to such sights as the State House or a local town hall are prioritized. Civics is a core part of any public education, until apparently when one enters higher education.

While the number of options for learning about the world and our nation that general education requirements provide are admirable, they change priorities – and possibly atrophy our knowledge about governmental basics.

In my experience, this has appeared to lead to a reliance on more emotional opinions over the most well-informed ones.

The University should at first issue a civics test based on the curriculums experienced earlier in student's educations. The assessment would be issued to every student at the beginning of the semester. At the end of the semester, a similar test would be issued to measure what knowledge is lost. Of course, neither test would be graded. Taking these results into account, a course would be designed around the most common shortcomings demonstrated by the test's results.

The course would begin on the functional nature of government. By establishing this knowledge, people would have a foundation on which to understand current events.

The second focus of the course would revolve on news comprehension. With the knowledge of the fundamentals of government, it would become easier to understand the importance of facts to political discourse. Facts motivate functionality. Beliefs are how people choose to interpret the degree of functionality.

Why should public universities be responsible for this? A failure to understand the world around oneself leads one to be more easily swayed by demagogues and those who wish to abuse people's support. Public universities stand as the most accessible way to combat this kind of naïve ignorance.

I don't blame individuals for the slurs they spewed on Sunday. The words came from a deeply passionate place for these people, and were spurred by a sense of helplessness. They were told that they were powerless, and acted out vehemently because of this.

With greater education about our government, hopefully people can understand that in a representative democracy, they are only as powerless as their inability to either understand or play by the System's rules.

Mike Fox is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mjfox@student.umass.edu.

Carrie Underwood to 'Play On' Sat.

By Kate McDonald

Carrie Underwood will make her second-ever appearance at the University of Massachusetts this Saturday, March 27 at 7:30 p.m. as part of her "Play On" tour named after her latest CD release.

In February of 2009 Underwood played to a huge crowd at the Mullins Center, prompting many in the audience to realize that Underwood certainly has the stuff to make it in the music business. She is not the type of artist to lip-synch her way through a set, nor is she the type of singer to carry out a mediocre performance.

The "American Idol" winner from season four, who was never in the bottom three is one of the most successful "Idol" alums. Though Kelly Clarkson remains the highest selling former idol on a worldwide scale, Underwood has surpassed Clarkson domestically according to a December 2009 About.com article. Underwood has managed to do something rather unique – attract pop, country and rock fans alike with her great hits.

"Play On," is Underwood's third album, after "Some Hearts" and "Carnival Ride," both of which reached multi-platinum status. It spurred radio hits "Cowboy Casanova," "Temporary Home," the first of which was most recently performed at the Country Music Awards.

According to her official website, "Play On" signifies Underwood's step into the more mature music scene, as signaled by her lyrical and musical depth and range. She co-wrote seven of the thirteen tracks, which she believes gives her fans more insight into her persona.

"They can listen to certain things and think, 'This is really sincere. This is really emotional. She was a writer on it, so this comes from something that was deep inside of her heart. I do feel like people can get to know me a lot better from Play On," Underwood says on her biography page. The album includes songs about bad breakups, sweet [illegible] even songs about her family [illegible] in "Mama's Song."

Fans of Underwood can expect to not only hear new material but old favorites as well at her Saturday performance. Megahits such as "Before He Cheats," "Jesus Take the Wheel" and "All American Girl" are almost sure to be on the set list. Avid admirers can sneak a peek at the leaked tour setlist, which is making rounds on the Internet.

One neat aspect to her [illegible] fan club members can look forward to is a "choose the song" aspect. Members can vote online for a performance in one of four genres – rock, 90s country, 80s pop, and classic country. As of Wednesday rock seems to be the most chosen genre but it all depends on how the votes stack up.

The "Play On" tour began March 11 in Reading, Pa. and will end July 4 in Milwaukee, Wis. By that time Underwood and company will have traveled coast to coast and [illegible] into Canada twice. Multiple shows in the 66-date tour have already sold out according to various media sources. For example, foxtofox.com announced that Underwood's Toledo, Ohio show on April 24 sold out in 26 minutes. Other sold out shows include Rockford, Ill., Augusta, Ga. and Springfield, Mass.

The Oklahoma native hopes to supply have fun during her tour despite her widespread fame and impeccable reputation. Underwood has won five Grammies, fourteen Billboard awards, five American Music Awards and five Country Music Association Awards, to name a few. Despite all of her celebrity, Underwood wants to keep things light, saying on her website, "I like to think I'm still young enough to keep the fun and the sass and things like that."

On Saturday, concertgoers can almost certainly expect to see Underwood bring some of that fun and sass to the Mullins Center.

Tickets are still on sale for Carrie Underwood's "Play On" tour date at the Mullins Center. Doors open at 7:30 p.m. on Saturday, March 27.

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kathlynn@student.umass.edu

(MCT)

'Congratulations' in order for MGMT's latest release

By Peter Rizzo
Collegian Staff

MGMT has arguably achieved the most success of any rock band to burst onto the scene in the last few years. In a short time the band has gone from collegiate act to headlining some of the biggest festivals in the world, with everyone from fashion gurus to Bill Murray attending their shows. The 40 minute keyboard orgy that was their debut "Oracular Spectacular" united the tattered strains of rock n' roll from hipster kids to hippies, and succeeded just as easily in winning over the pop music realm – while its lead single "Time to Pretend" became the closest thing this generation has to an anthem: "Let's make some music, make some money, find some models for wives." It was sarcastic and uplifting at the same time; at once petty and profound, and its creators found themselves grappling with questions about what it means to be rock stars in the 21st century, where bands get chewed up and spit out like breath mints.

Well it just so happens that MGMT may have found the blueprint for success, and it comes as a relief for everyone who had their fingers crossed for them not to eat the dirt like so many other one album wonders.

When MGMT's latest album leaked this week, the blogosphere and social networks blew up and fans eager to scoop up their latest work received this modest message the band posted on their Web site adjacent to the trippy album art, "Hey everybody, the album leaked, and we wanted you to be able to hear it from us." So despite the fact that the official release of the album isn't until April 13, the entirety of the album is already available to the public.

While "Oracular Spectacular" was a breath of fresh air, it coasted on big singles and remained a largely uneven affair. In contrast, "Congratulations" is a more even-handed artistic stroke. The album sounds like MGMT, however it's MGMT expanded, at once showcasing the band moving deeper into its influences while choosing them more assuredly. It's a deftly manufactured creative endeavor that succeeds to both cement their established sound and bring it to new extremes.

"Congratulations" is not a safe album, and it's not the one that a lot of people would have liked them to make. For starters there are no singles on this disc. For anyone looking for a rehash of "Kids" or "Electric Feel" this disc should have come with a sticker that said "see our first album." Right from the R&B bass-line that kicks off opener "It's Working," this album finds its own groove and quickly takes off running in it's own direction.

Songs like the first leak "Flash Delirium" and "Song for Dan Treacy" sound like superhero theme songs, dragged through disco, dashed with Motown and blasted through the speaker system at a rave party. Yet they are able to accomplish all of this without sacrificing any of the tongue-in-cheek qualities that made their debut an overnight success. Their humor shines through the best on oddball jam "Brian Eno" named after the famous producer and solo artist who has worked with everyone from The Talking Heads to U2 that propels a building chant of "what does he know? / Brian Eno!" This quirky tribute rides an infectious groove that despite its playfulness comes surprisingly close to achieving something substantive.

On the flip side, "I've Found a Whistle" with its gentle chords and plodding drums, manages to get the most melancholy from earnest lyrics like "I've found a whistle / that works every time." Even though lead singer Andrew Van Wyngarden name-checks tricksters, thieves, axes and other medieval imagery, the song sounds like it's made of real pain and desperation. Their signature keyboards don't even enter the fray prominently until the extended "Siberian Breaks," a song that feels at first like a Frankenstein of lesser songs but ultimately ends up sounding like a structured work.

Even the weirder moments sound like pop music with "Lady Dada's Nightmare" and "Someone's Missing," despite their brevity – and in the case of the former song, a lyric-less mash-up of melodies and screaming actually make for catchy pieces of music. This all leads up to the album's standout moment and closing swansong, "Congratulations."

On this ballad we finally see MGMT stop running from themselves, greeting the subject of fame head on with lyrics that read, "I've got someone to make reports, that tell me how my money's spent, to book my stays and draw my blinds, so I can't tell what's really there." This is a line that, like the best of MGMT's songs, fails to fall into easy characterization, simultaneously embracing the best and worst of fame itself; a sentiment that makes the scant clapping at the track's end sound at once sad and funny. But after the album fades, one thing is clear: the band deserves a round of applause.

Peter Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu.

(MCT)

"Congratulations" won't disappoint fans of MGMT's first release, "Oracular Spectacular," though it features a less poppy sound and represents a new stage of development for the band.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?

for On-Cam
0 Local B
ch Ads for

You could see your ad here!

Best way to get to the campus community!

CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

Veteran rocker Willie Nile to play NoHo

By Dave Coffey
Collegian Correspondent

Willie Nile has earned a reputation from critics and fans alike as one of the most talented and respected rock n' roll songwriters of the last thirty years. Hailing from Buffalo, N.Y., Nile has been wowing crowds with his sublime songwriting abilities and charismatic stage presence since he taught himself his first rock n' roll song as a teenager.

Nile's eponymous debut in 1980 was met with immense critical acclaim. Praised as one of the greatest singer-songwriters to emerge from the N.Y. scene in years, he was immediately compared to a broad spectrum of legendary musicians, from Bob Dylan to The Clash. Critics weren't the only ones to take notice. Soon after the release of his debut album, Pete Townshend asked Nile and his band to support The Who on their 1980 summer tour.

After increased exposure and success from opening for The Who, Nile released yet another critically acclaimed album, "Golden Down," the following year. Just as his star was rising, however, Nile's career came to a screeching halt because of legal problems in the early 1980s.

Despite this, Nile regained his footing in the late 1980s, and reemerged with his first studio album in a decade with "Places I Have Never Been" in 1991. Following this release, Nile released the EP "Hard Times in America" in 1992, which garnered the artist some recognition in Europe.

Since his rise from the ashes with "Places I Have Never Been," Nile has released three more studio albums, as well as three live albums, along with a 2008 performance DVD, "Live from the Streets of New York." Nile is currently touring in support of his most recent studio album, "House of a Thousand Guitars." Released in April of 2009, the album is a mix of Nile's grittier, guitar-based classic rock material and his softer, more subdued balladry.

Since his ascendance as a bona fide rock singer-songwriter, Nile has performed and recorded with a plethora of musicians from a myriad of genres, including the likes of Bruce Springsteen, Ringo Starr, Tori Amos and Elvis Costello.

Nile is perhaps best known and most critically lauded for his passionate and energetic live shows. Nile's concerts are typically a mixture of raucous, crowd-pleasing rock n' roll moving, room-filled-with-lighters, ballads and lighthearted conversation between Nile and the audience. To describe his live shows as intimate would be a vast understatement; Nile makes every member in attendance feel like he is playing especially for him or her.

Nile's live accompaniment is usually sparse, making for a minimalistic yet raw sound. Frankie Lee, Nile's longtime friend and songwriting partner, joins Nile on two-piece drum kit and background vocals. Johnny Pisano, on electric bass guitar, rounds out a live power trio with low-end duties. During the show, Nile sporadically switches between guitar and piano depending on the song at hand.

Nile will be performing on Saturday, March 27 at the Iron Horse in Northampton. Nile will be supported by fellow blue-collar rock-and-roller Ray Mason. The show starts at 7 p.m. and tickets are $16 in advance, $19 at the door. Tickets are still available at the Iron Horse Entertainment Group website, iheg.com.

Dave Coffey can be reached at dscoffey@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY WILLIENILE.COM

Willie Nile will make a stop at the Iron Horse Saturday in support of his latest album, "House of a Thousand Guitars."

Light, fresh and healthy spring meals hit the spot

By Ellie Rulon-Miller
Collegian Staff

Spring is officially here – temperatures may still be hovering around chilly and cold, but according to the calendar the spring season has been upon us since last Saturday. The semester is already halfway over, and summer will soon be here. Yes, it's the perfect time to get healthy and fit for summer.

Dieting in springtime can be very easy because of all the fruits and vegetables that are in season. Spring and summer are the best seasons for light salads. The "spring salad" is simple to make, and it's easy to come up with your own variations to make your taste buds sing with delight.

One version of the spring salad has strawberries in it, so it would be best to make when strawberries are in season – closer to May would be ideal. The salad contains six cups of torn spinach, two cups of halved strawberries, two tablespoons of slivered almonds, goat cheese and French bread. To make it, you just put together the spinach, strawberries, and almonds in a bowl, toast a few slices of French bread, and spread some goat cheese on it. Goat cheese can also add to the taste of the salad without the bread.

These ingredients are easy to find and highly nutritious. Spinach is loaded with antioxidants, contains protein and has a lot of vitamins and minerals. One cup of strawberries has only 45 calories and will give you your daily needed Vitamin C. Almonds, like most nuts, contain "good fats." They help lower your cholesterol. Almonds are also a good source of Vitamin E. Goat cheese is a healthy alternative to cheese made from cow's milk – it has more protein and less fat and is generally easier to digest than cow's milk products.

This salad is delicious without dressing, but would also be great with a light dressing. The Internet holds a bevy of recipes for healthy, homemade salad dressings.

You can also make a decent spring salad using the contents of the salad bar at the dining commons on campus, albeit a slightly heavier one. Just use spinach, tomato as an alternative to strawberries, nuts, dried cranberries and a small amount of cheese. The dining commons usually have walnuts, if not at the salad bar then near the ice cream. To add fiber and protein to this salad, add kidney beans.

Healthy snacking is simple too. Among the most underrated snack foods is yogurt. The dining commons also have low-fat granola available in their selection of cereals.

But spring isn't just about tasty, healthy salads – it's also about spending time outside. Getting exercise and having fun are one in the same during spring. The sun is out; the temperature doesn't require a sweatshirt. This is perfect weather for soccer, Frisbee, basketball, kickball – any outdoor game.

It's also a great time for weekend hiking. A short drive away is Mt. Tom, a great hike with beautiful views (and a plethora of perfect picnic locations).

With wonderful weather on the way – just after those pesky snow showers coming up – there's nowhere to hide from healthy springtime fun. Get out there and get fit the fun and easy way this spring!

Ellie Rulon-Miller can be reached at erulonmi@student.umass.edu.

(MCT)

A spinach salad, rich in vitamins and minerals, makes for a light and refreshing spring dinner. Pair this with some fun in the sun and your waist will be trim by bikini season.

UM looks for win streak

By Ben Lambert
Collegian Staff

It's been a while since the Massachusetts tennis team has put together consecutive wins.

Back on Feb. 6, UMass took a 7-0 decision over Siena, a win that sparked a four-match winning streak that extended until its loss on Feb. 27 to Boston College. Following the loss, the Minutewomen dropped another four in a row.

But with a win in its last match to Presbyterian last week, UMass will look to start a new winning streak as it plays twice this coming weekend. The Minutewomen will first travel to face the New Jersey Institute of Technology on Saturday before returning home for a match with Hofstra on Sunday. The Minutewomen (5-6) are coming off a victory over the Presbyterian College Blue Hose that snapped a five-match losing streak.

The Highlanders currently stand at 7-7 on the season and are coming off a 4-3 victory over Seton Hall, one of their notable triumphs that include wins over Bryant, Hofstra and Dayton. Junior captain Ana Lidon won twice in that match, pacing the Highlanders at the No. 2 singles and teaming with sophomore Annie Lovdal to win at No. 2 doubles. Senior Fanny Aizer is the most successful NJIT performer on the year as she holds a 9-2 record at the No. 5 singles.

Junior Nina Mayevska, the No. 1 singles competitor for the Highlanders, fell to Denise Liebschner of Seton Hall, bringing her record on the year to 5-9. She was the 2009 NJCAA Division III Champion at No. 2 singles and No. 1 doubles last year for Kingsborough Community College in Brooklyn, N.Y. She won 25 of 27 matches on the year, and was named to the NJCAA Region XV championships all-tournament team.

This is the first season for the Highlanders as active full-time members of NCAA Division I women's tennis. They were selected to finish third in the preseason coaches poll in the Great West Conference, which is also in its inaugural season.

The second match of the weekend for UMass is against a youthful Pride squad that returns only three players from last year's squad.

Hofstra has won its past three matches, which includes wins over Queens College, Towson University and Marist College. They dropped only one match in their latest victory over Marist, sweeping the doubles matches and all but the No. 2 match in singles play.

Last year, the Minutewomen swept Hofstra 7-0 in Amherst. Magdalena Ploch defeated Lauren Clifton 6-1, 6-1 in No. 1 singles play last year, and will hope to do the same again this year as both players return. The lone bright spot for the Pride was at No. 1 doubles, as Clifton teamed with Stacy Kent to defeat Ploch and Tanisha Hodgson. Kent has since graduated.

The Minutewomen ak o swept Hofstra in 2006-07, as Michele Spiess won two matches to lead the Minutewomen to victory. Maude Lecluyse, who was victorious at No. 3 singles in this match, is the only Minutewomen who played in that match to return for this weekend's match. No players return for Hofstra.

After this weekend's matches, the Minutewomen next return to action against Sacred Heart in Fairfield, Conn. it'll be a one-match road trip for the Minutewomen, as they'll return to Amherst for the final three regular season matches of the spring season. After that, the Minutewomen will travel to St. Louis, Mo. for the Atlantic 10 championships.

Ben Lambert can be reached at wlambert@student.umass.edu

Members of UMass' squad gather together on the court last fall. The Minutewomen will play two matches this weekend against NJIT and Hofstra.

UMass races for Yankee Cup

By Eric Mansfield
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts rowing team will travel to Kingston, R.I. Saturday to compete in the Yankee Cup, a four team regatta that will include Rhode Island, New Hampshire and Connecticut.

The regatta will include races for the first Varsity 8, second Varsity 8, Varsity 4, first Novice 8, second Novice 8 and Novice 4.

UMass coach Jim Dietz is excited for this Saturday, saying this regatta is a "big gauge" for his team and will really help him see where his team is at right now. Although it is still early in the season, Dietz has been pleased with the amount of work his team has put into practices so far. He also knows that the team looks and feels physically stronger based on the rowing ergometers they have been working with in training.

Recent training has been tough on UMass with all of the flooding that has taken place in this area, however during their training trip to Florida, Dietz noticed much improvement and was "extremely pleased" with how the Minutewomen were performing. Dietz said that although these meets before the conference championship are important, the main goal is to be at their peak performance for the Atlantic 10 championships.

The team atmosphere has been one of support. Led by captains Teresa O'Brien and Ana Tocco, the team has been kept in good shape throughout training. Dietz said that the captains have done a good job stepping up and leading the team.

Over the years, the A-10 championships have been dominated by UMass, however regattas that include conference foe URI have become ones of rivalry. Dietz is very much aware of the rivalry, referencing just how close UMass and URI are in the standings year in and year out. UMass and URI have been "two of the stronger teams" in the conference according to Dietz and "the rivalry with URI is a real one".

Dietz said he saw the Ram's crew in Florida during their training, but he did not go as far as to say how good they looked.

"[It's] so early, [I] can't tell" Dietz said.

Dietz also added that the Minutewomen are going to have to "work really, really, really hard" to come out of this regatta with a win.

"Crews are always getting faster," Dietz said. "These are really great athletes".

Rowing is growing as a sport across college campuses and the competition will only get tighter as the years go by.

The last six months has shown an entire team effort in improvement. Dietz, who already knows that URI will be a tough competitor all year, said that whoever wins the conference championship this year "depends on the strength of St. Joseph's," another team that over the past couple of seasons has been there with UMass and URI at the end.

UMass has a very deep crew this year. Dietz is still looking to figure out where everybody stands and is in the process of "moving people along."

Eric Mansfield can be reached at esmansfi@student.umass.edu.

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
Needs You!

Do you want to build your resumé?

Do you need business and sales experience?

Become an ADVERTISING
REPRESENTATIVE

*SOM Students strongly encouraged to apply.

To Apply: Contact Mike Tortorici @ 545-3500
or e-mail thecollegian@gmail.com

UM begins A–10 schedule with GW

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

Most softball coaches would be thrilled to see their team come out of a weekend with a 4-3 record.

Massachusetts coach Elaine Sortino is not one of them.

Sortino extended practice by over half an hour on Wednesday to focus primarily on hitting after getting blanked by Texas A&M and Long Beach State over the weekend. The last time a team shut UMass out was against then-No. 18 Louisiana State, who took a 14-0 win during the National Fastpitch Collegiate Association Leadoff Classic on Feb. 28.

Although the offense struggled at times over the weekend, Sortino said it wasn't the only reason why the Minutewomen (15-7) haven't performed as well as she would've hoped.

"It's been something different every five minutes," Sortino said. "That means that nothing's really bad, which is fine for me... Our expectations are very, very high so I think it's good that we're not satisfied."

However, her team remains optimistic as it begins its Atlantic 10 schedule with a doubleheader on Sunday against George Washington. In years past, UMass typically plays its best softball during its conference schedule.

The Minutewomen have two A-10 losses in the past three years combined (both in 2009). Sortino hopes that track record can continue this season starting with a double-header against the Colonials.

GW (4-13, 1-1 A-10) is coming off a recent loss to Towson at home after splitting its first A-10 series against La Salle.

Despite the early season struggles, Sortino refuses to take the Colonials lightly when they have played their last three games at home and will have preparation against Rhode Island on Friday and Saturday before the Maroon and White come to town.

Sortino also knows that her team had a difficult time against a GW team that also had a losing record in 2009. It took the Minutewomen eight innings before they defeated the Colonials, 3-2, on April 17.

"We know what they were a year ago," Sortino said referring to their ability to surprise teams. "It's always tougher away than it is at home."

While Sortino has been frustrated with her team's output so far, pitching continues to be one of her team's biggest strengths.

The Minutewomen have shutout five opponents this season and have a team ERA of 2.03.

Sophomore Sara Plourde has already shown some of her talent early in the season, as she leads the NCAA in strikeouts (236), but Sortino wants to see more out of senior Bailey Sanders, who currently has an 8.40 ERA.

Last season, the Minutewomen rode alumnus Brandice Balschmiter's pitching throughout the season. While Plourde is proving to be capable of doing the same, Sortino would rather share the responsibility between her two pitchers.

"I think it's critical that we get innings and wins and all kinds of things out of Bailey, so I think the 1-2 punch is kind of what you need," Sortino said.

UMass should see its pitching at its strongest on Sunday as the Colonials have a team batting average of .202 and no hitters above .300.

If their pitching is any indication for what the beginning of the A-10 schedule might look like for UMass, Sortino should not expect the weekend to resemble any sort of pitcher's duel. GW's pitching staff has a combined 5.32 ERA while Kara Clauss (5.76 ERA) leads her team with a 3-11 record.

The doubleheader will be the last time the Minutewomen are away from the UMass Softball Complex before their home opener, as they will play a doubleheader against Dartmouth in Amherst on Tuesday.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

Whitney Williams covers third base and attempts to tag out a runner in a game last season. The shortstop is hitting .207 in her senior season at UMass.

CINEMARK
For advance tickets & showtimes visit
cinemark.com
or call 1-800-FANDANGO + Exp Code 1118#
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
FIRST MATINEE SHOWTIME (7 DAYS A WEEK) $5.25
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.50 • STUDENT $7.25 (WITH ID)

HOW TO TRAIN YOUR DRAGON - REAL D 3D ($2.75 SURCHARGE) [PG13] 145 415 645 915
◆ HOT TUB TIME MACHINE [R] ⓘ 130 440 745 1025
◆ HOW TO TRAIN YOUR DRAGON - 2D [PG] 1255 235 325 505 555 735 825 1005
◆ HOW TO TRAIN YOUR DRAGON - REAL D 3D [PG] 145 415 645 915
◆ DIARY OF A WIMPY KID [PG] 120 400 650 915
◆ REPO MEN [R] ⓘ 135 435 715 955
◆ THE BOUNTY HUNTER [PG13] 150 445 730 1025
◆ THE GHOST WRITER - [PG13] 125 415 710 1000
ALICE IN WONDERLAND - 2D [PG] 210 455 740 1020
GREEN ZONE [R] ⓘ 115 410 700 945
REMEMBER ME [PG13] 105 725
SHE'S OUT OF MY LEAGUE [R] ⓘ 425 1015
SHUTTER ISLAND - [R] ⓘ 100 405 705 1010
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

Plourde leads UMass in circle

Sophomore leads country in K's

By Geena Lombardi
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball team's starting pitcher Sara Plourde is living up to high expectations.

The sophomore currently leads the country in strikeouts this season with 236 in 128 innings and her strong performance in the circle also earned her the honors of this week's UMass Athlete of the Week and Atlantic 10 Pitcher of the Week.

The sophomore from Bristol, Conn. broke school records last weekend at the San Diego Classic II, striking out 22 batters in a single game against No. 22 Texas A&M. Plourde did not allow a hit in over eight innings and the one run allowed proved to be the game winner. Plourde came close to breaking records in a game against Illinois State earlier in the season, where she threw 18 strikeouts.

The record was previously held by four-time A-10 Pitcher of the Year, Brandice Balschmitter. Balschmitter recorded 19 strikeouts last year against George Washington.

In total, Plourde struck out 96 batters at the San Diego Classic II, allowing only two runs in her first two games pitched. The Minutewomen (15-7) had two back-to-back wins at day two of the classic with help from Plourde, who shutout Illinois-Chicago after allowing only five hits and no walks. In the 14 innings of the two games, Plourde allowed just one run.

Despite losing 2-0 on the final day of the classic to Long Island, Plourde still pitched strong with eight strikeouts along with one earned run allowed on six hits to improve her record to 14-3.

"We've worked really hard all winter to get everything to mix and get everything to move the way we want it to move. You kind of go not expecting anything, you just do it," Plourde said.

UMass coach Elaine Sortino did not imagine her new starter to be so successful in shutting out opponents, but Plourde seems to have proved her wrong.

"In terms of leading the country in strikeouts, I mean I've never even thought about it to tell you the truth," Sortino said. "You come with the expectation of doing well against your opponents."

The sophomore's impressive strikeout average has helped her team to numerous shutouts as well. She threw her second career no-hitter against Illinois State at the National Fastpitch Coaches Association Leadoff Classic, where UMass earned a 1-0 victory. The Maroon and White went on to shutout UT Chattanooga after Plourde allowed no runs on four hits and struck out 13 batters.

Plourde picked up her fourth shutout of the season against Virginia Tech, where she allowed three hits. She finished the game by retiring 11 batters in a row. Illinois-Chicago served as the most recent shutout for Plourde.

"She has a lot of movement and I think she gets a better sense of how to make the ball move a little bit better every day," Sortino said as a reason for why Plourde has emerged into a leading pitcher.

In the A-10, Plourde is placed second for her ERA of 1.20 and opposing batting average of .181, behind Jen Mineau of Fordham. This week's honor of A-10 Pitcher of the Week is Plourde's third of the season and second in a row.

Plourde has only improved upon her performance last year, where she was a two-time recipient of the A-10 Rookie of the Week. She went 6-1 last year with a 1.83 ERA and threw 67 strikeouts in the entire season, a number she has more than tripled so far this season.

"I definitely have more control for the most part," Plourde said. "I was a little inconsistent, so consistency is probably the biggest thing I've improved on."

As for the rest of the season, Plourde hopes to keep up her consistency, along with mixing up her pitches more, so she can avoid showing teams the same thing.

Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombard@student.umass.edu.

OFF-CAMPUS HOUSING • MARCH 25 + 27 2010 • INFORMATION DAYS

APARTMENT COMPLEX BUS TOURS

Visit and view these apartment complexes on the bus tour!

FIRST LOOP

Route/Complex	Arrive at Complex	Leave Complex
Route A
Brandywine	1:05pm	1:35pm
Sugarloaf	1:50pm	2:20pm
Route B
Aspen Chase	1:10pm	1:40pm
Alpine Commons	1:45pm	2:15pm
Rolling Green	2:20pm	2:50pm
Route C
Mill Valley Estates	1:15pm	1:45pm
Southpoint	1:50pm	2:20pm

SECOND LOOP

Route/Complex	Arrive at Comples	Leave Complex
Route A
Brandywine	3:20pm	3:50pm
Sugarloaf	4:05pm	4:35pm
Route B
Aspen Chase	3:25pm	3:55pm
Alpine Commons	4:00pm	4:30pm
Rolling Green	4:35pm	5:05pm
Route C
Mill Valley Estates	3:30pm	4:00pm
Southpoint	4:05pm	4:35pm

RESIDENTIAL AREA BUS STOPS

Bus Stop Locations	Pickup Time 1	Pickup Time 2
SW Horseshoe (near the Southwest Café)	12:30pm	2:45pm
Franklin DC (campus side by the Clark Building)	12:35pm	2:50pm
Northeast (at Arnold/Knowlton bus stop)	12:30pm	2:45pm
Sylvan (at the Cashin bus stop)	12:35pm	2:50pm
Orchard Hill (at basketball court nearest to Dickinson)	12:30pm	2:45pm
Central (at Butterfield)	12:35pm	2:50pm

SATURDAY AFTERNOON
MARCH 27
12:00 - 5:00pm
We'll pick you up in your area!

UMOCH APARTMENT COMPLEX BUS TOUR RAFFLE

Take a ride and get a free ticket for the raffle!

Enter to win a Wii System or a gift card to Wings!

UMassAmherst

Vladimir Ducasse works out for NFL scouts at UMass' Football Pro Day on Thursday at McGuirk Stadium. Ducasse is expected to switch to guard at the NFL level.

Scouts gather to see star Ducasse

12 others participate at McGuirk

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

It's not often that a Division I-AA school gathers much attention during a Pro Day. Then again, most Division I-AA schools don't have players projected to be picked in the first two rounds of the National Football League Draft.

Several NFL scouts were in attendance to watch offensive lineman Vladimir Ducasse perform at the Massachusetts football team's Pro Day at McGuirk Alumni Stadium. It was the second school in the entire state to hold an event for potential draft picks and free agents (Boston College was the other).

This year's Pro Day was the highest attended in Amherst in the past 10 years, with scouts from almost every team in attendance.

The day also featured 12 other players who were a mix of 2009 Minutemen and alums that are looking for invites into rookie camp. Around 20 NFL hopefuls from the surrounding schools in Massachusetts participated in the drills as well, who were looking to use the attention Ducasse brought in to make their own case for a team.

Other current players in attendance included safety Jeromy Miles, fullback Chris Zardas, tailback Tony Nelson, wide receivers Victor Cruz, Jeremy Horne and Joe Sanford in addition to defensive linemen Brandon Collier, Michael Hanson and Kyle Harrington.

Recent UMass graduates, Sean Smalls, Ben Coblyn, Ian Jorgensen, R. J. Cobbs and Courtney Robinson were also in attendance as well as Holy Cross quarterback Dominic Randolph. Robinson signed with the Philadelphia as a free agent after last year's draft before being released by the team in early August.

Although Ducasse knew that most of the clubs came to see him, he believes his teammates deserve a chance to make an NFL roster as well.

"All those guys were good throughout the whole season," Ducasse said. "We had scouts looking at film on them the whole season, so it's like a group thing. It's not only one person."

Despite the buzz surrounding his chances of making the NFL, Ducasse describes the process as fun, even with all of the poking and prodding he has dealt with the past few months.

"That's pretty much my job now so I've gotten used to it," he said about having to go through several measurements and physical tests.

Part of the reason for the Haitian native's calm demeanor throughout the process is the preparation he had developing as a football player. When he was in high school, he had to go through similar tests in order to get interest from different colleges.

Former UMass coach Don Brown and current coach Kevin Morris have been holding Junior Pro Days for the younger players, which simulates NFL workouts in order to familiarize themselves with a pre-draft workout regimen.

Another reason for his relaxed approach to workouts is the fact that the question isn't if he'll be drafted, but by whom and where he will go. Those questions cause him more excitement than nervousness.

"You have to be excited," Ducasse said. "You can't be nervous because it's a long process so you have to take it as it comes... I'm happy just to be in a situation like [mine]."

He also felt the most comfortable at McGuirk since he got to workout where he's used to playing football. While he didn't think that made too much of a difference compared to other workouts, wide receiver Jeremy Horne said he was much more relaxed playing in Amherst than he was during Pro Day at Boston College.

The 2010 NFL Draft will take place from April 22-24.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@daily-collegian.com.

Scouts gather at McGuirk Stadium to watch Vladimir Ducasse and other UMass players at the UMass Football Pro Day. Ducasse is expected to be drafted in the first few rounds of April's draft.

SPARE TIME FAMILY FUN CENTER
& CITY SPORTS GRILLE

Premier Sports Bar
7 Foot HD Projection TV ~ Over 25 TV's
Pub Style Menu ~ Weekly Drink Specials
Live Entertainment
Every Weekend

Live It Up!
Go Bowling
$1.99 per game
Tues & Wed 9pm-Close

All You Can Bowl & FREE Pizza
Thursdays 9pm-Close $13 per person
Unlimited Bowling & Shoe Rental

SPARE TIME & CITY SPORTS GRILLE
www.sparetimenorthampton.net
525 Pleasant St. 584-4830

UM opens up CAA schedule

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

Despite the outcome, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team will turn a page in its history Saturday afternoon, when they host Hofstra at Garber Field at 1 p.m.

The No. 18 Minutemen (5-2) will take on the No. 6 Pride (4-1), as UMass begins its conference schedule as a new member of the Colonial Athletic Association.

"Anytime you play a team in the top 10, it's a real challenge and this is no different," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "If you're fortunate enough to beat those guys it's a real confidence booster."

The Minutemen were part of the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference last season, a league in which they won the conference championship with a 6-1 record while making their 18th appearance in the NCAA tournament.

The Pride fell in the first round of the NCAA tournament to Cornell last season, and finished with an 11-4 record and a perfect 6-0 record in the CAA.

Both teams were picked to finish No. 1 and No. 2 in the CAA this season in the preseason coaches' poll.

UMass finishes its non-conference schedule at 5-2, including a huge win over No. 15 Brown on Tuesday, while scoring a combined 99 goals in its first seven games, the best offensive start since the 2003 season.

"I thought we set [our non-conference schedule] up pretty well, but now you're going to have to do some traveling within the league," Cannella said. "We play two home games and three away games in our conference, so that will be a challenge as well."

UMass will take on Penn State, Delaware and No. 13 Drexel on the road and host Towson, along with the Pride.

The No. 20 Minutemen fell to the No. 13 Pride last season on Long Island, 11-10, after building a four-goal halftime lead, but were outscored 8-3 in the second half.

"That was a disappointing loss," Cannella said. "I can remember how the guys felt, the entire team felt. You don't like those feelings. If that motivates you as an individual, you ask your guys how that felt. You hope that changes things for the guys that were involved in it last year."

UMass leads the all-time series 18-16, with the teams competing against one another since the 1992 season, as well as four meetings in the NCAA tournament.

Both teams are two of the top scoring teams in the country, with the Minutemen ranking fifth in the nation with 14.1 goals per game, while the Pride average 14.0 goals per game for sixth.

Sophomore attackman Art Kell (18 goals, 11 assists) leads the team, and is tied for 15th in the country in points per game (4.1).

"Offensively, we're scoring right around the same amount, so I think we both can score," Cannella said. "I think their MVP is Steven DiNapoli. He'll do everything for you. He's on the wing, he plays defense and you'll notice him at the game on Saturday running up and down the field, being a huge threat."

DiNapoli has two goals and two assists this year for the Pride, while Jamie Lincoln (17 goals) and Stephen Bentz (13 goals) will look to cool off Minutemen goalkeeper Tim McCormack.

McCormack registered a career-high 17 saves against the Bears on Tuesday, including 10 in the second half and will look to keep the momentum going with a stoic defense in front of the cage.

UMass' defensive unit is first in the nation in caused turnovers (12.2 per game), and twelfth in ground balls (34.7 per game).

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Defense key vs. No. 6 Hofstra

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

Coming into this season, Massachusetts men's lacrosse coach Greg Cannella knew he had a strong defense. However, now approaching his first conference game in the Colonial Athletic Conference, Cannella's defensive approach is as important as ever.

After their first seven games, the No.18 Minutemen (5-2) lead the CAA with 14.14 goals per game. Their 60 assists rank second in the conference but No. 6 Hofstra (4-1) nearly matches UMass in each of those categories, besting the Minutemen with 8.8 assists per game.

Last season, UMass won games by an average of 4.6 goals, and their current margin is plus-4.4, but the Pride hold a larger win margin of five this season.

The Minutemen are holding their own defensively this season as well. UMass averages a conference-best 11.86 caused-turnovers per game, nearly five more per game than Hofstra.

Now in a conference full of perennial NCAA tournament teams, Cannella isn't shying away from the notion that his defense will be consistently tested for 60 minutes.

"We know, defensively, that we're going to play a lot because of our run-and-gun offense," Cannella said. "We have to lean on our defense a bunch to win games because when we're not shooting well they have to perform well."

Running the UMass defense this season is redshirt senior All-American Diogo Godoi and sophomore Tom Celentani. Godoi (13 ground balls, 11 caused-turnovers) is a consistent veteran for the Minutemen with his physical defense and Celentani is taking advantage of his first full season of significant playing time.

Celentani leads all Minutemen with 20 caused-turnovers while starting every game this season for Cannella.

The two defenders provide UMass with a strong front in front of first-year starting goalkeeper Tim McCormack.

Even with defense being a strong point for the Minutemen so far this season, special-teams goals have hurt UMass early on in the season. The Minutemen have a conference-worst .414 penalty-kill percentage, giving up 17 man-down goals.

Cannella believes that the experience that the Minutemen get from those misfortunes help them for the future.

"It's all about getting in some reps," Cannella said about improving his special teams units. "[Being a] man down is about giving up the 12-15-yard shot and relying on your goalie to make some saves. We need to inject some energy into that group."

While a lot of the pressure on defense lies on the goalie and defensemen themselves, midfielders have an important role on defense as well.

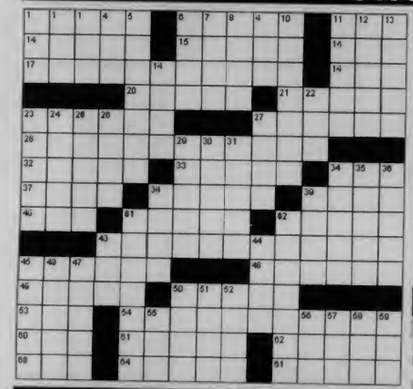
"They probably have one of the most important jobs on the field," Cannella said. "It's a tough chore for those guys but it's also a selfless job. They don't get a lot of press. They work on defending, clearing the ball and creating transition opportunities for us. They've all done a great job."

Sophomore midfielder Greg Rushing has 72 faceoff wins in 122 chances and his team-leading 31 ground balls makes for a strong game in transition for the Minutemen. His .598 faceoff percentage is third in the CAA behind Charley Henneghan (.658) of Penn State and Zak Fisher (.605) of Drexel.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillme@student.umass.edu.

Jeff Bernstein/Collegian

Midfielder Greg Rushing fights for a faceoff against Albany early this year at Garber Field. The sophomore leads UMass with 72 faceoff wins in 122 chances.



Get the skinny.

ZANNA
downtown Amherst www.zanna.com

comics

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Poison plant
6. Acclaim
11. Geographic illustration
14. A Muse
15. France's longest river
16. Earned Run Average
17. A person who amuses
19. Lair
20. 1000 kilograms
21. French for "Queen"
23. Found at the end of a pencil
27. Mischievous one
28. Statistics
32. Avoid
33. Exchange
34. "Eureka!"
37. Catholic church service
38. Push
39. Smile radiantly
40. Wood chopping tool
41. Shakespeare's theater
42. Vitality
43. Demonstration
45. Magazine feature
48. Bug
49. Diadem
50. Heavy pin
53. Chafe
54. Dinosaur with 3 horns
60. Bother
61. Not inner
62. Small Asian goat antelope
63. Encountered
64. Wheezy
65. Manicurist's board

DOWN
1. Behold
2. Ashes holder
3. Welcome ___
4. Consumed food
5. A funeral procession
6. Distinctive flair
7. Metal money
8. Connects two points
9. "___ we having fun yet?"
10. Patio
11. First aid attendant
12. Sporting venue
13. A jury or board
18. A unit of pressure
22. S
23. Swelling under the skin
24. Unwind
25. Make smile
26. Mats of grass
27. Carnival attraction
29. A Musketeer
30. Investigate
31. Safe place
34. Eagle's nest
35. Mayhem
36. Catkin
38. Sleigh
39. Wagers
41. One who bestows
42. A more favorable position
43. Church bench
44. Level
45. Leave
46. Puritan
47. Android
50. Ritual
51. Chilled
52. Extremely
55. Regret
56. A male cat
57. Refinable rock
58. Average for a hole
59. Clever

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Do you want to know what is really cool with a little bit of whipped cream? Twister.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Greek mythology has got it all wrong, Michael J. Fox killed the chimera, dummy.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Is it warm enough for you outside or are you finally going to grow up and stop whining about every nice thing I do for you?

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
All the clouds in the sky on this beautiful evening do remind me of your mother.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
There once was a man from Nantucket, but now he just lives in a bucket. Damn recession.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
You are the master of bringing home the bacon, until the market's cameras catch you.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
If you keep wearing your hair like this, you might finally get to be in Flock of Seagulls, or at least a cool, low-budget porno.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Despite what you may think, seeing wrinkles on Chat Roulette is not quite going all the way.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Although the janitor may be a vampire, he's a friendly vampire, the type that always knows just how you're feeling.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Your cat doesn't need all those special cat foods. What it needs is to stop peeing on my couch.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Did ya hear, Leroy? We've done gone and become a communis state, I don' like it, I reckon, neither'd my daddy.

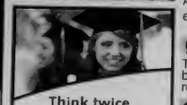
capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Bill O'Reilly loves wearing a nice size 10. How big is your annual elephant prom dress?

Attention! The image to your right is a LIVE feed direct from Video Chat

Little did you know it is a gateway to the 22nd CENTURY!!!

UMass Amherst Quincy?

Take UMass Amherst home with you this Summer



Three Summer Sessions

200+ ONLINE classes

REGISTER NOW!

Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net

UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

Think twice. Borrow once.

Apply once and secure financing for your entire college career! Rest assured your local not-for-profit cooperative will be with you every step of the way.

UMassFIVE COLLEGE FEDERAL CREDIT UNION
800.852.5886
umassfive.org

Student Choice

Are you looking for a Job for next semester?

The Daily Collegian Graphics Department is hiring for advertising production in 2010!

Contact Amanda Joinson at Advertising@DailyCollegian.com for more information, or stop by The Collegian office in the Campus Center Basement

Savory Spuds

		4
	3	1	7			5
5		9			3		8
		3		1
	4		3				6
		5	9			7
1				7	4		5
			6	8
		7			1	9

INTERESTED IN GETTING BUSINESS EXPERIENCE?

THE COLLEGIAN IS HIRING A NEW BUSINESS MANAGER FOR 2010-2011.

APPLICATIONS ARE AVAILABLE AT 113 CAMPUS CENTER,
DUE FRIDAY, MARCH 26TH, BY 5 PM.

TO LEARN MORE ABOUT THE POSITION E-MAIL DJETTE@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM OR CALL 413.545.5870

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IS HIRING A DISTRIBUTION MANAGER

We are looking for someone to be responsible for managing delivery in the early morning hours.

If you think this job is right for you stop by 113 Campus Center Basement, Call 413.545.3500 or E-Mail thecollegian@gmail.com

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE

PUFFTON VILLAGE

EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS

SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses

ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!

ON SITE LAUNDRY,
OFF STREET PARKING.

BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.

OFFICE HOURS: 8AM TO 4PM MONDAY - FRIDAY
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Full Time Summer Employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $11.50/hour. The job description and application are available at the Housing Assigment Office, 235 Whitmore and is due April 2nd.

Bartenders needed for FT/PT positions. No experience required. Earn $20-$70 per hour. Call us at 617-849-8074

TUTORING SERVICES

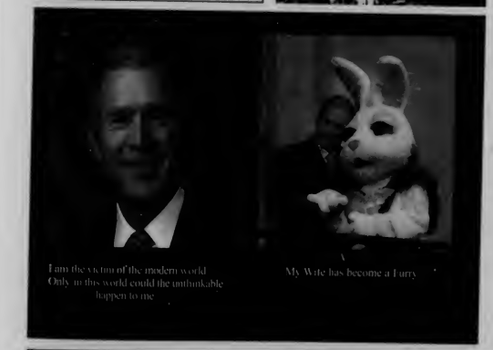
Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats, GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 Jboid42@yahoo.com

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

28 Stockbridge St: 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, livingroom, eat in kitchen, pantry,laundry, fi nished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,575/Mo+ www.amherst-lincolnrealty.com 253-7879

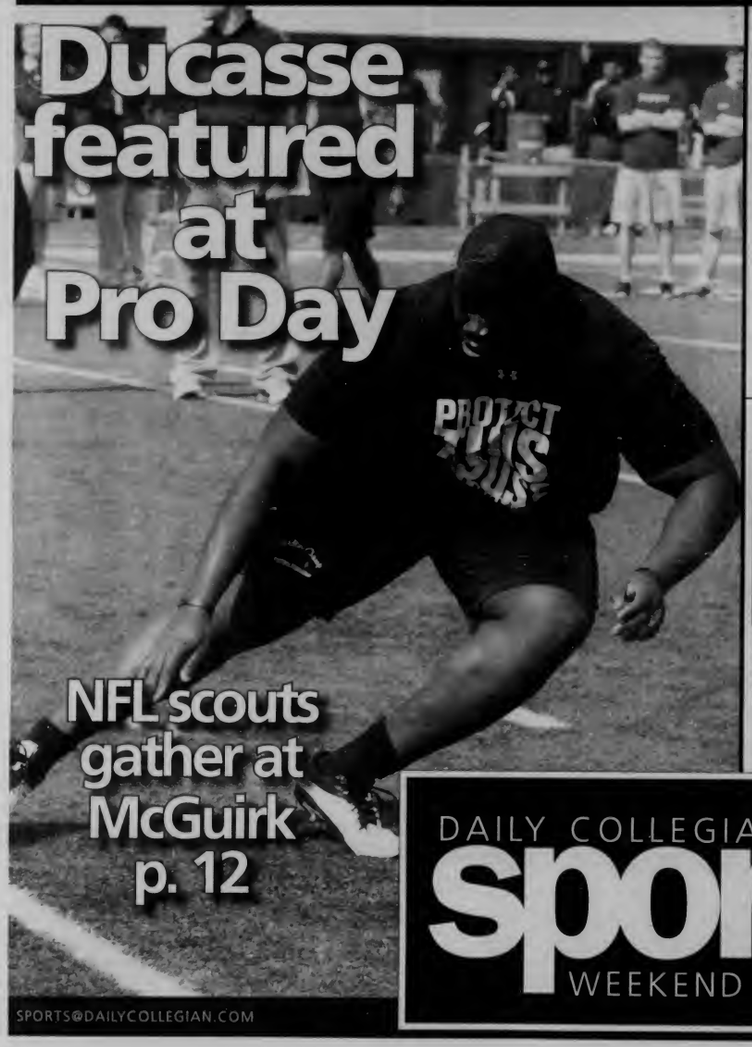
www.amherstsales.com www.AmherstMARentals.com 413.549.1398 Student Rentals



SERVICES

Have too much fun on spring break? Get tested. Get Birth Control & EC. 27 Pray St. Amherst, behind Bertucci's. Walk-ins welcome! Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday. 413-548-9992 or www.tapestryhealth.org

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org



EMPLOYMENT

Fall 2010 internships with the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn 12 under graduate credits. No experience necessary and will provide training! Contact us at 413-545-1995 or stop by at 922 Campus Center.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, MARCH 26, 2010

Ducasse featured at Pro Day

NFL scouts gather at McGuirk p. 12

MEN'S LACROSSE

Coming off an upset of No. 15 Brown on Tuesday, the Minutemen look to top their second straight top 15 foe when they play their first ever CAA conference game against No. 6 Hofstra Saturday at Garber Field.

SEE PAGE 13

SOFTBALL

The Minutewomen will face its first Atlantic 10 competition on Sunday after going 15-7 during non-conference play. UMass will travel to George Washington for a double header.

SEE PAGE 10

DAILY COLLEGIAN sports WEEKEND EDITION

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 58 LOW: 45 www.DailyCollegian.com MONDAY, MARCH 29, 2010

Student aid about to see 'change'

Landmark health legislation passed by Obama and Congress will alter student loan landscape

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

Included in the landmark health care reform legislation, which passed through Congress Thursday, were sweeping reforms on how college students can take out loans to finance their education.

Thursday's 56-to-43 vote in the Senate and 220-to-207 vote in the House of Representatives clear the way not only for a massive restructuring of how Americans will pay for their health care, but also a radical reshaping of financial aid and educational lending, as private banks will no longer issue student loans through the Federal Family Education Loan Program (FFELP). Instead, all federal student loans will be issued through the government-run Direct Loan Program, with no subsidies going to banks and lending agencies.

The legislation's aim is to streamline how student loans are issued, as well as reduce the interest rates on student loans to 7.9 percent through the direct loan program, as opposed to the 8.5 percent under FFELP. Further, the lending reform will increase the amount students can get through Pell Grants and lower the threshold of eligibility for such grants, meaning students with higher family incomes will be able to receive more financial aid from the government. The non-partisan Congressional Budget Office believes the legislation will create $61 billion in savings over the next decade through cutting the subsidies to banks. Those savings will be used to expand the Pell Grant program by $36 billion, send $2.55 billion to historically black and other minority colleges and give $2 billion to community colleges and career training programs for various initiatives. The legislation will expand income-based repayment options for student loan borrowers by $1.5 billion, raise College Access Challenge Grants by $750 million and send $50 million to colleges to help them adjust to the direct loan program. It will also lower the window for student debt forgiveness from 25 years to 20 years.

Across the country, students' rights groups were ecstatic about the new legislation, while organizations involved in issuing student loans were less glowing in their assessment of the bill.

"It's a really big help to students," said Pedro De La Torre, senior advocacy associate at the Washington, D.C.-based progressive group, Campus Progress. "I think the most important thing it's going to do is it's going to prevent Pell Grants from getting cut," he continued, "The [Obama] administration said that if it didn't pass this, it could be forced to cut Pell Grants, it could be forced to cut half a million students altogether and cut the grants up to 60 percent for everyone else, so the fact that we can make up that shortfall and also increase the grant and do it all by cutting wasteful subsidies to student loan companies, it's a really big victory for students and young people."

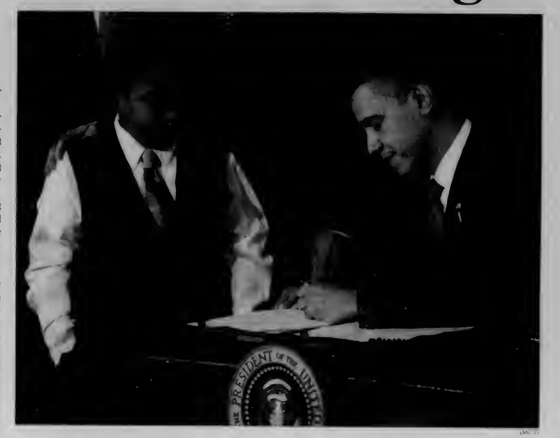
Although Congress initially passed the health care reform bill last Monday, Republicans' objections to several provisions of the legislation forced Congress to take a second vote with several amended clauses Thursday evening.

Rep. George Miller (D-CA), chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee and the House co-author of health insurance and student loan reforms, issued a statement to media outlets Thursday, praising the Senate for passing the reforms.

"Today, the Senate listened to the American people by voting to improve our historic health reform law and stop sending wasteful subsidies to big banks, instead of students," he said. "These reforms will also end a sweetheart deal that banks have enjoyed for decades, at the expense of our students and families. These savings will be used to help students and families pay for college and reduce our deficit. With one move, we will make college dramatically more affordable, prepare students for good jobs, help keep jobs in America and reduce the deficit."

The United States Student Association (USSA) met the bill's passage with excitement and commended Congress for passing the reconciliation provisions.

"Today will go down in history as the day when the federal government chose to invest in college students over bank profits," said USSA President Gregory Cendana in a Thursday release.

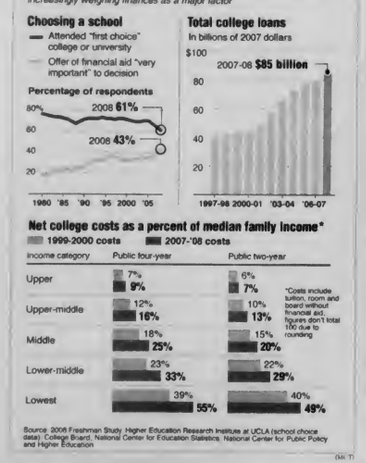


Locally, Student Government Association chair of the State and Federal Organizing Committee Melissa Urban said the SGA lobbied hard in support of the bill.

"We've been working on advocacy for student loan reform," she said. "We've been having call-in days and we've also been collecting little pieces of paper in the form of bricks with information on how much debt students had at UMass," she said. "We've been advocating for it because of what it would do for student loans and for student debt," continued Urban.

College financing expert and director of FastWeb and MK Consulting Mark Kantrowitz said that while the bill is "a step in the right direction," it certainly could have been more progressive.

"The savings will be used for debt reduction; about 20 billion will be used to reduce the federal budget deficit, and a lot of the remainder is used to plug a funding shortfall in the Pell Grant program. That benefits students because if it weren't for that, it would be cut. It also provides some increases in the Pell Grant over the next 10 years but it's pretty anemic, it's not that much. The main benefit to going to the direct loan program is that it has a lower interest ... and approval rates are higher in the direct loan program," said Kantrowitz. "The legislation also includes President Obama's proposal to improve the income-based repayment plan, which is a safety net for borrowers who are experiencing financial difficulty. President Obama's proposal is to cut monthly payments by one third and to accelerate the forgiveness program," he said.



See STUDENT AID on page 2

President Barack Obama signs the health care reform bill in the East Room in Washington, D.C., on Tuesday, March 23. The bill includes major reforms of the federal student loan landscape.

Expensive choices

As the amount of tuition loans rises, students deciding on colleges are increasingly weighing finances as a major factor

Vassell court hearing rescheduled

Jason Vassell speaks with supporters on March 2. He had his latest court hearing rescheduled for April 1.

The Committee for Justice for Jason announced on Friday that a previously scheduled hearing in the two-year-old criminal case against Jason Vassell has been rescheduled for this Thursday, April 1. It remains unclear, however, who requested the date change and the rationale behind it.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian originally reported in early March that a judge of the Superior Court of Hampshire County postponed a motion on Tuesday, March 2 to dismiss the case against former University of Massachusetts student Vassell until March 26.

The motion was proposed in late 2008 by Vassell's defense team, and seeks to dismiss the charges against Vassell based on claims of selective racial prosecution.

That pre-trial hearing for Vassell was to be presented at the courthouse in Northampton on March 2, but was rescheduled at the request of the prosecutor for the case against Vassell, Assistant District Attorney Elizabeth Farris.

Vassell was arrested on Feb. 3, 2008 on charges of aggravated assault for allegedly stabbing two white males in a contentious altercation at MacKimmie Hall on the UMass campus.

According to the Committee's press release, the rescheduled hearing will take place at the Hampshire County courthouse at 15 Gothic St., Northampton at 2 p.m. on Thursday.

– Collegian News Staff

Shooting hoops for Haiti

The Muslim Students Association held a "Hoops for Haiti" charity basketball game yesterday in Bowden Gym. From left to right: President Zamil Akhtar, Tanya Sattar, Salman Khanani, Muneeb Rahman and Shan Khan.

ARTS & LIVING

Underwood plays Mullins Center

Carrie Underwood performed at the Mullins Center on Saturday, wearing fabulous outfits and singing several ballads.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Kell nets hat trick in upset of Pride

Behind Art Kell's fourth hat trick of the year, the Minutemen upset No. 6 Hofstra 11-9 on Saturday for their first win over a top 10 team since 2006.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Columnist Lauren Vincent argues that we won't have a progressive society until women's sexuality is given as much weight as men's.

SEE PAGE 3

DailyCollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian and Localocracy.org have teamed up to offer UMass students an interactive and democratic way to respond to our news coverage.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 40

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Joinson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Cal Scannell
COPIES EDITOR Andrew Witts
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnieri
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ellie Ralon-Miller
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heuhion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Auser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Spare
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cody
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

COPY EDITOR
Caitlin Quinn

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Dan Centola

Reforms coming to federal student aid

STUDENT AID from page 1

Kantrowitz cautioned that while the bill will help students in the future, no one currently enrolled in America's higher education system will see these benefits.

"The effective date is July 1, 2014, so someone who's in school now will not see any of those benefits. The legislation's better than nothing, but it could have been a lot better," he said. "The members of Congress were constrained by the need to use budget reconciliation to pass it."

Kantrowitz said current private lenders still operating under FFELP will be seriously hurt by the bill.

"The lenders that currently make student loans are no longer going to be making loans; the only loans that will remain out of that will be private alternative loans that don't have anything to do with the federal government."

Although the legislation provides a grim prognosis for current private lenders, Jessica Hipp, communications manager for the non-profit student loan group Massachusetts Educational Financing Authority (MEFA), said her organization has already shifted from FFELP to direct loan, and that her organization no longer originates federal loans. Instead, it gives supplemental loans to families who need additional funds, meaning MEFA will not be adversely affected.

"In Massachusetts, MEFA for example, we haven't originated any federal loan for a few years," she said. "We supplement the federal programs with fixed interest loans, parents and students are co-signers. Anyone who's a resident of Massachusetts can borrow a MEFA loan. We would always encourage them to get the Federal Stafford loan because it's such a low interest rate," she continued.

Conwey Casillas, a spokesman for Sallie Mae, the nation's largest provider of student loans, said the bill will force his company to cut thousands of jobs and will not help shore the budget deficit.

"The student loan provisions buried in the health care legislation intentionally eliminate valuable student services and private sector jobs at a time when our country can least afford to lose them," he said. "We are profoundly disappointed that thousands of student loan experts that help students daily will soon lose their jobs."

Casillas said Sallie Mae will be forced to cut its work force by 2,500 and that, contrary to some reports, the lender has not opposed student aid reform.

"Since day one, Sallie Mae has supported reform ending lender subsidies and reinvesting savings in other education priorities," he said. "We and about three dozen other entities have advocated for enhancements to the President's proposal that would allow for competition and choice in loan origination, continuation of valuable default prevention and financial literacy services and protection of jobs."

Industry group America's Student Loan Providers (ASLP), a Washington lobbying group representing numerous banks which issue FFELP student loans, was equally stark in its pronouncement of the reform. The group contends that "by leveraging private financial markets and competing for the right to lend to students, ASLP members offer low-cost loans and superior levels of service to millions of students, and most of the postsecondary institutions that participate in FFELP."

ASLP also claims the savings generated by ending subsidies should not go to shoring the budget deficit or to health care.

"Nine billion dollars in student loan savings will be diverted to pay for health care reform," the group held in a March 18 release. "This is entirely unnecessary – there's nothing in the reconciliation instructions that requires such a draconian cut in student aid, whatever the cause. It is a cynical pretext to pass a politically unpopular proposal that will eliminate thousands of jobs and services to millions of students and families."

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com.

You must be this tall to vote

MICHELLE WILLIAMS/COLLEGIAN

Amherst citizens voting in the annual town election last Tuesday passed a $1.6 million tax override, which will go toward the town's schools, libraries and general operating budget.

Plenty of free time?
Work for the Collegian.
Stop by the Collegian Office, located in the UMass Campus Ctr. basement.
news @ dailycollegian.com

HPV Fact #10:

The treatment for genital warts can be a painful process and can involve cutting, freezing, or burning the warts.

HPV Fact #17:

Even after treatment, genital warts can come back. In fact, 25% of cases come back within 3 months.

Why risk it
Visit your campus health center.

MERCK
Copyright © 2010 Merck & Co., Inc. All rights reserved. Printed in USA.
hpv.com
21050004(41)-01/10-GRD

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, MARCH 29, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

No limits to stupid rules

Thomas Moore

It's a simple fact that we live in a world full of limitations. Whether we like them or not, they are justified in their existence because they draw up boundaries to protect us from ourselves and from others. Some of these limitations are natural, like our bodies' biological rejection to excess. The typical college student can relate to this either by experience or hearsay; the impressive projectile vomiting of an alcohol enthusiast is a great example of your body letting you know "Hey buddy, you went beyond your limit."

So if you drink too much booze at the bars or too much milk during a "gallon challenge," we see that limitations aren't always bad (for our own health and the hygiene of our unfortunate projectile targets). Gross humor aside, we can't forget limitations that are created by man outside of the natural world. Speed limits and elevator capacities are issued by us with the safety and well-being of others in mind.

When was the last time you heard of a legendary weekend ripper whose exhaustive guest list consisted of six guys living together on Meadow Street?

Surprisingly, speed limits aren't posted just to be broken. Madison, Wis., car accident lawyers of Habush Habush & Rottier explain that speed limits are "expertly calculated in an effort to try to reduce the number of car crashes in that area."

In essence, when we break the limitations for speed in a vehicle, we are more likely to crash – injuring or killing ourselves and/or others. In a similar way, when we disobey an elevator's posted capacity of 1,500 pounds by cramming 20 people into the express elevator in the W.E.B. Du Bois Library, we run the risk of making the 6:00 p.m. news in a "tragic elevator accident."

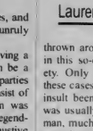
But every once in a while, there's a limitation that just doesn't make sense. I'll cut to the chase: The Amherst housing bylaw sets a legal limit of no more than four unrelated people in any residence without the owners of the building acquiring a permit from the town. Now, many of you may not know this, or already do but actively ignore it, but according to this bylaw, you can't live with more than three of your friends in a single house.

Why, you might ask? According to Diane Lederman in an article which appeared recently in The Republican, "The bylaw was adopted in the mid-1960s to prevent students from taking over houses, and as a way to address large, unruly parties."

While I'll give you that having a huge party at a residence can be a nuisance, I doubt that most parties that fall into this category consist of solely house members. When was the last time you heard of a legendary weekend ripper whose exhaustive guest list consisted of six guys living together on Meadow Street? Most "unruly" parties serve a much greater proportion of outside guests than the occupants of the house itself. The argument that limiting the amount of residents in a house will numb the celebratory atmosphere of young college adults holds no water.

The housing bylaw causes more harm than it attempts to remedy. Let's talk about its economic nuisance. Most college students who are already in debt from their academic endeavors at UMass can't afford the wildly high rent costs for on-campus or off-campus housing on their own. Allowing more people to live in a single residence reduces the cost of rent. If it's a matter of spreading out tenants for local housing businesses, I don't understand why. Puffton Village and the Townehouse of Amherst Apartments will never lack a waiting list for housing applications from the thousands of students seeking a residence every year.

By allowing more students to live together, Amherst would promote the growth of a closer community for itself. There's something about fighting for the morning shower, arguing for a communist food plan and pranking the newest member of the house with the old trick of replacing the deodorant in their stick with cream cheese that just brings people together. More seriously, though, it's through living together that the greatest bonds of friendship are created. A truly caring community, like one that can arise from a group of roommates, is vital to this day and age where depression rates have increased to 9.5 percent among Americans.



Look, speed limits and elevator capacities are inconvenient, but I'll do my best to follow them because they're reasonable. What's unreasonable is placing a limit on how many unrelated people can live in a house, even when that house is up to code to occupy more. In fact, I'll have to take it beyond "unreasonable" and agree with the simultaneous words of University of Massachusetts juniors Sarah Moltzen, Amresa Beale and Megan O'Hare when asked their feelings: "It's stupid."

Thomas Moore is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at tjmoore@student.umass.edu.

Enjoyment for everyone

A man's worth is not measured by his ability to resist his sexual urges.

So why should a woman's be?

Lauren Vincent

I've heard the term "slut" thrown around far too many times in this so-called progressive society. Only in a small handful of these cases has the recipient of the insult been male. When it was, it was usually prefaced by the word man, much like in the word "manpurse," which is used because it implies that a purse is something feminine just as the words "slut" seems to be. In none of these cases was the word used with the intention of seriously insulting the man or calling into question his morals or intelligence.

We are all sexual beings – both females and males alike. Neither likes pleasure more than the other as a general rule. So why do we react to sexually active females differently than sexually active males?

I've recognized this double standard since I knew what sex was. I'm sure everyone has heard it before, and I'm sure many are growing tired of it. But it hasn't gone away, and it doesn't look like it will any time soon.

The very fact that there are events in this country called purity balls, where teenage daughters make virginity pledges to their fathers and "promise to protect their mind, body and soul by remaining pure," is an illustration of this very problem. There are apparently no male versions of these events.

I'm tired of hearing how progressive our society is. In what way is this progressive? Telling your daughter that all she has to offer is her virginity, so if she gets to the altar without it, her marriage will not be meaningful? Or that no man will want her if she's already had sex – and well, that's just the worst thing that could possibly happen to her.

The act of consensual sex should be treated as what it is for both sexes: enjoyable and a natural part of life.

First, let's step away from the belief that men only want sex and women only want love and commitment. It's ridiculous to imply that while women can and must control their sexual temptations, men's libidos are out of their control. Furthermore, it is insulting to both sexes. Women and men are not wired differently when it comes to sex. This is made obvious through same-sex relationships. Does lesbianism only exist within relationships because women never want sex purely for pleasure? Clearly not. And how can homosexual men form loving relationships if sex is all that's on their minds?

Sex does not cloud the mind of a healthy person and prevent that person from acting reasonably – whether they are of either sex. The act of consensual sex should be treated as what it is for both sexes: enjoyable and a natural part of life. We can't go around berating one sex for enjoying it as much as the other. There's nothing about consensual sex that is malicious or ill-intentioned, so why does it bring out these feelings toward the woman for observers?

These inequalities are deeply rooted in our history, and are far from absent in today's world. They continue to be upheld by the use of the word "slut" and "whore" in degrading a female's character.

Imagine a world where women's sexuality is as socially acceptable as men's. Now imagine a world where men and women could do the exact same job and get the exact same salary. It's the same world, but unfortunately, we haven't made it there yet.

We can't call our society progressive until we all have stopped using a woman's decision to hookup with someone who she is not committed to as an indication of her character. If we are still calling her "stupid" and assuming that she was trying to find a relationship in a misguided way, or that she is unusual in her desire to have sex with no strings attached, yet we don't attribute these qualities to men who do the same, we cannot claim that we consider both sexes equal.

There are certainly many people out there who respect a woman's decision to have sex outside of marriage. We wouldn't have shows like "Sex and the City" if this weren't true. But if society as a whole was accepting of this, we also wouldn't have outcry against the show for having its female characters sleep with various men throughout the series. There wouldn't be an episode titled, "Are We Sluts?" I haven't seen the all-male cast of "Entourage" asking themselves this question, and I'm sure if they were real people, the thought wouldn't have crossed their minds either.

Did it cross yours?

We still have a long way to go toward gender equality. We may be moving, but we're moving slowly, and the more we cry out about the persistence of women engaging in casual hookup behavior, the more we'll remain in place. That's not progress.

Lauren Vincent is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lvincent@student.umass.edu.

Five reasons why April Fool's Day is great

1) Alcohol – forethought = fun.

2) Stock in saran wrap goes up.

3) No one minds if you kidnap someone.

4) Putting laxatives in DC food doesn't do anything.

5) Good day to get banned from Trader Joe's.

Risk-taking can be well, a little risky

I've signed so many waivers in my life that I don't even think about them anymore.

Yes, there is a chance I can get injured during this activity. Yes, I understand that I will not hold anyone else liable. Yes, I realize that I am taking a risk.

Chris Shores

That's the thing about risks: You never think it will happen to you … until it does.

When I signed up to be a guinea pig in a medical study run by a department laboratory here at the University of Massachusetts, I had no idea that it would indeed be a costly decision. I read about the procedure and knew it would be uncomfortable for my legs, but I figured I could suck up the pain for the $450 the study promised.

I planned on spending the money to cover the cost of a trip to Florida I was going to take with my girlfriend over spring break. Instead, I spent the week on my living room couch.

Before this happened, if someone offered me a free ticket to go skydiving, I probably would have taken it. Rock climbing on a mountain cliff? Sure, why not?

The muscle procedure I took part in caused a complication in my left leg – a hematoma in my thigh. Basically, the muscle started bleeding, which caused swelling and pressure in my leg, which led to pain.

I was taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton the Monday before spring break, and remained there until Thursday.

It could have been worse. The bleeding in my leg could have been so extreme that the blood could have gotten into the area around the muscles, causing compartment syndrome. Had this occurred, I would need surgery to relieve the pressure. The procedure would have been to essentially save my leg.

Luckily, it did not get to that point. There was no permanent damage to my kidneys, as they also feared. The pain has now subsided, but I can't bend my leg for too long without it starting to irritate me. I have been ordered to use crutches for a few weeks to keep weight off of my leg.

My leg will heal, and within a few months, life will return to normal. But that doesn't stop me from saying to myself: What the heck was I thinking? Even more concerning reflecting on my time at Cooley Dickinson Hospital: a 60-hour stay hooked up to an IV and confined to a bed the whole time. Was all of this really worth $450? To quote Saturday Night Live: "Really, Chris? Really?"

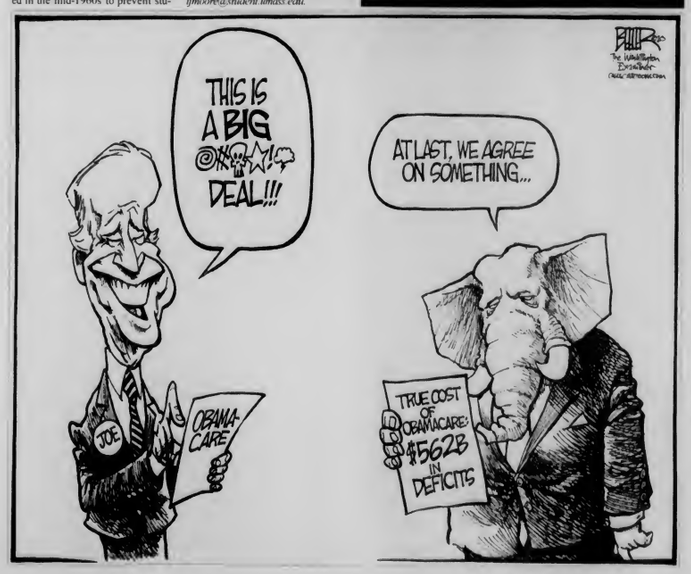
The coordinators of the study felt terrible and made hospital visits and regular telephone calls to make sure I was alright. Seeing as every other subject in the study was completely fine, I'm more likely to believe that it was just my dumb luck that caused this than a mistake on their part. The surgeon in the study said the likelihood of what happened to me was less than one percent.

My intention here is not to discourage participation in these studies. Without medical research like the projects this lab does, science wouldn't progress. The reason scientists have made the advancements they have is due in part to experiments and test subjects.

But would I personally do one of these again? No. I think my girlfriend, my friends and my family would kill me.

It's discouraging to be confined to a bed for most of the day and to not have full use of my leg. It's frustrating to have difficulty doing simple tasks, such as walking around campus or getting food at the dining hall.

But the hardest part for me is the knowledge that this may change how I go about living my life. Going into this study, I had no fear of the risks involved. I ignored my friends' and family's words of caution against it, naively believing that nothing could happen to me.



Before this happened, if someone offered me a free ticket to go skydiving, I probably would have taken it. Rock climbing on a mountain cliff? Sure, why not?

Now, I'm not so confident that I'd run to do these things. I certainly don't want to live my life in a bubble and never do anything challenging or exciting, but if my body reacted in the rarest and most unlikely way to this study, what are the chances my parachute will fail or my harness will break?

The chances of that happening are probably unlikely, but so is being struck by lightning twice, and that happens to people.

In the end, it just comes down to taking a risk. It would be a boring world if everyone played it completely safe, and I know for sure that I'll take a lot more before my life is done. But the next time I sign a waiver, I'm not going to do it so casually. I'm going to remember the time I chilled in Cooley Dickinson for three days with my left leg twice the size of my right. I'm going to consider: Is this risk really worth it?

Chris Shores is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at cshores@student.umass.edu.

Underwood rocks Mullins Center

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

Not many artists are better and more powerful live than on albums, thanks to things like autotune and electronically manufactured instruments. Carrie Underwood is a big exception.

Fans became privy to this fact at the Mullins Center on Saturday night during Underwood's second appearance at the University of Massachusetts. The 2005 winner of "American Idol" sang songs from each of her three albums, and even brought the crowd back to the "Summer of '69."

Underwood was preceded by two openers, Sons of Sylvia and Craig Morgan. Both acts are obviously great performers, but Sons of Sylvia really shone when they took the stage during Underwood's set to sing a duet in "What Can I Say?" with lead singer Ashley Clark's raspy voice meshing well with Underwood's falsetto.

Craig Morgan elicited a surprising crowd reaction. Many in the plaid-shirted, cowboy hat-adorned audience seemingly knew the words to many of his tunes, including current single, "This Ain't Nothin'," a touching song about overcoming loss.

Morgan is fairly well-known in the country genre due to his well-performed "That's What I Love About Sunday," a favorite of Saturday's crowd which hit the top of country charts in 2005. Unfortunately, he's not recognized much out of the country spectrum, but if the crowd's reaction to him Saturday was any indication, he's sure to be popular elsewhere someday.

Despite all of the positive feedback the two opening acts received, ear-piercing screams hit an all-time high the very moment the lights went down after an intermission, signaling Underwood's entrance.

To the former number one U.S. Billboard Hot Country Song, "Cowboy Casanova," Underwood rose from beneath the floor on a plush couch. She was decked out in a glittering tuxedo, the first of her six outfits.

Other outfits included a red suit, a blue ball gown, a remarkably short mini (about which Underwood herself said "No more can come off this!") and a fiber-optically enhanced dress, which the audience saw during "Change." A visually amazing feature, the dress echoed the happenings taking place on the massive screen behind Underwood – a fireworks show. The dress seemed awfully hard to move in, but no one appeared to notice.

Various portions of the show called Underwood's private life to attention. The most obvious aspect was during the stirring "Mama's Song." Underwood took to a large, rotating piano at center stage. The featured background was a slide-show of various family pictures of Underwood and her mother, from infancy through present day. In tune with Underwood's recent winter engagement to fiancé Mike Comrie, the ballad was about a mother's youngest finding someone who treats her right. The crowd erupted when a photo of Underwood and Comrie appeared, ending the song.

Another aspect of her relationship was put on display during the second song, "Quitter." While it was performed well, the whirring slot-machine background was enough to make anyone dizzy. During the song, which is ironically about being a quitter in relationships, the monitors featured a sweeping shot of the singer, lingering for a moment on the massive rock on her left hand.

The concert was punctuated with simultaneous audience hand clapping and singing along. During one song in particular, "Temporary Home," which Underwood introduced as "one of my favorite songs ever," the singer seemed overcome with emotion at the end, and the crowd's voices seemed louder than her own.

The only small lull came in the middle of the show, when Underwood performed a series of ballads. They were visually appealing, with Underwood donning a beautiful blue ball gown and swinging from a rope swing in the middle of stage.

Any essence of a respite was brought to a screeching halt when Underwood took to the bed of a small, bedazzled truck that flew from a suspended track out into the middle of the audience during a cover of "Country Roads Take Me Home," a song heard at the Mullins Center many times before, though usually at hockey games, never in this fashion.

It was obvious that Underwood loves to perform, even before she admitted she loves every song on every album she's made. From powerful ballads like "Just a Dream" and her virtual duet with Randy Travis, "I Told You So," to "Before He Cheats" and "Undo It," which can't be described as anything less than badass, all eyes were locked on the diminutive singer all night.

A clearly exceptional artist, Carrie Underwood provided an amazing evening at the Mullins Center on Saturday night. Even Simon Cowell would have been proud.

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kaitlynm@student.umass.edu.

Matthew Harrison/Collegian

Carrie Underwood underwent a number of outfit changes during her concert at the Mullins Center on Saturday, including this glittering tuxedo, in which she kicked off the show. Underwood sang a number of ballads, including one dedicated to her mother.

Leisure Colony satisfies with instrumentals

By Michael Phillis
Collegian Staff

Henry White's Honda Element sat directly behind his bandmates' two-wheel drive pickup truck. The truck lost traction on the snowy hill and began sliding back toward White's car. Once the truck stopped, a decision was made to use the Element's superior snow capabilities – the car has four-wheel drive – to push the pickup truck up the mountain.

Both cars began to spin their wheels with enough speed to produce a strong aroma of burning rubber White backed up, only to realize that the pick-up truck was sliding down the mountain toward him. The line of cars beginning to accumulate began to reverse with the pickup truck's decline.

Eventually, bandmates Paulo Menuez and Josh Paul were able to stop and pull off to the side of the road to wait for the police.

Their show in Bennington, Vt., was just a few hours away, and they were beginning to get nervous they weren't going to make it.

Paulo Menuez, Henry White, Josh Paul and David Herr are members of the band Leisure Colony, and the trip to Bennington was one example of the band working hard in order to play music. The band's fifth member, Martin Zimmermann, is a Bennington student. He waited for the rest of the band's arrival in hopes of getting in some practice time before the start of that evening's show.

Menuez, Paul and Herr are seniors at Hampshire College. White graduated from Hampshire last year but has stayed in the area to continue playing with the band.

To get an idea of their music and lifestyle, Leisure Colony allowed me to follow them for 48 hours. The band is about to graduate and is hoping to make it big – to take that next step. Whether this is possible remains to be seen. Leisure Colony is reaching a point where they are going to have to make decisions about the future of the band. Will they stay together after graduation or not?

The band has been together for about a year and a half. They are friends who, in one way or another, knew each other and wanted to play music.

Hampshire College Life

On the way to Home Depot, the Honda's radio was tuned to the local public radio station where a story was being told about a film documenting an expensive artistic problem in Philadelphia. The band was quiet, listening to the news report.

"Depending on whom you ask, 'The Art of the Steal' is either a searing exposé about the biggest art heist of the young century, or two hours of half-baked conspiracy theories," said NPR's Joel Rose.

NPR speaks well to the personality of the band – they're a group that's intellectual and naturally curious about the world. White spent much of his time in Home Depot explaining the science behind sound acoustics and how there are ways to dampen sound by playing competing tones that will, according to White, cancel each other out. This conversation occurred about a minute after White politely thanked the Home Depot store clerk for pointing him in the right direction to find the silver and gold spray paint they were looking for.

White is polite beyond belief, never hesitating to thank a store clerk for their help or apologizing when he feels it might be necessary. Herr is more argumentative, but in a way that is meant to provoke conversation, not instigate tension. Menuez is often bluntly honest and is more like Herr than White, while Paul is the kind of guy who will crack a joke or tell the story of a prank from his high school days that didn't turn out like he expected.

Being from Hampshire College, each band member exudes a certain laid back quality – a personality trait that is essential if you want to minimize conflict in any group of people who are frequently in close proximity. Even the band members' style of dress is similar – there is a definitive plaid theme. White's bathrobe is plaid. Their jeans are usually of the "slim fit" variety – especially Herr's. Tennis shoes are forgotten for loosely tied brown Timberland boots.

According to Herr, the band tends to get along. "We all bond over the music aspect," said Herr. "That's where most of our conversations end up – that, and practical things about the three of us living together. 'Oh, we have to pay the rent.' Between those two things, that is where 80 percent of our conversations come from."

Herr wasn't exaggerating. During most car rides, the conversations steered toward music. Classical music was a frequent listening choice, and during one song on the way to Bennington that the band believed was by Bach, they listened and pointed out a spot where he "broke the rules."

Much of this intellectualism can be linked to the culture of Hampshire College. Menuez described Hampshire College as a place where students are "free to fail." According to Menuez, "If you want to get any value out of your education [at Hampshire], you have to do it yourself. Teachers don't give a shit about you unless you involve yourself in their life."

"A lot of the teachers are like the students," Menuez continued as he scribbled the track names for another CD. "They are like academia bums."

"Tons of kids drop out. There are kids who come here and it's like absolute freedom and they bug out, they don't realize that they don't know how to deal with it."

A generally easygoing attitude along with Hampshire's reputation as a school for hippie kids who do a lot of drugs creates an interesting campus culture.

Each band member said they have done pretty well at Hampshire, considering how easy it would have been to do nothing and fall by the wayside. Each member seemed to accomplish this by staying interested.

Hard Work

The snowstorm occurred on Saturday afternoon en route to their second concert in two days. The previous day's show was at Hampshire College and the band spent the afternoon doing prep work for the Bennington gig.

The afternoon started with simple errands. White and Herr needed to pick up spray paint to inscribe their logo onto band merchandise to be sold at "negotiable prices" at the show that evening.

In many groups, one person is always responsible for all of the driving duties. In Leisure Colony, this person is White. According to Herr, White did not buy the Honda Element, but rather won it after filling out a customer service survey he received on the back of a Kentucky Fried Chicken receipt.

First, White and Herr needed to pick up blank CDs to burn and then give away that evening, along with the t-shirts. Best Buy was their first stop, and they ended up splitting an $11.68 receipt after a conversation about which set of CDs was going to be most affordable. As expected, being in a college band does not remove the issue of money from a person's life. The members of Leisure Colony consistently kept tabs on how much one band member owed another, and they did their best to identify the best deals and cheapest ways of obtaining the products needed to publicize the group.

At Paul's house in Hadley, Mass., Menuez, Herr and White spent a couple of hours spray painting t-shirts (they bought them on the cheap at the Salvation Army) and burning the band's CDs on White's MacBook Pro.

As they were discussing the student culture at Hampshire College, Herr was attempting to wash his spray paint-stained hands with, among other things, cheap bourbon, no doubt inspired by inhaling an impressive amount of noxious spray-can fumes during t-shirt production. It was just the three

See LEISURE COLONY on page 5

Michael Phillis/Collegian

Three of the four members of Leisure Colony share an apartment together in Northampton. The band members' upcoming graduation leaves them pondering the future of the group.

On the road with local band, Leisure Colony band members at this point. They had not been drinking, messing around or getting high. They were focused on what they had to do while staying laid back.

LEISURE COLONY from page 4

The concert at Hampshire that night was to take place at what the band called the "Red Barn." The name described the venue perfectly. Leisure Colony was scheduled to play second of three acts.

The barn was sizeable – about 40 by 80 feet – with a high ceiling, worn wood floors and white Christmas lights encircling each of the 10 or so beams supporting the roof. The Christmas lights were a nice effect; they cast a low light on the crowd and band alike and complemented the laid-back vibe of the Hampshire arena.

During the first set of the show, Leisure Colony decided that it was time to start drinking. Herr grabbed one of his beers while Menuez, Paul and White began to drink from a couple of bottles of cheap whiskey. Herr commented that the band smokes and drinks because they have to hurry up and wait to do anything.

Leisure Colony came on around quarter past nine to a crowd of about 40 to 60 people. The band started playing and the crowd – once again – commenced dancing.

Old footage of Woodstock appears on MTV or VH1 from time to time. In these videos, hippies are inevitably dancing. The style, it seems, hasn't changed much in the more-than-40 years that have gone by since that fabled concert. The Hampshire College crowd replicated their dancing patterns – I purposely neglect to call it a style.The main rule of Hampshire College dance seems to be to just do whatever you want while inflicting the least harm to others. Movements were free and rhythms were optional, but everyone could move in whichever way made them feel best. It was a scene that would be in place at Hampshire, hippie concert festivals, reggae shows and probably your own college.

Leisure Colony Review

My younger brother Zachary Phillis, 19, attends the University of Delaware and possesses the vast majority of musical skill and taste in the family. My brother and many of the members of Leisure Colony describe their tastes as "eclectic." Anyway, Zachary has an ear for music – he reviewed the band's work.

The earlier Leisure Colony recordings, according to Zachary, were a combination of rock and folk. There wasn't a consistent theme to the albums, but much of that has changed with their new five-song EP, "Protectorate."

"They're actually pretty good," he said. "The new stuff is a lot more accessible than the old. They moved towards their alternative rock side and not so much towards the folk stuff."

The band overlays instrumentals to generate a sophisticated texture; Zachary feels that this is one of their strongest points. The band's song "Chromatone Cooldown," according to Zachary, was the album's high point. "The song has a good walking baseline. There is an appropriate drum line that is complicated without being overreaching. It doesn't overpower." Some songs lack prominent vocals that would improve some of their sound, but overall, Zachary called them "technically, very good."

The final verdict: "If my iPod was on shuffle, I wouldn't skip their stuff. It might not be the first thing I jump to but it's definitely something I would be happy to listen to." Coming from my brother, who is often extremely critical about music, this is high praise indeed.

The Future

After the show at Hampshire College, a few members of the band went to their girlfriends' places. All four members of Leisure Colony from Hampshire College are dating; so much for the groupie myth.

The following day was going to be the Bennington show.

White, Herr and Menuez's apartment is near the center of Northampton. It's an older place with a good amount of room, even though it shows its age. When you walk in, the darkened photograph behind you on the wall is of White sitting naked, one leg crossed over his privates with a smile running from ear to ear. When I first entered, I couldn't tell what the picture was, so I took a closer look. Needless to say, it's somewhat awkward to have your face inches away from a naked picture of the guy standing next to you.

The other walls of the apartment hold a variety of band posters along with a picture of Mao Zedong in one corner, who presides over a faded old couch. A calendar hangs in the living room stuck on the month of November. Clothing is scattered over the floor in most of the bedrooms. However, the place is nonetheless comfortable. They've made it their own.

In the afternoon, band members began to file back home. Herr sat down to play piano while White began programming visual effects on his computer to be projected onto the wall during the Bennington show.

White and Herr were enthusiastic about the idea of getting some practice time in with Zimmermann. Because Leisure Colony has one member from a different school and sometimes plays as a group of only four, practice time with all five members is hard to come by.

Due to the weather, nothing about the ride to Bennington went as planned. There wasn't any time to practice before the band had to begin preparations for the show. Leisure Colony was scheduled to be the second of three acts. Zimmermann was scheduled to play two sets that night; he was in the opening act, Twigz, as their drummer.

The first band had a highly attended set. Beer and alcohol was barely disguised for the show, and easily 60 to 70 Bennington students crowded into the low-lit lobby to see them play.

Because of its size, Bennington doesn't always have much to do and everyone knows everyone else. Herr described Bennington as "Hampshire College with a third of the people and twice the [physical] size." Except it's weirder. Bennington has a gothic crowd that isn't as visible at Hampshire.

"At Bennington," Herr said, "Everybody knows everybody." According to Herr, Hampshire students have their own cliques. It's a big enough school for that – this isn't as true at Bennington. "When you try to talk to someone at Bennington, it's like you are trying to impede on a family."

After their set, White said the show had gone well. The band had gotten louder as more people filed in to see them. Once their hour-long set was complete, they left to have a drink as the final band came on.

The last act was a noise band. Their guitarist explained their playing best – "No one is really able to hear what the others are playing. They can only hear themselves." She had this about right.

White came in to watch the set mid-way through and had to cover his ears. The noise was loud, devoid of time signature or structure of any kind. They played what they advertised – noise.

After the noise band finished its long, torturous set, a girl sitting in a nearby chair screamed, "My degree means nothing." A few people laughed awkwardly, probably because they knew their fellow Bennington student had a point. Just like the members of Leisure Colony, they were about to graduate soon, and a degree from Hampshire or Bennington College, according to their own students, doesn't necessarily mean a prosperous future.

The band didn't have many conversations about the future of their group. According to White, the band is going to be able to play shows together through the end of June when they're all in town. After that, they're not so sure. The members told me separately about their different hopes for the coming months while conceding that, collectively, they hadn't really addressed the future.

The day before the Bennington show, White, the only band member who already graduated from college, got a job as a bagger at Big Y, a local grocery store. During the summer, White lives in Texas and wants to teach English in a foreign country this year. He has already applied. White is hoping the band will take a hiatus and then return to playing when he comes back. He thinks they'll have a future together after they all graduate.

"We all have different ideas of where we are going to be," said Herr. The band enjoys playing together – that they all seem to agree on. "[The future] is sort of up in the air," Herr ventured.

"We are trying to enjoy the moment ... We all have a certain level of commitment towards the band."

Quickly, however, the issues the band would face if they were to try to stay together become clear. They are not signed to any recording contract and, according to White, getting signed by an independent label still requires a manager who knows somebody. Right now, they don't have this kind of manager to make the next step. They want to continue to play shows, but there are only a few months left and it's not at all clear that they will even be in the same area. Even if White doesn't go to another country to teach, he lives in Texas while some of the other band members, like Menuez and Herr, live in the New York area.

When asked about the possibilities for the future, Paul said that the band had mostly just avoided the issue.

"We always find it easy to draw analogies between the band and a girlfriend," said Paul. "It's like you have this college thing going on, and its cool, but you're about to get out of college, do you want to move in together? Do you want to get married? Do you want to wait it out and see what happens and wherever it goes it goes? That is kind of the situation."

"Right now, we are kind of in the mode where we are planning our lives a little bit outside of the band, while keeping it going as long as we can."

The inevitable conversation will come, according to Paul. Leisure Colony was well-received during their shows. They are talented, but without a leap forward or a record deal, reality calls for an ending that is just as glamorous as their show prep where Herr tries not to breathe in the toxic smell of spray paint as he paints the band's logo on their Salvation Army-purchased t-shirts.

This band needs that break, that big push from the arenas of Hampshire College and Bennington – and its much smaller reach, musically – to a bigger scene and a chance to be heard by those outside their normal demographic, by those that may give it an extension on its one-and-a-half-year existence.

"There is going to be, though, that one day where we are going to have to decide," said Paul. "In or out?"

Michael Phillis can be reached at mphillis@student.umass.edu.

Michael Phillis/Collegian

Leisure Colony's David Herr spray paints the band's logo onto a piece of clothing purchased at the Salvation Army. Making their own merchandise allows the band to sell items for less money.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
REGISTRATION FOR FALL 2010

The Writing Program Placement Test will be offered on:

Tuesday, March 30, at 6:00pm in Bartlett 302

You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit112 (College Writing).

This test may be taken only once.

Students do not need to register for the test.

The Office of Jewish Affairs,
Center for Student Development, and Student Affairs & Campus Life

extend our warmest Passover greetings to the campus Jewish community...

Happy Passover!

May this joyous festival be a time of renewal for you and your families

UMASS AMHERST
The Office of Jewish Affairs is part of the Center for Student Development. Visit us online at www.umass.edu/jewish or call 545-9642

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
Needs You!

Do you want to build your resumé?

Do you need business and sales experience?

Become an ADVERTISING
REPRESENTATIVE

*SOM Students strongly encouraged to apply.

To Apply: Contact Mike Tortorici @ 545-3500
or e-mail thecollegian@gmail.com

Victory first ever over top 10 team since '06

STRENGTHS from page 8

without the efforts of the defense against such a high-powered offensive attack by Hofstra, the Minutemen wouldn't be celebrating a win right now.

"This [win] isn't even in the question right now without the defense playing like we did all day," McCormack said. "Guys [on defense] were putting the ball on the ground, getting the clear every time, and it was just a great effort all around."

When composure matters

Struggling to control opponents' scoring runs has, at times, been a weakness for UMass this season, giving up as much as eight goals in a single run. The Pride strung together three runs of two or three-straight goals, including a three-goal run in the third quarter that brought Hofstra back within three.

However, every goal in the run occurred when the Minutemen were on the penalty kill. In all, the Pride was 4-for-7 on extra-man opportunities while UMass failed to convert its only man-up opportunity.

While Cannella feels that some of his players committed easy fouls because they let emotion take over, he admits that there's only so much that he and his coaching staff can control while being on the sidelines.

"There were a couple situations there where we are swinging our sticks, and that will come back to haunt us," Cannella said. "It's not an easy thing for us as coaches to control, for sure, but that will come back to haunt us in certain games if we don't keep our cool and we don't keep our composure in those situations."

Well-rounded in the circle

Face-offs were a big part of how the Minutemen contained the Hofstra offensive attack.

Sophomore Greg Rushing went 12-for-20 in the circle, including five face-off wins to the Pride's zero in the second quarter, which ultimately led to a 4-0 scoring run by UMass, which changed the pace of the game in favor of the Minutemen.

Cannella attributes UMass' success in the circle to the diligent work of volunteer assistant coach Joe Reale, who works with the midfield.

"Joe Reale has been helping us, with [Rushing] and Anthony Toresco and those guys work their tails off every day, and in this game, I thought it made a difference," Cannella said. "It really did, especially the second quarter we won five face-offs to their zero, and what happens, we score, so it makes a big difference."

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

MAXWELL SPARK/COLLEGIAN

Goaltender Tim McCormack defends UMass's goal in Saturday's victory over No. 6 Hofstra. The sophomore made 12 saves in the contest, with six of them coming in the final quarter.

KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
www.kaminsrealestate.com
■ PRESIDENTIAL APTS. ■ LANTERN COURT APTS.
■ PERRY APTS. ■ MILL HOLLOW
■ 177 N. PLEASANT STREET ■ CRESTVIEW APTS.
■ COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS.
400 AMITY STREET 253-2515 AMHERST

Are you looking for a Job for next semester?
The Daily Collegian Graphics Department is hiring for advertising production in 2010!
• Flexible work schedule
• Valuable Experience
• Awesome people
Little to no experience in graphic design necessary!
Looking for undergrads with good computer skills, strong motivation, the ability to learn, and a keen eye.
Contact Amanda Joinson at Advertising@DailyCollegian.com for more information, or stop by The Collegian office in the Campus Center Basement

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
U.S.O. Ads for $6.70 per column inch
On-Ca... Local ... Ads fo...
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

Defense stout in upset

MEN'S LAX from page 8

ence today, not the other team.'"

Midfielder Ryan Hantverk scored the first goal of the day seconds into the game after a successful clear, putting the unassisted shot past Hofstra goalie Rob Bellairs (four saves).

After the Pride answered with a goal of their own, the two teams traded goals a second time before the Minutemen went on their second quarter surge.

Both of Biscardi's goals came in this span, along with scores from midfielder Bobby Hayes and attackmen Christian Hain and Colin Fleming.

The Pride started the third quarter with two man-up goals stemming from penalties by Rahn and fellow defenseman Diogo Godoi.

When both players returned to the field, attackman Ryan Liebel scored his ninth goal of the season on an assist by Hain, followed by Kell's second and third goals to make it 9-4 in favor of the Minutemen.

Hofstra scored on McCormack three more times before Manny scored to close the quarter.

The Pride scored the only two goals of the fourth quarter, but by then, UMass' lead was too large.

Although the win was an impressive one as far as rankings go, Cannella won't let it negatively affect his team as the Minutemen prepare for an away game at Penn State on Friday at noon.

"It doesn't feel any different than any other game that I've played in or I've coached," Cannella said. "We try to approach every game, whether league or non-league, the same."

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

UM silences Colonials

SOFTBALL from page 8

hits, but left the bases loaded.

After seven hits and nine runs were scored in the top of the third inning, the Minutewomen led 13-0 and added another four runs in the fourth inning before being quieted down in the final frame of the game.

It took UMass' offense a little longer to get to the Colonials pitching in Game 2, as it held a 3-0 lead after the second inning, but did not open it up until a six-run fourth inning.

Jessica Serio led off the inning with a single through the middle of the diamond and moved to second base after Michele Libby drew a walk. After a Kyllie Magill flied out to left field, freshman Teea Rogers singled to load the bases.

The Colonials responded by switching pitchers, but found the same results as Meghan Carta singled to drive in Serio. Normandin reached on a fielder's choice after Libby was thrown out at the plate.

UMass' second run of the inning came in the next at bat as Katie Bettencourt walked to force home Rogers. Reeves followed with a grand slam for her only hit of the game.

Carta drove in the Minutewomen's final two runs of the game with a home run to right-center field, driving in Magill who singled to left field earlier in the inning.

"I thought we hit the ball really, really hard today," Sortino said. "I thought we had great at bats and minimal strikeouts, [against] a pitcher who really moved the ball around a lot, it wasn't like she was throwing the ball down the middle of the plate."

UMass plays Tuesday in a doubleheader against non-conference foe Dartmouth, in its home opener of the 2010 season. The first game will take place at 2 p.m. followed by the second game of the day at 4 p.m.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Offense wastes strong pitching

BASEBALL from page 8

runs and set the tone early."

The Minutemen were fueled early by a first inning two-out rally. It started when junior third basemen Matt Gedman drew a walk. UMass then sent senior outfielder Mike Donato to the plate, who singled through the left side. Senior outfielder Brian Baudinet extended the rally by hitting a double over the first basemen, scoring Gedman from third. With runners again on second and third, Copa continued his hot hitting with a single up the middle, scoring two.

That was all the offense Mike Gedman needed to secure the victory as he provided UMass with another complete game.

Gedman gave up just one run, scattering five hits and striking out 10 while not issuing a walk.

"Gedman pitched really well and was dominating," Stone said. "He was very aggressive in the zone, he threw a lot of strikes and kept them off balance. He threw nothing straight and very few balls were hit hard off of him. We made really good plays defensively behind him too."

JEFF BERNSTEIN / COLLEGIAN

The Minutemen opened A-10 play this weekend, losing two of three, despite getting strong pitching in the series.

UMass added five more runs before the game's end, giving it its first win of conference play.

"It was really important to get something out of this series," Stone said. "We're disappointed, though, because against St. Joe's we should have won more than just one. But if we take it one game at a time, I guess today was a big win for us."

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

Minutewomen snap 2-game skid

WOMEN'S LAX from page 8

season and her career. O'Donnell and Cosgrove each added two scores, while Danielle Pelletier and Jackie Lyons both had three-point games with a goal and two assists.

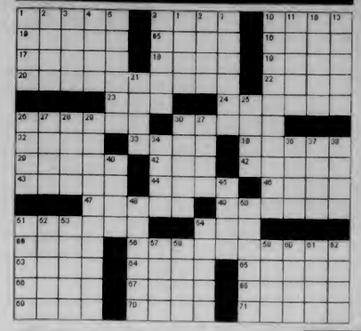
It was much of the same on the previous day as the Minutewomen claimed a 13-7 victory over George Washington (2-9, 0-2 A-10). After back-and-forth scoring resulted in UMass trailing at the intermission, the Minutewomen outscored the Colonials 8-1 in the second half.

GWU pulled ahead in the first half with goals from Nicole Lacey and Sarah Phillips to take the 6-4 lead. After O'Donnell put in her second goal of the contest to make it a one-score game with 6:15 remaining, scoring subsided for the rest of the half.

O'Donnell completed the hat trick nearly three minutes into the second half to tie the game before Pelletier scored 31 seconds later to give UMass a 7-6 lead. The Colonials tied the game with a goal from Megan Seidman, but failed to score for the remaining 24:54 of the contest.

Meanwhile, the Minutewomen scored six unanswered goals, including two from both Lyons and Ali Houlis to close out the win. Down the stretch, the UMass defense forced seven GWU turnovers and was able to hold the Colonials to just four shots in the final 20 minutes.

"We talked about playing together and I thought our attack played really well in that they took shots we wanted," Venechanos said.



UMass will continue its conference schedule next Saturday when it travels to face Temple in an afternoon matinee.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
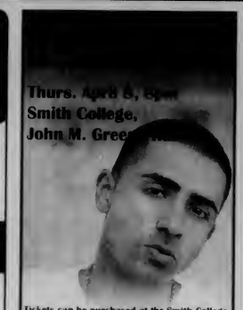
We like the things you whisper in our ear...



CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Lariat
6. Swill
10. A period of discounted prices
14. Homeric epic
15. Cab
16. Blockage
17. Skin disease
18. Cards with just one symbol
19. Employ
20. Appraisal
22. Japanese sashes
23. A small drink
24. Woodwind player
26. A frenzied woman
30. The unsaturated organic radical C3H5
32. A single time
33. Europe's highest volcano
35. To curve
39. Celebrate
41. Also
42. The wife of Abraham
43. Rinse, as with a solvent
44. Marsh plant
46. Ritual
47. Rubber
49. Maximum
51. A photographer's need
54. Recent
55. Matures
56. Einstein's theory
63. North Atlantic Treaty Organization
64. Streetcar
65. Leg bone
66. Detail
67. Initial wager
68. Office worker
69. And
70. Require
71. Spells

DOWN
1. City in Peru
2. "Oh, my!"
3. Transgressions
4. Wise one
5. A city in the Ukraine
6. At least one on an envelope
7. Shoestring
8. Beasts of burden
9. Handgun
10. Schoolmistress
11. Excuse
12. Large-eyed lemur
13. Discharge
21. Fries, maybe
25. Farewells
26. Brood
27. Freudian stage
28. Almond
29. Irritating
30. Building addition
31. Stow, as cargo
34. Container weight
36. Verve
37. Feed bag contents
38. Sharpen
40. 365 days
45. Song for two
48. Plaid
50. A sudden muscle spasm
51. ___ Major (southern constellation)
52. Marble
53. Almost 40 inches
54. Appointed
57. Coastal raptor
58. Tardy
59. Loathsome
60. Wild goat
61. Rubber wheel
62. Tibetan oxen

Take UMass Amherst home with you this summer
THREE Summer Sessions
200+ online classes
REGISTER NOW!
Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net
UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

Thurs. April 8, 8pm
Smith College, John M. Gree...
Tickets can be purchased at the Smith College Campus Center, Northampton Box Office 413-586-8686, and at http://smith.tickets.musictoday.com. For more information please call (413) 585-2639.

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IS HIRING A DISTRIBUTION MANAGER

We are looking for someone to be responsible for managing delivery in the early morning hours.
If you think this job is right for you stop by 113 Campus Center Basement, Call 413.545.3500 or E-Mail thecollegian@gmail.com

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
PUFFTON VILLAGE
EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS
SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!
ON SITE LAUNDRY, OFF STREET PARKING.
BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.
OFFICE HOURS: 8AM TO 4PM MONDAY - FRIDAY
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

Surprise for You.

		5			4
	1			6
		2		9	8	6
			6
	5		7		4	2
			2		3	7
	9	7			5	8
		8		4
3			1

CITY FOOTWEAR
Students and Staff of the five Colleges Eligible for 10% of with ID
nike NEW era Clarks TIMBERLAND
34 Pleasant Street · Northampton
413.341.5581

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

HARK! a Vagrant by K. Beaton harkavagrant.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Are the multiple keg stands getting to your brain cells? Stop it.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Please refrain from putting Tiger Woods as your personal hero in your resume.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
There is more to life than vanilla Oreos and your flea market copy of "The Return of Jaffar."

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
This horoscope must be some kind of ... hot tub time machine.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
It seems as though commentary of your future has been replaced with minor banterings of safe sex and "Modern Warfare 2".

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
You win this time, chocolate! But there is no stopping the tenacity and fury of the almighty cookies and cream!

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Nike may carry the message of "Just do it" but you are somebody who represents "Just did it."

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Your actions right there were about as stereotypical as Lil' Wayne getting a drug charge.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Perhaps you may agree with California's new possible stateline phrase, "Toking up the revenue!"

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Just remember, if you are not drinking UMass water, you are drinking pee. This message courtesy of P. Diddy.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Your heartbeat should not throb to the opening music of "Dancing with the Stars."

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Your dreams share a very new and interesting insight on the massive outbreak of celebrity baby obsessions.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Full Time Summer Employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $11.50/hour. The job description and application are available at the Housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitmore and is due April 2nd.

Bartenders needed for FT/PT positions. No experience required. Earn $20-$70 per hour. Call us at 617-849-8074

Fall 2010 internships with the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn 12 undergraduate credits. No experience necessary and will provide training! Contact us at 413-545-1995 or stop by at 922 Campus Center.

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

28 Stockbridge St: 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,575/Mo+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

www.amherstsales.com
www.AmherstMARentals.com
413.549.1398
Student Rentals

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MARCH 29, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Pride victim of another Kell trick

Attackman leads Minutemen with 4th hat trick of season

By Mike Guilmeister
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts men's lacrosse coach Greg Cannella got solid production from all over the field as the No 18 Minutemen knocked off No 6 Hofstra, 11-9, Saturday afternoon.

UMass (6-2, 1-0 CAA) broke open their first game in the Colonial Athletic Association with attackman Art Kell's fourth hat trick of the season, giving him a team-high 21 goals.

UMass	11
Hofstra	9

Freshman Will Manny also had a solid game, contributing four points on three assists and one goal.

UMass coach Greg Cannella noted the Pride (4-2, 0-1 CAA) had an altered lineup because of injuries, but the win was still a confidence-booster for the Minutemen.

"It was a good win, our guys came ready to play," said Cannella. "Hofstra had a couple of injuries that really hurt them, but again, we persevered, we got a lead and we knew they were going to come back on us, and they're such a good team that we figured they would, and they did."

Stout defense at midfield also aided UMass. Sophomore Anthony Biscardi grabbed a ground ball and had two scores in the match. Junior Stephen Zorkers also pestered the Hofstra offense, grabbing three ground balls and causing a turnover.

The Minutemen caused seven turnovers on the day, including two by defenseman Casey Rahn, who also had five ground balls both game-highs.

Sophomore goalie Tim McCormack made 12 saves in a game where the Pride peppered the UMass defense with a 41-27 shot advantage, including 25 in the second half.

Hofstra looked as if it had a greater sense of urgency in the second half, but the Minutemen jumped on the Pride early and often, scoring five goals in the third quarter after taking a 5-2 lead into half time.

Even though UMass didn't win the game by a decisive 14-goal margin as it did in its last game against then-winless Providence, Cannella looked for the victory and nothing more.

"They're sticking together, they don't want to make a statement, but they want to make sure they do this right, and not blow their opportunities that they have," he said. "It's just a great opportunity they have, playing the No. 6 team in the country at home, again, I think they really stood together and said, 'Hey, we're going to make the differ-

See MEN's LAX on page 6

Sophomore Art Kell looks to make a play during Saturday's 11-9 upset over No. 6 Hofstra. The attackman netted his fourth hat trick of the season and now leads the Minutemen in goals (21) and assists (12) through eight games.

Defensive strengths utilized in upset over No. 6 Hofstra

By Mike Guilmeister
Collegian Staff

As of March 25, the No. 18 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team topped the Colonial Athletic Association in per-game totals of caused turnovers, goals and ground balls. In their 11-9 win over No. 6 Hofstra, the Minutemen effectively utilized all of these skills.

UMass (6-2, 1-0 CAA) flustered the many scoring opportunities gained by the Pride (4-2, 0-1) all day, including 13 shots in the final period.

Although the effort in goal of sophomore Tim McCormack (12 saves) was solid against Hofstra, he'll need to bring that kind of effort every game against increasingly more skilled opponents.

"Hopefully he can be consistent, and continue to be consistent, and then gain some confidence, and stick with that confidence," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "It's a long road here, we have five more games and nothing is going to be easy, so Timmy's going to have to be really solid for us."

McCormack's fourth-quarter stand made the difference in the game. His six saves in the final period totaled his save total in the first three quarters combined.

The rest of the UMass defense did well to match McCormack's winning efforts, McCormack, himself, being the first to acknowledge this.

When asked about the outcome of the game, McCormack immediately stated that

See STRENGTHS on page 6

Center fielder Carly Normandin looks to bunt during a game her sophomore season. Now in her senior season, Normandin leads UMass with a .467 batting average.

Plourde, Sanders hold GW hitless in 2 games

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

A doubleheader can't go much worse for a team.

Luckily for the Massachusetts softball team, they were on the better side of the doubleheader at George Washington, holding the Colonials hitless in both games.

UMass	11
GW	0
UMass	17
GW	0

In Game 1, pitchers Sara Plourde and Bailey Sanders combined to throw a five-inning perfect game, as No. 24 UMass (17-7, 2-0 Atlantic 10) won 17-0, before Plourde threw a five-inning no-hitter in Game 2. Plourde walked one batter in the second game – the only base runner for GW (4-17, 1-5 A-10) on the day – as UMass won again by the run-rule, 11-0.

"We got solid pitching from both Sara and Bailey," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said.

"They both had command on the mound."

Plourde's walk came against the first batter of Game 2, but the runner was taken off of the base paths by a double play and the sophomore retired every batter after that while striking out eight. In Game 1, Plourde struck out seven in four perfect innings, before giving way to Bailey Sanders who struck out all three batters in the fifth inning to complete the perfect game.

The doubleheader was the beginning of UMass' A-10 schedule, while George Washington already played four conference games.

Senior Carly Normandin (5-for-7 with three RBIs and four runs on the day) started the day with a double and advanced to third on an error on the play. Two batters later, the centerfielder scored on a Sarah Reeves single, giving the Minutewomen a 1-0 lead. Reeves led the team in Game 1, going 5-for-5 with two runs and three RBIs.

"We came out with a very aggressive kind of mindset and we set the tone in the first inning with very aggressive base running and jumped out early in both games."

UMass sent nine batters to the plate in the second inning as they brought their lead to four on four

See SOFTBALL on page 6

UMass loses 2-of-3 to SJU

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

A difficult start to the season was compounded this weekend as the Massachusetts baseball team lost a frustrating series to St. Joseph's University to open conference play.

UMass	8
St. Joe's	1
St. Joe's	1
UMass	0
St. Joe's	9
UMass	6

On Saturday, the Minutemen (2-11, 1-2 Atlantic 10) started the series with a doubleheader against the Hawks (6-11, 2-1 A-10). It proved to be a tough day overall for UMass as the offense could not keep up with solid pitching performances.

Senior Jared Irenti got the start in Game 1 and delivered a respectable performance, tossing six innings while giving up six runs (five earned) on nine hits, four walks and seven strikeouts.

"I thought Jared battled through it," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "Early, we had problems defensively and he ended up giving us good innings. We battled back, tied the game up and eventually lost it in the last couple of innings."

Most of the offense UMass could muster came from the bat of junior first baseman Peter Copa, who drilled a pair of two-run home runs, the latter of which knotted the score at 6-6 in the top of the eighth inning.

"Pete came through with a couple of home runs and put us in a position to win the ballgame," Stone said. "The second one was a clutch home run. He's been swinging the bat well and it was great to see him come through there for us."

Acopa deposited his second home run of the game, the momentum seemed to shift in UMass' favor. However, in the bottom half of the frame junior reliever Charlie Henson gave up three runs as UMass went on to lose the contest, 9-6.

Game 2 of the doubleheader was again frustrating for the Minutemen, who found themselves on the losing end of a pitcher's duel.

Senior Nick Serino was virtually untouchable in his start, as he threw a complete game by allowing one run on three hits and five walks while striking out a career-high 13. The only blemish came in the eighth inning, when Serino threw a wild pitch that allowed the Hawks' Joe Cook to score the only run of the game.

